START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT
CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

DECEMBER 1993

Camera Operator:
Kathy Wilder

MASTER NEGATIVE NUMBER:
BSO-56-003

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library
(August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks
(Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO Pops Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO Pops Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO Pops Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copyright law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: [✓ IA] IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATION: 12X

FILM STOCK:

Kodak
IMAGELINK™ HQ
MICROFILM
35mm x 30.5m · 100ft
Sp 425
DEVELOP BEFORE 07/1995
1461-0325-012-02
CAT 840 3594
19-03

REEL 3

Volume 3-4

BSO 1891
to Promenade 1892

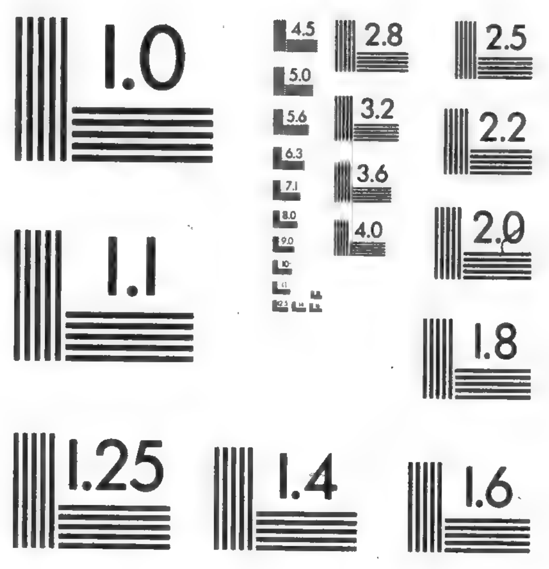
2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

VOLUME 3

BSO

1891 - 1892

SHIPMAN'S
Invoice & Scrap BOOK

L. W. Temple

[1]

FADED TEXT

RETURN OF MME. NORDICA.

Welcome News to Music Lovers This Side the Ocean.

Foreign Triumphs of the Great New England Prima Donna—Story of Her Early Struggles, Marriage and Separation from Her Husband—Fame Won by True Merit.

The return of Mme. Nordica to America is welcome news, for we have too few first-class dramatic singers to allow New England's best soprano to devote her talents and rich voice to the older countries of Europe.

Lillian Norton and Lillian Bailey were promising young singers in Boston at almost the same time, and today they are recognized as two of the best artists in London.

Lillian Norton, if report speaks truly, was a protege of Mr. Eben Jordan, who has done much during his life to help young artists toward the goal they hoped to win. Before Miss Norton went to Europe to study, she was for a time the soprano at the old Unitarian Church in Eliot square, Roxbury, over which the late Dr. George Putnam was so long the beloved pastor. In those days, Lillian Norton sung occasionally in concerts; but, although her voice was sweet and brilliant, it was by no means assured that it would develop, as it has done, into one of the few great voices of the day.

During her first absence in Europe, when she was studying with diligence for the operatic stage, Miss Norton met Mr. Frederick Gower, the millionaire, and, after a short courtship, became his wife. Gower was by no means adverse to his wife's continuing her operatic career, and he did what he could with his money to smooth the rough path a young prima donna often has to walk.

After she had sung with success in Europe in opera and in concert, she returned to America with her husband, and her successful reappearance on the Boston concert stage, at the Symphony concert of Nov. 21, 1885, at which she sung Handel's "Let the Bright Seraphim," is even now remembered with pleasure.

Early in January, 1886, Mme. Nordica returned to Boston with Her Majesty's Italian opera, under the management of Mr. Mapleson. Here she appeared as Gilda, in "Rigoletto," and Violetta, in "Traviata," and strengthened the good impression she had made in concert.

In the spring of 1886 Mme. Nordica returned to Europe, and it was then that she is said to have decided to obtain a Separation from Her Husband.

She had good reasons for this decision, but subsequent events proved that there was no necessity of making them public. The story is that on the very day that Mrs. Gower took the first legal steps toward a separation, Mr. Gower went up in a balloon and never came down again. There have been sensational reports that he had used the balloon as a blind, and that he had run away and was living elsewhere in seclusion. There was no truth in such reports. These tales probably originated from the fact that his large fortune seemed to vanish into space with him. During these years Mme. Nordica was not able to find any property belonging to her husband, and it was only when she came to this country in 1890 that she was able to effect some sort of a compromise with Mr. Gower's brothers, and at last come into possession of some of the property to which she considered herself entitled.

Thrown entirely on her own resources, after having had all the comforts and luxuries of a large income, Mme. Nordica, with true New England determination, decided to win a fortune and fame by her own exertions and talents. London seemed a good starting point; for she already was known somewhat socially and had made a success singing with Mapleson both in London and the provinces. Her reportory at that time comprised, beside Gilda and Robetta, Marguerite in "Faust," Susanne in "The Marriage of Figaro," and Donna Elvira in "Don Giovanni." She soon made warm friends in London—among others Lady de Gray and Mrs. Ronalds, both of whom did much to advance her interests. As her voice grew stronger, she dropped the lighter roles from her reportory and became one of the few dramatic singers in London. Elsa in "Lohengrin," "Aida," Valentine in "The Huguenots," Desdemona in "Othello," and Leonora in "Trovatore" [illegible] added to her list of roles, while at the same time she became acknowledged throughout England as one of the best of resident oratorio singers.

In 1887 Mme. Nordica joined the forces of Mr. Augustus Harris and sang in "Faust," "The Huguenots" and "Don Giovanni" with the famous De Reszke brothers, Maurel and Del Puente. Her Marguerite is one of the best seen in London since the palmy days of Christine Nilsson—and her Valentine is full of dramatic fervor. In that year—the year of the Queen's jubilee—Mme. Nordica sang at one of the state concerts at Buckingham palace and made a brilliant success. The Princess of Wales personally thanked the American prima donna for the pleasure she had given her, and the Prince immediately afterward came forward to congratulate her upon her success. By royal command Mme. Nordica sang at Westminster Abbey on the day after the jubilee, and, standing on a high pedestal in the middle of the abbey, her rich, dramatic voice rang out with splendid effect; and she thrilled the vast assemblage by her rendering of "Let the Bright Seraphim." It was a great compliment to our countrywoman to be "commanded" to sing at such an occasion, and before such a splendid audience; but the artistic worth of the singer as well as the merits of the woman were worthy of the favor shown her.

A Delightful Performance—

During the next two seasons Mme. Nordica sang with Augustus Harris' forces at Covent Garden, and added Elsa and Aida to her repertory; as Elsa, our prima donna is seen perhaps at her best, for not only is her voice [illegible] suited to Wagner's music, but her dramatic action is poetic enough to suit the "Lohengrin" legend. Although London has seen Albani, Melba, Eames, Hauck and Tavary within the last few years as Elsa, the musical public, as a rule, realize that Nordica comes nearer to the ideal of the character than has any of her rivals. She makes a beautiful picture in this character, as, indeed, she does in every role she assumes; for her fine figure and graceful carriage is always set off by appropriate and [illegible] costumes, while she is acknowledged to be one of the most beautiful women on the [illegible].

[illegible] years ago Mme. Nordica took [illegible] and pretty house in [illegible] making it [illegible] Mme. Nordica [illegible]

[illegible] never nearer town. The season she has had a comfortable house in Finchley Road—not far from the residences of Mr. Charles Wyndham and Miss Geraldine Ulmar—while her new house at Clarendon Gate was being put in perfect order. Mrs. Norton, who has recently been an invalid, is always with her daughter, and her brother-in-law and sister—Mr. and Mrs. George A. Walker of Boston—have passed the greater portion of the last year with Mme. Nordica. Miss Walker, her niece, has been studying singing under the best teachers, and those who have heard her sing predict a brilliant future for this girl, who has not yet been allowed to sing in public.

No American singer has ever been so popular in London society as has been Mme. Nordica. The Prince and Princess of Wales are admirers of her talents, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck are great friends of hers. After the garden party, this summer, given by the Tecks in honor of their silver wedding, Mme. Nordica had the honor of staying to the informal supper, at which only the immediate family and most intimate friends were expected. Again, at a concert at the Wimborne House, the Duke of Teck made a point of rising and speaking to Mme. Nordica while she was waiting for her accompanist to find his music. The Duchess of Manchester and the Duchess of Marlborough are fast friends of Nordica, and she was one of the few guests invited to Blenheim for the house party, when the new organ in the music room was to be dedicated. Lady de Gray has always been charming to Nordica, and has often lent her opera box to the prima donna.

During this last season she only sang once in opera, and that was when "Aida" was revived. Mr. Harris wanted to give several performances of "Don Giovanni" with a special cast, and wisely endeavored to engage Nordica for Donna Elvira. At that time Mme. Nordica had so many concert engagements that she was not able to sing in opera. Since she has sung "Valentine" and "Elsa" she has naturally clashed with Mme. Albani, who is still exceedingly popular in London, although her voice is by no means what it was 15 years ago. Albani is very anxious not to lose her hold on her public, and does not like to give up the roles with which she has so long been associated. She even sings now Ern in "Die Meistersinger" and Desdemona in "Othello," roles for which she is singularly unsuited both in voice and figure. There seems to be no room in a company for both Albani and Nordica. More is the pity. And perhaps this is the reason why Mme. Nordica's name does not appear in the list of singers engaged by Mr. Abbey for his American Italian opera season.

The Triumphs of Mme. Nordica

in London this season were quite as great as if she had been one of the Covent Garden company. She sang at the great farewell benefit concert to Sims Reeves in Albert Hall, and made an immense sensation with the great audience. Christine Nilsson, who made a special appearance on that occasion, was hardly as popular with the audience as was Nordica. Later, she sung again at Albert Hall, at the state visit of the German Emperor, and again was awarded the plaudits of a brilliant audience. During the Handel festival at Crystal Palace, Mme. Nordica was acknowledged to have by far the most telling and brilliant voice of the soloists, and it is by no means an easy task to sing in that colossal space. In comparison with Nordica's voice, Albani's sounded thin and worn, and there is little doubt but that it cannot much longer bear the strain of singing in such a vast auditorium. Perhaps, however, it was at the Richter concert that Mme. Nordica made her greatest success this season. Her selection from Wagner was received with absolute enthusiasm by the most musical audience to be found in London.

Mme. Nordica will probably make her reappearance in Arsenia at the Worcester festival, after which she is engaged by Mr. Ellis, the efficient business manager of the Boston Symphony orchestra, to appear in a large number of concerts in the leading cities. Mr. Ellis has done a good thing in inducing Mme. Nordica to return to us this winter, and it is to be hoped that the Handel and Haydn Society will not let the season pass without engaging her for one or two of the oratorios, as she is now one of the best, if not the best, soprano oratorio singer in England or America. There is still a chance that she may join Mr. Abbey's forces for a series of performances before his operatic season closes, and it is to be hoped that she may be seen in some of her greater roles, surrounded by such an efficient company as Mr. Abbey has engaged.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1891.

MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March. 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 17th, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, September 18th, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September [illegible]. [illegible]

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, AUGUST 30, 1891.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGES.

The Symphony Concerts--Plans for Ticket Sales.

The Operatic Outlook—A Possibility for an Abbey Season—Comic Opera in Ample Supply—A Band Tournament Association Formed—Home and Foreign News, Gossip and Comment.

The Music Hall offices, which during the summer have been given over to the force of mechanics engaged in the alterations and repairs decided upon early in the season, have again assumed an air of business, and Manager Charles A. Ellis and his assistants are busily engaged in preparing for the fall and winter campaign.

Naturally the Symphony concerts take a prominent place in the preparatory work of the season, and the plans for the ticket sales were duly announced yesterday for the first time.

As in former years, there will be 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals, and the same number of Saturday evening concerts, the first rehearsal occurring on Friday, Oct. 9, and the first concert on Saturday, Oct. 10. The series will be continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19, these weeks being given to the occasional tours of the orchestra over the usual route, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

No change will be made in the prices of tickets or in the divisions of the hall from those of last season, the best seats being sold for $12 for both the rehearsals and concerts, and all others at $7.50 for the season, save that the upper balcony seats will again be left for admission ticket holders at the public rehearsals, these tickets being sold at 25 cents for each week's rehearsal.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

Director Nikisch, who has recently returned from Europe, has given his vacation time very largely to the interests of the Symphony orchestra and the concerts of the coming season. The few vacancies in the membership of the organization caused by the changes incidental to any large body of musicians have been supplied by players equally competent, and the numerical strength of the orchestra will be maintained the same as last season.

Director Nikisch also improved his absence abroad by collecting from the leading sources of supply on the continent everything of value in the way of new orchestral composition, as well as several works for chorus and orchestra, all of which he hopes to introduce to notice during the season. With the additions made to the library of the orchestra during this visit, the organization will possess a supply of compositions and works affording the widest variety in programme, making during the season an opportunity which will doubtless be fully improved by Director Nikisch.

It appears that the announcement of a permanent chorus as a part of the Symphony concert scheme, made at the close of last season, was somewhat premature. Director Nikisch greatly desires, as he always has desired since he assumed his present position, to produce works for both chorus and orchestra, and it is more than possible that some plan for such a union of chorus and orchestra as was hinted at last spring may yet come about.

In the matter of soloists, although no "official utterances" have been made as yet, it is safe to entertain the most satisfying anticipations, and there is good reason to suppose that the great vocalists of the world will be most happily represented in the season's engagements.

It will interest many readers to know that Manager Ellis will again have as an associate Mr. Fred R. Comee, who will, as usual, give his especial attention to the analytical programme book, for the editing of which the able assistance of Mr. George H. Wilson has again been secured.

The Music Hall offices are now open for all who desire further information regarding the concerts or other events of the season.

THE BOSTON TIMES

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR.

BOSTON, SUNDAY, SEPT. 6, 1891

Arthur Nikisch of Boston is back from his European trip and hard at work with his rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra. As in former years there will be twenty-four public rehearsals and the same number of Saturday evening concerts, the first rehearsal occurring on Friday, Oct. 9, and the first concert on Saturday, Oct. 10. The series will be continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays, Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19, these weeks being given to the occasional tours of the orchestra over the usual route, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

The first symphony rehearsal of the season is to be given on the afternoon of Oct. 9, and the first concert on Saturday, Oct. 10. The series will be continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 [illegible]

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 6.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NICKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891 to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday afternoon, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, Sept. 17th, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, on FRIDAY, Sept. 18th, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in the regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th.

Musical Notes.

The eleventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin October 10. The twelve-dollar seats for rehearsals will be sold at auction, in Music Hall, on Monday morning, Sept. 14, and the seven-dollars and a half tickets will be sold Tuesday, the 15th. On Thursday, the 17th, the twelve-dollar seats for the concerts will be sold, and on Friday, the 18th, the lesser-priced tickets for the concerts will be disposed of in the same way. All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after September 19. As usual, there will be twenty-four concerts and as many public rehearsals.

The Philharmonic Orchestra announces in another column the sale of season tickets for its eight concerts that are to be given at the Tremont Theatre on Thursday afternoons during the winter. Mr. Listemann has already shown his skill as a programme-maker, and public interest in the present series will be by no means lessened by the announcement of many brilliant and pleasing novelties collected by him during his recent visit to the musical centres of Europe, and which will be given their first American hearing at these concerts. First-class solo talent is to appear, and arrangements have already been made for the appearance of Mme. Helen Hopekirk, Miss Gertrude Franklin, Mr. William H. Sherwood, Mr. Conrad Ansorge, Mr. Adolph Brodsky, and both Mr. Listemann and Mr. Giese. The dates on which the concerts are to be given are Nov. 5 and 19, Dec. 10 and 31, Jan. 14 and 28, Feb. 18, and March 3.

During his summer tour abroad, the scores of a great number of new works were submitted to Mr. Nikisch for examination. He selected from among them the following, which will probably be heard during the season: A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky, also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite Op. 25 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svensden; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovitch; "Faschingbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F-major, Felix Draesecke. All of these, so far as known, are absolute novelties in America. Interesting features of the concerts will be John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony"; Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amare," F. van der Stucken, and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; Symphony in C-minor, Spohr; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssghn, Brahms and Wagner. A number of distinguished solo artists have been engaged for the concerts, among whom may be named Mme. Nordica, Miss Emma Eames, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugene D'Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni, Mr. W. H. Sherwood and Mr. Alfred Schroeder.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

ELEVENTH SEASON, 1891-92.

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

. . PRESS COMMENTS . .

N.Y. World, November 4, 1891.

"Among the three or four foremost orchestras of the world."

N.Y. Sun, November 4, 1891.

"The palm of supremacy over all kindred organizations on this side of the water."

N.Y. Herald, November 4, 1891.

"The finest body of strings ever heard in this country."

N.Y. Recorder, November 4, 1891.

"Nothing like it in New York, neither in quality nor in ensemble."

N.Y. Evening Post, November 4, 1891.

"As a Schumann conductor, Mr. Nikisch has no superior, perhaps no equal."

Philadelphia Press, November 5, 1891.

"In the foreground of renown in America."

Philadelphia Inquirer, November 5, 1891.

"A prospect of the most brilliant season in its history."

Philadelphia Record, November 5, 1891.

"The most proficient band of musicians ever organized in this country."

Brooklyn Eagle, November 7, 1891.

"The rival of any force of the kind in the world."

Baltimore American, November 6, 1891.

"Enthusiastically received by the whole audience."

FADED TEXT

SUNDAY HERALD

AUGUST 23, 1891

RETURN OF MME. NORDICA.

Welcome News to Music Lovers This Side the Ocean.

Foreign Triumphs of the Great New England Prima Donna—Story of Her Early Struggles, Marriage and Separation from Her Husband—Fame Won by True Merit.

The return of Mme. Nordica to America is welcome news, for we have too few first-class dramatic singers to allow New England's best soprano to devote her talents and rich voice to the older countries of Europe.

Lillian Norton and Lillian Bailey were promising young singers in Boston at almost the same time, and today they are recognized as two of the best artists in London.

Lillian Norton, if report speaks truly, was a protegee of Mr. Eben Jordan, who has done much during his life to help young artists toward the goal they hoped to win. Before Miss Norton went to Europe to study, she was for a time the soprano at the old Unitarian Church in Eliot square, Roxbury, over which the late Dr. George Putnam was so long the beloved pastor. In those days, Lillian Norton sung occasionally in concerts; but, although her voice was sweet and brilliant, it was by no means assured that it would develop, as it has done, into one of the few great voices of the day.

During her first absence in Europe, when she was studying with diligence for the operatic stage, Miss Norton met Mr. Frederick Gower, the millionaire, and, after a short courtship, became his wife. Gower was by no means adverse to his wife's continuing her operatic career, and he did what he could with his money to smooth the rough path a young prima donna often has to walk.

After she had sung with success in Europe in opera and in concert, she returned to America with her husband, and her successful reappearance on the Boston concert stage, at the Symphony concert of Nov. 21, 1885, at which she sung Handel's "Let the Bright Seraphim," is even now remembered with pleasure.

Early in January, 1886, Mme. Nordica returned to Boston with Her Majesty's Italian opera, under the management of Mr. Mapleson. Here she appeared as Gilda, in "Rigoletto," and Violetta, in "Traviata," and strengthened the good impression she had made in concert.

In the spring of 1886 Mme. Nordica returned to Europe, and it was then that she is said to have decided to obtain a Separation from Her Husband.

She had good reasons for this decision, but subsequent events proved that there was no necessity of making them public. The story is that on the very day that Mrs. Gower took the first legal steps toward a separation, Mr. Gower went up in a balloon and never came down again. There have been sensational reports that he had used the balloon as a blind, and that he had run away and was living elsewhere in seclusion. There was no truth in such reports. These tales probably originated from the fact that his large fortune seemed to vanish into space with him. During these years Mme. Nordica was not able to find any property belonging to her husband, and it was only when she came to this country in 1890 that she was able to effect some sort of a compromise with Mr. Gower's brothers, and at last come into possession of some of the property to which she considered herself entitled.

Thrown entirely on her own resources, after having had all the comforts and luxuries of a large income, Mme. Nordica, with true New England determination, decided to win a fortune and fame by her own exertions and talents. London seemed a good starting point; for she already was known somewhat socially and had made a success singing with Mapleson both in London and the provinces. Her reportory at that time comprised, beside Gilda and Robetta, Marguerite in "Faust," Susanne in "The Marriage of Figaro," and Donna Elvira in "Don Giovanni." She soon made warm friends in London—among others Lady de Gray and Mrs. Ronalds, both of whom did much to advance her interests. As her voice grew stronger, she dropped the lighter roles from her reportory and became one of the few dramatic singers in London. Elsa in "Lohengrin," "Aida," Valentine in "The Huguenots," Desdemona in "Othello," and Leonora in "Trovatore" [illegible] added to her list of roles, while at the same time she became acknowledged throughout England as one of the best of resident oratorio singers.

In 1887 Mme. Nordica joined the forces of Mr. Augustus Harris and sang in "Faust," "The Huguenots" and "Don Giovanni" with the famous De Reszke brothers, Maurel and Del Puente. Her Marguerite is one of the best seen in London since the palmy days of Christine Nilsson—and her Valentine is full of dramatic fervor. In that year—the year of the Queen's jubilee—Mme. Nordica sang at one of the state concerts at Buckingham palace and made a brilliant success. The Princess of Wales personally thanked the American prima donna for the pleasure she had given her, and the Prince immediately afterward came forward to congratulate her upon her success. By royal command Mme. Nordica sang at Westminster Abbey on the day after the jubilee, and, standing on a high pedestal in the middle of the abbey, her rich, dramatic voice rang out with splendid effect; and she thrilled the vast assemblage by her rendering of "Let the Bright Seraphim." It was a great compliment to our countrywoman to be "commanded" to sing at such an occasion, and before such a splendid audience; but the artistic worth of the singer as well as the merits of the woman were worthy of the favor shown her.

A Delightful Performance—

During the next two seasons Mme. Nordica sang with Augustus Harris' forces at Covent Garden, and added Elsa and Aida to her repertory; as Elsa, our prima donna is seen perhaps at her best, for not only is her voice singularly suited to Wagner's music, but her dramatic action is poetic enough to suit the "Lohengrin" legend. Although London has seen Albani, Melba, Eames, Hauck and Tarony within the last few years as Elsa, the musical public, as a rule, realize that Nordica comes nearer to the ideal of the character than has any of her rivals. She makes a beautiful picture in this character, as, indeed, she does in every role she assumes; for her fine figure and graceful carriage is always set off by appropriate and lovely costumes, while she is acknowledged to be one of the most beautiful women on the operatic stage.

A couple of years ago Mme. Nordica took the long lease of a new and pretty house in Hampstead. After furnishing it and making it thoroughly comfortable, Mme. Nordica unexpectedly joined Mr. Abbey's forces, and came to America with Patti, Tamagno and was too far from Mayfair, and decided to release it and find another house nearer town. This season she has had a comfortable house in Finchley Road—not far from the residences of Mr. Charles Wyndham and Miss Geraldine Ulmar—while her new house at Clarendon Gate was being put in perfect order. Mrs. Norton, who has recently been an invalid, is always with her daughter, and her brother-in-law and sister—Mr. and Mrs. George A. Walker of Boston—have passed the greater portion of the last year with Mme. Nordica. Miss Walker, her niece, has been studying singing under the best teachers, and those who have heard her sing predict a brilliant future for this girl, who has not yet been allowed to sing in public.

Her New House

No American singer has ever been so popular in London society as has been Mme. Nordica. The Prince and Princess of Wales are admirers of her talents, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck are great friends of hers. After the garden party, this summer, given by the Tecks in honor of their silver wedding, Mme. Nordica had the honor of staying to the informal supper, at which only the immediate family and most intimate friends were expected. Again, at a concert at the Wimborne House, the Duke of Teck made a point of rising and speaking to Mme. Nordica while she was waiting for her accompanist to find his music. The Duchess of Manchester and the Duchess of Marlborough are fast friends of Nordica, and she was one of the few guests invited to Blenheim for the house party, when the new organ in the music room was to be dedicated. Lady de Gray has always been charming to Nordica, and has often lent her opera box to the prima donna.

During this last season she only sang once in opera, and that was when "Aida" was revived. Mr. Harris wanted to give several performances of "Don Giovanni" with a special cast, and wisely endeavored to engage Nordica for Donna Elvira. At that time Mme. Nordica had so many concert engagements that she was not able to sing in opera. Since she has sung "Valentine" and "Elsa" she has naturally clashed with Mme. Albani, who is still exceedingly popular in London, although her voice is by no means what it was 15 years ago. Albani is very anxious not to lose her hold on her public, and does not like to give up the roles with which she has so long been associated. She even sings now Ern in "Die Meistersinger" and Desdemona in "Othello," roles for which she is singularly unsuited both in voice and figure. There seems to be no room in a company for both Albani and Nordica. More is the pity. And perhaps this is the reason why Mme. Nordica's name does not appear in the list of singers engaged by Mr. Abbey for his American Italian opera season.

The Triumphs of Mme. Nordica

in London this season were quite as great as if she had been one of the Covent Garden company. She sang at the great farewell benefit concert to Sims Reeves in Albert Hall, and made an immense sensation with the great audience. Christine Nilsson, who made a special appearance on that occasion, was hardly as popular with the audience as was Nordica. Later, she sung again at Albert Hall, at the state visit of the German Emperor, and again was awarded the plaudits of a brilliant audience. During the Handel festival at Crystal Palace, Mme. Nordica was acknowledged to have by far the most telling and brilliant voice of the soloists, and it is by no means an easy task to sing in that colossal space. In comparison with Nordica's voice, Albani's sounded thin and worn, and there is little doubt but that it cannot much longer bear the strain of singing in such a vast auditorium. Perhaps, however, it was at the Richter concert t at Mme. Nordica made her greatest success this season. Her selection from Wagner was received with absolute enthusiasm by the most musical audience to be found in London.

Mme. Nordica will probably make her reappearance in Arsenia at the Worcester festival, after which she is engaged by Mr. Ellis, the efficient business manager of the Boston Symphony orchestra, to appear in a large number of concerts in the leading cities. Mr. Ellis has done a good thing in inducing Mme. Nordica to return to us this winter, and it is to be hoped that the Handel and Haydn Society will not let the season pass without engaging her for one or two of the oratorios, as she is now one of the best, if not the best, soprano oratorio singer in England or America. There is still a chance that she may join Mr. Abbey's forces for a series of performances before his operatic season closes, and it is to be hoped that she may be seen in some of her greater roles, surrounded by such an efficient company as Mr. Abbey has engaged.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, AUGUST 30, 1891.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGES.

The Symphony Concerts--Plans for Ticket Sales.

The Operatic Outlook—A Possibility for an Abbey Season—Comic Opera in Ample Supply—A Band Tournament Association Formed—Home and Foreign News, Gossip and Comment.

The Music Hall offices, which during the summer have been given over to the force of mechanics engaged in the alterations and repairs decided upon early in the season, have again assumed an air of business, and Manager Charles A. Ellis and his assistants are busily engaged in preparing for the fall and winter campaign.

Naturally the Symphony concerts take a prominent place in the preparatory work of the season, and the plans for the ticket sales were duly announced yesterday for the first time.

As in former years, there will be 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals, and the same number of Saturday evening concerts, the first rehearsal occurring on Friday, Oct. 9, and the first concert on Saturday, Oct. 10. The series will be continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19, these weeks being given to the occasional tours of the orchestra over the usual route, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

No change will be made in the prices of tickets or in the divisions of the hall from those of last season, the best seats being sold for $12 for both the rehearsals and concerts, and all others at $7.50 for the season, save that the upper balcony seats will again be left for admission ticket holders at the public rehearsals, these tickets being sold at 25 cents for each week's rehearsal.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put u in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

Director Nikisch, who has recently returned from Europe, has given his vacation time very largely to the interests of the Symphony orchestra and the concerts of the coming season. The few vacancies in the membership of the organization caused by the changes incidental to any large body of musicians have been supplied by players equally competent, and the numerical strength of the orchestra will be maintained the same as last season.

Director Nikisch also improved his absence abroad by collecting from the leading sources of supply on the continent everything of value in the way of new orchestral composition, as well as several works for chorus and orchestra, all of which he hopes to introduce to notice during the season. With the additions made to the library of the orchestra during this visit, the organization will possess a supply of compositions and works affording the widest variety in programme, making during the season an opportunity which will doubtless be fully improved by Director Nikisch.

It appears that the announcement of a permanent chorus as a part of the Symphony concert scheme, made at the close of last season, was somewhat premature. Director Nikisch greatly desires, as he always has desired since he assumed his present position, to produce works for both chorus and orchestra, and it is more than possible that some plan for such a union of chorus and orchestra as was hinted at last spring may yet come about.

In the matter of soloists, although no "official utterances" have been made as yet, it is safe to entertain the most satisfying anticipations, and there is good reason to suppose that the great vocalists of the world will be most happily represented in the season's engagements.

It will interest many readers to know that Manager Ellis will again have as an associate Mr. Fred R. Comee, who will, as usual, give his especial attention to the analytical programme book, for the editing of which the able assistance of Mr. George H. Wilson has again been secured.

The Music Hall offices are now open for all who desire further information regarding the concerts or other events of the season.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1891.

MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March. 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 17th, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, September 18th, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th. [†]7t[A] s 5

THE BOSTON TIMES

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR.

BOSTON, SUNDAY, SEPT. 6, 1891

Arthur Nikisch of Boston is back from his European trip and hard at work with his rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra. As in former years there will be twenty-four public rehearsals and the same number of Saturday evening concerts, the first rehearsal occurring on Friday, Oct. 9, and the first concert on Saturday, Oct. 10. The series will be continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays, Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19, these weeks being given to the occasional tours of the orchestra over the usual route, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

The first symphony rehearsal of the season is to be given on the afternoon of Oct. 9, and the first concert on Saturday, Oct. 10. The series will be continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 6.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NICKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891 to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday afternoon, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, Sept. 17th, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, on FRIDAY, Sept. 18th, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in the regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th.

Musical Notes.

The eleventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin October 10. The twelve-dollar seats for rehearsals will be sold at auction, in Music Hall, on Monday morning, Sept. 14, and the seven-dollars and a half tickets will be sold Tuesday, the 15th. On Thursday, the 17th, the twelve-dollar seats for the concerts will be sold, and on Friday, the 18th, the lesser-priced tickets for the concerts will be disposed of in the same way. All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after September 19. As usual, there will be twenty-four concerts and as many public rehearsals.

The Philharmonic Orchestra announces in another column the sale of season tickets for its eight concerts that are to be given at the Tremont Theatre on Thursday afternoons during the winter. Mr. Listemann has already shown his skill as a programme-maker, and public interest in the present series will be by no means lessened by the announcement of many brilliant and pleasing novelties collected by him during his recent visit to the musical centres of Europe, and which will be given their first American hearing at these concerts. First-class solo talent is to appear, and arrangements have already been made for the appearance of Mme. Helen Hopekirk, Miss Gertrude Franklin, Mr. William H. Sherwood, Mr. Conrad Ansorge, Mr. Adolph Brodsky, and both Mr. Listemann and Mr. Giese. The dates on which the concerts are to be given are Nov. 5 and 19, Dec. 10 and 31, Jan. 14 and 28, Feb. 18, and March 3.

During his summer tour abroad, the scores of a great number of new works were submitted to Mr. Nikisch for examination. He selected from among them the following, which will probably be heard during the season: A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky, also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite Op. 25 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svensden; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavallera Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovitch; "Faschingbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F-major, Felix Draesecke. All of these, so far as known, are absolute novelties in America. Interesting features of the concerts will be John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony"; Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amare," F. van der Stucken, and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; Symphony in C-minor, Spohr; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner. A number of distinguished solo artists have been engaged for the concerts, among whom may be named Mme. Nordica, Miss Emma Eames, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugene D'Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni, Mr. W. H. Sherwood and Mr. Alfred Schroeder.

The Boston
Symphony Orchestra.

ELEVENTH SEASON,
1891-92.

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH,
Conductor.

. . PRESS COMMENTS . .

N. Y. World, November 4, 1891.

"Among the three or four foremost orchestras of the world."

N. Y. Sun, November 4, 1891.

"The palm of supremacy over all kindred organizations on this side of the water."

N. Y. Herald, November 4, 1891.

"The finest body of strings ever heard in this country."

N. Y. Recorder, November 4, 1891.

"Nothing like it in New York, neither in quality nor in ensemble."

N. Y. Evening Post, November 4, 1891.

"As a Schumann conductor, Mr. Nikisch has no superior, perhaps no equal."

Philadelphia Press, November 5, 1891.

"In the foreground of renown in America."

Philadelphia Inquirer, November 5, 1891.

"A prospect of the most brilliant season in its history."

Philadelphia Record, November 5, 1891.

"The most proficient band of musicians ever organized in this country."

Brooklyn Eagle, November 7, 1891.

"The rival of any force of the kind in the world."

Baltimore American, November 6, 1891.

"Enthusiastically received by the whole audience."

BOSTON MUSIC HALL.
ELEVENTH SEASON, 1891-92.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

85 PERFORMERS,
Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,
WILL GIVE A SERIES OF

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

ON CONSECUTIVE SATURDAY EVENINGS FROM OCT. 10, 1891, TO APRIL 23, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 7, DEC. 12, 1891, JAN. 16, FEB. 13 AND MARCH 19, 1892, AND

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

ON CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, FROM OCT. 9, 1891, TO APRIL 22, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 6, DEC. 11, 1891, JAN. 15, FEB. 12 AND MARCH 18, 1892.

TICKETS for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any Rehearsal Seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the Box Office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.
The $12 seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place, on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All Seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office, on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

[illegible]

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 6, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)
MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.
Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A.M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

There is probably no other news today that will be read with so much interest by genuine Bostonians as will be the announcement of the Symphony Concerts to be found in another column. The concerts will as last year be under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Nikisch and will be twenty-four in number, the first occurring Saturday, Oct. 10, and the last March 19. There will also as usual be twenty-four public rehearsals on Friday afternoons. Tickets for the series of concerts and for the series of rehearsals will be sold at $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal tickets not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16. The $12 seats will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M. All tickets remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

Conductor Nikisch's Plans for the Symphony Concerts.

The Bostonians' Fifth Transcontinental Tour—New Singers in the Company—Operatic Possibilities for the Coming Season—The Philharmonic Orchestra's Scheme—Notes.

No better evidence of the absolute confidence of the Boston public in a musical enterprise, or in the honesty of purpose of an individual, has ever been given than that shown year after year in the Symphony concert scheme and its generous founder. Circumstances, entirely beyond the control of those having the direct management of this great enterprise, have made it an impossibility to hardly outline the scheme of many of the earlier seasons before the tickets for the entire series were put upon the market, and yet, year after year, these tickets have been bought, and at a large advance upon the announced price, without a question as to the details of the concerts for which they were sold. It is gratifying that this faith should have been exhibited by the public in former years, but it is still more gratifying to be able this season to present a reasonably complete schedule of the artists and works promised for these concerts before the annual sale of tickets for the season.

Conductor Arthur Nikisch can hardly be said to have passed a leisure summer, for, leaving Boston after ending his work for the season of '90, and '91, he went almost immediately to Leipsic and his arrival in that city was no sooner known than his rooms were fairly besieged by publishers and composers eager to gain a hearing of their works in the new world by such an organization as the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Any doubts which may exist in America as to the widespread fame of the Boston orchestra throughout Europe will be easily dispelled by Conductor Nikisch's narrative of his experiences during his visit to his former field of labor.

For many weeks his time was given almost exclusively to the examination and reading of compositions that came to him from all the countries of Europe, and the completion of arrangements for the performance of such as he decided to add to the repertoire of the Boston orchestra. It will be seen that Conductor Nikisch entered upon the duty of deciding upon the novelties for the coming season in a most catholic spirit, and that he has apparently sought the desirable wherever it could be found.

Some of the novelties and works of special interest to be expected during the season are the following: A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavaliera Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke. All of these so far as known are absolute novelties in America.

Interesting features of the concerts will be John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony;" Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amare," F. van der Stucken, and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); Symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubinstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

The selection of soloists is, for many reasons, not as yet fully completed, but a number of great artists have already been definitely decided upon, these including Mme. Nordica, soprano; Miss Emma Eames, soprano; Mme. Joachim, contralto; Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugen D. Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, pianists; Mr. Busoni, 'cello, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, pianist, and others.

But a very few changes have been made in the membership of the orchestra, and these have preserved its excellence in every way.

As already stated, the 24 public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

BOSTON MUSIC HALL.

Eleventh Season.—1891-92.

THE

Boston Symphony Orchestra,

(85 PERFORMERS,)
MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, CONDUCTOR,
WILL GIVE A SERIES OF

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

ON CONSECUTIVE SATURDAY EVENINGS, FROM OCTOBER 10, 1891, TO APRIL 23, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 7, DEC. 12, 1891, JAN. 16, FEB. 13, AND MARCH 19, 1892, AND

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

ON CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, FROM OCTOBER 9, 1891, TO APRIL 22, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 6, DEC. 11, 1891, JAN. 15, FEB. 12 AND MARCH 18, 1892.

TICKETS for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, Monday, September 14th, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, Tuesday, September 15th, at 10 A. M. Any Rehearsal Seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the Box Office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16th.

The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, September 17th, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on Friday, September 18th, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th.

SIX GRAND CONCERTS
. INFANTRY HALL .
. . PROVIDENCE . .

ELEVENTH SEASON.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

ARTHUR NIKISCH, CONDUCTOR.

Wednesday evening, Oct. 21,
Wednesday evening, Nov. 18, 1891
Wednesday evening, Dec. 16,
Wednesday evening, Jan. 27,
1892 Monday evening, Feb. 29,
Wednesday evening, Apr. 6,

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 6, 1891.

BOSTON MUSIC HALL.

ELEVENTH SEASON, 1891-92.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

85 PERFORMERS.

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,

WILL GIVE A SERIES OF

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

ON CONSECUTIVE SATURDAY EVENINGS FROM OCT. 10, 1891, TO APRIL 23, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 7, DEC. 12, 1891, JAN. 16, FEB. 13 AND MARCH 19, 1892, AND

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

ON CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, FROM OCT. 9, 1891, TO APRIL 22, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 6, DEC. 11, 1891, JAN. 15, FEB. 12 AND MARCH 18, 1892.

TICKETS for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any Rehearsal Seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the Box Office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place, on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats wil be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All Seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office, on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

Conductor Nikisch's Plans for the Symphony Concerts.

The Bostonians' Fifth Transcontinental Tour—New Singers in the Company—Operatic Possibilities for the Coming Season—The Philharmonic Orchestra's Scheme—Notes.

No better evidence of the absolute confidence of the Boston public in a musical enterprise, or in the honesty of purpose of an individual, has ever been given than that shown year after year in the Symphony concert scheme and its generous founder. Circumstances, entirely beyond the control of those having the direct management of this great enterprise, have made it an impossibility to hardly outline the scheme of any of the earlier seasons before the tickets for the entire series were put upon the market, and yet, year after year, these tickets have been bought, and at a large advance upon the announced price, without a question as to the details of the concerts for which they were sold. It is gratifying that this faith should have been exhibited by the public in former years, but it is still more gratifying to be able this season to present a reasonably complete schedule of the artists and works promised for these concerts before the annual sale of tickets for the season.

Conductor Arthur Nikisch can hardly be said to have passed a leisure summer, for, leaving Boston after ending his work for the season of '90, and '91, he went almost immediately to Leipsic and his arrival in that city was no sooner known than his rooms were fairly besieged by publishers and composers eager to gain a hearing of their works in the new world by such an organization as the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Any doubts which may exist in America as to the widespread fame of the Boston orchestra throughout Europe will be easily dispelled by Conductor Nikisch's narrative of his experiences during his visit to his former field of labor.

For many weeks his time was given almost exclusively to the examination and reading of compositions that came to him from all the countries of Europe, and the completion of arrangements for the performance of such as he decided to add to the repertoire of the Boston orchestra. It will be seen that Conductor Nikisch entered upon the duty of deciding upon the novelties for the coming season in a most catholic spirit, and that he has apparently sought the desirable wherever it could be found.

Some of the novelties and works of special interest to be expected during the season are the following: A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavalliera Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke. All of these so far as known are absolute novelties in America.

Interesting features of the concerts will be John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony;" Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amare," F. van der Stucken, and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); Symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubinstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

The selection of soloists is, for many reasons, not as yet fully completed, but a number of great artists have already been definitely decided upon, these including Mme. Nordica, soprano; Miss Emma Eames, soprano; Mme. Joachim, contralto; Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugen D. Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, pianists; Mr. Busoni, 'cello, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, pianist, and others.

But a very few changes have been made in the membership of the orchestra, and these have preserved its excellence in every way.

As already stated, the 24 public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 6, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A.M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

There is probably no other news today that will be read with so much interest by genuine Bostonians as will be the announcement of the Symphony Concerts to be found in another column. The concerts will as last year be under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Nikisch and will be twenty-four in number, the first occurring Saturday, Oct. 10, and the last March 19. There will also as usual be twenty-four public rehearsals on Friday afternoons. Tickets for the series of concerts and for the series of rehearsals will be sold at $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal tickets not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16. The $12 seats will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M. All tickets remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

BOSTON MUSIC HALL.

Eleventh Season.—1891-92.

THE

Boston Symphony Orchestra,

(85 PERFORMERS,)

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, CONDUCTOR,

WILL GIVE A SERIES OF

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

ON CONSECUTIVE SATURDAY EVENINGS, FROM OCTOBER 10, 1891, TO APRIL 23, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 7, DEC. 12, 1891, JAN. 16, FEB. 13, AND MARCH 19, 1892, AND

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

ON CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, FROM OCTOBER 9, 1891, TO APRIL 22, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 6, DEC. 11, 1891, JAN. 15, FEB. 12 AND MARCH 18, 1892.

TICKETS for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, Monday, September 14th, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, Tuesday, September 15th, at 10 A. M. Any Rehearsal Seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the Box Office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16th.

The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, September 17th, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on Friday, September 18th, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th.

SIX GRAND CONCERTS
. INFANTRY HALL .
. . PROVIDENCE . .

ELEVENTH SEASON.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

ARTHUR NIKISCH, CONDUCTOR.

Wednesday evening, Oct. 21,
Wednesday evening, Nov. 18, 1891
Wednesday evening, Dec. 16,
Wednesday evening, Jan. 27,
1892 Monday evening, Feb. 29,
Wednesday evening, Apr. 6,

BOSTON MUSIC HALL.

ELEVENTH SEASON, 1891-92.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

85 PERFORMERS,

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,

WILL GIVE A SERIES OF

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

ON CONSECUTIVE SATURDAY EVENINGS FROM OCT. 10, 1891, TO APRIL 23, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 7, DEC. 12, 1891, JAN. 16, FEB. 13 AND MARCH 19, 1892, AND

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

ON CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, FROM OCT. 9, 1891, TO APRIL 22, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 6, DEC. 11, 1891, JAN. 15, FEB. 12 AND MARCH 18, 1892.

TICKETS for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any Rehearsal Seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the Box Office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place, on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All Seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office, on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

Conductor Nikisch's Plans for the Symphony Concerts.

The Bostonians' Fifth Transcontinental Tour—New Singers in the Company—Operatic Possibilities for the Coming Season—The Philharmonic Orchestra's Scheme—Notes.

No better evidence of the absolute confidence of the Boston public in a musical enterprise, or in the honesty of purpose of an individual, has ever been given than that shown year after year in the Symphony concert scheme and its generous founder. Circumstances, entirely beyond the control of those having the direct management of this great enterprise, have made it an impossibility to hardly outline the scheme of any of the earlier seasons before the tickets for the entire series were put upon the market, and yet, year after year, these tickets have been bought, and at a large advance upon the announced price, without a question as to the details of the concerts for which they were sold. It is gratifying that this faith should have been exhibited by the public in former years, but it is still more gratifying to be able this season to present a reasonably complete schedule of the artists and works promised for these concerts before the annual sale of tickets for the season.

Conductor Arthur Nikisch can hardly be said to have passed a leisure summer, for, leaving Boston after ending his work for the season of '90, and '91, he went almost immediately to Leipsic and his arrival in that city was no sooner known than his rooms were fairly besieged by publishers and composers eager to gain a hearing of their works in the new world by such an organization as the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Any doubts which may exist in America as to the widespread fame of the Boston orchestra throughout Europe will be easily dispelled by Conductor Nikisch's narrative of his experiences during his visit to his former field of labor.

For many weeks his time was given almost exclusively to the examination and reading of compositions that came to him from all the countries of Europe, and the completion of arrangements for the performance of such as he decided to add to the repertoire of the Boston orchestra. It will be seen that Conductor Nikisch entered upon the duty of deciding upon the novelties for the coming season in a most catholic spirit, and that he has apparently sought the desirable wherever it could be found.

Some of the novelties and works of special interest to be expected during the season are the following: A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavalliera Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke. All of these so far as known are absolute novelties in America.

Interesting features of the concerts will be John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony;" Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amare," F. van der Stucken, and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); Symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubinstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

The selection of soloists is, for many reasons, not as yet fully completed, but a number of great artists have already been definitely decided upon, these including Mme. Nordica, soprano; Miss Emma Eames, soprano; Mme. Joachim, contralto; Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugen D. Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, pianists; Mr. Busoni, 'cello, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, pianist, and others.

But a very few changes have been made in the membership of the orchestra, and these have preserved its excellence in every way.

As already stated, the 24 public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 6, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A.M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

There is probably no other news today that will be read with so much interest by genuine Bostonians as will be the announcement of the Symphony Concerts to be found in another column. The concerts will as last year be under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Nikisch and will be twenty-four in number, the first occurring Saturday, Oct. 10, and the last March 19. There will also as usual be twenty-four public rehearsals on Friday afternoons. Tickets for the series of concerts and for the series of rehearsals will be sold at $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal tickets not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16. The $12 seats will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M. All tickets remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra,

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,

WILL GIVE A SERIES OF

SIX GRAND CONCERTS

In Infantry Hall, • Providence,

On Wednesday evenings, October 21st, November 18th, December 16th, 1891, January 27th, Monday, February 29th, and Wednesday, April 6th, 1892.

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA,
MLLE. CLEMENTINE DE VERE,
MME. FANNY BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER,
MRS. ARTHUR NIKISCH,
MR. ALWIN SCHROEDER,
MONS. CH. MOLE,
AND HERR EUGEN D'ALBERT,
WILL APPEAR AS SOLOISTS.

Season Tickets with reserved seats, Five Dollars.

The sale of Season Tickets opens at 93 Westminster Street (store formerly occupied by Messrs. B. H. Gladding & Co.) Monday, October 12th, at 9 A.M.

To insure a fair distribution of tickets, not more than ten will be sold to any one person.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

BOSTON MUSIC HALL,
OCTOBER 5, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Offers its Providence patrons the accompanying announcement for its Eleventh Season (the tenth of its acquaintance with the musical public of this city).

With full appreciation of the favor extended these concerts last season, every effort will be made to maintain, and, if possible, raise the standard of artistic achievement already established.

While the principal attraction must always be the playing of this great body of musicians, the management considers itself fortunate in being able to announce a list of soloists of such distinction.

Sterling programmes will be performed, including some worthy novelties secured by Mr. Nikisch during his summer in Europe.

As has been the custom, programme books with descriptive notes on the works to be performed will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th.

[3]

SUNDAY, SEPT. 6, 1891.

BOSTON MUSIC HALL.

ELEVENTH SEASON, 1891-92.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

85 PERFORMERS,

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,

WILL GIVE A SERIES OF

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

ON CONSECUTIVE SATURDAY EVENINGS FROM OCT. 10, 1891, TO APRIL 23, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 7, DEC. 12, 1891, JAN. 16, FEB. 13 AND MARCH 19, 1892, AND

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

ON CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, FROM OCT. 9, 1891, TO APRIL 22, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 6, DEC. 11, 1891, JAN. 15, FEB. 12 AND MARCH 18, 1892.

TICKETS for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any Rehearsal Seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the Box Office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place, on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

aturday, Sept. 19.

BOSTON MUSIC HALL.

TWELFTH SEASON 1892-93.

THE

Boston Symphony Orchestra,

—90 PERFORMERS,—

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

WILL GIVE A SERIES OF

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

ON CONSECUTIVE SATURDAY EVENINGS, FROM OCTOBER 15, 1892, TO APRIL 29, 1893, OMITTING NOV. 5, DEC. 10, 1892, JAN. 14, FEB. 11, AND MARCH 18, 1893, AND

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

ON CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, FROM OCTOBER 14, 1892, TO APRIL 28, 1893, OMITTING NOV. 4. DEC. 9, 1892, JAN. 13, FEB. 10, AND MARCH 17, 1893.

A select Chorus will participate occasionally in the Concerts and the best available Soloists will appear.

TICKETS for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, Monday, September 19th, at 10, A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall Tuesday, September 20th, at 10, A. M. Any Rehearsal Seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the Box Office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 21st.

The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, September 22d, at 10, A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place, on Friday, September 23d, at 10. A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All Seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 24th.

---

mber of new works sub-sch for examination durd this summer, he has ing novelties, which will s in his programmes dur-new symphony by Sgam-
. 5, Tschaikowsky; also The Tempest," and suite e composer; symphonic
Richard Strauss; "Rhap-Emanuel Chabrier; "Carvendsen: ballet music, nzie; prelude, "Cavallera gni; symphonic poem, lovich; "Faschingsbil-y symphony by Dvorak; or, Feix Draesecke. All own are absolute novels of the concerts will "Spring Symphony;"

rthur Bird; "Pagina ler Stucken, and other composers yet to be mbers to be mentioned oi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes ssenet; "Reformation lssohn (seldon played);
minor, Spohr; "Ocean stein; "Harold Symverture, "King Lear," tter of course, many of
by Beethoven, Mozart, Brahms and Wagner.
ll information as to the may now be obtained

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

Established 1813.

MONDAY MORNING, SEPT. 7, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A.M.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A.M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 17th, at 10 A.M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, September 18th, at 10 A.M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th.

st 9 12

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Announcement of Some of the Soloists and the Selections of the Season.

The thousands of patrons of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will read with great interest the announcement of the plans of the management, so far as completed, for the coming season (the 11th) of this splendid organization. As usual, 24 concerts will be given on consecutive Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 10, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19. They will be preceded by 24 public rehearsals on Friday afternoons of the same weeks.

Among the soloists promised are the following famous artists: Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen D' Albert, I. J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni and Alwin Schroeder.

Some of the novelties and works of special interest named by Mr. Nikisch for performance during the season are the following: A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky; also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavaliera Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke. All of these so far as known are absolute novelties in America.

Interesting features of the concerts will be J. K. Paine's "Spring Symphony;" Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amare," F. van der Stucken, and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubin stein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

The sale of season tickets, as last year, will be by auction, this method having given general satisfaction. It does away entirely with the annoyance of standing in line for many hours or employing messengers, and enables everyone to secure his own seats in comfort. To ladies especially it is a great convenience. On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock the $7 50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7 50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made in any way to force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained. A large diagram will be displayed on the stage, and each seat will be marked off as sold. Circulars giving full particulars of the sale may be had on application at Music Hall.

[illegible] MORNING, [illegible] 7, [illegible]

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PULIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12 and March 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any Rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 17th, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, September 18th, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th.

MWS sep7

The Coming Symphony Concerts.

The announcement of the sale of tickets for the approaching season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra indicates the beginning of the music season in this city. Director Nikisch has employed his vacation in Europe in obtaining works for performance that are new to this country, and it is understood that the American composer has not been forgotten in making up a list of proposed numbers. Among them are: A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky, also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavaliera Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke. All of these so far as known are absolute novelties in America.

Interesting features will be John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony;" Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amare," F. Van Der Stucken, and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubenstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

A number of famous solo artists have already been engaged, some of whom will be heard here for the first time in these concerts.

Mme. Nordica has been selected to appear at the opening concert on Oct. 10, and later comes Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni, Mr. Alwin Schroeder and others.

Very few changes have been made in the membership of the orchestra, and none that will impair its efficiency. The $12 seats for the public rehearsals of Friday afternoon, the first of which takes place Oct. 9, are to be sold at public auction in Music Hall Monday next, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M. On Tuesday the $7 50 seats for the same rehearsals will be sold.

On Thursday the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be offered, and Friday the $7 50 seats. The experiment of last year, wherein all the seats were sold at auction, resulted so favorably and was so well received by the public that it will be continued this year, and the rules of previous seasons will obtain. No more than four seats will be sold to any one person—the seats will be sold in regular order, beginning at the right of the stage, and no bid less than 25 cents will be received. The concerts will take place weekly during the season, excepting the weeks ending Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19, when the tours of the orchestra to New York, Philadelphia and other cities will be made. This year six concerts and six public rehearsals will be given in Brooklyn under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society.

March 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 a.m.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 a.m. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 17, at 10 a.m.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, September 18, at 10 a.m.

Bids will be accepted for seats in the regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on an after Saturday, September 19.

---

by Dvorak and Sgamboti. Symphony No. 5. Tschaikwosky, also symphonic poem "La Tempete" and Suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; Rhapsodie Espagnale, Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music "Colombe," Mackenzie; symphonic poem "La Sirene," Mihalovich; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke: prelude "Cavaliera Rusticana," Mascagni; Faschingsbilder," Nicoda. American compositions to be performed are John K. Paine's spring symphony; Carnival scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina d'Amore," F. van der Stucken and some others yet to be selected. Other works to be given are the Reformation Symphony, Mendelssohn; Symphony in C minor, Spohr; Ocean Symphony, Rubinstein; Harold Symphony, Berlioz; "Scenes Alsacciennes," Massonet; overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; overture "King Lear," Littolf; and of course many of the standard works of Beethoven, Haydn, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner. Some notable engagements with soloists have been made, including Mme. Nordica, Miss Emma Eames, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugene d' Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni, Mr. Alwin Schroeder and others.

Circulars giving full particulars of the sale of season tickets, etc., may be had at Music Hall.

[4]

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 6, 1891.

BOSTON MUSIC HALL.

ELEVENTH SEASON, 1891-92.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

85 PERFORMERS,

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,

WILL GIVE A SERIES OF

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

ON CONSECUTIVE SATURDAY EVENINGS FROM OCT. 10, 1891, TO APRIL 23, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 7, DEC. 12, 1891, JAN. 16, FEB. 13 AND MARCH 19, 1892, AND

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

ON CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, FROM OCT. 9, 1891, TO APRIL 22, 1892, OMITTING NOV. 6, DEC. 11, 1891, JAN. 15, FEB. 12 AND MARCH 18, 1892.

TICKETS for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M.

Any Rehearsal Seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the Box Office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place, on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All Seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

COMING CONCERTS.

Pleasant Promises by the Symphony Orchestra.

Nordica, Eames, D'Albert, Paderewski and Other Famous Soloists Engaged.

Philharmonic Announcements—Music at the Pines—Gossip.

The concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra are occasions of rare enjoyment to thousands of music lovers, and the annual announcement of the management is always awaited with interest by the musical public.

The plans already made for the coming season give promise of an exceptionally attractive series of performances.

The orchestra will number 85 musicians, very few changes in the membership being made since last year.

The 24 public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exception of the weeks ending on Saturdays, Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19.

Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock, Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

Engagements have been effected with a number of solo artists of high repute, among whom may be named Mme. Nordica, Miss Emma Eames, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugene D'Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni and Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

From a great number of new works submitted to Mr. Nikisch for examination during his tour abroad this summer, he has selected the following novelties, which will probably find places in his programmes during the season: A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky; also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen: ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavallera Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Feix Draesecke. All of these so far as known are absolute novelties in America.

Interesting features of the concerts will be John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony;" Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amare," F. van der Stucken, and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldon played); Symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubinstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelsshon, Brahms and Wagner.

Circulars giving full information as to the sale of season tickets may now be obtained at Music Hall.

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, SEPT. 7, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor

Eleventh Season---1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On Consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 a.m.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 a.m. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 17, at 10 a.m.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, September 18, at 10 a.m.

Bids will be accepted for seats in the regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on an after Saturday, September 19.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, will give a series of twenty-four concerts on consecutive Saturday evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19, 1892, and twenty-four public rehearsals on consecutive Friday afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12 and March 18, 1892. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 a.m. The $7 50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 a. m. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16. The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 a.m. The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 a.m. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and will be marked off as sold. Tickets will be delivered in the hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold. All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

Among the novelties promised for performance this coming season are new symphonies by Dvorak and Sgamboti, Symphony No. 5, Tschaikwosky, also symphonic poem "La Tempete" and Suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; Rhapsodie Espagnale, Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music "Colombe," Mackenzie; symphonic poem "La Sirene," Mihalovich; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke; prelude "Cavaliera Rusticana," Mascagni; Faschingsbilder," Nicoda. American compositions to be performed are John K. Paine's spring symphony; Carnival scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina d'Amore," F. van der Stucken and some others yet to be selected. Other works to be given are the Reformation Symphony, Mendelssohn; Symphony in C minor, Spohr; Ocean Symphony, Rubinstein; Harold Symphony, Berlioz; "Scenes Alsacciennes," Massonet; overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; overture "King Lear," Littolf; and of course many of the standard works of Beethoven, Haydn, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner. Some notable engagements with soloists have been made, including Mme. Nordica, Miss Emma Eames, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugene d' Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni, Mr. Alwin Schroeder and others.

Circulars giving full particulars of the sale of season tickets, etc., may be had at Music Hall.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

MONDAY MORNING, SEPT. 7, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A.M.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A.M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 17th, at 10 A.M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, September 18th, at 10 A.M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th.

s7 9 12

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Announcement of Some of the Soloists and the Selections of the Season.

The thousands of patrons of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will read with great interest the announcement of the plans of the management, so far as completed, for the coming season (the 11th) of this splendid organization. As usual, 24 concerts will be given on consecutive Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 10, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19. They will be preceded by 24 public rehearsals on Friday afternoons of the same weeks.

Among the soloists promised are the following famous artists: Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen D' Albert, I. J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni and Alwin Schroeder.

Some of the novelties and works of special interest named by Mr. Nikisch for performance during the season are the following: A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky; also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavaliera Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke. All of these so far as known are absolute novelties in America.

Interesting features of the concerts will be J. K. Paine's "Spring Symphony;" Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amare," F. van der Stucken, and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubin stein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

The sale of season tickets, as last year, will be by auction, this method having given general satisfaction. It does away entirely with the annoyance of standing in line for many hours or employing messengers, and enables everyone to secure his own seats in comfort. To ladies especially it is a great convenience. On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock the $7 50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7 50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made in any way to force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained. A large diagram will be displayed on the stage, and each seat will be marked off as sold. Circulars giving full particulars of the sale may be had on application at Music Hall.

Boston Journal.

MONDAY MORNING, SEPT. 7, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PULIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12 and March 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any Rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 17th, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, September 18th, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th.

MWS sep7

The Coming Symphony Concerts.

The announcement of the sale of tickets for the approaching season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra indicates the beginning of the music season in this city. Director Nikisch has employed his vacation in Europe in obtaining works for performance that are new to this country, and it is understood that the American composer has not been forgotten in making up a list of proposed numbers. Among them are: A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky, also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavaliera Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke. All of these so far as known are absolute novelties in America.

Interesting features will be John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony;" Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amare," F. Van Der Stucken, and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubenstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

A number of famous solo artists have already been engaged, some of whom will be heard here for the first time in these concerts.

Mme. Nordica has been selected to appear at the opening concert on Oct. 10, and later comes Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni, Mr. Alwin Schroeder and others.

Very few changes have been made in the membership of the orchestra, and none that will impair its efficiency. The $12 seats for the public rehearsals of Friday afternoon, the first of which takes place Oct. 9, are to be sold at public auction in Music Hall Monday next, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M. On Tuesday the $7 50 seats for the same rehearsals will be sold.

On Thursday the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be offered, and Friday the $7 50 seats. The experiment of last year, wherein all the seats were sold at auction, resulted so favorably and was so well received by the public that it will be continued this year, and the rules of previous seasons will obtain. No more than four seats will be sold to any one person—the seats will be sold in regular order, beginning at the right of the stage, and no bid less than 25 cents will be received. The concerts will take place weekly during the season, excepting the weeks ending Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19, when the tours of the orchestra to New York, Philadelphia and other cities will be made. This year six concerts and six public rehearsals will be given in Brooklyn under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society.

[4]

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March. 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 17th, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, September 18th, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th. [†]7t[A] s5

A DELIGHTFUL PROSPECT.

Many Musical Novelties to be Given at the Symphony Concerts This Season—Nordica and Paderewski are Among the Soloists.

Few announcements of coming events arouse such general interest as the statement of the plans for the winter's season of Symphony concerts. In the past attractive programmes have been announced but there has never been a list of novelties that compares with that to be given this winter. The following-named pieces are to be given during the season of concerts and all are absolute novelties in America:

A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky, also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite, op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F. major, Feix Draesecke.

American composers will have an unusually prominent position in the programmes of the season, and among the numbers already selected are John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony," Arthur Bird's "Carnival Scenes," and F. Van der Stueken's "Pagina D'Amare," while other works are still to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scènes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubinstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf; and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

While the principal attraction of these concerts must ever be the splendid playing of this fine body of musicians, which has been continued for the coming season almost without change, the management is not unmindful of the expectations of patrons as regards soloists. Engagements have been already effected with a number of famous solo artists, among whom are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen D'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld, ~~Mr.~~ Busoin, Alwin Schroeder and others.

As already stated, the twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19.

On Monday morning Sept. 14, at ten o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered by auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than twenty-five cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at ten o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at ten o'clock, $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at ten o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

Boston Daily Traveller

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1891.

MUSIC HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Arthur Nikisch, Conductor.

Eleventh Season, 1891-92.

Auction Sale of $12 Season Tickets for Public Rehearsals at Music Hall, Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

Auction Sale of $7.50 season tickets for Public Rehearsals at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M.

Auction Sale of $12 season tickets for Concerts at Music Hall, Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.

Auction Sale of $7.50 season tickets for Concerts at Music Hall, Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

New and Desirable Compositions for the Coming Season.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has attained a reputation that is widespread, and the many European composers are anxious to take advantage of its fame. It has been no small task for Conductor Arthur Nikisch to examine the compositions from all countries in Europe, that have come to him at Leipsic, where he has been spending the summer, and many weeks have been devoted to the consideration of the repertoire of the Boston Orchestra.

Upon his arrival at Leipsic he was at once visited by publishers and composers anxious to have their productions introduced in the New World by such an organization as the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Conductor Nikisch has made his selections of new works in a most liberal spirit, and it has been his aim to accept meritorious and desirable works wherever found.

Some of the novelties and works of special interest to be expected during the season are the following: A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky, also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55, by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavaliera Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Feix Draesecke. All of these, so far as known, have never been performed in America.

Interesting features of the concerts will be John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony;" Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amare," F. van der Stucken, and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); Symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubinstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

The selection of soloists is, for many reasons, not as yet fully completed, but a number of great artists have already been definitely decided upon, these including Mme. Nordica, Miss Emma Eames, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugen D. Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni, Mr. Alwin Schroeder and others.

But a very few changes have been made in the membership of the orchestra, and these have preserved its excellence in every way.

As already stated, the 24 public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. The annual Western tour will also be made during the spring months.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1891.

REAL ESTATE MATTERS.

A Novelty in a Choice of Names for Streets.

For the nine new streets which W. B. Blakemore has just laid out at Mount Bellevue, he has chosen the names of German musicians and composers. The main thoroughfare parallel to Washington street has been named Nikisch avenue, and the streets connecting the avenue and Washington street are called respectively, Wagner, Goldmark, Schubert, Schumann, Liszt, Brahms, Mendelssohn and Rubinstein. The two great names of German melody, Mozart and Beethoven have already been taken for streets in other parts of the city, but the general impression is that Mr. Blakemore has made a good selection. He facetiously says that the Symphony concert tickets are to be so high this year that he thought best to have the composers right at home by placing their names on guide boards. It is possible that these names may attract a music-loving people, so that Mt. Bellevue will boast of a piano in every house. These streets are all forty feet wide, and with the exception of Nikisch avenue, all about seven hundred feet long.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1891.

....The auctions of the Symphony tickets next week will bring people back to town who would come for nothing else.

Clipping from Daily Amesbury

Date 9-9

The Symphony Orchestra concerts and rehearsals in Boston, promise to be even better this year than in previous seasons. Director Nikisch has made a study of new music, in an extended European tour, and his famous orchestra will render many numbers never heard before by a New England audience. Of course the standard selections from great composers will be given as usual. Boston and New England may well feel proud of possessing the best orchestra in America; and one of the best in the world.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 12, 1891.

SYMPHONY TICKET SALES.

Many inquiries at Music Hall indicate the usual lively demand for tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The auction sales will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of next week. Besides the standard works Conductor Nikisch will present during the season many attractive novelties, and the list of soloists includes such great artists as Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachin, D'Albert, Paderewski and Gruenfeld.

Boston Journal.

WITH SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 12, 1891.

The Symphony Concerts.

The sales of season tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of next week, and are occasions in which the musical public are deeply interested. The orchestra will enter upon its eleventh season in better form than ever before for the maintenance of the high standard of excellence which is expected. The fame of the solo artists engaged, among whom are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, D'Albert, Paderewski and Gruenfeld, and the interesting novelties promised make it reasonable to expect an exceptionally brilliant season.

Boston Post

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 12, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The $12 seats for the Symphony rehearsals will be sold at auction in Music Hall next Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 a.m. The $7 50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 a.m. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16. The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 a.m. The $7 50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner Friday; Sept. 18, at 10 a.m. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and will be marked off as sold. Tickets will be delivered in the hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought or they will be resold. All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

Circulars giving full particulars of the sale of season tickets, etc., may be had at Music Hall.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPT. 12, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY SALE.

The swift circuit of the year is marked again by the appointment of the Symphony season, without which entertainment Boston would hardly know how to exist. As usual, the first concert will come early in October, and the other twenty-three will follow on as heretofore, the nominal weekly sequence being interrupted a few times in order that the orchestra may give at their regular intervals the concerts granted to other cities. In another column will be found Manager Ellis's official announcement of the sales of tickets, giving the days when each set is to be offered. As last year, the whole house will be put up at auction, the box-office taking only the seats left over; the prices remain at their familiar figures and the usual conditions will govern the sale. Of course no details of the season are yet known, but it is understood that Mr. Nikisch has exerted himself during his absence abroad to secure new music of an important and interesting character.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 12.

Symphony Ticket Sales.

The thousands of patrons of the Boston Symphony orchestra are reminded that the auction sales of season tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of next week. Auctioneer Jackson will conduct the sales as usual. The splendid performances always to be expected of this fine body of musicians, the famous solo artists engaged and the interesting novelties promised ensure a season of exceptional brilliancy, and there is little doubt that tickets will be in great demand.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its eleventh season with the assurance that it is if possible even better equipped than ever before for the maintenance of the high standard of excellence which is expected and which has been attained by this superb organization in past seasons. The personnel with but few exceptions remains the same. The repertoire has been enlarged by the acquisition of many worthy novelties by Conductor Nikisch during the summer.

While the principal attraction of the concerts is always the playing of this fine body of musicians, the management have not been unmindful of the expectations of patrons in regard to soloists. A number of famous artists have been engaged, among whom are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mr. Eugene D'Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

As already stated, the twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning October 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13, and March 19.

On Monday morning, September 14, at ten o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than twenty-five cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, September 15, at ten o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, September 17, at ten o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at tho same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at ten o'clock Friday, September 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891.

Coming Concerts.

Next week will be largely taken up with the auction sales of tickets for the symphony rehearsals and concerts. The appointments are as follows: Monday, Sept. 14, sale of the $12 seats for the rehearsals; Tuesday, Sept. 15, sale of the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals; Thursday, Sept. 17, sale of the $12 seats for the concerts; Friday, Sept. 18, sale of the $7.50 seats for the concerts. In all cases the auction sale will begin at 10 A. M. As already stated, the twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19.

The Kneisel Quartet will give six concerts of chamber music at Union Hall, on Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March. 18, 1892.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 17th, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, September 18th, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th. [†]7t[A] s5

A DELIGHTFUL PROSPECT.

Many Musical Novelties to be Given at the Symphony Concerts This Season—Nordica and Paderewski are Among the Soloists.

Few announcements of coming events arouse such general interest as the statement of the plans for the winter's season of Symphony concerts. In the past attractive programmes have been announced but there has never been a list of novelties that compares with that to be given this winter. The following-named pieces are to be given during the season of concerts and all are absolute novelties in America:

A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky, also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite, op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F. major, Feix Draesecke.

American composers will have an unusually prominent position in the programmes of the season, and among the numbers already selected are John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony," Arthur Bird's "Carnival Scenes," and F. Van der Stueken's "Pagina D'Amare," while other works are still to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scènes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubinstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf; and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

While the principal attraction of these concerts must ever be the splendid playing of this fine body of musicians, which has been continued for the coming season almost without change, the management is not unmindful of the expectations of patrons as regards soloists. Engagements have been already effected with a number of famous solo artists, among whom are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen D'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoin, Alwin Schroeder and others.

As already stated, the twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19.

On Monday morning Sept. 14, at ten o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered by auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than twenty-five cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at ten o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at ten o'clock, $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at ten o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, ander the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

Boston Daily Traveller

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1891.

MUSIC HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Arthur Nikisch, Conductor.

Eleventh Season, 1891-92.

Auction Sale of $12 Season Tickets for Public Rehearsals at Music Hall, Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

Auction Sale of $7.50 season tickets for Public Rehearsals at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M.

Auction Sale of $12 season tickets for Concerts at Music Hall, Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.

Auction Sale of $7.50 season tickets for Concerts at Music Hall, Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

New and Desirable Compositions for the Coming Season.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has attained a reputation that is widespread, and the many European composers are anxious to take advantage of its fame. It has been no small task for Conductor Arthur Nikisch to examine the compositions from all countries in Europe, that have come to him at Leipsic, where he has been spending the summer, and many weeks have been devoted to the consideration of the repertoire of the Boston Orchestra.

Upon his arrival at Leipsic he was at once visited by publishers and composers anxious to have their productions introduced in the New World by such an organization as the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Conductor Nikisch has made his selections of new works in a most liberal spirit, and it has been his aim to accept meritorious and desirable works wherever found.

Some of the novelties and works of special interest to be expected during the season are the following: A new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky, also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55, by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavaliera Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Feix Draesecke. All of these, so far as known, have never been performed in America.

Interesting features of the concerts will be John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony;" Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amare," F. van der Stucken, and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); Symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubinstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

The selection of soloists is, for many reasons, not as yet fully completed, but a number of great artists have already been definitely decided upon, these including Mme. Nordica, Miss Emma Eames, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugen D. Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni, Mr. Alwin Schroeder and others.

But a very few changes have been made in the membership of the orchestra, and these have preserved its excellence in every way.

As already stated, the 24 public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. The annual Western tour will also be made during the spring months.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1891.

REAL ESTATE MATTERS.

A Novelty in a Choice of Names for Streets.

For the nine new streets which W. B. Blakemore has just laid out at Mount Bellevue, he has chosen the names of German musicians and composers. The main thoroughfare parallel to Washington street has been named Nikisch avenue, and the streets connecting the avenue and Washington street are called respectively, Wagner, Goldmark, Schubert, Schumann, Liszt, Brahms, Mendelssohn and Rubinstein. The two great names of German melody, Mozart and Beethoven have already been taken for streets in other parts of the city, but the general impression is that Mr. Blakemore has made a good selection. He facetiously says that the Symphony concert tickets are to be so high this year that he thought best to have the composers right at home by placing their names on guide boards. It is possible that these names may attract a music-loving people, so that Mt. Bellevue will boast of a piano in every house. These streets are all forty feet wide, and with the exception of Nikisch avenue, all about seven hundred feet long.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1891.

....The auctions of the Symphony tickets next week will bring people back to town who would come for nothing else.

Clipping from Daily Amesbury Ne

Date 9-9

The Symphony Orchestra concerts and rehearsals in Boston, promise to be even better this year than in previous seasons. Director Nikisch has made a study of new music, in an extended European tour, and his famous orchestra will render many numbers never heard before by a New England audience. Of course the standard selections from great composers will be given as usual. Boston and New England may well feel proud of possessing the best orchestra in America; and one of the best in the world.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 12, 1891.

SYMPHONY TICKET SALES.

Many inquiries at Music Hall indicate the usual lively demand for tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The auction sales will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of next week. Besides the standard works Conductor Nikisch will present during the season many attractive novelties, and the list of soloists includes such great artists as Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachin, D'Albert, Paderewski and Gruenfeld.

Boston Journal.

WITH SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 12, 1891.

The Symphony Concerts.

The sales of season tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of next week, and are occasions in which the musical public are deeply interested. The orchestra will enter upon its eleventh season in better form than ever before for the maintenance of the high standard of excellence which is expected. The fame of the solo artists engaged, among whom are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, D'Albert, Paderewski and Gruenfeld, and the interesting novelties promised make it reasonable to expect an exceptionally brilliant season.

Boston Post

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 12, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The $12 seats for the Symphony rehearsals will be sold at auction in Music Hall next Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 a.m. The $7 50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 a.m. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16. The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 a.m. The $7 50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner Friday; Sept. 18, at 10 a.m. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and will be marked off as sold. Tickets will be delivered in the hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought or they will be resold. All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

Circulars giving full particulars of the sale of season tickets, etc., may be had at Music Hall.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPT. 12, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY SALE.

The swift circuit of the year is marked again by the appointment of the Symphony season, without which entertainment Boston would hardly know how to exist. As usual, the first concert will come early in October, and the other twenty-three will follow on as heretofore, the nominal weekly sequence being interrupted a few times in order that the orchestra may give at their regular intervals the concerts granted to other cities. In another column will be found Manager Ellis's official announcement of the sales of tickets, giving the days when each set is to be offered. As last year, the whole house will be put up at auction, the box-office taking only the seats left over; the prices remain at their famili ar figures and the usual conditions will govern the sale. Of course no details of the season are yet known, but it is understood that Mr. Nikisch has exerted himself during his absence abroad to secure new music of an important and interesting character.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 12.

Symphony Ticket Sales.

The thousands of patrons of the Boston Symphony orchestra are reminded that the auction sales of season tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of next week. Auctioneer Jackson will conduct the sales as usual. The splendid performances always to be expected of this fine body of musicians, the famous solo artists engaged and the interesting novelties promised ensure a season of exceptional brilliancy, and there is little doubt that tickets will be in great demand.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its eleventh season with the assurance that it is if possible even better equipped than ever before for the maintenance of the high standard of excellence which is expected and which has been attained by this superb organization in past seasons. The personnel with but few exceptions remains the same. The repertoire has been enlarged by the acquisition of many worthy novelties by Conductor Nikisch during the summer.

While the principal attraction of the concerts is always the playing of this fine body of musicians, the management have not been unmindful of the expectations of patrons in regard to soloists. A number of famous artists have been engaged, among whom are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mr. Eugene D'Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

As already stated, the twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning October 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13, and March 19.

On Monday morning, September 14, at ten o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than twenty-five cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, September 15, at ten o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, September 17, at ten o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at ten o'clock Friday, September 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891.

Coming Concerts.

Next week will be largely taken up with the auction sales of tickets for the symphony rehearsals and concerts. The appointments are as follows: Monday, Sept. 14, sale of the $12 seats for the rehearsals; Tuesday, Sept. 15, sale of the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals; Thursday, Sept. 17, sale of the $12 seats for the concerts; Friday, Sept. 18, sale of the $7.50 seats for the concerts. In all cases the auction sale will begin at 10 A. M. As already stated, the twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7 Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19.

The Kneisel Quartet will give six concerts of chamber music at Union Hall, on Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7.

THE CHRONICLE.

BROOKLINE, MASS., SEPT. 12, 1891.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Music lovers are delighted with the announcement that twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19. While the principal attraction of these concerts must ever be the splendid playing of this fine body of musicians, which has been continued for the coming season almost without change, the management is not unmindful of the expectations of patrons as regards soloists. Engagements have been already effected with a number of famous solo artists, among whom are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen D'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoin, Alwin Schroeder and others. Many absolute novelties from foreign composers are announced, but American composers will have an unusually prominent position in the programmes of the season, and among the numbers already selected are John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony," Arthur Bird's "Carnival Scenes," and F. Van der Stueken's "Pagina D'Amare," while other works are still to be selected. Others numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubinstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture "King Lear," Littolf; and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner. Seats will be offered at auction at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday of next week.

The Beverly Citizen.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 12, 1891.

Symphony Concerts.

The twenty-four public Symphony rehearsals and concerts will be given in Music hall, Boston, on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays, Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19. The $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at auction on Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, and the $7.50 seats will be sold on Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock. The $12 seats for the Saturday-evening concerts will be sold on Thursday morning, Sept. 17, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be sold on Friday morning, Sept. 18. All unsold tickets at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednes day and Saturday mornings after the sales at the advertised prices, and will be sold to the highest bidder. Engagements have already been effected with a number of famous solo artists, among whom are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen D'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfield, Mr. Busoin, Alwin Schroeder and others.

NORFOLK COUNTY GAZETTE.

HYDE PARK, MASS.

S. R. MOSELEY, Publisher and Proprietor.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891.

Boston Symphony Concerts.

The Boston Symphony concerts are the musical events of the season. The managers have arranged a most attractive program of novelties that will compare favorably with preceding years. Some of the great soloists of the country have been engaged to render effectively some of the new compositions of American composers. A fine body of carefully selected musicians will render the music. The twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and Mar. 19. On Monday next at ten o'clock the sale of seats for the public rehearsals will be offered by auction at Music Hall, and will continue on Tuesday and Thursday. All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 6, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

There is probably no other news today that will be read with so much interest by genuine Bostonians as will be the announcement of the Symphony Concerts to be found in another column. The concerts will as last year be under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Nikisch and will be twenty-four in number, the first occurring Saturday, Oct. 10, and the last March 19. There will also as usual be twenty-four public rehearsals on Friday afternoons. Tickets for the series of concerts and for the series of rehearsals will be sold at $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal tickets not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16. The $12 seats will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M. All tickets remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

Boston Weekly Amusement Bulletin.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPT. 12, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The eleventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, Conductor opens at Music Hall, Oct. 10th. As usual twenty-four concerts will be given on Saturday evenings preceded by twenty-four public rehearsals on Friday afternoons of the same weeks. Some famous solo artists will appear during the season including Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Eugen D'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld and others and many interesting musical novelties are promised.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

The Kneisel quartette will give their annual series of six concerts at Union Hall, Boylston Street, Monday evenings Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan 25, Feb. 15 and March 7.

Boston Daily Traveller

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891

The Symphony Concerts.

The $12 seats for the Symphony rehearsals will be sold at auction in Music Hall next Monday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16. The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid.

Tickets will be delivered in the hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought or they will be resold. All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS).

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

ELEVENTH SEASON, 1891-92.

Auction Sale of $12 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at Music H Tomorrow (Monday), Beginning at 10 o'clock.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Rehearsals, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of 12.00 Seats for Concerts, Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of 7.50 Seats for Concerts, Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The unusually explicit announcements regarding the series of home concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra have been productive of excellent results, and all familiar with this great enterprise in past years express a belief that the success of the coming season will be entirely unprecedented. The various agents who make a business of attending the ticket sales in the interest of their customers all report a very extensive list of orders, and a large proportion of these are given "at discretion," showing a very general determination among the regular attendants to maintain their positions and retain their seats, at whatever expense is made necessary by the competitions incidental to the sales.

It is necessary each year to correct the impression that ladies cannot attend the ticket sales and successfully compete for the purchase of seats. There has been a steady gain in the attendance of ladies in recent years at these sales, and all who desire to be present will find that every effort is made to give them all possible attention.

The bidding is so conducted that the most inexperienced person can readily compete for any seat, and ladies will find that their bids will be carefully watched for by the auctioneer, who never "dwells," or makes any effort to force the premium above its apparent limits.

As already stated, the 24 public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the publ hearsals will be sold at the same plac under the same rules.
On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday ing concerts will be sold at the same and under the same rules, and the $7.5
cert tickets will be put up in the same beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept.
All seats for which no bids are recei these auction sales will be offered at th office on the Wednesday and Saturday ings after the two sales at the adve prices.

The Kneisel quartet follows the Symphony orchestra in i's attack up musical prejudices of Gotham, and is q likely to conquer the leadership in the ber concerts there as the Symphony p are to gain supremacy in their large
The Kneisel quartet concerts in Ne are to be given at Sherry's new mus
Thirty-seventh street and Fifth avenue.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 13, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The announcement by the managers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra of their plans for the coming season is full of interest. Mr. Nikisch, who has passed the summer abroad, spent much time in examining a large number of new orchestral works. The list of those that were favorably considered by him is large and important. It includes new symphonies by Tschaikowsky (No. 5), Sgambati, Dvorak and Felix Draesecke (in F major). Those that admire the symphonic poem, that delightful form of modern musical composition, toward which all the younger composers of the day are strongly inclined, will be delighted to have opportunities of hearing "La Tempete," by Tschaikowsky; "La Sirene," by Michalovich; and the "Don Juan" of the brilliant and successful Richard Strauss. Other new works are: A "Rhapsodie Espagnole," by Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Columbe," Mackenzie; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; suite opus 55, Tschaikowsky; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; and the prelude to Mascagni's opera "Cavalleria Rusticana." Besides this gorgeous feast of novelties from the pens of foreign composers, several works by talented Americans are also to be presented. John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony" will be heard once more, and receieve a cordial welcome, as doubtless will Arthur Bird's "Carnival Scenes," F. van der Stucken's "Pagina D'Amore." As a matter of course, works of the standard composers will find their proper places in the programme, including Rubinstein's "Ocean," and Berlioz's "Harold" symphonies. Among the soloists already engaged are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Miss Emma Eames, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, D' Albert, Paderewski, Greunfield (the Vienna pianist), Mr. Busoni and Mr. Alwin Schroeder. The managers of Boston's pet institution have so long and steadfastly kept faith with their patrons, that this announcement is by no means a necessity, so far as the financial success of the Symphony concerts is concerned. That, as has been proved year after year has become a matter of course. Nevertheless, it will without doubt be read with pleasure and not a few throbs of anticipation by the thousands of music lovers whose interests in them never wanes; and the infinite pains that have been taken to make the season of 1891-92 even more attractive than any one of past years deserves the heartiest praise. The particulars of the sale of tickets are as follows: Tickets for the series of concerts and for the series of rehearsals will be sold at $12 and $7.50, according to location. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Monday, Sept. 14, A. M. The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal ticket not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16. The $12 seats will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M. All tickets remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

THE COMMONWEALTH

ESTABLISHED IN 1862.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The symphony rehearsals and concerts for the coming season will be given on successive Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings beginning October 9 and 10, with the exception of the weeks ending November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13 and March 19. Some of the novelties and works of special interest to be expected during the season are the following: a new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky, also a symphonic poem. "The Tempest," and suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emmanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem. "La Sirène," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke. All of these so far as known are absolute novelties in America. Interesting features of the concerts will be John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony;" "Carnival Scenes," Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amore," F. van der Stucken; and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are: overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scènes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); Symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Litolff, and as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner. The selection of soloists is, for many reasons, not as yet fully completed, but a number of great artists have already been decided upon, these including Mme. Nordica, soprano; Miss Emma Eames, soprano; Mme. Joachim, contralto; Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, pianists; Mr. Busoni, 'cello, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, pianist, and others. The seats for both concerts and rehearsals will be sold at auction next week.

THE CHRONICLE.

BROOKLINE, MASS., SEPT. 12, 1891.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Music lovers are delighted with the announcement that twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19. While the principal attraction of these concerts must ever be the splendid playing of this fine body of musicians, which has been continued for the coming season almost without change, the management is not unmindful of the expectations of patrons as regards soloists. Engagements have been already effected with a number of famous solo artists, among whom are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen D'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoin, Alwin Schroeder and others. Many absolute novelties from foreign composers are announced, but American composers will have an unusually prominent position in the programmes of the season, and among the numbers already selected are John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony," Arthur Bird's "Carnival Scenes," and F. Van der Stueken's "Pagina D'Amare," while other works are still to be selected. Others numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alssaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubinstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture "King Lear," Littolf; and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner. Seats will be offered at auction at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday of next week.

The Beverly Citizen.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 12, 1891.

Symphony Concerts.

The twenty-four public Symphony rehearsals and concerts will be given in Music hall, Boston, on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays, Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19. The $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at auction on Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, and the $7.50 seats will be sold on Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock. The $12 seats for the Saturday-evening concerts will be sold on Thursday morning, Sept. 17, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be sold on Friday morning, Sept. 18. All unsold tickets at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the sales at the advertised prices, and will be sold to the highest bidder. Engagements have already been effected with a number of famous solo artists, among whom are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen D'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfield, Mr. Busoin, Alwin Schroeder and others.

NORFOLK COUNTY GAZETTE.

HYDE PARK, MASS.

S. R. MOSELEY. Publisher and Proprietor.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891.

Boston Symphony Concerts.

The Boston Symphony concerts are the musical events of the season. The managers have arranged a most attractive program of novelties that will compare favorably with preceding years. Some of the great soloists of the country have been engaged to render effectively some of the new compositions of American composers. A fine body of carefully selected musicians will render the music. The twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and Mar. 19. On Monday next at ten o'clock the sale of seats for the public rehearsals will be offered by auction at Music Hall, and will continue on Tuesday and Thursday. All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 6, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

There is probably no other news today that will be read with so much interest by genuine Bostonians as will be the announcement of the Symphony Concerts to be found in another column. The concerts will as last year be under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Nikisch and will be twenty-four in number, the first occurring Saturday, Oct. 10, and the last March 19. There will also as usual be twenty-four public rehearsals on Friday afternoons. Tickets for the series of concerts and for the series of rehearsals will be sold at $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal tickets not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16. The $12 seats will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M. All tickets remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

Boston Weekly Amusement Bulletin.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPT. 12, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The eleventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, Conductor opens at Music Hall, Oct. 10th. As usual twenty-four concerts will be given on Saturday evenings preceded by twenty-four public rehearsals on Friday afternoons of the same weeks. Some famous solo artists will appear during the season including Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Eugen D'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld and others and many interesting musical novelties are promised.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

The Kneisel quartette will give their annual series of six concerts at Union Hall, Boylston Street, Monday evenings Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan 25, Feb. 15 and March 7.

Boston Daily Traveller

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891

The Symphony Concerts.

The $12 seats for the Symphony rehearsals will be sold at auction in Music Hall next Monday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16. The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid.

Tickets will be delivered in the hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought or they will be resold. All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 13, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS).

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

ELEVENTH SEASON, 1891-92.

Auction Sale of $12 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at Music Hal Tomorrow (Monday), Beginning at 10 o'clock.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Rehearsals, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of 12.00 Seats for Concerts, Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of 7.50 Seats for Concerts, Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The unusually explicit announcements regarding the series of home concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra have been productive of excellent results, and all familiar with this great enterprise in past years express a belief that the success of the coming season will be entirely unprecedented. The various agents who make a business of attending the ticket sales in the interest of their customers all report a very extensive list of orders, and a large proportion of these are given "at discretion," showing a very general determination among the regular attendants to maintain their positions and retain their seats, at whatever expense is made necessary by the competitions incidental to the sales.

It is necessary each year to correct the impression that ladies cannot attend the ticket sales and successfully compete for the purchase of seats. There has been a steady gain in the attendance of ladies in recent years at these sales, and all who desire to be present will find that every effort is made to give them all possible attention.

The bidding is so conducted that the most inexperienced person can readily compete for any seat, and ladies will find that their bids will be carefully watched for by the auctioneer, who never "dwells," or makes any effort to force the premium above its apparent limit.

As already stated, the 24 public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales at the advertised prices.

The Kneisel quartet follows the Boston Symphony orchestra in its attack upon the musical prejudices of Gotham, and is quite as likely to conquer the leadership in the chamber concerts there as the Symphony players are to gain supremacy in their larger field. The Kneisel quartet concerts in New York are to be given at Sherry's new music hall, Thirty-seventh street and Fifth avenue.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 13, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The announcement by the managers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra of their plans for the coming season is full of interest. Mr. Nikisch, who has passed the summer abroad, spent much time in examining a large number of new orchestral works. The list of those that were favorably considered by him is large and important. It includes new symphonies by Tschaikowsky (No. 5), Sgambati, Dvorak and Felix Draesecke (in F major). Those that admire the symphonic poem, that delightful form of modern musical composition, toward which all the younger composers of the day are strongly inclined, will be delighted to have opportunities of hearing "La Tempete," by Tschaikowsky; "La Sirene," by Michalovich; and the "Don Juan" of the brilliant and successful Richard Strauss. Other new works are: A "Rhapsodie Espagnole," by Emanuel Chabrier: "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Columbe," Mackenzie; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; suite opus 55, Tschaikowsky; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; and the prelude to Mascagni's opera "Cavalleria Rusticana." Besides this gorgeous feast of novelties from the pens of foreign composers, several works by talented Americans are also to be presented. John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony" will be heard once more, and receieve a cordial welcome, as doubtless will Arthur Bird's "Carnival Scenes," F. van der Stucken's "Pagina D'Amore." As a matter of course, works of the standard composers will find their proper places in the programme, including Rubinstein's "Ocean," and Berlioz's "Harold" symphonies. Among the soloists already engaged are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Miss Emma Eames, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, D' Albert, Paderewski, Greunfield (the Vienna pianist), Mr. Busoni and Mr. Alwin Schroeder. The managers of Boston's pet institution have so long and steadfastly kept faith with their patrons, that this announcement is by no means a necessity, so far as the financial success of the Symphony concerts is concerned. That, as has been proved year after year has become a matter of course. Nevertheless, it will without doubt be read with pleasure and not a few throbs of anticipation by the thousands of music lovers whose interests in them never wanes; and the infinite pains that have been taken to make the season of 1891–92 even more attractive than any one of past years deserves the heartiest praise. The particulars of the sale of tickets are as follows: Tickets for the series of concerts and for the series of rehearsals will be sold at $12 and $7.50, according to location. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Monday, Sept. 14, A. M. The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal ticket not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16. The $12 seats will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M. All tickets remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

THE COMMONWEALTH

ESTABLISHED IN 1862.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The symphony rehearsals and concerts for the coming season will be given on successive Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings beginning October 9 and 10, with the exception of the weeks ending November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13 and March 19. Some of the novelties and works of special interest to be expected during the season are the following: a new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky, also a symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem. "La Siréne," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke. All of these so far as known are absolute novelties in America. Interesting features of the concerts wlll be John K. Paine's "Spring Symphony;" "Carnival Scenes," Arthur Bird; "Pagina D'Amore," F. van der Stucken; and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are: overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scénes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); Symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Litollf, and as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner. The selection of soloists is, for many reasons, not as yet fully completed, but a number of great artists have already been decided upon, these including Mme. Nordica, soprano; Miss Emma Eames, soprano; Mme. Joachim, contralto; Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, pianists; Mr. Busoni, 'cello, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, pianist, and others. The seats for both concerts and rehearsals will be sold at auction next week.

[6]

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, SEPT. 13, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The Boston Symphony orchestra's eleventh season bids fair to open even better equipped than ever before for the maintenance of the high standard of excellence of this superb organization. The personnel remains practically the same. The répertoire has been enlarged by the acquisition of many worthy novelties by Conductor Nikisch during the summer. While the principal attraction of the concerts is always the playing of this fine body of musicians, the management have engaged a number of famous artists, among whom are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mr. Eugene D'Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

The twenty four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19.

On Monday morning, September 14, at ten o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than twenty-five cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at ten o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at ten o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at ten o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

The Kneisel quartette, headed by Mr. Franz Kneisel, will give four concerts this winter at Sherry's New Music hall, New York. Although the quartette has given an annual series of chamber music concerts in Boston since 1885, it has but once been heard in the metropolis. Among the principal numbers of the New York répertoire are Brahms's quintette No. 2 in G major and Borodin's D major quartette, both new to America; Beethoven's little-known "Grosses" quartette in B flat, and Paganini's E Major quartette.

The patrons of the Boston Symphony orchestra are reminded that the auction sales of season tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts will be held at Music hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of this week. Auctioneer Jackson will conduct the sales.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891.

Conductor Nikisch as a Waiter.

[From a Boston Girl's Letter from Bayreuth.]

After the opera every one goes to dinner, and got a glimpse of real Bohemian life through Mr. ———'s kindness. He took me all around Bayreuth and showed me the places of interest, the principal one of which, judging by the crowd, was the old house where Wagner used to go evenings and drink his beer. As the performances begin at 4 we had all to eat our dinner afterward. Such a gathering at the different gardens and restaurants you never saw! Everybody knows everybody else, and they are all so jolly! In our party at the operas were Mr. ———, a Berlin critic, a young lady whose name I have forgotten, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, of the Boston Symphony, and his father and myself. Mr. Nikisch rushed ahead and secured seats. He felt a little out of place, but I assure you it was quite the thing, and they were all very nice to us. Mr. Nikisch is charming. They never have enough waiters over here, and they never prepare food enough, even though they know they will be crowded. He waited in vain for a waiter some fifteen minutes, then Mr. Nikisch became desperate and rushed out into the kitchen, and in a few minutes was back again, loaded down with plates of delicious roast beef, potatoes, &c., which he served as if he were to the manner born. They looked at us so pityingly when we said we preferred water to beer, but they got it for us. Next winter, when I see Mr. Nikisch conducting his orchestra in such a dignified manner, I shall think of him as he looked scurrying through that dining-room, with his arms filled with plates of meat, his hair flying over his face, and a set look in his eyes as he balanced those plates.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

• MUSIC AND DRAMA •

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891.

—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its season October 9; the usual series of twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will continue each week throughout the season, with the exception of the weeks ending on Saturdays November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13 and March 19, these weeks being given to the occasional tours of the orchestra over the usual route, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, SEPT. 14, 1891.

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra

ELEVENTH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $12 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT MUSIC HALL, THIS (MONDAY) MORNING, AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction sale of $7.50 seats for rehearsals, tomorrow (TUESDAY) at 10. Auction sale of $12 seats for concerts, THURSDAY, Sept. 17. Auction sale of $7.50 seats for concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 18.

This morning at 10 o'clock the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve. The $7 50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock at the same place and under the same rules. The seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold Thursday and Friday morning in a similar manner.

Mr. Clarence E. Hay has resigned his position as director of the Polymnia Club of Roxbury, and the club has therefore thought it advisable to disband, much to the regret of its many friends.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 13, 1891.

Seats for Symphony Concerts in Demand.

Soloists and Popular Programmes Promise Successful Season.

Happenings to Singers and Players of Note—Today's Concerts.

The high standard of excellence always maintained by the Boston Symphony orchestra has made the concerts of this organization almost indispensable to music lovers, and the annual sales of season tickets are occasions which interest the entire musical community.

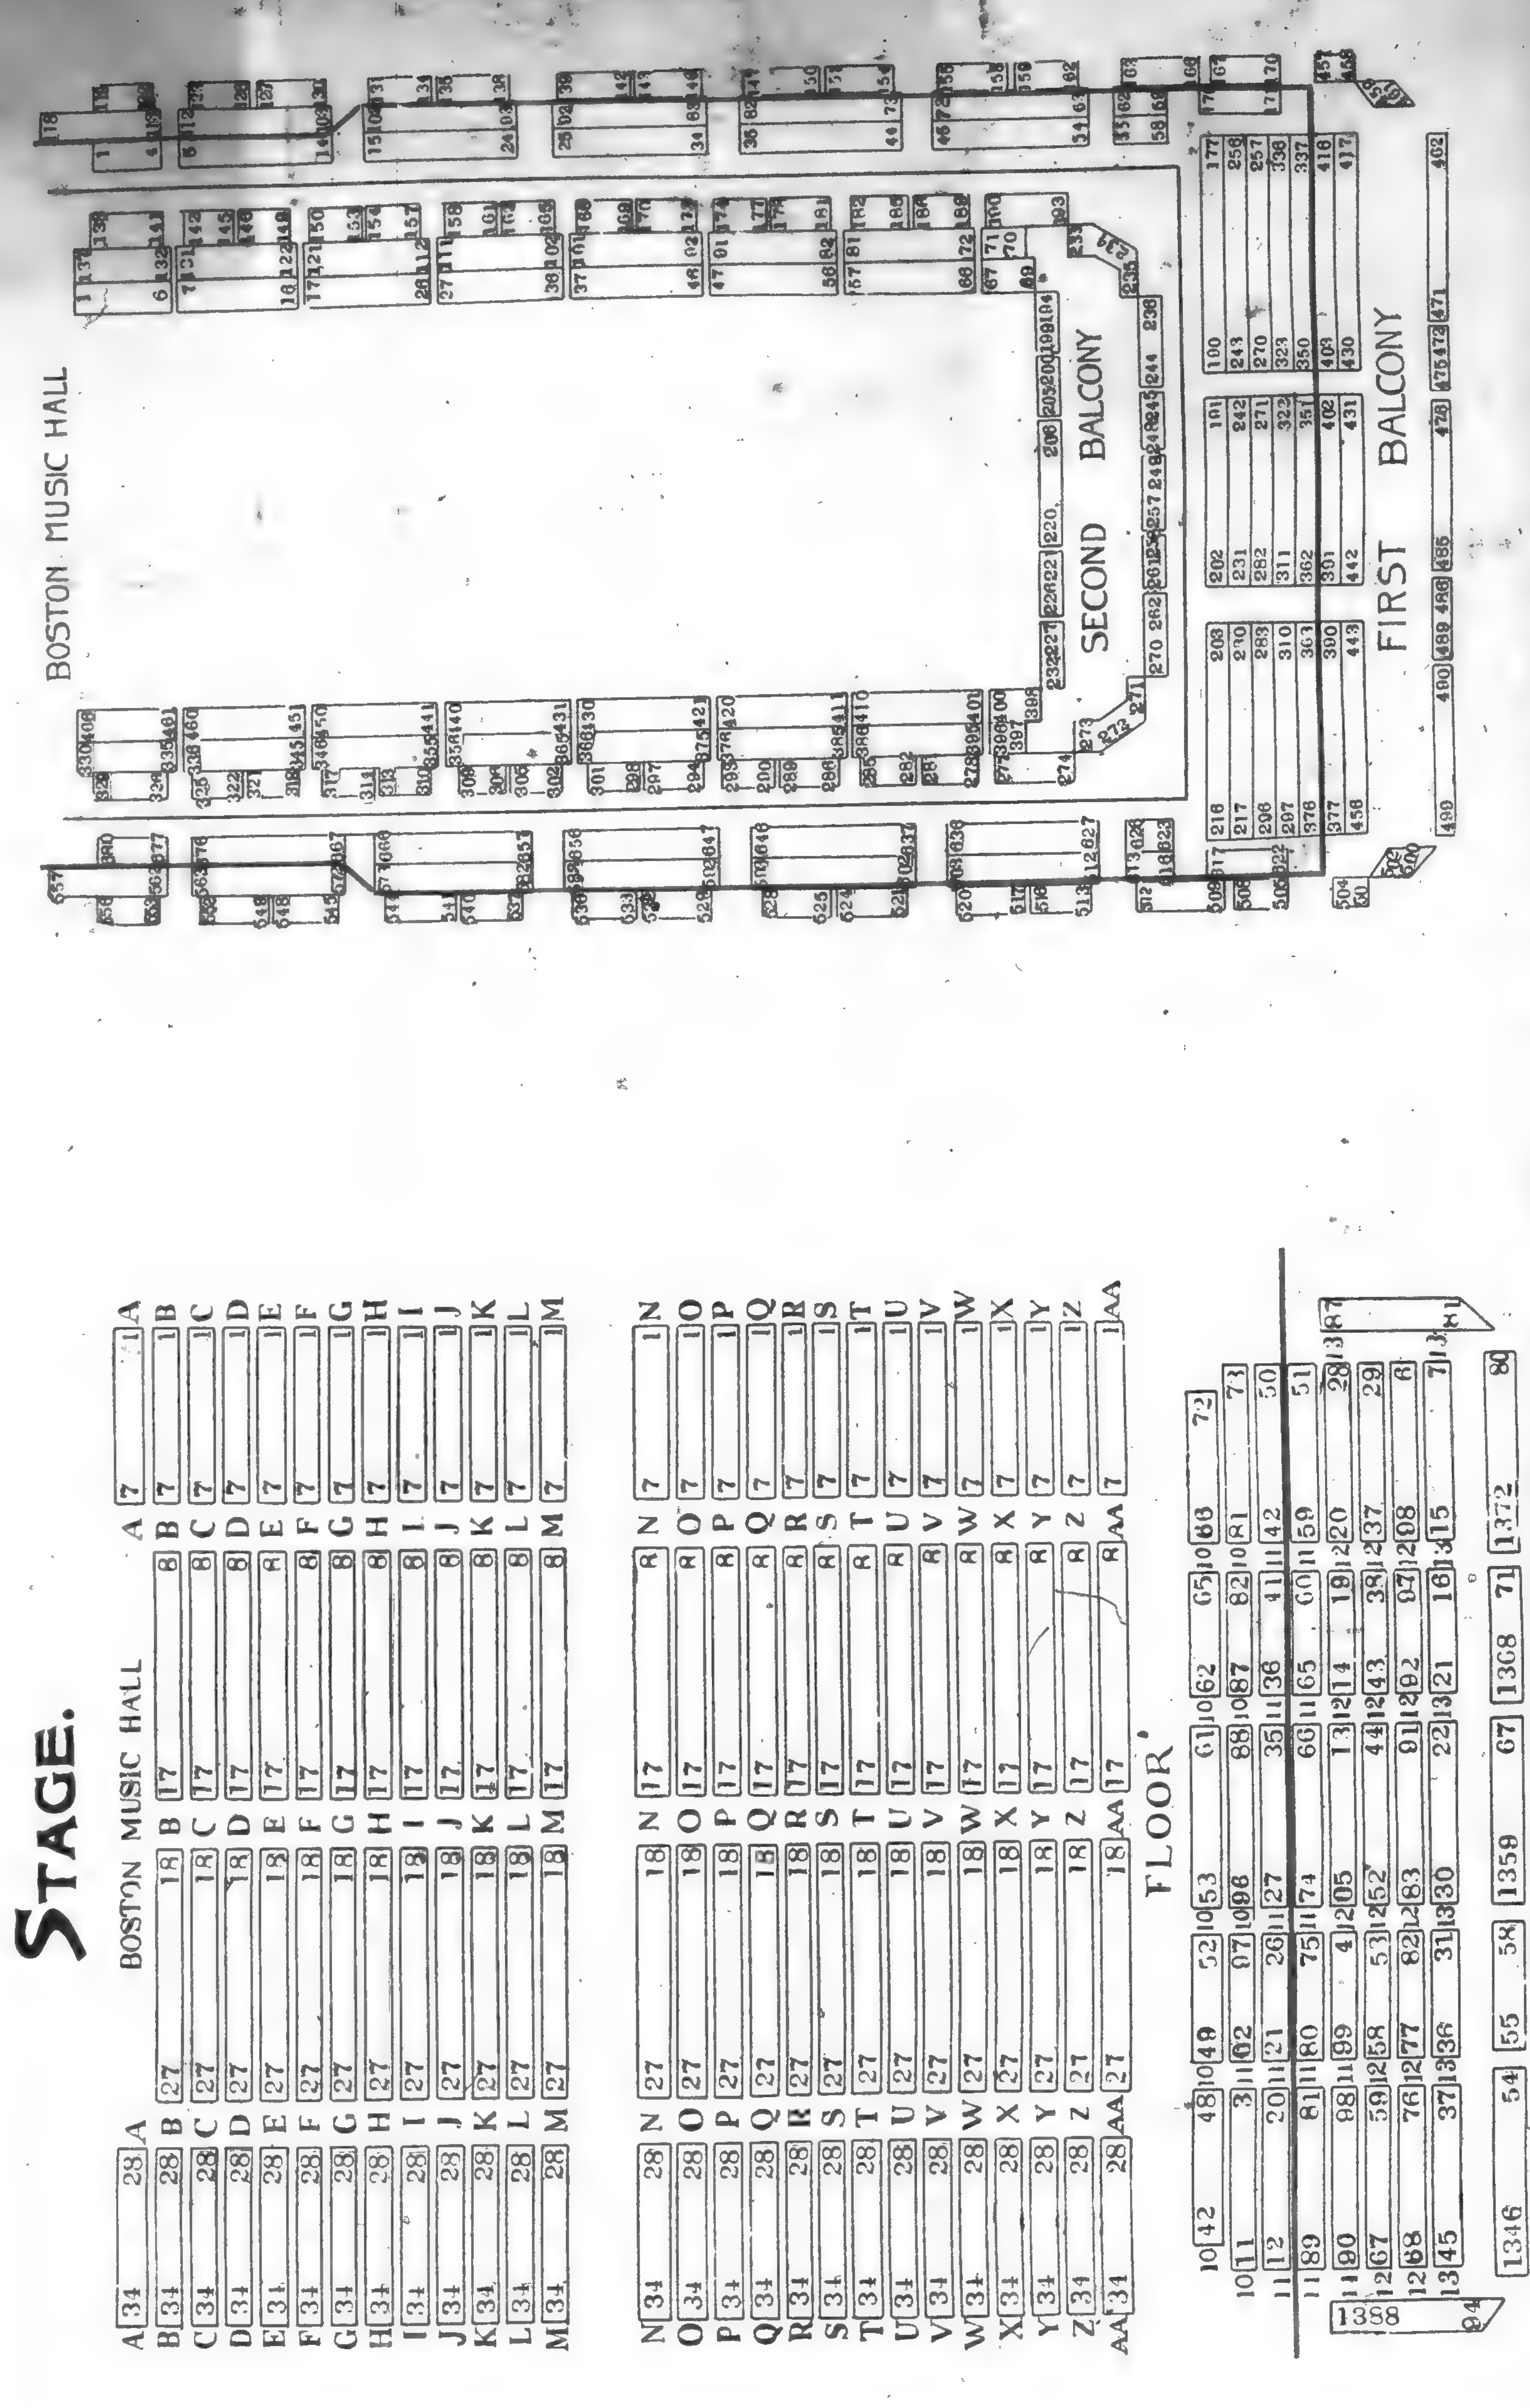
These sales will be held at Music Hall during the coming week as follows: The $12 tickets for the series of 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold at auction tomorrow (Monday) morning, beginning at 10 o'clock. The $7.50 tickets for the rehearsals will be sold on Tuesday at the same hour. The $12 and $7.50 tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday and Friday respectively.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice, and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office, on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

The orchestra enters upon its eleventh season better equipped than ever before for the highest artistic achievements. Extensive additions to the already well-stocked library have been made during the summer, and the list of soloists engaged includes such famous artists as Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mr. D'Albert, Mr. Paderewski and Mr. Gruenfeld.

—Col. Higginson is receiving many congratulatory notes upon the forthcoming symphony season, and very large orders for seats are pouring in. One prominent man writes to Col. Higginson: "Life wouldn't be worth living were it not for the Symphony orchestra," and appends a large order for seats. The auction this week at the Music Hall will be the centre of a lively scene.



THE RED LINES MARK THE DIVISION BETWEEN THE $12.00 AND THE $7.50 SEATS.

Clipping from Gazette
Hyde Park Mass
Date 9-12

Boston Symphony Concerts.

The Boston Symphony concerts are the musical events of the season. The managers have arranged a most attractive program of novelties that will compare favorably with preceding years. Some of the great soloists of the country have been engaged to render effectively some of the new compositions of American composers. A fine body of carefully selected musicians will render the music. The twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and Mar. 19. On Monday next at ten o'clock the sale of seats for the public rehearsals will be offered by auction at Music Hall, and will continue on Tuesday and Thursday. All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices.

Clipping from Independent
Falmouth Mass
Date 9-10

The symphony orchestra bids fair to be more [illegible] coming season. Mr. Nishkish has spent his whole summer abroad in the musical centres of Europe and he has devoted his whole time in examining and receiving new musical works, many of which he has brought back with him to America. Boston will have the great pleasure of listening to the fruits of his labors, some of which make their debut in the musical world. Many new soloists will be introduced in the coming concerts. The sale of symphony tickets will commence September 14.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1891.

HIGH PRICES FOR SYMPHONY TICKETS

A Desirable Seat for the Series of Rehearsals Sells for $111—The Average Price Somewhat Higher than Last Year.

It was just ten o'clock this morning when auctioneer H. W. Jackson ascended the steps leading to the platform of Music Hall and announced to the large audience there assembled that he was ready to receive bids for tickets for the rehearsals for the eleventh concert season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The bidding was lively from the start, a large proportion of the spectators having been patrons of these auction sales since their commencement, and there was an evident desire among many to secure the same seats which they had occupied in former years.

Seat number 1 in section A was sold to Mrs. A. H. Plympton, who paid $9.50 premium on $12, the regular price of the ticket. The prices rose gradually until number 28 was reached, that seat and the three adjoining it bringing $16.60 premium. In section B the prices varied from $13 to $16.50; in section C. from $14.50 to $26; and in section D, from $21.50 to $40, J. H. Hecht purchasing two seats at the last-named price. As Section E was called off the speculators began to bid, and the prices rose as high as $45.50. J. A. Lowell paid $52 for No. 23, an end seat in Section F, while the bidder for No. 24 paid only $20. Mrs. John L. Gardner obtained four seats in Section G at a premium of $53 on each seat, and the first four in the next row brought $30, the highest price in that section being $56.

Number 19 in Section J, which last year brought $150, went today for $111 to G. F. Wadsworth, and this was the highest figure realized at the sale. The next was $102.50, which was paid by C. P. Curtis for an end seat in M. Beyond that section the bids began to fall off, the prices varying from $20 to $15.

It was noticeable that more single seats were sold this year than last, and also that there were many more ladies who purchased largely. The principal ticket speculators were present at the sale, and their bids were among the highest made during the morning. The average price was fifteen per cent higher than at the last auction.

Tomorrow morning at ten o'clock the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be disposed of in the same manner, and on Thursday, at the same place, at the same hour, the $12 seats for the concerts will be offered, those for $7.50 to be sold on the day following. All seats for which no bids are received at these sales will be sold at the box office at the advertised prices.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, SEPT. 13, 1891

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The Boston Symphony orchestra's eleventh season bids fair to open even better equipped than ever before for the maintenance of the high standard of excellence of this superb organization. The personnel remains practically the same. The répertoire has been enlarged by the acquisition of many worthy novelties by Conductor Nikisch during the summer. While the principal attraction of the concerts is always the playing of this fine body of musicians, the management have engaged a number of famous artists, among whom are Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mr. Eugene D'Albert, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoni, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

The twenty four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, contined each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19.

On Monday morning, September 14, at ten o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than twenty-five cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at ten o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at ten o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at ten o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

The Kneisel quartette, headed by Mr. Franz Kneisel, will give four concerts this winter at Sherry's New Music hall, New York. Although the quartette has given an annual series of chamber music concerts in Boston since 1885, it has but once been heard in the metropolis. Among the principal numbers of the New York répertoire are Brahms's quintette No. 2 in G major and Borodin's D major quartette, both new to America; Beethoven's little-known "Grosses" quartette in B flat, and Paganini's E Major quartette.

The patrons of the Boston Symphony orchestra are reminded that the auction sales of season tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts will be held at Music hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of this week. Auctioneer Jackson will conduct the sales.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891.

Conductor Nikisch as a Waiter.

[From a Boston Girl's Letter from Bayreuth.]

After the opera every one goes to dinner, and got a glimpse of real Bohemian life through Mr. ———'s kindness. He took me all around Bayreuth and showed me the places of interest, the principal one of which, judging by the crowd, was the old house where Wagner used to go evenings and drink his beer. As the performances begin at 4 we had all to eat our dinner afterward. Such a gathering at the different gardens and restaurants you never saw! Everybody knows everybody else, and they are all so jolly! In our party at the operas were Mr. ———, a Berlin critic, a young lady whose name I have forgotten, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, of the Boston Symphony, and his father and myself. Mr. Nikisch rushed ahead and secured seats. He felt a little out of place, but I assure you it was quite the thing, and they were all very nice to us. Mr. Nikisch is charming. They never have enough waiters over here, and they never prepare food enough, even though they know they will be crowded. He waited in vain for a waiter some fifteen minutes, then Mr. Nikisch became desperate and rushed out into the kitchen, and in a few minutes was back again, loaded down with plates of delicious roast beef, potatoes, &c., which he served as if he were to the manner born. They looked at us so pityingly when we said we preferred water to beer, but they got it for us. Next winter, when I see Mr. Nikisch conducting his orchestra in such a dignified manner, I shall think of him as he looked scurrying through that dining-room, with his arms filled with plates of meat, his hair flying over his face, and a set look in his eyes as he balanced those plates.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

• MUSIC AND DRAMA •

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891.

—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its season October 9; the usual series of twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will continue each week throughout the season, with the exception of the weeks ending on Saturdays November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13 and March 19, these weeks being given to the occasional tours of the orchestra over the usual route, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, SEPT. 14, 1891.

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra

ELEVENTH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $12 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT MUSIC HALL, THIS (MONDAY) MORNING, AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction sale of $7.50 seats for rehearsals, tomorrow (TUESDAY) at 10. Auction sale of $12 seats for concerts, THURSDAY, Sept. 17. Auction sale of $7.50 seats for concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 18.

This morning at 10 o'clock the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve. The $7 50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock at the same place and under the same rules. The seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold Thursday and Friday morning in a similar manner.

Mr. Clarence E. Hay has resigned his position as director of the Polymnia Club of Roxbury, and the club has therefore thought it advisable to disband, much to the regret of its many friends.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 13, 1891.

Seats for Symphony Concerts in Demand.

Soloists and Popular Programmes Promise Successful Season.

Happenings to Singers and Players of Note—Today's Concerts.

The high standard of excellence always maintained by the Boston Symphony orchestra has made the concerts of this organization almost indispensable to music lovers, and the annual sales of season tickets are occasions which interest the entire musical community.

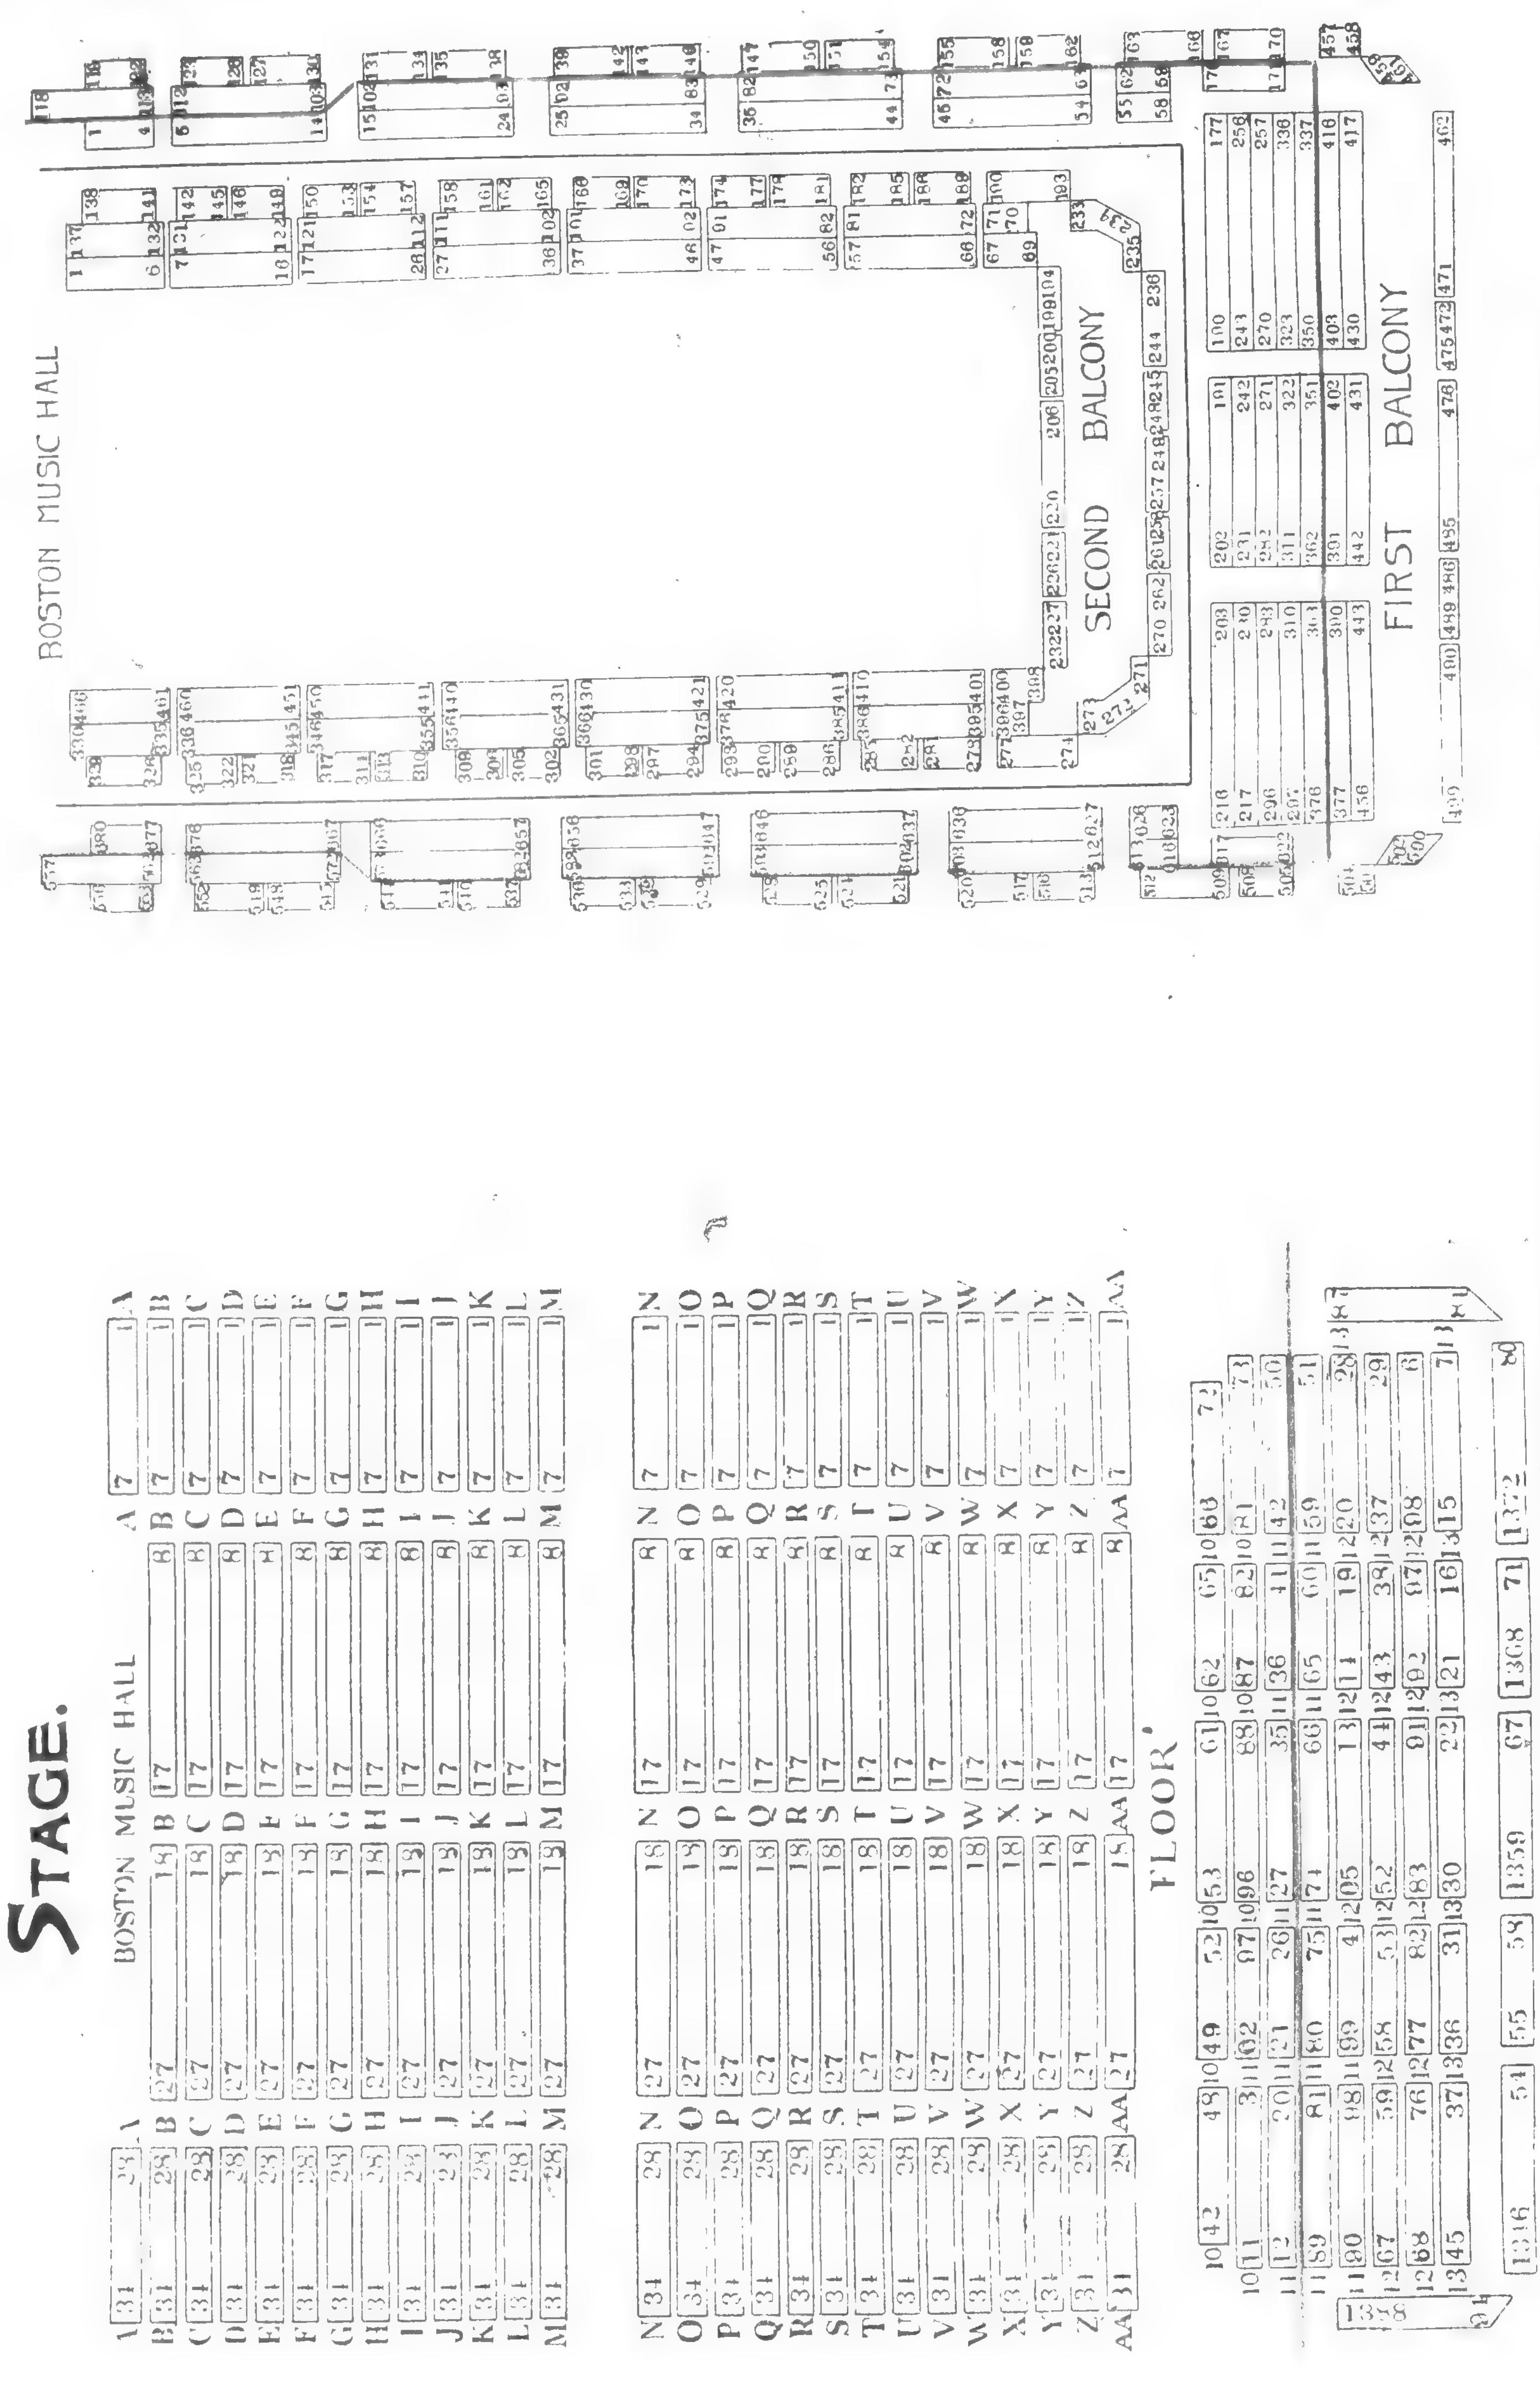
These sales will be held at Music Hall during the coming week as follows: The $12 tickets for the series of 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold at auction tomorrow (Monday) morning, beginning at 10 o'clock. The $7.50 tickets for the rehearsals will be sold on Tuesday at the same hour. The $12 and $7.50 tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday and Friday respectively.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice, and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the box office, on and after Saturday, Sept. 19.

The orchestra enters upon its eleventh season better equipped than ever before for the highest artistic achievements. Extensive additions to the already well-stocked library have been made during the summer, and the list of soloists engaged includes such famous artists as Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mr. D'Albert, Mr. Paderewski and Mr. Gruenfeld.

—Col. Higginson is receiving many congratulatory notes upon the forthcoming symphony season, and very large orders for seats are pouring in. One prominent man writes to Col. Higginson: "Life wouldn't be worth living were it not for the Symphony orchestra," and appends a large order for seats. The auction this week at the Music Hall will be the centre of a lively scene.



THE RED LINES MARK THE DIVISION BETWEEN THE $12.00 AND THE $7.50 SEATS.

Clipping from Gazette
Hyde Park Mass
Date 9-12

Boston Symphony Concerts.

The Boston Symphony concerts are the musical events of the season. The managers have arranged a most attractive program of novelties that will compare favorably with preceding years. Some of the great soloists of the country have been engaged to render effectively some of the new compositions of American composers. A fine body of carefully selected musicians will render the music. The twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and Mar. 19. On Monday next at ten o'clock the sale of seats for the public rehearsals will be offered by auction at Music Hall, and will continue on Tuesday and Thursday. All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices.

Clipping from Independent
Falmouth Ma
Date 9-10

The symphony orchestra bids fair to be more ~~complete than ever the~~ coming season. Mr. Nishkish has spent his whole summer abroad in the musical centres of Europe and he has devoted his whole time in examining and receiving new musical works, many of which he has brought back with him to America. Boston will have the great pleasure of listening to the fruits of his labors, some of which make their debut in the musical world. Many new soloists will be introduced in the coming concerts. The sale of symphony tickets will commence September 14.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1891.

HIGH PRICES FOR SYMPHONY TICKETS

A Desirable Seat for the Series of Rehearsals Sells for $111—The Average Price Somewhat Higher than Last Year.

It was just ten o'clock this morning when auctioneer H. W. Jackson ascended the steps leading to the platform of Music Hall and announced to the large audience there assembled that he was ready to receive bids for tickets for the rehearsals for the eleventh concert season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The bidding was lively from the start, a large proportion of the spectators having been patrons of these auction sales since their commencement, and there was an evident desire among many to secure the same seats which they had occupied in former years.

Seat number 1 in section A was sold to Mrs. A. H. Plympton, who paid $9.50 premium on $12, the regular price of the ticket. The prices rose gradually until number 28 was reached, that seat and the three adjoining it bringing $16.60 premium. In section B the prices varied from $13 to $16.50; in section C, from $14.50 to $26; and in section D, from $21.50 to $40, J. H. Hecht purchasing two seats at the last-named price. As Section E was called off the speculators began to bid, and the prices rose as high as $45.50. J. A. Lowell paid $52 for No. 23, an end seat in Section F, while the bidder for No. 24 paid only $20. Mrs. John L. Gardner obtained four seats in Section G at a premium of $53 on each seat, and the first four in the next row brought $30, the highest price in that section being $56.

Number 19 in Section J, which last year brought $150, went today for $111 to G. F. Wadsworth, and this was the highest figure realized at the sale. The next was $102.50, which was paid by C. P. Curtis for an end seat in M. Beyond that section the bids began to fall off, the prices varying from $20 to $15.

It was noticeable that more single seats were sold this year than last, and also that there were many more ladies who purchased largely. The principal ticket speculators were present at the sale, and their bids were among the highest made during the morning. The average price was fifteen per cent higher than at the last auction.

Tomorrow morning at ten o'clock the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be disposed of in the same manner, and on Thursday, at the same place, at the same hour, the $12 seats for the concerts will be offered, those for $7.50 to be sold on the day following. All seats for which no bids are received at these sales will be sold at the box office at the advertised prices.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 13.

MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March 18, 1892.

Mme. NORDICA,
Mme. JOACHIM,
Mrs. H. H. A. BEACH,
Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT,
Mr. IGNACE J. PADEREWSKI,
Mr. ALFRED GRUENFELD,
Mr. BUSONI,
Mr. ALWIN SCHROEDER.

And other Solo Artists have been engaged to appear in this series.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7 50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, Sept. 17th, at 10 A. M.

The $7 50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, on FRIDAY, Sept. 18th, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th.

Tomorrow evening the auction sale of seats for this season's series of concerts by the Boston Symphony will begin at Music Hall with the disposal of the twelve dollar seats for the public rehearsals. The sales for the other seats will take place on Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday. The conditions will be the same as in the past, the management only taking the seats that remain unsold, which will be on sale on and after September 19th. In addition to the Boston concerts, the orchestra give performances in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, besides six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn for the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society.

Boston Daily Traveller

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1891.

BIDDING FOR SEATS.

Opening of the Sale of Tickets to the Symphony Concerts and Rehearsals.

The auction sales of seats for the symphony rehearsals and concerts, during the season of 1891–1892, was opened this morning in Music Hall, shortly after 10 o'clock.

Auctioneer Jackson, on mounting the platform, found himself before a much larger assemblage than last year, the estimated number being between 400 and 500. He reminded the purchasers that the bids were on the premiums in addition to the regular ticket price. He announced today's sale to consist of the $12 rehearsal tickets, and called for bids on the first seat in row A.

The bidding opened in a spirited manner and was speedily run up towards the $10 mark, but stopped at $9.50. The purchaser, a benevolent looking gentleman, appeared highly elated, but his bargain was bettered by the next buyer, who secured the next seat at a premium of $8.50.

The bidding then took an upward start, and the four last seats in the first row to the left of the stage commanded a premium of $16.50.

Row B opened with a sale of two seats at $12.50 premium. The bidding continued to be lively and the management looked happy.

Tomorrow the $7.50 rehearsal seats will be offered; Wednesday the $12 concert seats, and Thursday the $7.50 concert seats.

At 2 o'Clock.

The sale of seats to the Symphony rehearsals has continued all day. As the sale neared the transverse aisle premiums took a boom and went up to $50 to $60. These bids continued, decreasing slightly toward the rear of the hall. The attendance has been on the increase all day.

[illegible]

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, VOL. XC., NO. 77.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 15, 1891.

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra.

ELEVENTH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $7.50 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT MUSIC HALL THIS (TUESDAY) MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction sale of $12 seats for concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 17. Auction sale of $7.50 seats for concerts FRIDAY, Sept. 18.

REHEARSAL TICKETS.

Large Premiums Again Paid at Music Hall.

The sale of the $12 Friday afternoon Symphony rehearsal seats at Music Hall, yesterday, was a greater success in many ways than anything in this line known in the symphony concert records.

The hall was well filled down stairs when the sale began at 10 o'clock, and the buyers were more generally representative of personal interests than in former years. The fashionable speculators (for fashion has drawn its line in this profession as in others), were well supplied with orders, but there were many who have held large commissions in former years who were not as ready to take the risks incidental to "extras" as formerly.

The bidding started off briskly at $9.50 premium for the first corner seats on the front row, and the corresponding seats on the left of the house brought $16.50 each. From these figures the premiums advanced from $20 to $40 for the first half-dozen rows, and then the competition began for the "best" seats, or, in other words, the seats which have brought the highest prices for the last few years.

This competition quickly forced the premium bids over $50, and in two cases to more than double that figure, two seats fetching $102 each, and two others $119 each.

The bidding was steady throughout the day, and practically every seat of the $12 set was sold.

The balcony seats sold well up to those on the floor, and a rough estimate gives a result fully as satisfactory as that of last year.

This morning the $7.50 rehearsal seats will be sold at auction, on Thursday morning the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts, and on Friday morning the $7.50 concert seats will be offered in the same way.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

TUESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 15, 1891.

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra.

ELEVENTH SEASON.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at Music Hall, this (TUESDAY) morning at 10 o'clock, continuing through the day.

Auction sale of $12 seats for concerts, THURSDAY, Sept. 17. Auction sale of $7.50 seats for concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 18. It

SYMPHONY SEATS.

Spirited Bidding on the Opening Day of the Auction Sale.

The auction sale of seats for the Symphony rehearsals and concerts for the season of 1891-92 opened yesterday morning at 10 o'clock. Auctioneer Jackson found a larger attendance awaiting him than last year, the number being estimated at between 400 and 500. He reminded the purchasers that the bids were on the premiums, in addition to the regular ticket price. He announced today's sale to consist of the $12 rehearsal tickets, and called for bids on the first seat in row A.

The bidding opened in a spirited manner and was speedily run up towards the $10 mark, but stopped at $9 50. The purchaser's bargain was bettered by the next buyer, who secured the next seat at a premium of $8 50. The bidding then took an upward start, and the four last seats in the first row to the left of the stage commanded a premium of $16 50. Row B opened with a sale of two seats at $12 50 premium. The bidding continued to be lively.

Today the $7 50 rehearsal seats will be offered, Wednesday the $12 concert seats, and Thursday the $7 50 concert seats. In the afternoon as the sale neared the transverse aisle premiums took a boom and went up to $50 to $60. These bids continued, decreasing slightly toward the rear of the hall. Some special seats that went at a high premium last year, came a little easier this year, as, for instance, that seat in section I which brought $150 last year this year was $11. Mrs. Gardner has four seats in G this year, bid off at a premium of $53 each.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 15, 1891.

Symphony Concerts.

When Auctioneer Jackson opened the sale of seats for the Symphony Concerts at Music Hall on Monday there was a large crowd, evidently determined to have good seats at any cost. The bidding was started at a premium of from $15 to $20, and some seats sold as high as $45 and $46, but this did not last, and by 11 o'clock the price had settled to about $30 premium.

The performances this year will be exceptionally brilliant, and it is not surprising that the tickets are in such demand.

[illegible]

TUESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 15, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY TICKETS.

There were many people at the auction of the Symphony tickets yesterday in Music Hall and the bidding was brisk. The $7 50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction this morning at 10. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

THE BOSTON NEWS.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1891.

AFTER SYMPHONY TICKETS.

A big crowd of musical people and speculators was on hand at Music Hall yesterday morning to see the best Symphony Concert rehearsal tickets auctioned off. The bidding was lively. The highest premium paid was $150 for seat 19 in section I. Mrs. Jack Gardner obtained four seats in section G at a premium of $53 on each seat.

Clipping from Budget
Boston Mass
Date 9-13

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Even among the choicest musical entertainments of any city, the Boston symphony concerts are unique. The marked success that attended Mr. Georg Henschel, the first conductor, was ably carried out by Mr. Gericke; but the period of success inaugurated by Mr. Nikisch may be said to be totally without precedent. The speculative student of human nature might find much to interest him in analyzing the qualities that contribute to so notable an achievement. Mr. Nikisch is impressive in personal presence. He has a curious mingling of the tenacity of the German and the vivacity of the French temperament. He commands, but he always, by some subtle power, inspires his audience with an enthusiasm for being commanded by his work. He has great gifts, and the culture of serious study and experience, but perhaps the secret of his success lies, after all, in his special persistence of energy. It is this quality which Herbert Spencer has named as the one first cause of the universe. Its presence in the individual is only a matter of degree. In it is to be found the magic spring of all great and creative achievement.

This Summer Conducter Nikisch has passed in Leipsic holding inevitable receptions for a throng of masters and composers, who desire to have their works interpreted by so choice an organization as the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The verdict of a critical audience, like that which assists at these concerts, is also important. Out of the many compositions submitted to him, Conductor Nikisch has selected several novelties that are interesting and valuable. The soloists will include Mme. Nordica (Boston's favorite, Lilian Norton), Miss Eames-who in private life is now Mrs. Julian Story, and other notable artists. A promising season seems to unfold itself before this choice musical organization.

— Farmer,
Clipping from ~~Post~~, Bridgeport, Conn.
Date 9-12

The Boston Symphony Society.

Musicians and music-loving residents of this city will, perhaps, be interested to know that a strong effort is being made to bring the famous Boston Symphony society to this city this season, for one or more concerts. Under the leadership of Arthur Nikisch, this society has acquired fame during the past two years. It is composed of 66 of the most finished musicians in this country, included among whom are a number of celebrated soloists.

It is thought that the society may be induced to appear here if 500 subscriptions at $1.50 each are obtained. Papers are now in circulation, and encouraging results have already been obtained. It is hoped that this city will emulate New Haven, where the society is to play four concerts this season.

Clipping from
JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.
Date 9-13

Alwin Schroeder, the new cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whom Mr. Nikisch brought over to take the place vacated by Mr. Hekking, is said to have won considerable honor in his own country as a fine artist. He will be the soloist at one of the Providence concerts.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1891.

PRICES NOT SO HIGH AS LAST YEAR.

Second Day's Auction Sale of Symphony Rehearsal Tickets.

There was even a larger attendance than yesterday at the auction sale of the Symphony concert rehearsal seats, which opened this morning at ten o'clock, at Music Hall. The best seats were disposed of yesterday, and those offered today were the lot for which a premium was asked over $7.50. The first seat offered by Auctioneer Jackson was numbered 1152, and was at the end of the first section under the lower balcony. It brought $12, and the prices along the row ranged from that figure to $8.50. The seats directly under the balcony brought much less than at last year's sale, the highest price today being $7.50 and the lowest twenty-five cents, while several were not bid for at all. Considerable amusement was caused when the centre seat in the last row, next to those which had just been checked off at thirty-five cents each, was carried up to $5, there being two eager bidders for that desired spot. An elderly lady became its proud possessor, and bore off the ticket in triumph, but not before the next three seats had been declared sold at seventy-five cents premium. The prices realized for this section of the hall were said by the speculators to be far behind those of last year. The back rows of seats in the balcony brought from $17.50 to $5, most of the seats being sold singly. The tickets left over from these auctions will be sold at the box office tomorrow, and the sale for the concerts will be opened at ten o'clock Thursday.

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

SUNDAY, SEPT. 13, 1891.

Alwin Schroeder, the new cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whom Mr. Nikisch brought over to take the place vacated by Mr. Hekking, is said to have won considerable honor in his own country as a fine artist. He will be the soloist at one of the Providence concerts.

Boston Journal.

WITH SUPPLEMENT.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 16, 1891.

Sale of Symphony Seats.

The sale of seats for the Symphony rehearsals was continued at Music Hall on Tuesday, the attendance being good and the bidding rapid and at times quite spirited. The sale was of the $7 50 seats, and while the greater portion went to individual buyers, Messrs. Connelly of the Adams House news stand and Mr. Thayer of the Parker House were good purchasers. The premiums ranged pretty well, from $23 50 to $12 being paid for seats in the third row of the lower side balconies, the average being well up to $20. Seats in the lower balcony, sixth row back, ran from $9 up to $14 50. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office to-day.

Boston Post

WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 16, 1891.

SALE OF SYMPHONY TICKETS.

The continued auction sale of the Symphony concert rehearsal seats opened yesterday morning at 10 o'clock at Music Hall. The best seats were disposed of Monday and those offered yesterday were the lot for which a premium was asked over $7 50. The first seat offered by Auctioneer Jackson was numbered 1152, and was at the end of the first section under the lower balcony. It brought $12, and the prices along the row ranged from that figure to $8 50. The seats directly under the balcony brought much less than at last year's sale, the highest price being $7 50 and the lowest 25 cents, while several were not bid for at all.

Considerable amusement was caused when the centre seat in the last row, next to those which had just been checked off at 35 cents each, was carried up to $5, there being two eager bidders for that desired spot. An elderly lady became its proud possessor, and bore off the ticket in triumph, but not before the next three seats had been declared sold at 75 cents premium. The prices realized for this section of the hall were said by the speculators to be far behind those of last year. The back rows of seats in the balcony brought from $17 50 to $5, most of the seats being sold singly. The tickets left over from these auctions will be sold at the box office today, and the sale for the concerts will be opened at 10 o'clock Thursday.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, VOL. XC., NO. 78.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 16, 1891.

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra.

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

ELEVENTH SEASON.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive SATURDAY EVENINGS, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891; Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19, 1892.

Auction sale of $12 season tickets at Music Hall, tomorrow (THURSDAY), at 10 A. M.

Auction sale of $7.50 season tickets at Music Hall, FRIDAY, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 13.

MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(85 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season. 1891-92.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, and March 19, 1892; and

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On consecutive Friday afternoons, from Oct. 9, 1891, to April 22, 1892, omitting Nov. 6, Dec. 11, 1891, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, and March 18, 1892.

Mme. NORDICA,
Mme. JOACHIM,
Mrs. H. H. A. BEACH,
Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT,
Mr. IGNACE J. PADEREWSKI,
Mr. ALFRED GRUENFELD,
Mr. BUSONI,
Mr. ALWIN SCHROEDER.

And other Solo Artists have been engaged to appear in this series.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

The $7 50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, Sept. 17th, at 10 A. M.

The $7 50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, on FRIDAY, Sept. 18 h, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale at the Box Office on and after Saturday, September 19th.

Tomorrow evening the auction sale of seats for this season's series of concerts by the Boston Symphony will begin at Music Hall with the disposal of the twelve dollar seats for the public rehearsals. The sales for the other seats will take place on Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday. The conditions will be the same as in the past, the management only taking the seats that remain unsold, which will be on sale on and after September 19th. In addition to the Boston concerts, the orchestra give performances in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, besides six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn for the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society.

Boston Daily Traveller

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1891.

BIDDING FOR SEATS.

Opening of the Sale of Tickets to the Symphony Concerts and Rehearsals.

The auction sales of seats for the symphony rehearsals and concerts, during the season of 1891–1892, was opened this morning in Music Hall, shortly after 10 o'clock.

Auctioneer Jackson, on mounting the platform, found himself before a much larger assemblage than last year, the estimated number being between 400 and 500. He reminded the purchasers that the bids were on the premiums in addition to the regular ticket price. He announced today's sale to consist of the $12 rehearsal tickets, and called for bids on the first seat in row A.

The bidding opened in a spirited manner and was speedily run up towards the $10 mark, but stopped at $9.50. The purchaser, a benovelent looking gentleman, appeared highly elated, but his bargain was bettered by the next buyer, who secured the next seat at a premium of $8.50.

The bidding then took an upward start, and the four last seats in the first row to the left of the stage commanded a premium of $16.50.

Row B opened with a sale of two seats at $12.50 premium. The bidding continued to be lively and the management looked happy.

Tomorrow the $7.50 rehearsal seats will be offered; Wednesday the $12 concert seats, and Thursday the $7.50 concert seats.

At 2 o'Clock.

The sale of seats to the Symphony rehearsals has continued all day. As the sale neared the transverse aisle premiums took a boom and went up to $50 to $60. These bids continued, decreasing slightly toward the rear of the hall. The attendance has been on the increase all day.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, VOL. XC., NO. 77.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 15, 1891.

BOSTON Symphony Orchestra.

ELEVENTH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $7.50 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT MUSIC HALL THIS (TUESDAY) MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction sale of $12 seats for concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 17. Auction sale of $7.50 seats for concerts FRIDAY, Sept. 18.

REHEARSAL TICKETS.

Large Premiums Again Paid at Music Hall.

The sale of the $12 Friday afternoon Symphony rehearsal seats at Music Hall, yesterday, was a greater success in many ways than anything in this line known in the symphony concert records.

The hall was well filled down stairs when the sale began at 10 o'clock, and the buyers were more generally representative of personal interests than in former years. The fashionable speculators (for fashion has drawn its line in this profession as in others), were well supplied with orders, but there were many who have held large commissions in former years who were not as ready to take the risks incidental to "extras" as formerly.

The bidding started off briskly at $9.50 premium for the first corner seats on the front row, and the corresponding seats on the left of the house brought $16.50 each. From these figures the premiums advanced from $20 to $40 for the first half-dozen rows, and then the competition began for the "best" seats, or, in other words, the seats which have brought the highest prices for the last few years.

This competition quickly forced the premium bids over $50, and in two cases to more than double that figure, two seats fetching $102 each, and two others $119 each.

The bidding was steady throughout the day, and practically every seat of the $12 set was sold.

The balcony seats sold well up to those on the floor, and a rough estimate gives a result fully as satisfactory as that of last year.

This morning the $7.50 rehearsal seats will be sold at auction, on Thursday morning the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts, and on Friday morning the $7.50 concert seats will be offered in the same way.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

TUESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 15, 1891.

BOSTON Symphony Orchestra.

ELEVENTH SEASON.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at Music Hall, this (TUESDAY) morning at 10 o'clock, continuing through the day.

Auction sale of $12 seats for concerts, THURSDAY, Sept. 17. Auction sale of $7.50 seats for concerts, FRIDAY, Sept. 18. 1t

---

SYMPHONY SEATS.

Spirited Bidding on the Opening Day of the Auction Sale.

The auction sale of seats for the Symphony rehearsals and concerts for the season of 1891-92 opened yesterday morning at 10 o'clock. Auctioneer Jackson found a larger attendance awaiting him than last year, the number being estimated at between 400 and 500. He reminded the purchasers that the bids were on the premiums, in addition to the regular ticket price. He announced today's sale to consist of the $12 rehearsal tickets, and called for bids on the first seat in row A.

The bidding opened in a spirited manner and was speedily run up towards the $10 mark, but stopped at $9 50. The purchaser's bargain was bettered by the next buyer, who secured the next seat at a premium of $8 50. The bidding then took an upward start, and the four last seats in the first row to the left of the stage commanded a premium of $16 50. Row B opened with a sale of two seats at $12 50 premium. The bidding continued to be lively.

Today the $7 50 rehearsal seats will be offered, Wednesday the $12 concert seats, and Thursday the $7 50 concert seats. In the afternoon as the sale neared the transverse aisle premiums took a boom and went up to $50 to $60. These bids continued, decreasing slightly toward the rear of the hall. Some special seats that went at a high premium last year, came a little easier this year, as, for instance, that seat in section I which brought $150 last year this year was $11. Mrs. Gardner has four seats in G this year, bid off at a premium of $53 each.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 15, 1891.

Symphony Concerts.

When Auctioneer Jackson opened the sale of seats for the Symphony Concerts at Music Hall on Monday there was a large crowd, evidently determined to have good seats at any cost. The bidding was started at a premium of from $15 to $20, and some seats sold as high as $45 and $46, but this did not last, and by 11 o'clock the price had settled to about $30 premium.

The performances this year will be exceptionally brilliant, and it is not surprising that the tickets are in such demand.

Boston Post

TUESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 15, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY TICKETS.

There were many people at the auction of the Symphony tickets yesterday in Music Hall and the bidding was brisk. The $7 50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction this morning at 10. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office, Music Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 16.

THE BOSTON NEWS.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1891.

AFTER SYMPHONY TICKETS.

A big crowd of musical people and speculators was on hand at Music Hall yesterday morning to see the best Symphony Concert rehearsal tickets auctioned off. The bidding was lively. The highest premium paid was $150 for seat 19 in section I. Mrs. Jack Gardner obtained four seats in section G at a premium of $53 on each seat.

Clipping from Budget
Boston Mass

Date 9-13

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Even among the choicest musical entertainments of any city, the Boston symphony concerts are unique. The marked success that attended Mr. Georg Henschel, the first conductor, was ably carried out by Mr. Gericke; but the period of success inaugurated by Mr. Nikisch may be said to be totally without precedent. The speculative student of human nature might find much to interest him in analyzing the qualities that contribute to so notable an achievement. Mr. Nikisch is impressive in personal presence. He has a curious mingling of the tenacity of the German and the vivacity of the French temperament. He commands, but he always, by some subtle power, inspires his audience with an enthusiasm for being commanded by his work. He has great gifts, and the culture of serious study and experience, but perhaps the secret of his success lies, after all, in his special persistence of energy. It is this quality which Herbert Spencer has named as the one first cause of the universe. Its presence in the individual is only a matter of degree. In it is to be found the magic spring of all great and creative achievement.

This Summer Conducter Nikisch has passed in Leipsic holding inevitable receptions for a throng of masters and composers, who desire to have their works interpreted by so choice an organization as the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The verdict of a critical audience, like that which assists at these concerts, is also important. Out of the many compositions submitted to him, Conductor Nikisch has selected several novelties that are interesting and valuable. The soloists will include Mme. Nordica (Boston's favorite, Lilian Norton), Miss Eames who in private life is now Mrs. Julian Story, and other notable artists. A promising season seems to unfold itself before this choice musical organization.

— Farmer,

Clipping from ~~Post~~, Bridgeport, Conn.

Date 9-12

The Boston Symphony Society.

Musicians and music-loving residents of this city will, perhaps, be interested to know that a strong effort is being made to bring the famous Boston Symphony society to this city this season, for one or more concerts. Under the leadership of Arthur Nikisch, this society has acquired fame during the past two years. It is composed of 66 of the most finished musicians in this country, included among whom are a number of celebrated soloists.

It is thought that the society may be induced to appear here if 500 subscriptions at $1.50 each are obtained. Papers are now in circulation, and encouraging results have already been obtained. It is hoped that this city will emulate New Haven, where the society is to play four concerts this season.

Clipping from
JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.

Date 9-13

Alwin Schroeder, the new cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whom Mr. Nikisch brought over to take the place vacated by Mr. Hekking, is said to have won considerable honor in his own country as a fine artist. He will be the soloist at one of the Providence concerts.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1891.

PRICES NOT SO HIGH AS LAST YEAR.

Second Day's Auction Sale of Symphony Rehearsal Tickets.

There was even a larger attendance than yesterday at the auction sale of the Symphony concert rehearsal seats, which opened this morning at ten o'clock, at Music Hall. The best seats were disposed of yesterday, and those offered today were the lot for which a premium was asked over $7.50. The first seat offered by Auctioneer Jackson was numbered 1152, and was at the end of the first section under the lower balcony. It brought $12, and the prices along the row ranged from that figure to $8.50. The seats directly under the balcony brought much less than at last year's sale, the highest price today being $7.50 and the lowest twenty-five cents, while several were not bid for at all. Considerable amusement was caused when the centre seat in the last row, next to those which had just been checked off at thirty-five cents each, was carried up to $5, there being two eager bidders for that desired spot. An elderly lady became its proud possessor, and bore off the ticket in triumph, but not before the next three seats had been declared sold at seventy-five cents premium. The prices realized for this section of the hall were said by the speculators to be far behind those of last year. The back rows of seats in the balcony brought from $17.50 to $5, most of the seats being sold singly. The tickets left over from these auctions will be sold at the box office tomorrow, and the sale for the concerts will be opened at ten o'clock Thursday.

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

SUNDAY, SEPT. 13, 1891.

Alwin Schroeder, the new cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whom Mr. Nikisch brought over to take the place vacated by Mr. Hekking, is said to have won considerable honor in his own country as a fine artist. He will be the soloist at one of the Providence concerts.

Boston Journal.

WITH SUPPLEMENT.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 16, 1891.

Sale of Symphony Seats.

The sale of seats for the Symphony rehearsals was continued at Music Hall on Tuesday, the attendance being good and the bidding rapid and at times quite spirited. The sale was of the $7 50 seats, and while the greater portion went to individual buyers, Messrs. Connelly of the Adams House news stand and Mr. Thayer of the Parker House were good purchasers. The premiums ranged pretty well, from $23 50 to $12 being paid for seats in the third row of the lower side balconies, the average being well up to $20. Seats in the lower balcony, sixth row back, ran from $9 up to $14 50. Any rehearsal seats not sold at auction will be on sale at the box office to-day.

Boston Post

WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 16, 1891.

SALE OF SYMPHONY TICKETS.

The continued auction sale of the Symphony concert rehearsal seats opened yesterday morning at 10 o'clock at Music Hall. The best seats were disposed of Monday and those offered yesterday were the lot for which a premium was asked over $7 50. The first seat offered by Auctioneer Jackson was numbered 1152, and was at the end of the first section under the lower balcony. It brought $12, and the prices along the row ranged from that figure to $8 50. The seats directly under the balcony brought much less than at last year's sale, the highest price being $7 50 and the lowest 25 cents, while several were not bid for at all.

Considerable amusement was caused when the centre seat in the last row, next to those which had just been checked off at 35 cents each, was carried up to $5, there being two eager bidders for that desired spot. An elderly lady became its proud possessor, and bore off the ticket in triumph, but not before the next three seats had been declared sold at 75 cents premium. The prices realized for this section of the hall were said by the speculators to be far behind those of last year. The back rows of seats in the balcony brought from $17 50 to $5, most of the seats being sold singly. The tickets left over from these auctions will be sold at the box office today, and the sale for the concerts will be opened at 10 o'clock Thursday.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, VOL. XC., NO. 78.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 16, 1891.

BOSTON Symphony Orchestra.

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

ELEVENTH SEASON.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive SATURDAY EVENINGS, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891; Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19, 1892.

Auction sale of $12 season tickets at Music Hall, tomorrow (THURSDAY), at 10 A. M.

Auction sale of $7.50 season tickets at Music Hall, FRIDAY, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

BOSTON LIFE.

Brooklyn Standard Union

The Phenomenal Evolution of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Conductor Arthur Nikisch—Lilian Norton (Mme. Nordica)—An Amusing Contretemps—The Social Lion Exclusiveness.

(Special Correspondence of The Standard-Union.)

The Brunswick, Sept. 10.—The Boston symphony concerts are perhaps the leading, or at [illegible] important feature, in what may well be called musical Boston—a world as distinctive as is literary Boston or even occult Boston. This is a fascinating region which I shall at some future time beg to touch upon—the Boston of telepathy, of mind-cures, of horoscopes, of physical experiences—a curious debatable land, in which are found notable and reputable people like Prof. James, of Harvard University; Dr. Richard Hodgson, Mrs. Abby Morton Diaz, and the Rev. Dr. Bartol, as well as scores of other persons whose note, unlike these, would be nearer notoriety than fame. All this is a very curious border land, and one that does not lose its interest by delaying until the "Spiritualist Temple" opens for its regular Sunday [illegible] and the Psychical Society resumes its evening discussions.

The Boston symphony concerts were instituted some ten years ago by a wealthy Bostonian—Henry L. Higginson—whose aim was to establish a series of the finest orchestral concerts at prices possible to the music-lover of average or limited means, and he made himself, with generous munificence, responsible for their financial security. The Saturday evening series were to be at the rate of only 50 cents each for one person; and, beside this, there were added a series of Friday afternoon "rehearsals," which were to be identical with the evening concerts in every number and which were to be made still more popularly accessible. So far, so good. But, presto! behold what the tide of social evolution has done. The popularity of these entertainments speedily attained amazing proportions. The season tickets were purchased as soon as offered, and few were the opportunities to procure seats for any one performance alone. Musical and fashionable Boston pre-empted the house, and punctually at 8 o'clock every Saturday night the great audience, filling every seat of the floor and two balconies, were in their seats, an audience, for the most part, singularly choice, critical and appreciative.

There still remained the Friday rehearsals, beginning at 3 o'clock, which were supposed to be especially for the benefit of suburban residents, musical students, women alone—by that portion of the public in general to whom the Saturday evenings were in the nature of the unattainable. The upper balcony was sold at the nominal price of 25 cents a seat—not reserved, but on the principle of first come, first served. But Fashion interferes and sets her sign and seal upon the "rehearsal." It suddenly becomes the reigning fad of the season. To be seen there is to receive the cachet of the most fastidious social elegance. No woman of the leisure classes could resist the Friday "rehearsal." A season ticket in her hand and a knot of violets on her gown she tripped daintily through the old Hamilton place entrance to Music Hall, and, presumably, found her soul satisfied. The music students at the Conservatory and in various schools or classes all over the city, and the more busy, or the poorer people—for all whom this rehearsal was primarily designed—had little chance to enter into its privileges.

Furthermore, within a few years past, the speculators have fallen to and purchased the tickets from the box office, holding them at greatly advanced prices. The box office prices are $12 and $7.50; but the speculators, who form in line twenty-four or forty-eight hours before the announced opening of the box office—last year they held this line for three days by means of boys and vagrant looking men hired to keep these places—buy the tickets at these prices and sell them at from $40 to $130, incredible as so extraordinary an advance seems. Of course this debars all but the wealthy. Chancing to see in a local journal to-day that sale of symphony tickets for the this season would open next Monday, the incongruities of the evolution of these "popular" concerts were vividly brought to mind.

George Henschel was the first conductor, and his beautiful wife (Lilian Bailey) was occasionally heard as a soloist. Mr. Henschel was succeeded by Wilhelm Gericke, who sustained the unbounded success of Mr. Henschel's work; but still it was reserved for Arthur Nikisch, the present conductor, to make a success that is without precedent in its brilliancy.

Conductor Nikisch was imported from Germany, and appeared on the scene only last year. From the moment that he grasped the baton before Boston, Boston was at his feet and hung upon his wishes. The personal power of the man might well interest the speculative student of human nature. He seems to combine German tenacity with French vivacity. He has the careful, patient persistence of a plodder combined with the electric enthusiasm and sparkle of the most mercurial type of genius. He impresses and he fascinates. He compels and he charms. He has the nature that would accomplish that which it sets out to do, whether the world liked it or not; and then, by some magic, he would inspire the world with the most enthusiastic enjoyment of what he had done. He is easily the master always, but a master who makes his sway a delight. Such a nature is a very rare one, and it is wholly in his "metier" to have captured—and captivated—Boston.

The summer's vacation meant to Mr. Nikisch much what it does to every artist—preparation for the coming season. Conductor Nikisch pulled himself together—to fall into the classic phrase of Matthew Arnold—and sailed away to Leipsic. There he seems to have held impromptu receptions for musicians and composers, and if he loafed he invited his soul to fall to and read new compositions. This was not precisely in the nature of hours of idleness, but the fact that the best composers of modern Europe sought for their works a hearing before the Boston symphony orchestra is not without its gratification.

In making up his programme, Conductor Nikisch shows the most catholic spirit in the choice of works to be interpreted by his orchestra, and among the novelties he will introduce this season (which opens on Oct. 9 and closes [illegible]) are a new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky, also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "[illegible] Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke. All these works are entirely new to this country, and their interpretation by such [illegible] this symphony orchestra is by way of a great musical education to the fortunate audiences. Among other features will also be the performance of a very exquisite composition by Prof. Paine of Harvard, called "Spring Symphony"; of Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; Pagina D'Amara," F. van der Stucken; and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubinstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

Mme. Nordica, of London (the lovely Lilian Norton, of Boston, whose radiant personality and winning sweetness [illegible] who know and meet her), will be one of the soloists this winter, and Miss Emma Eames, who recently married Julian Story, the sculptor's son, will be another, and Mr. Nikisch also promises Mme. Joachim, contralto; Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen D. Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld, pianists; Mr. Busoni, 'cello, and Alwin Schroeder, pianist, and others. The list is never entirely filled, as new stars are liable to dawn upon the horizon during the season for whom a place is desired.

LILIAN WHITING.

Clipping from Tribune
New York N.Y.
Date 9-15

SELLING CONCERT TICKETS AT BIG PREMIUMS.

Boston, Sept. 14 (Special).—The sale of seats for the public rehearsals of the symphony concerts was begun at auction to-day. The average prices were higher than last year, but the maximum was not so high. For instance, the maximum last year was $150 for the choice; this year $111 was the highest. Several seats were sold for $50 each, and Mrs. "Jack" Gardiner, the well-known leader in fashion, purchased four seats at a premium of $53 on each seat. To these figures should be added $12 each, the regular price of the tickets. No. 10, in Section J, which last year brought $150, went to-day for $111 to G. F. Wadsworth. The next was $102 50, which was paid by C. P. Curtis. The bids then began to fall off, the prices varying from $20 to $15. It was noticeable that more single seats were sold this year than last, and also that there were many more ladies who purchased largely. The principal ticket speculators were present at the sale and their bids were among the highest. The average price was 15 per cent higher than at the last auction.

Clipping from Gazette
Hyde Park M
Date 9-12

Boston Symphony Concerts.

The Boston Syn phony concerts are the musical events of the season. The managers have arranged a most attractive program of novelties that will compare favorably with preceding years. Some of the great soloists of the country have been engaged to render effectively some of the new compositions of American composers. A fine body of carefully selected musicians will render the music. The twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and Mar. 19. On Monday next at ten o'clock the sale of seats for the public rehearsals will be offered by auction at Music Hall, and will continue on Tuesday and Thursday. All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices.

THE BOSTON BUDGET

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 13, 1891.

MUSIC HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season, 1891-92.

Auction Sale of $12 season tickets for Public Rehearsals at Music Hall, Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

Auction Sale of $7.50 season tickets for Public Rehearsals at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M.

Auction Sale of $12 season tickets for Concerts at Music Hall, Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.

Auction Sale of $7.50 season tickets for Concerts at Music Hall, Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Even among the choicest musical entertainments of any city, the Boston symphony concerts are unique. The marked success that attended Mr. Georg Henschel, the first conductor, was ably carried out by Mr. Gericke; but the period of success inaugurated by Mr. Nikisch may be said to be totally without precedent. The speculative student of human nature might find much to interest him in analyzing the qualities that contribute to so notable an achievement. Mr. Nikisch is impressive in personal presence. He has a curious mingling of the tenacity of the German and the vivacity of the French temperament. He commands, but he always, by some subtle power, inspires his audience with an enthusiasm for being commanded by his work. He has great gifts, and the culture of serious study and experience, but perhaps the secret of his success lies, after all, in his special persistence of energy. It is this quality which Herbert Spencer has named as the one first cause of the universe. Its presence in the individual is only a matter of degree. In it is to be found the magic spring of all great and creative achievement.

This Summer Conducter Nikisch has passed in Leipsic holding inevitable receptions for a throng of masters and composers, who desire to have their works interpreted by so choice an organization as the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The verdict of a critical audience, like that which assists at these concerts, is also important. Out of the many compositions submitted to him, Conductor Nikisch has selected several novelties that are interesting and valuable. The soloists will include Mme. Nordica (Bos, ton's favorite, Lilian Norton), Miss Eames-who in private life is now Mrs. Julian Story, and other notable artists. A promising season seems to unfold itself before this choice musical organization.

The sales of season tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday.

....The Kneisel Quartet, who are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, headed by Franz Kneisel, will give four concerts this Winter at Snerry's new music hall, at Thirty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, New York. Although the quartet has given an annual series of chamber music concerts in Boston since 1885, it has never been heard in this city.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The auction sales of tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place during the coming week at Music Hall as follows: $12 season tickets for public rehearsals, Monday, 10 A. M.; $7.50 season tickets for public rehearsals, Tuesday, 10 A. M.; $12 season tickets for concerts, Thursday, 10 A. M.; $7.50 season tickets for concerts, Friday, 10 A. M. Tickets will be delivered in the hall and must be paid for as soon as bought or they will be resold. All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale on and after Saturday, Sept. 19, at the box office.

One of the most notable signs of the times is that of J. H. Lewis, the tailor, at 417 Washington street which is seen and read by all passers re-

---

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1891.

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

ELEVENTH SEASON.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive SATURDAY EVENINGS, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891; Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19, 1892.

Auction sale of $12 season tickets at Music Hall, to-morrow (THURSDAY), at 10 A. M.

Auction sale of $7.50 season tickets at Music Hall, FRIDAY, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M. 1t(A) s16

Symphony Tickets.

All the season tickets for the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were disposed of at the sales Monday and Tuesday. The $12 tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at auction at Music Hall tomorrow morning, beginning at 10 A. M., and the $7.50 tickets will be sold in a similar manner on Friday.

Mme. Lillian Nordica arrived in New York on the Saale on Tuesday and reached Boston yesterday. She will make a concert tour under the management of C. A. Ellis, who has booked many important engagements for her. Her first appearance will be at the Worcester Festival next week. She will be heard in concerts of the Boston Symphony Orthestra, the Handel and Haydn Society, the New York Philharmonic Society, and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, and possibly in opera with Mr. Abbey's company.

The Morning Times

PUBLISHED BY

WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 16.

The Symphony Concerts.

Musical people are deeply interested in the announcement of the season's programme of concerts by the Beston Symphony orchestra, as a large number of absolute novelties by both foreign and American composers are to be presented, and besides the splendid instrumental music to be expected from this celebrated orchestra, many famous vocalists are announced to appear. Engagements have been already effected with Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen d'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoin, Alwin Schroeder and others. The 24 public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each evening through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays, Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19. The concerts are to be given in Music hall, and such is the demand for tickets that they are sold at auction, the premium being added to the regular price of $12 and $7.50 for season tickets. On Monday and yesterday seats were sold for the rehearsals at a good advance over the price; to-day any that may be left will be offered at private sale at the box office. To-morrow at 10 o'clock will begin the auction sale of the $12 tickets for the concerts, and the $7.50 tickets will be offered on Friday. On Saturday any concert tickets for which no bids have been received will be sold at private sale.

Boston Journal.

WITH SUPPLEMENT.

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 17, 1891.

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra.

ELEVENTH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $12 SEASON TICKETS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS AT MUSIC HALL THIS (THURSDAY) MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction sale of $7.50 seats for concerts to-morrow (FRIDAY) at 10. It sep17

Every seat for the Symphony Rehearsals was disposed of at the auctions on Monday and Tuesday, and the number of purchasers was larger than ever before, fewer tickets going into the hands of speculators. The $12 season tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at Music Hall this morning, beginning at 10 o'clock.

ARGUS, Portland, Me.

Date 9-15

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is again down for [illegible] so familiar to the patrons of the [illegible]kbridge course that no words of praise of their excellence are necessary. It will suffice to call attention to the fact that the orchestra has attained so firm a hold on the admiration of the people of the country that its annual tour of the principal cities of the east, combined with its home concerts, yields a handsome revenue; which is used to maintain the high standard to which it has attained. This year Mr. Nikisch will conduct the orchestra when it appears here, and as an additional attraction, in deference to the oft-repeated desire of Portland people. Mrs. Nikisch will appear as the soloist.

Boston Post

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 17, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Symphony reserved seats were all disposed of at the sales on Monday and Tuesday and the number of purchasers was greater than ever before, fewer tickets going into the hands of speculators. The $12 season tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at Music Hall by auction this morning. The sale begins at 10 o'clock.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 17, 1891.

SYMPHONY TICKET SALES.

The auction sale of $12 season tickets for the Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held at Music Hall this morning beginning at 10 o'clock. The sales of rehearsal tickets on Monday and Tuesday were more satisfactory to the management than ever before. As usual every seat was sold, but fewer were taken by professional traders than last year and a more general interest in the concerts was manifested by the greater number of purchasers who took the trouble to secure their own seats.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 17.

The auction sale of $12 season tickets for the Saturday evening Symphony concerts will be held at Music Hall this morning, beginning at 10 o'clock.

[9]

BOSTON LIFE.

Brooklyn Standard Union

The Phenomenal Evolution of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Conductor Arthur Nikisch—Lilian Norton (Mme. Nordica)—An Amusing Contretemps—The Social Lion Exclusiveness.

(Special Correspondence of The Standard-Union.)

The Brunswick, Sept. 10.—The Boston symphony concerts are perhaps the leading, or at [illegible] important feature, in what may well be called musical Boston—a world as distinctive as is literary Boston or even occult Boston. This is a fascinating region which I shall at some future time beg to touch upon—the Boston of telepathy, of mind-cures, of horoscopes, of physical experiences—a curious debatable land, in which are found notable and reputable people like Prof. James, of Harvard University; Dr. Richard Hodgson, Mrs. Abby Morton Diaz, and the Rev. Dr. Bartol, as well as scores of other persons whose note, unlike these, would be nearer notoriety than fame. All this is a very curious border land, and one that does not lose its interest by delaying until the "Spiritualist Temple" opens for its regular Sunday meetings and the Psychical Society resumes its evening discussions.

The Boston symphony concerts were instituted some ten years ago by a wealthy Bostonian—Henry L. Higginson—whose aim was to establish a series of the finest orchestral concerts at prices possible to the music-lover of average or limited means, and he made himself, with generous munificence, responsible for their financial security. The Saturday evening series were to be at the rate of only 50 cents each for one person; and, beside this, there were added a series of Friday afternoon "rehearsals," which were to be identical with the evening concerts in every number and which were to be made still more popularly accessible. So far, so good. But, presto! behold what the tide of social evolution has done. The popularity of these entertainments speedily attained amazing proportions. The season tickets were purchased as soon as offered, and few were the opportunities to procure seats for any one performance alone. Musical and fashionable Boston pre-empted the house, and punctually at 8 o'clock every Saturday night the great audience, filling every seat of the floor and two balconies, were in their seats, an audience, for the most part, singularly choice, critical and appreciative.

There still remained the Friday rehearsals, beginning at 3 o'clock, which were supposed to be especially for the benefit of suburban residents, musical students, women alone—by that portion of the public in general to whom the Saturday evenings were in the nature of the unattainable. The upper balcony was sold at the nominal price of 25 cents a seat—not reserved, but on the principle of first come, first served. But Fashion interferes and sets her sign and seal upon the "rehearsal." It suddenly becomes the reigning fad of the season. To be seen there is to receive the cachet of the most fastidious social elegance. No woman of the leisure classes could resist the Friday "rehearsal." A season ticket in her hand and a knot of violets on her gown she tripped daintily through the old Hamilton place entrance to Music Hall, and, presumably, found her soul satisfied. The music students at the Conservatory and in various schools or classes all over the city, and the more busy, or the poorer people—for all whom this rehearsal was primarily designed—had little chance to enter into its privileges.

Furthermore, within a few years past, the speculators have fallen to and purchased the tickets from the box office, holding them at greatly advanced prices. The box office prices are $12 and $7.50; but the speculators, who form in line twenty-four or forty-eight hours before the announced opening of the box office—last year they held this line for three days by means of boys and vagrant looking men hired to keep these places—buy the tickets at these prices and sell them at from $40 to $130, incredible as so extraordinary an advance seems. Of course this debars all but the wealthy. Chancing to see in a local journal to-day that sale of symphony tickets for the this season would open next Monday, the incongruities of the evolution of these "popular" concerts were vividly brought to mind.

George Henschel was the first conductor, and his beautiful wife (Lilian Bailey) was occasionally heard as a soloist. Mr. Henschel was succeeded by Wilhelm Gericke, who sustained the unbounded success of Mr. Henschel's work; but still it was reserved for Arthur Nikisch, the present conductor, to make a success that is without precedent in its brilliancy.

Conductor Nikisch was imported from Germany, and appeared on the scene only last year. From the moment that he grasped the baton before Boston, Boston was at his feet and hung upon his wishes. The personal power of the man might well interest the speculative student of human nature. He seems to combine German tenacity with French vivacity. He has the careful, patient persistence of a plodder combined with the electric enthusiasm and sparkle of the most mercurial type of genius. He impresses and he fascinates. He compels and he charms. He has the nature that would accomplish that which it sets out to do, whether the world liked it or not; and then, by some magic, he would inspire the world with the most enthusiastic enjoyment of what he had done. He is easily the master always, but a master who makes his sway a delight. Such a nature is a very rare one, and it is wholly in his "metier" to have captured—and captivated—Boston.

The summer's vacation meant to Mr. Nikisch much what it does to every artist—preparation for the coming season. Conductor Nikisch pulled himself together—to fall into the classic phrase of Matthew Arnold—and sailed away to Leipsic. There he seems to have held impromptu receptions for musicians and composers, and if he loafed he invited his soul to fall to and read new compositions. This was not precisely in the nature of hours of idleness, but the fact that the best masters of modern Europe sought for their works a hearing before the Boston symphony concerts is not without its gratification.

In making up his programme, Conductor Nikisch shows the most catholic spirit in the choice of works to be interpreted by his orchestra, and among the novelties he will introduce this season (which opens on Oct. 9 and closes Oct. 19) are a new symphony by Sgambati; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky, also symphonic poem, "The Tempest," and suite op. 55 by the same composer; symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss. "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Emanuel Chabrier; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; ballet music, "Colombe," Mackenzie; prelude, "Cavaliera Rusticana," Mascagni; symphonic poem, "La Sirene," Mihalovich; "Faschingsbilder," Nicode; a new symphony by Dvorak; symphony in F major, Felix Draesecke. All these works are entirely new to this country, and their interpretation by such artists as compose this symphony orchestra is by way of a great musical education to the fortunate audiences. Among other features will also be the performance of a very exquisite composition by Prof. Paine of Harvard, called "Spring Symphony"; of Carnival Scenes, Arthur Bird; Pagina D'Amara," F. van der Stucken; and other works by American composers yet to be selected. Other numbers to be mentioned are overture "Le Roi D'Ys," Lalo; "Scenes Alsaciennes," Massenet; "Reformation Symphony," Mendelssohn (seldom played); symphony in C minor, Spohr; "Ocean Symphony," Rubinstein; "Harold Symphony," Berlioz; overture, "King Lear," Littolf, and, as a matter of course, many of the standard works by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner.

Mme. Nordica, of London (the lovely Lilian Norton, of Boston, whose radiant personality and winning sweetness charm all who know and meet her), will be one of the soloists this winter, and Miss Emma Eames, who recently married Julian Story, the sculptor's son, will be another, and Mr. Nikisch also promises Mme. Joachim, contralto; Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen D. Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld, pianists; Mr. Busoni, 'cello, and Alwin Schroeder, pianist, and others. The list is never entirely filled, as new stars are liable to dawn upon the horizon during the season for whom a place is desired.

LILIAN WHITING.

Clipping from Tribune New York (N. Y.)

Date 9 13

SELLING CONCERT TICKETS AT BIG PREMIUMS.

Boston, Sept. 14 (Special).—The sale of seats for the public rehearsals of the symphony concerts was begun at auction to-day. The average prices were higher than last year, but the maximum was not so high. For instance, the maximum last year was $150 for the choice; this year $111 was the highest. Several seats were sold for $50 each, and Mrs. "Jack" Gardiner, the well-known leader in fashion, purchased four seats at a premium of $53 on each seat. To these figures should be added $12 each, the regular price of the tickets. No. 10, in Section J, which last year brought $150, went to-day for $111 to G. F. Wadsworth. The next was $102 50, which was paid by C. P. Curtis. The bids then began to fall off, the prices varying from $20 to $15. It was noticeable that more single seats were sold this year than last, and also that there were many more ladies who purchased largely. The principal ticket speculators were present at the sale and their bids were among the highest. The average price was 15 per cent higher than at the last auction.

Clipping from Gazette Hyde Park Cl

Date 9-12

Boston Symphony Concerts.

The Boston Symphony concerts are the musical events of the season. The managers have arranged a most attractive program of novelties that will compare favorably with preceding years. Some of the great soloists of the country have been engaged to render effectively some of the new compositions of American composers. A fine body of carefully selected musicians will render the music. The twenty-four public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each week through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and Mar. 19. On Monday next at ten o'clock the sale of seats for the public rehearsals will be offered by auction at Music Hall, and will continue on Tuesday and Thursday. All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices.

THE BOSTON BUDGET

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 13, 1891.

MUSIC HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Eleventh Season, 1891-92.

Auction Sale of $12 season tickets for Public Rehearsals at Music Hall, Monday, Sept. 14, at 10 A. M.

Auction Sale of $7.50 season tickets for Public Rehearsals at Music Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 15, at 10 A. M.

Auction Sale of $12 season tickets for Concerts at Music Hall, Thursday, Sept. 17, at 10 A. M.

Auction Sale of $7.50 season tickets for Concerts at Music Hall, Friday, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Even among the choicest musical entertainments of any city, the Boston symphony concerts are unique. The marked success that attended Mr. Georg Henschel, the first conductor, was ably carried out by Mr. Gericke; but the period of success inaugurated by Mr. Nikisch may be said to be totally without precedent. The speculative student of human nature might find much to interest him in analyzing the qualities that contribute to so notable an achievement. Mr. Nikisch is impressive in personal presence. He has a curious mingling of the tenacity of the German and the vivacity of the French temperament. He commands, but he always, by some subtle power, inspires his audience with an enthusiasm for being commanded by his work. He has great gifts, and the culture of serious study and experience, but perhaps the secret of his success lies, after all, in his special persistence of energy. It is this quality which Herbert Spencer has named as the one first cause of the universe. Its presence in the individual is only a matter of degree. In it is to be found the magic spring of all great and creative achievement.

This Summer Conducter Nikisch has passed in Leipsic holding inevitable receptions for a throng of masters and composers, who desire to have their works interpreted by so choice an organization as the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The verdict of a critical audience, like that which assists at these concerts, is also important. Out of the many compositions submitted to him, Conductor Nikisch has selected several novelties that are interesting and valuable. The soloists will include Mme. Nordica (Boston's favorite, Lilian Norton), Miss Eames—who in private life is now Mrs. Julian Story, and other notable artists. A promising season seems to unfold itself before this choice musical organization.

The sales of season tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday.

....The Kneisel Quartet, who are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, headed by Franz Kneisel, will give four concerts this Winter at Sherry's new music hall, at Thirty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, New York. Although the quartet has given an annual series of chamber music concerts in Boston since 1885, it has never been heard in this city.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The auction sales of tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place during the coming week at Music Hall as follows: $12 season tickets for public rehearsals, Monday, 10 A. M.; $7.50 season tickets for public rehearsals, Tuesday, 10 A. M.; $12 season tickets for concerts, Thursday, 10 A. M.; $7.50 season tickets for concerts, Friday, 10 A. M. Tickets will be delivered in the hall and must be paid for as soon as bought or they will be resold. All seats remaining unsold after the auction will be on sale on and after Saturday, Sept. 19, at the box office.

One of the most notable signs of the times is that of J. H. Lewis, the tailor, at 417 Washington street which is seen and read by all passers

---

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1891.

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

ELEVENTH SEASON.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On consecutive SATURDAY EVENINGS, from Oct. 10, 1891, to April 23, 1892, omitting Nov. 7, Dec. 12, 1891; Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19, 1892.

Auction sale of $12 season tickets at Music Hall, to-morrow (THURSDAY), at 10 A. M.

Auction sale of $7.50 season tickets at Music Hall, FRIDAY, Sept. 18, at 10 A. M. 1t(A) s16

Symphony Tickets.

All the season tickets for the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were disposed of at the sales Monday and Tuesday. The $12 tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at auction at Music Hall tomorrow morning, beginning at 10 A. M., and the $7.50 tickets will be sold in a similar manner on Friday.

Mme. Lillian Nordica arrived in New York on the Saale on Tuesday and reached Boston yesterday. She will make a concert tour under the management of C. A. Ellis, who has booked many important engagaments for her. Her first appearance will be at the Worcester Festival next week. She will be heard in concerts of the Boston Symphony Orthestra, the Handel and Haydn Society, the New York Philharmonic Society, and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, and possibly in opera with Mr. Abbey's company.

The Morning Times.

PUBLISHED BY

WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 16.

The Symphony Concerts.

Musical people are deeply interested in the announcement of the season's programme of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, as a large number of absolute novelties by both foreign and American composers are to be presented, and besides the splendid instrumental music to be expected from this celebrated orchestra, many famous vocalists are announced to appear. Engagements have been already effected with Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen d'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoin, Alwin Schroeder and others. The 24 public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each evening through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays, Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19. The concerts are to be given in Music hall, and such is the demand for tickets that they are sold at auction, the premium being added to the regular price of $12 and $7.50 for season tickets. On Monday and yesterday seats were sold for the rehearsals at a good advance over the price; to-day any that may be left will be offered at private sale at the box office. To-morrow at 10 o'clock will begin the auction sale of the $12 tickets for the concerts, and the $7.50 tickets will be offered on Friday. On Saturday any concert tickets for which no bids have been received will be sold at private sale.

Boston Journal.

WITH SUPPLEMENT.

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 17, 1891.

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra.

ELEVENTH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $12 SEASON TICKETS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS AT MUSIC HALL THIS (THURSDAY) MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction sale of $7.50 seats for concerts to-morrow (FRIDAY) at 10. 1t sep17

Every seat for the Symphony Rehearsals was disposed of at the auctions on Monday and Tuesday, and the number of purchasers was larger than ever before, fewer tickets going into the hands of speculators. The $12 season tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at Music Hall this morning, beginning at 10 o'clock.

ARGUS, Portland, Me.

Date 9-15

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is again [redacted] course that no words of praise of their excellence are necessary. It will suffice to call attention to the fact that the orchestra has attained so firm a hold on the admiration of the people of the country that its annual tour of the principal cities of the east, combined with its home concerts, yields a handsome revenue; which is used to maintain the high standard to which it has attained. This year Mr. Nikisch will conduct the orchestra when it appears here, and as an additional attraction, in deference to the oft-repeated desire of Portland people. Mrs. Nikisch will appear as the soloist.

Boston Post

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 17, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Symphony reserved seats were all disposed of at the sales on Monday and Tuesday and the number of purchasers was greater than ever before, fewer tickets going into the hands of speculators. The $12 season tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at Music Hall by auction this morning. The sale begins at 10 o'clock.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 17, 1891.

SYMPHONY TICKET SALES.

The auction sale of $12 season tickets for the Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held at Music Hall this morning beginning at 10 o'clock. The sales of rehearsal tickets on Monday and Tuesday were more satisfactory to the management than ever before. As usual every seat was sold, but fewer were taken by professional traders than last year and a more general interest in the concerts was manifested by the greater number of purchasers who took the trouble to secure their own seats.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 17.

The auction sale of $12 season tickets for the Saturday evening Symphony concerts will be held at Music Hall this morning, beginning at 10 o'clock.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1891.

UNIFORMLY GOOD PRICES.

No Extraordinary Premiums Were Paid at this Morning's Sale of Symphony Tickets.

The auction sale of $12 seats for the Symphony Concerts began at ten o'clock this morning at Music Hall with a small audience in attendance, which increased considerably as the sale progressed. There was a large number of well-known musical and society people present, many of whom have become regular patrons of the sales and concerts. Auctioneer Jackson's efforts on Monday and Tuesday have nearly deprived him of his voice, and at times this morning it was almost impossible to hear his words.

Among the first buyers today were Professor Royce of Cambridge, Arthur Howard Pickering, J. H. Hecht and Arthur Austin, who purchased desirable seats in the front row. These seats varied from $5 to $20, the average price being $10. The highest premium of the morning was $36, which was paid by Mr. Stewart for seats in section H. The next price was $29, which was paid for a centre seat in K.

The premiums did not run nearly as high as at the sale for the rehearsals, but the average price was far in advance of that at the former sale. Beyond row M the prices kept uniformly good, and ranged from $15 to $20. The bidding was regular and the speculators did considerable buying for their out-of-town patrons.

The $7.50 tickets for the concerts will be sold tomorrow at the same hour.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR,
VOL. XC., NO. 80.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 18, 1891.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The Auction Sale of Seats Again Results Successfully.

The attendance at Music Hall yesterday, upon the occasion of the auction sale of the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts of the Symphony orchestra, lacked the excitement attendant upon the sales of the rehearsal seats, but, nevertheless, the results were every way satisfactory. At the start the sale looked a little discouraging as the first seat went at a premium of 25 cents, and until the J slip was reached the bids averaged little more than $5. It was noticeable that the full limit of four seats was usually filled by every buyer, and this fact may explain the greater sociability which is characteristic of the concert audiences as compared with those of the rehearsals.

After J was closed out the bidding advanced, and the seats on the floor were bought up so speedily that all below the balconies had been sold by 1:30 o'clock, thus making the greatest time record in the history of these concerts. The balcony seats went off in the same spirited fashion, and at 3:20 P. M. every one of the $12 seats had been sold and paid for.

A rough estimate of the prices got indicates that the gross receipts were well up to those of last year. This morning the $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

FRIDAY MORNING, SEPT. 18, 1891.

SOME GOOD PREMIUMS.

Continued Sale of Symphony Concert Seats—Musical People on Hand.

Auctioneer Jackson struck off the $12 seats for the Saturday night concerts of the Symphony Orchestra at Music Hall, yesterday morning. Many well-known musical people of the city were in attendance and took part in the bidding.

The attendance was hardly as large as at the sale of $12 seats for public rehearsals the first day, yet few seats remained unsold, though the average receipts of the morning's sale did not equal that for the rehearsals.

A seat which sold to an enthusiast last Monday for the rehearsals at a premium of $111 went off easily at $18. As far back as row N, the largest premium paid for a seat was $36 in row H.

Prof. Royce of Harvard located himself and friends in row E, and Arthur Austin, the broker, took four seats in E at $13,50 premium. A. H. Pickering, the author, took seats half way back in the hall. J. H. Hecht, the wool merchant, who was a liberal purchaser last Monday for rehearsal seats, took several.

The average sales in the morning were at a premium of $10 and $12.

THE SYMPHONY TICKET SALES.

It is evident that the musical public fully maintains its interest in the Symphony concerts and rehearsals. All tickets thus far offered have found ready purchasers at good prices. There remain to be sold only 974 of the cheaper seats for the Saturday evening concerts. These will be sold at auction in Music Hall this morning. The sale begins at 10 o'clock.

Boston Daily Globe.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 18.

The ready sale at good prices of all tickets thus far offered for the rehearsals and concerts indicates a remarkable interest in the coming season of the Boston symphony orchestra. There remain unsold only the $7.50 season tickets for the Saturday evening concerts.

Boston Post

FRIDAY MORNING, SEPT. 18, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY TICKET SALES.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra continues to receive large patronage. The sale of tickets already held insure for the coming season the same sort of audiences as in the past. There now remain unsold only 974 of the $7 50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts. These will be offered by auction in Music Hall this morning at 10 o'clock and there is little doubt that they will quickly find purchasers. The first concert will take place Oct. 10.

GOOD PRICES FOR THE SYMPHONY TICKETS

The auction sale of the $12 seats for the Symphony concerts was held at Music Hall yesterday morning, but no extraordinary prices were realized, although the average price was far in advance of that of the sale for the rehearsals.

Among the first buyers yesterday were Professor Royce of Cambridge, Arthur Howard Pickering, J. H. Hecht and Arthur Austin, who purchased desirable seats in the front row. These seats varied from $5 to $20, the average price being $10. The highest premium of the morning was $36, which was paid by Mr. Stewart, for seats in Section H. The next price was $29, which was paid for a centre seat in K.

The $7 50 tickets for the concerts will be sold tomorrow at the same hour.

Boston Journal.

FRIDAY MORNING, SEPT. 18, 1891.

BOSTON
Symphony Orchestra.

ELEVENTH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $7.50 SEASON TICKETS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS AT MUSIC HALL THIS (FRIDAY) MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY. 1t sep18

The Symphony Concerts.

The result of the sales of tickets thus far held for the Symphony rehearsals and concerts is most gratifying and indicates a remarkable interest in the coming season. There remains unsold only the $7 50 season tickets for the Saturday evening concerts. Of these there are 974, which will be offered at auction in Music Hall this morning at 10 o'clock.

Mme. Lillian Nordica, the well-known prima donna, arrived in New York, from England, on Tuesday, and is now in Boston. She is to sing with her concert company at the opening entertainment of the Star course in this city, and will also be heard at the Worcester festival and with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1891.

MUSICIANS BUY SYMPHONY TICKETS.

This Season's Sale Pronounced More Satisfactory than That of Last Year.

The largest audience of the week gathered in Music Hall this morning for the last auction sale of seats for the Symphony Concerts. The bidding was brisk from ten until nearly one o'clock, only about twenty-five seats being left at the conclusion of the sale. The first seats offered were those on the floor under the balcony, a few of them bringing as high as $4, while several in the last row went for seventy-five, fifty and twenty-five cents, and some were not bid for at all. A repetition of the amusing incident of Tuesday took place when two individuals who were desirous of securing the same seat in this section, bid against one another until the price went up to $6.50, while the seats on each side sold for twenty-five cents premium. The $7.50 seats in the balconies brought excellent prices, no large figure being realized, but every seat was sold and none brought less than $4, while a few sold for $15. The average figure was about $10. On the whole the sale was much more satisfactory than that of last year. Among the purchasers today were Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Allen, Miss Gertrude Edmands, Alfred De Seve, Miss Harriet Whittier and Rev. Samuel J. Barrows.

Boston Daily Traveller

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1891.

Mme. Nordica, the prima donna, who arrived in New York from England on Tuesday, in now in Boston. She will sing with her company at the opening entertainment of the Star Course and will be heard at the Worcester festival.

Boston Journal.

WITH SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 19, 1891.

Symphony Ticket Sale.

The auction sale of seats for the Symphony Concerts was continued Friday morning at Music Hall. The seats offered were the $7 50 ones, which included the last row on the sides of the first balcony, the last three rows in the centre of the same balcony and all of the second balcony. The bidding was as lively as ever and the competition for the choice seats quite keen. Seats on the sides of the first balcony sold as high as $13, with few lower than $10. In the centre prices ranged from $6 50 to $4, one seat being sold at the latter figure. The average in the centre was about $5 50. Front seats in the second balcony brought as high as $12, while the others sold as low as $4.

The Symphony Concerts.

Musical people are deeply interested in the announcement of the season's programme of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, as a large number of absolute novelties by both foreign and American composers are to be presented, and besides the splendid instrumental music to be expected from this celebrated orchestra, many famous vocalists are announced to appear. Engagements have been already effected with Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Eugen d'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld, Mr. Busoin, Alwin Schroeder and others. The 24 public rehearsals and concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, beginning Oct. 9 and 10, continued each evening through the season, with the exceptions of the weeks ending on Saturdays, Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13 and March 19. The concerts are to be given in Music hall, and such is the demand for tickets that they are sold at auction, the premium being added to the regular price of $12 and $7.50 for season tickets. On Monday and yesterday seats were sold for the rehearsals at a good advance over the price; to-day any that may be left will be offered at private sale at the box office. To-morrow at 10 o'clock will begin the auction sale of the $12 tickets for the concerts, and the $7.50 tickets will be offered on Friday. On Saturday any concert tickets for which no bids have been received will be sold at private sale.

James Lowell

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR,
VOL. XC., NO. 81.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 19, 1891.

BOSTON
Symphony Orchestra.

A LIMITED number of season tickets for the Saturday Evening Concerts, not taken at the auctions, will be on sale at the Box Office, Music Hall, this (Saturday) morning, at $12 and $7.50. Not more than four tickets will be sold to one person. Box office opens at 9 o'clock.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Gratifying Results of the Ticket Sales.

The sales of tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts of the Symphony orchestra were ended yesterday and with the most gratifying results, practically all the seats having been disposed of at the auctions.

The sales of the rehearsal seats have closed out every seat in the hall for the season, but it should be remembered that the upper balcony is still open to the holders of admission tickets, giving about 500 seats at each Friday afternoon rehearsal as well as about as many more admissions without seats at 25 cents.

All of the $12 seats for the concerts have been sold, and of the $7.50 seats there are about a dozen left, which go on sale at the box office this morning.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPT. 19, 1891.

The new Symphony violoncellist is an importation—Mr. Schroeder, brother of a very famous artist of that name.

HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1891

The sale of the symphony tickets was, as usual, the event of the week to all musical people. It was the topic of conversation where musicians congregate, and among such of the society people as have returned to town. When the symphony seats are sold one really begins to feel that the season is opening.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1891.

MUSICIANS BUY SYMPHONY TICKETS.

This Season's Sale Pronounced More Satisfactory than That of Last Year.

The largest audience of the week gathered in Music Hall Friday morning for the last auction sale of seats for the Symphony Concerts. The bidding was brisk from ten until nearly one o'clock, only about twenty-five seats being left at the conclusion of the sale. The first seats offered were those on the floor under the balcony, a few of them bringing as high as $4, while several in the last row went for seventy-five, fifty and twenty-five cents, and some were not bid for at all. A repetition of the amusing incident of Tuesday took place when two individuals who were desirous of securing the same seat in this section, bid against one another until the price went up to $6.50, while the seats on each side sold for twenty-five cents premium. The $7.50 seats in the balconies brought excellent prices, no large figure being realized, but every seat was sold and none brought less than $4, while a few sold for $15. The average figure was about $10. On the whole the sale was much more satisfactory than that of last year. Among the purchasers today were Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Allen, Miss Gertrude Edmands, Alfred De Seve, Miss Harriet Whittier and Rev. Samuel J. Barrows.

Boston Daily Traveller

SATURDAY, SEPT. 19, 1891.

The high prices obtained on Monday and Tuesday for the Symphony rehearsal tickets have not varied materially from those of the past two seasons, and many would-be patrons who have been unable to obtain tickets have hastened to avail themselves of the equally enjoyable concerts offered by Mr. Listemann and the Philharmonic orchestra.

N HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, SEPTMBEER 19, 1891

The Saale, which arrived in New York on Tuesday, brought a number of distinguished artists, among whom was Mme. Nordica. Mme. Nordica will remain here until February to fill the engagements which have been made for her by C. A. Ellis. She will sing later with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, the Handel and Haydn Society, the New York Philharmonic Society, and with her own company will give a series of concerts in the principal cities.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 20, 1891.

Mme. Lillian Nordica arrived in Boston a few days ago. She will make a concert tour under the management of Mr. C. A. Ellis, who has booked many important engagements for her. Her first appearance will be at the Worcester festival next week. She will be heard in concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Handel and Hayden Society, the New York Philharmonic Society and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society and possibly in opera with Mr. Abbey's Company.

THE BOSTON TIMES

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR.

BOSTON, SUNDAY, SEPT. 20, 1891

Mme. Lillian Nordica, the well known prima donna, arrived in New York from England on Tuesday, and is now in Boston. She is to sing with her concert company at the opening entertainment of the Star course in this city, and will also be heard at the Worcester festival and with the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Nikisch are at their home in Brookline for the winter.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 20.

HENRY G. PARKER, Editor and Publisher

—The sale of the Symphony Concert tickets at Music Hall, on Thursday, attracted a large number of well-known men and women. Miss Marguerite Hall and Mr. Eliot Hubbard, who have so recently returned from Europe, were warmly welcomed by their many friends. Miss Virginia Stackpole, who came up from Mattapoisett, held quite a little court. Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Rogers, Mrs. Eichberg, Mrs. T. B. King, Miss Bancroft, Mr. and Mrs. Hecht, Miss Mills, Miss Ward, Miss Winslow, Mr. Hiram Tucker, Prof. Royce, Mr. Edward W. Codman, Mr. G. S. Winslow, Mr. I. M. Gaugengigl, Mr. A. H. Pickering, Dr. Richard Sprague, Mr. Thorndike, Mr. Benj. Kimball, Mr. Barton Jenks, Mr. Arthur S. Austin, Mrs. Thatcher Goddard, Dr. F. D. Stackpole, Miss Stackpole, Mr. H. W. Swift, Dr. and Mrs. Fay, Mrs. Sidney Williams, Mr. Harry Fay, Mme. Edna Hall and Mrs. Morton were a few of those seen at the sale.

—Mrs. John L. Gardner's seats at the Symphony Rehearsals are in section G, and she paid a premium of $53 on each seat.

—The highest price for a seat at the Rehearsals was paid by Mr. G. F. Wodsworth, $111, Number 19, in section J.

—Madam Nordica arrived at New York last Monday in the Saale, on which favorite steamer were the Hon. and Mrs. W. W. Crapo, Mr. Benj. F. Stevens, and Mr. B. F. Brown.

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, SEPT. 21, 1891.

Some of the works to be given at the Kneisel Quartette concerts, which will take place in Union Hall, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, are a new quintette by Brahms; quartette in B major, Beethoven; quartette, Paganini; quintette, Sinding; suite, F. Ries; quartette, A. Barodin; quartette, Bazzini; sonata, Tartini.

Mrs. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist at the first Symphony rehearsal and concert, Oct. 9, 10.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 20, 1891.

—Mr. Greeley Curtis, Mr. James Jackson, Mr. Arthur Beebe, Mr. J. T. Morse, Mr. E. W. Codman, Mr. and Mrs. Eliot Hubbard, but recently returned from Europe, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Warren, Miss Virginia Stackpole, Mr. J. H. Hecht, Dr. Richard Sprague, Mr. W. P. Blake, Mr. H. M. Ticknor, Mr. Arthur Austin, Mrs. Eichberg, Mr. W. C. Lovering, Dr. Stackpole and sister, Mrs. F. P. Vinton, and Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Rogers were among the crowd of well-known people who attended the Symphony auction, at the Music Hall, Thursday morning.

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

SUNDAY, SEPT. 20, 1891.

Sale of seats for the Symphony concerts in Infantry Hall will open Oct. 5. First concert will be given Wednesday evening, Oct. 21.

DAY HERALD.

ON, SEPTEMBER 20, 1891.

The Symphony Concerts Another Financial Success.

The Worcester Festival—A Brilliant Scheme of Programmes—The New Departure of the New England Conservatory—Notable Opera Productions—Entertainment Courses—Notes.

The Boston Symphony orchestra has in the past few years come to be an institution of well-nigh national reputation, and the success attending its annual series of concerts interests a vast public scattered throughout the States.

It will gratify those who have been absent from the city during the week's sales at Music Hall, to know that for the fourth consecutive year every seat for every one of the 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals, as well as for the 24 Saturday evening concerts, has been sold.

Such a result is again the best practical demonstration of the interest taken by the Boston public in the orchestra, its conductor and the work to be accomplished during the coming season. The maintenance of the orchestra, as is well known, is the private undertaking of a private citizen, and, however great a public interest there may be in facts and figures relating to this enterprise, it will be readily seen that no official statement can be made as to the actual financial results of the concerts.

Even the most persistent attendants upon the sales cannot give reliable figures, but the most careful estimate of the receipts shows that fully $100,000 has been paid into the Music Hall box office for the coming Symphony season, and, in round numbers, this means an average payment of $1 per seat for each concert for each attendant.

It would be well for those who take opportunities to cry down the financial side of this enterprise to keep these figures in mind, as well as to remember that, in addition to the 100,000 seats provided at the rate of $1 each, there are about 12,000 seats sold during the season, at the rehearsals, at 25 cents each, with nearly as many more admissions both at the rehearsals and concerts at the same figure.

The first of the rehearsals occurs Friday afternoon, Oct. 9, and the first concert Saturday evening, Oct. 10.

Mme. Lillian Nordica's tour in this country opens with her festival engagements at Worcester this week, and she is to appear at the opening concert of the symphony season in this city. She is also engaged for appearances at the star course and with the Handel and Haydn Society, as well as to fill important concert engagements in New York, Brooklyn, Chicago, Cleveland, Buffalo, Washington, Philadelphia and other large cities, and may, in all probability, be heard in opera before the season of Manager Abbey's company ends.

The Kneisel quartet concerts will take place at Union Hall on Monday evenings Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7. Some of the works to be given are a new quintet by Brahms, grand quartet in B major, Beethoven; quartet, Paganini; quintet, Sinding; suite, F. Ries; quartet, A. Borodin; quartet, Bazzini; sonata, Tartini.

The following prominent people are among the buyers of the Symphony tickets: Oliver Wendell Holmes, Mrs. E. C. Agassiz, Dr. Bigelow, Prof. Whitney, Charles P. Curtis, J. Montgomery Sears, Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mrs. Ole Bull, Mrs. Winthrop Sargent, Mrs. Charles Fairchild, C. E. Cotting, S. Lothrop Thorndike, Miss A. F. Perkins, Mrs. A. C. Lodge, Dr. J. W. Elliot, William Endicott, Jr., Samuel Johnson, T. R. Fay, William P. Mason, Col. T. L. Livermore, Charles Head, Dr. Morton Prince, J. H. Hecht and H. D. Hyde. The buyers for the concerts include Mr. Henry M. Rogers, Walter J. Otis, N. G. Chapin, I. M. Gaugengigl, Dr. W. P. Wesselhoeft, Alex. Steinert, Eliot Hubbard, Wm. C. Lovering, Wm. Rotch, John T. Morse, Jr., Mr. Reed, C. C. Coffin, B. J. Lang, W. J. Winch, Geo. A. Farlow, E. W. Tyler, E. Henry Baker, James Jackson, Mrs. C. C. Perkins, S. Lothrop Thorndike and Theodore Dwight.

Mme. Nordica, who is to be the leading soprano at the Worcester festival next week, arrived from London on Tuesday. She is at present with her sister, Mrs. W. F. Baldwin, in Dorchester.

Mr. John S. Dwight, the Nestor of music is the only person for whom seats are reserved at the Symphony concerts as a token of respect for the services of a life time.

Boston Weekly

Amusement Bulletin.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPT. 12, 1891.

MADAME NORDICA.

The charming and gifted prima donna whose excellent likeness adorns the first page of this number of the BULLETIN, is pre-eminently a New Englander by birth and education. Though born in Maine, her parents removed to Boston while she was yet an infant, and as Lillian Norton, her real name, she was known to the musical world before she was out of her teens. She studied at the conservatory under John O'Neil, and her after success may doubtless be due to his careful training.

One of her first professional engagements took her to London in conjunction with Gilmore's Band. The beauty of her voice and personal charm of manner soon attracted attention in the English capital, and an eminent critic advised her to study under an Italian master. After some consideration she concluded to do so, and relinquishing all her brilliant prospects in the field she had followed up to that time, she entered a course of study under the famous Italian maestro San Giovanni. This was in the year 1879, and the followiug season she made her debut in Italian Opera as Violetta in Verdi's La Traviata, an opera which she had later the privilege of studying with the composer. For her debut, her master had Italianized her name to Nordica and the success achieved by her on that occasion justified her in retaining a title which has been identified with a continuously successful career.

She sang later at Milan and Genoa, adding to her first successes, and in 1881 was engaged to sing at St. Petersburg, where she appeared for two seasons. She still continued her study of vocal technique under her old master, and on her appearance in Paris as Marguerite in Gounod's Faust, she won the plaudits of public and critic alike, since which time her position among the greatest prima-donnas of the age has been established. In 1883, she retired from the stage and was married to Mr. Gower whose fame as an inventor in connection with the telephone had become widespread. Shortly after their marriage her husband went on an æronautic expedition from which he never returned. After her recovery from the prostration occasioned by the sad fate of her husband, Madame Nordica resumed her public career in 1887, appearing in London under the direction of Mr. Mapleson. The following year she was engaged by Augustus Harris, and she has continued in his Italian Opera Company each season. The beauty of her voice, the charm of her singing and the attraction of her personal appearance, are only a few of the many graces which she possesses as a woman and as an artist. In the concert-room, as upon the stage, she has won a high position by the sweetness and freshness of her voice, and she possesses all the needful requirements to be successful as an Oratorio Singer as she has been in Opera.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The eleventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, Conductor, opens at Music Hall, Oct. 10th. As usual twenty-four concerts will be given on Saturday evenings preceeded by twenty-four public rehearsals on Friday afternoons of the same weeks. Some famous solo artists will appear during the season including Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Eugen D'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld and others and many interesting musical novelties are promised.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

The Kneisel quartette will give their annual series of six concerts at Union Hall, Boylston Street, Monday evenings Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan 25, Feb. 15 and March 7.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 24, 1891.

WORCESTER'S FESTIVAL.

Dr. Bridge's "Repentance of Nineveh" Given for the First Time in America.

WORCESTER, Sept. 23.—The afternoon concert began with Schumann's Fourth Symphony in D minor, very pleasingly rendered. Victor Herbert's 'cello work in Saens' music was careful and was warmly received. "Peer Gynt," the closing number, came out with great effect. The feature of the whole day, however, was Dr. Bridge's "Repentance of Nineveh," with this cast:—

Daughter of the King .... Mme. Nordica
Queen .... Mrs. Alves
King .... Mr. Carl Dufft
Jonah .... Mr. Herbert Johnson

Dr. Bridge is prominent in the younger English school of composers. His first important appointment was that of deputy organist at Westminster Abbey. Dr. Bridge lectures at the Royal College of Music and conducts several choral societies. His compositions embrace much church music and several minor cantatas. It was not until the Birmingham festival of 1888 that a choral work of dimensions appeared from his pen. "The Repentance of Nineveh" was written for the Worcester (Eng.) festival of 1890 in conjunction with Joseph Bennett, who took his text from the most enigmatical portion of the scriptures, namely, the Book of Jonah. But the incident of the prophet being swallowed by the whale is absent.

The first part brings the King of Assyria into Nineveh in triumph. Suddenly Jonah is heard predicting the destruction of the city within 40 days. His words are received with derision, and he is threatened with death; but the king's daughter begs her parents and the crowd to heed the prophet's warning. In the next part, Jonah, watching without, under a "goord," is vexed that 39 days have expired and yet the word of the Lord has not been fulfilled. In the night the prayers of the anxious people are heard in the distance. As morning breaks, Jonah discovers that the gourd has withered. He becomes angry, but the voice of the Lord reproaches him because of his complaint that a great city has not been destroyed.

Then on the 40th day the royal family and people of Nineveh are assembled before the palace. The queen remains obdurate, but all others are in great distress, which becomes panic when a thunderstorm bursts. There is a cry for mercy. The queen joins, and then the voice of Jonah is again heard proclaiming the long-suffering and goodness of the Lord. Then comes the swelling chorus of praise and delight.

Nordica repeated here the success which greeted her first appearance early in the evening in a Gounod's waltz from "Romeo and Juliet." The chorus work in the oratorio was almost uniformly strong and even.

As an encore Mme. Nordica sang the "Mignon Polonaise." She was simply superb in voice and style. Mrs. Carl Alves also made a hit in Rubinstein's "Hagar in the Desert." The orchestral numbers were Gluck's "Iphigenia" overture and the intermezzo from Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana." Tomorrow afternoon's concert will be devoted to American composers and the evening chiefly to Wagner.

JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.

Date 10-22

THREE GREAT COMPOSERS.

Opening Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.—Soloist, Mme. Nordica.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is recognized as the most deservedly [illegible] organization known to music-loving New England, and Mme. Lillian Nordica is regarded as the foremost American vocalist within certain temperamental limits. Naturally much interest was developed by the musically inclined of the city at this first concert of the series to note whatever variation of excellence in the Symphony Orchestra existed since last season and to hear the unfamiliar voice of a renowned vocal artist. Curiosity and art-love were commingled on this occasion. Whatever was to be heard must be considered the standard and the hope endured that so far as the orchestra was concerned the standard would be advanced. Because of unavoidable and deplorable changes in its personnel many, perhaps, were inclined to the belief that the much admired unity and work of the orchestra might be marred by players unused to Conductor Nikisch. Like everything else the touching of familiar elbows inspired confidence and confidence is not often of rapid growth. Assurances that every man in the chairs is able to do all and a little more than is required of him is of almost inestimable value in orchestras, and assemblages of instrumentalists and vocalists. Perhaps the best informed might have noticed a slight lack of precision, and might also have made a mental protest against the wood and brass instruments in certain passages. Absolute precision will come ere the Orchestra as it now stands becomes many weeks older. Then it can be said that the grand organization eclipses its proud record of the past dozen years. At first, last evening, something akin to hesitancy manifested itself, but as the concert progressed conductor Nikisch's coterie of artists responded to the sway of his magic wand as one man dominated by a ruling spirit. That figure in the central foreground reading the symbols of the best thing vouchsafed to mortals with the precision and scope of a master and spreading his influence upon everyone was one of the delights of the hours. The programme presented was of especial interest because masterpieces of three schools, Tschaikowsky's—the foremost Russian composer of to-day—Suite, op. 55, Elegie, Valse Melancholique, Scherzo, Tema con Variaziani; Wagner's Good Friday Spell, from "Parsifal," and Berlioz's overture "Benvenuto Cellini," constituted the work of the orchestra, Russian, German and Italian creations. Mme. Nordica sang Gounod's aria from "Queen of Sheba," and A. Thomas's polacca from "Mignon." The greatest interest centred, naturally, in Tschaikowsky's work, tinctured as it is with his early experiences in the Italian and German schools. His subsequent development gave to the world something new and distinctly original. His greatest success is symphonic composition. Herein lies his strength. Plaintiveness, tenderness, effeminateness, melancholiness, and weirdness in varying moods touched the listeners as the orchestra gave the 12 variations. The melody skillfully imparted by the violins was followed by the theme with the whole of the string instruments and the wind instruments in counterpoint above it. The Elegie had an insinuating tenderness, the Valse an impressive sadness, the Scherzo a witching, peculiar effect that was charming, and the final Tewa con Variazioni with its wealth of sweet and majestic tones left the audience in love with the Russian, and in admiration of the players who had interpreted his work so skillfully and beautifully. The Good Friday spell from the third act of "Parsifal" is more or less familiar. Its solemn suggestion was exquisitely unfolded, and perhaps it was the most satisfactory number of the programme. Certainly it was played superbly. Berlioz's overture from the opera of "Benvenuto Cellini" was less familiar. Its base of themes represents a bold and daring spirit. Its melody, sustained by the violoncellos and clarinets, is richly elaborated by the violins and flute and oboe alternately. In its working out it is subjected to extended treatment and development, and ends with the spirit of the opera triumphantly. It was a noble closing selection nobly played.

Mme. Nordica looked superbly and sang spontaneously. The aria from "Queen of Sheba" illustrated the admirable qualities in her singing. Her firm, strong tone filled the great hall with melody. She did not scream in the upper register, and her intonation was reproachless. She sang as though singing was a delight and not a form of vocal gymnastics. Perhaps her voice was somewhat unsympathetic and cold, but it was due entirely to her temperament. She was not indifferent, because she sang as though she could not help it. Her majestic tones were brilliant, and commanded the admiration of every person in the large and appreciative audience, representing the culture of the city. The polacca from "Mignon" afforded her an opportunity to show flexibility and voice control, but the selection was unworthy the heroic capacity of her sonorous tones. Mme. Nordica was recalled after both selections, vigorously, but she would not respond to the general desire for more because time was precious, and the 10 o'clock train for Boston would not wait even for the Symphony Orchestra.

SUNDAY HERALD.
BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 20, 1891.

The Symphony Concerts Another Financial Success.

The Worcester Festival—A Brilliant Scheme of Programmes—The New Departure of the New England Conservatory—Notable Opera Productions—EntertainmentCourses—Notes.

The Boston Symphony orchestra has in the last few years come to be an institution of well-nigh national reputation, and the success attending its annual series of concerts interests a vast public scattered throughout the States.

It will gratify those who have been absent from the city during the week's sales at Music Hall, to know that for the fourth consecutive year every seat for every one of the 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals, as well as for the 24 Saturday evening concerts, has been sold.

Such a result is again the best practical demonstration of the interest taken by the Boston public in the orchestra, its conductor and the work to be accomplished during the coming season. The maintenance of the orchestra, as is well known, is the private undertaking of a private citizen, and, however great a public interest there may be in facts and figures relating to this enterprise, it will be readily seen that no official statement can be made as to the actual financial results of the concerts.

Even the most persistent attendants upon the sales cannot give reliable figures, but the most careful estimate of the receipts shows that fully $100,000 has been paid into the Music Hall box office for the coming Symphony season, and, in round numbers, this means an average payment of $1 per seat for each concert for each attendant.

It would be well for those who take opportunities to cry down the financial side of this enterprise to keep these figures in mind, as well as to remember that, in addition to the 100,000 seats provided at the rate of $1 each, there are about 12,000 seats sold during the season, at the rehearsals, at 25 cents each, with nearly as many more admissions both at the rehearsals and concerts at the same figure.

The first of the rehearsals occurs Friday afternoon, Oct. 9, and the first concert Saturday evening, Oct. 10.

Mme. Lillian Nordica's tour in this country opens with her festival engagements at Worcester this week, and she is to appear at the opening concert of the symphony season in this city. She is also engaged for appearances at the star course and with the Handel and Haydn Society, as well as to fill important concert engagements in New York, Brooklyn, Chicago, Cleveland, Buffalo, Washington, Philadelphia and other large cities, and may, in all probability, be heard in opera before the season of Manager Abbey's company ends.

The Kneisel quartet concerts will take place at Union Hall on Monday evenings Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7. Some of the works to be given are a new quintet by Brahms, grand quartet in B major, Beethoven; quartet, Paganini; quintet, Singing; suite, F. Ries: quartet, A. Barodin; quartet, Bazzini; sonata, Tartini.

The following prominent people are among the buyers of the Symphony tickets: Oliver Wendell Holmes, Mrs. E. C. Agassiz, Dr. Bigelow, Prof. Whitney, Charles P. Curtis, J. Montgomery Sears, Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mrs. Ole Bull, Mrs. Winthrop Sargent, Mrs. Charles Fairchild, C. E. Cotting, S. Lothrop Thorndike, Miss A. F. Perkins, Mrs. A. C. Lodge, Dr. J. W. Elliot, William Endicott, Jr., Samuel Johnson, T. R. Fay, William P. Mason, Col. T. L. Livermore, Charles Head, Dr. Morton Prince, J. H. Hecht and H. D. Hyde. The buyers for the concerts include Mr. Henry M. Rogers, Walter J. Otis, N. G. Chapin, I. M. Gaugengigl, Dr. W. P. Wesselhoeft, Alex. Steinert, Eliot Hubbard, Wm. C. Lovering, Wm. Rotch, John T. Morse, Jr., Mr. Reed, C. C. Coffin, B. J. Lang, W. J. Winch, Geo. A. Farlow, E. W. Tyler, E. Henry Baker, James Jackson, Mrs. C. C. Perkins, S. Lothrop Thorndike and Theodore Dwight.

Mme. Nordica, who is to be the leading soprano at the Worcester festival next week, arrived from London on Tuesday. She is at present with her sister, Mrs. W. F. Baldwin, in Dorchester.

Mr. John S. Dwight, the Nestor of music is the only person for whom seats are reserved at the Symphony concerts as a token of respect, for the services of a life time.

Boston Weekly Amusement Bulletin.
BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPT. 12, 1891.

MADAME NORDICA.

The charming and gifted prima donna whose excellent likeness adorns the first page of this number of the BULLETIN, is pre-eminently a New Englander by birth and education. Though born in Maine, her parents removed to Boston while she was yet an infant, and as Lillian Norton, her real name, she was known to the musical world before she was out of her teens. She studied at the conservatory under John O'Neil, and her after success may doubtless be due to his careful training.

One of her first professional engagements took her to London in conjunction with Gilmore's Band. The beauty of her voice and personal charm of manner soon attracted attention in the English capital, and an eminent critic advised her to study under an Italian master. After some consideration she concluded to do so, and relinquishing all her brilliant prospects in the field she had followed up to that time, she entered a course of study under the famous Italian maestro San Giovanni. This was in the year 1879, and the followiug season she made her debut in Italian Opera as Violetta in Verdi's La Traviata, an opera which she had later the privilege of studying with the composer. For her debut, her master had Italianized her name to Nordica and the success achieved by her on that occasion justified her in retaining a title which has been identified with a continuously successful career.

She sang later at Milan and Genoa, adding to her first successes, and in 1881 was engaged to sing at St. Petersburg, where she appeared for two seasons. She still continued her study of vocal technique under her old master, and on her appearance in Paris as Marguerite in Gounod's Faust, she won the plaudits of public and critic alike, since which time her position among the greatest prima-donnas of the age has been established. In 1883, she retired from the stage and was married to Mr. Gower whose fame as an inventor in connection with the telephone had become widespread. Shortly after their marriage her husband went on an æronautic expedition from which he never returned. After her recovery from the prostration occasioned by the sad fate of her husband, Madame Nordica resumed her public career in 1887, appearing in London under the direction of Mr. Mapleson. The following year she was engaged by Augustus Harris, and she has continued in his Italian Opera Company each season. The beauty of her voice, the charm of her singing and the attraction of her personal appearance, are only a few of the many graces which she possesses as a woman and as an artist. In the concert-room, as upon the stage, she has won a high position by the sweetness and freshness of her voice, and she possesses all the needful requirements to be successful as an Oratorio Singer as she has been in Opera.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The eleventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, Conductor opens at Music Hall, Oct. 10th. As usual twenty-four concerts will be given on Saturday evenings preceded by twenty-four public rehearsals on Friday afternoons of the same weeks. Some famous solo artists will appear during the season including Mme. Nordica, Mme. Joachim, Eugen D'Albert, Ignace J. Paderewski, Alfred Gruenfeld and others and many interesting musical novelties are promised.

On Monday morning, Sept. 14, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be offered at auction at Music Hall, as in former years, not more than four seats being offered at a single bid, the seats being sold in regular order, beginning at the stage line, no bid of less than 25 cents being received, and all seats not called for and paid for immediately being resold without reserve.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 15, at 10 o'clock, the $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold at the same place and under the same rules.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 17, at 10 o'clock, the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold at the same place and under the same rules, and the $7.50 concert tickets will be put up in the same way, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday, Sept. 18.

All seats for which no bids are received at these auction sales will be offered at the box office on the Wednesday and Saturday mornings after the two sales, at the advertised prices, and it should be distinctly understood that all the seats will be sold to the highest bidder, whether the premium be small or large in amount, and no attempt will be made to in any way force the premium beyond the figures readily obtained.

In addition to the Boston concerts, the usual series will be given in Cambridge, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, in addition, six public rehearsals and six concerts in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. The annual western tour will also be made during the spring months.

The Kneisel quartette will give their annual series of six concerts at Union Hall, Boylston Street, Monday evenings Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan 25, Feb. 15 and March 7.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 24, 1891.

WORCESTER'S FESTIVAL.

Dr. Bridge's "Repentance of Nineveh" Given for the First Time in America.

WORCESTER, Sept. 23.—The afternoon concert began with Schumann's Fourth Symphony in D minor, very pleasingly rendered. Victor Herbert's 'cello work in Saens' music was careful and was warmly received. "Peer Gynt," the closing number, came out with great effect. The feature of the whole day, however, was Dr. Bridge's "Repentance of Nineveh," with this cast:—

Daughter of the King ....Mme. Nordica
Queen.......................................Mrs. Alves
King.......................................Mr. Carl Dufft
Jonah...........................Mr. Herbert Johnson

Dr. Bridge is prominent in the younger English school of composers. His first important appointment was that of deputy organist at Westminster Abbey. Dr. Bridge lectures at the Royal College of Music and conducts several choral societies. His compositions embrace much church music and several minor cantatas. It was not until the Birmingham festival of 1888 that a choral work of dimensions appeared from his pen. "The Repentance of Nineveh" was written for the Worcester (Eng.) festival of 1890 in conjunction with Joseph Bennett, who took his text from the most enigmatical portion of the scriptures, namely, the Book of Jonah. But the incident of the prophet being swallowed by the whale is absent.

The first part brings the King of Assyria into Nineveh in triumph. Suddenly Jonah is heard predicting the destruction of the city within 40 days. His words are received with derision, and he is threatened with death; but the king's daughter begs her parents and the crowd to heed the prophet's warning. In the next part, Jonah, watching without, under a "goord," is vexed that 39 days have expired and yet the word of the Lord has not been fulfilled. In the night the prayers of the anxious people are heard in the distance. As morning breaks, Jonah discovers that the gourd has withered. He becomes angry, but the voice of the Lord reproaches him because of his complaint that a great city has not been destroyed.

Then on the 40th day the royal family and people of Nineveh are assembled before the palace. The queen remains obdurate, but all others are in great distress, which becomes panic when a thunderstorm bursts. There is a cry for mercy. The queen joins, and then the voice of Jonah is again heard proclaiming the long-suffering and goodness of the Lord. Then comes the swelling chorus of praise and delight.

Nordica repeated here the success which greeted her first appearance early in the evening in a Gounod's waltz from "Romeo and Juliet." The chorus work in the oratorio was almost uniformly strong and even.

As an encore Mme. Nordica sang the "Mignon Polonaise." She was simply superb in voice and style. Mrs. Carl Alves also made a hit in Rubinstein's "Hagar in the Desert." The orchestral numbers were Gluck's "Iphigenia" overture and the intermezzo from Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana." Tomorrow afternoon's concert will be devoted to American composers and the evening chiefly to Wagner.

JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.
Date 10-22

THREE GREAT COMPOSERS.

Opening Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.—Soloist, Mme. Nordica.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is recognized as the most deservedly famous organization known to music-loving New England, and Mme. Lillian Nordica is regarded as the foremost American vocalist within certain temperamental limits. Naturally much interest was developed by the musically inclined of the city at this first concert of the series to note whatever variation of excellence in the Symphony Orchestra existed since last season and to hear the unfamiliar voice of a renowned vocal artist. Curiosity and art-love were commingled on this occasion. Whatever was to be heard must be considered the standard and the hope endured that so far as the orchestra was concerned the standard would be advanced. Because of unavoidable and deplorable changes in its personnel many, perhaps, were inclined to the belief that the much admired unity and work of the orchestra might be marred by players unused to Conductor Nikisch. Like everything else the touching of familiar elbows inspired confidence and confidence is not often of rapid growth. Assurances that every man in the chairs is able to do all and a little more than is required of him is of almost inestimable value in orchestras, and assemblages of instrumentalists and vocalists. Perhaps the best informed might have noticed a slight lack of precision, and might also have made a mental protest against the wood and brass instruments in certain passages. Absolute precision will come ere the Orchestra as it now stands becomes many weeks older. Then it can be said that the grand organization eclipses its proud record of the past dozen years. At first, last evening, something akin to hesitancy manifested itself, but as the concert progressed conductor Nikisch's coterie of artists responded to the sway of his magic wand as one man dominated by a ruling spirit. That figure in the central foreground reading the symbols of the best thing vouchsafed to mortals with the precision and scope of a master and spreading his influence upon everyone was one of the delights of the hours. The programme presented was of especial interest because masterpieces of three schools, Tschaikowsky's—the foremost Russian composer of to-day—Suite, op. 55, Elegie, Valse Melancholique, Scherzo, Tema con Variaziani; Wagner's Good Friday Spell, from "Parsifal," and Berlioz's overture "Benvenuto Cellini," constituted the work of the orchestra, Russian, German and Italian creations. Mme. Nordica sang Gounod's aria from "Queen of Sheba," and A. Thomas's polacca from "Mignon." The greatest interest centred, naturally, in Tschaikowsky's work, tinctured as it is with his early experiences in the Italian and German schools. His subsequent development gave to the world something new and distinctly original. His greatest success is symphonic composition wherein lies his strength. Plaintiveness, tenderness, effeminateness, melancholiness and weirdness in varying moods touched the listeners as the orchestra gave the 12 variations. The melody skillfully imparted by the violins was followed by the theme with the whole of the string instruments and the wind instruments in counterpoint above it. The Elegie had an insinuating tenderness, the Valse an impressive sadness, the Scherzo a witching, peculiar effect that was charming, and the final Tewa con Variazioni with its wealth of sweet and majestic tones left the audience in love with the Russian, and in admiration of the players who had interpreted his work so skillfully and beautifully. The Good Friday spell from the third act of "Parsifal" is more or less familiar. Its solemn suggestion was exquisitely unfolded, and perhaps it was the most satisfactory number of the programme. Certainly it was played superbly. Berlioz's overture from the opera of "Benvenuto Cellini" was less familiar. Its base of themes represents a bold and daring spirit. Its melody, sustained by the violoncellos and clarinets, is richly elaborated by the violins and flute and oboe alternately. In its working out it is subjected to extended treatment and development, and ends with the spirit of the opera triumphantly. It was a noble closing selection nobly played.

Mme. Nordica looked superbly and sang spontaneously. The aria from "Queen of Sheba" illustrated the admirable qualities in her singing. Her firm, strong tone filled the great hall with melody. She did not scream in the upper register, and her intonation was reproachless. She sang as though singing was a delight and not a form of vocal gymnastics. Perhaps her voice was somewhat unsympathetic and cold, but it was due entirely to her temperament. She was not indifferent, because she sang as though she could not help it. Her majestic tones were brilliant, and commanded the admiration of every person in the large and appreciative audience, representing the culture of the city. The polacca from "Mignon" afforded her an opportunity to show flexibility and voice control, but the selection was unworthy the heroic capacity of her sonorous tones. Mme. Nordica was recalled after both selections, vigorously, but she would not respond to the general desire for more because time was precious, and the 10 o'clock train for Boston would not wait even for the Symphony Orchestra.

[11]

COLORED PAPER

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
SEASON 1891-92.
CONCERTS. 362

No. ....
Premium. ....
Name. ....

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
SEASON 1891-92.
CONCERTS. 525

No. ....
Premium. ....
Name. ....

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
SEASON 1891-92.
REHEARSALS. 586

No. ....
Premium. ....
Name. ....

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
SEASON 1891-92.
REHEARSALS. 474

No. ....
Premium. ....
Name. ....

Boston Music Hall, CC 311
Eleventh Season 1891-92

1

THE BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.
Public ✳ Rehearsal,
FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 9, AT 2.30.
ADMIT ONE. - - C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.
SEASON TICKET, 1891-92

Wednesday, Oct. 21	Wednesday, Jan. 27
Wednesday, Nov. 18.	Monday, Feb. 29
Wednesday, Dec. 16	Wednesday, April 6.

FLOOR

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 2

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL

Bridge's Oratorio "The Repentance of Nineveh"

THE FIRST TIME IN AMERICA

Micellaneous Music at Afternoon and Evening Concerts

WORCESTER, Sept. 23.—[SPECIAL to the POST.]—The programme of the second consert of the Music Festival this afternoon was as follows:

Symphony, No. 4, in D minor..............Schumann
Aria, "O Fatal Gift," from Don Carlos........Verdi
Mrs. Julie L. Wyman.
Two movements from Symphony No. 4, in F minor..........................Tschaikowsky
Concerto Violoncello, in A minor, Op. 33..Saint-Saëns
Mr. Herbert.
Scena and Aria, "Bella mia fiamma, addio,"...Mozart
Mrs. S. C. Ford.
Suite, per gynt, op. 46........................Grieg

Five out of the six orchestral and vocal numbers were heard for the first time, so far as the concerts of the association are concerned, and whatever may be the merit of the individual selections, the programme as a whole was well chosen. The performance of the numbers delighted many people, for applause was frequent and hearty. But it is not possible to praise highly the work of the orchestra under Mr. Zerrahn's direction. Only a rough sketch of the Schumann symphony was presented, without color, and at times almost without form. The phrases of Schumann put on angularity. The song was hoarsely declaimed: it did not flow. The peculiar poetry of the composer was lost in the reading. And Tschaikowsky suffered in a like manner.

After all, it is no slight matter to educate a musical public to the enjoyment of the orchestral compositions of Schumann. There is but little to seize the popular attention; the colors are vague, often only suggested. The melancholy that drips from so many pages is distasteful to the sleek and contented, who go to concerts merely to aid digestion. The introduction of such symphonies at these concerts shows the real advance made during the past years of the association in the aims of the managers and the taste of the audience. And soon the audience will grow impatient and demand more finished and more musical performances.

The soloists were Mrs. Wyman, Mrs. Ford and Mr. Victor Herbert. Mrs. Wyman sang the well-known air from "Don Carlos," and although in portions it lies a little beyond the limit of her voice, the warmth and beauty of her tones, and the intelligence of her delivery atoned for a few trifling defects in her performance. Mrs. Ford sang the aria written by Mozart for Josephine Duschek. It demands a rich, full voice, and a free and expressive style rather than the agility called for by the conventional concert aria of the time, and Mrs. Ford sang it with understanding, particularly in the slow movement. The two singers were recalled, as was Mr. Herbert after his pleasing performance of Saint-Saëns's concerto for 'cello, which is not one of the composer's best works. With the exception of the delightful allegretto it is pale and entirely without the characteristic qualities of this man of great talent.

There are still traces of the "singing convention" even in the regular concerts of today. There was a long and dramatic pause after the first movement of the Schumann symphony, during which the orchestra was photographed by a man in the gallery amid considerable popular agitation. The cap was replaced, the orchestra breathed freely, and Schumann then had his turn. And perhaps it would be well in future to insist upon the rule that babies should be left in a cloak room and properly checked, for Mrs. Ford suffered severely from ill-timed and injudicious infantile imitations.

THIRD CONCERT.

Overture, "Iphigenia," Wagner's ending.......Gluck
Dramatic Scene, "Hagar in the Desert"....Rubinstein
Mrs. Carl Alves.
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana".......Mascagni
Waltz, "Romeo and Juliet"...................Gounod
Mrs. Lillian Nordica.
The Repentance of Nineveh, a Dramatic Oratorio,
J. F. Bridge

The event of the day was Dr. Bridge's "The Repentence of Nineveh," a dramatic oratorio, for it was performed for the first time in America. The ambitious French or Italian composer dreams of the stage. The serious German plans a suite or symphony. But the Englishman regards the oratorio as the final word in music. And so he reads diligently the Bible, and the scores of Handel and Mendelssohn, and then he writes the dedication to his Queen. Oratorios have been made by learned doctors and professors upon nearly all the available subjects found in Holy Writ, from Genesis to the vision of John. The field is now limited. It is true that Dr. Bridge might still have taken Noah or even the man who threw stones at David; but he preferred Jonah. In his work he was assisted by Mr. Joseph Bennett, who is to English professors what Scribe was to the writers for the operatic stage. Now the true hero of the story of Jonah is the whale, and one would naturally expect the part to be sung by a deep bass with ingenious accompaniments of bassoons, bass-clarinet, trombones and tuba. There would also in this case be a grand opportunity for realistic music of the modern school, with the whale motif, the storm at sea, the joy and the subsequent agony of "the great fish," and the glee of Jonah at his escape. But in place of this we are introduced to the family of the King of Nineveh, which consisted, according to Mr. Bennett, of a wife and daughter. There is not the slightest allusion to the whale, but much is made of the mysterious gourd under which Jonah sat until it was withered. The plot is then simply this: The people of Nineveh and their King exult over the defeat of the Egyptians. Jonah announces the fall of the town; the Queen advises his death, but the daughter—a French composer would have written a love duet for her and the prophet—sides with Jonah. A period of thirty-eight days separates Part I. and Part II. The "Gourd motif" is heard, and Jonah, when the strange plant is withered, wishes to die, for which he is rebuked by the Lord. Part III. is devoted to the agony and repentance of the King and his family and his people. There is a furious storm, followed by sunshine and Jonah, and the work closes with a triumphal hymn. Mr. Bennett's book is a collection of bead-texts gathered from all quarters and strung upon the slender thread of Jonah's adventures in Nineveh. It is without interest, for no one of the characters is sympathetic or strongly drawn. Desparing Jonah beneath the gourd is merely a diluted Elijah [illegible] death.

[illegible] which unlike the cantata is [illegible] point. The music of Dr. Bridge is in one respect, at least, a contrast to the ordinary modern oratorio, in that it is not merely a weak solution of Mendelssohn. There are a few echoes of "Elijah" but there are more evidences of the study of the school of today. There are traces of Meyerbeer, Goldmark and even Wagner. The great trouble with Dr. Bridge is that while he is often scholarly, and at times ingenious, he is deficient in genuine melody. The only striking tune in the oratorio is the announcement of the fall of Nineveh, and the notes of it form a Paris street cry. They have been used by Meyerbeer in the opera, and they without doubt come from the plain song of the church. The air of Prophet in the third part is graceful and flowing but it does not haunt. The other airs are manufactured, as are too many of the choruses. The composer uses freely the system of typical phrases and occasionally with good effect, the march motif, the warning motif, and the gourd. These are contatantly recurring and too often they take the place of spontanicity. Nor is the accentuation of words free from reproach. In one or two instances it is absolutely and unnecessarily false.

The most original and effective numbers of the oratorio are the march, the chorus "It is the Voice of a God," and the sixteenth number, a recitative for the baritone.

This work was made to order for the Worcester Musical Festival in England, 1890. It was sung this evening. These have been the only performances, and it is doubtful whether it will be heard elsewhere, for as a whole the oratorio must be regarded a a failure. Neither the earnestness of the chorus nor the painstaking efforts of the soloists, Mrs. Nordica and Messrs. Johnson and Duff, could change its character. The solos, with the few exceptions named, are dreary platitudes and the choruses are mere exercises of the school.

The performance of the oratorio was preceded by a short and miscellaneous concert in which Mrs. Nordica was enthusiastically applauded for her singing of the waltz from "Romeo and Juliet." This applause was excessive, for her bravura was by no means faultless. In the waltz, as in the brilliant air from "Mignon," her phrasing was careless, and some of her runs were smeared. Mrs. Alves sang an extraordinary thing by Rubinstein called "Hagar." It is rambling and tiresome, and the instrumentation of the accompaniment is alternately dry and boisterous. The "Intermezzo" from Mascagni's famous opera was given for the first time in America, it is claimed, with the original instrumentation. It is a warm and charming melody, played by the violins, with harp and organ accompaniment, with here and there an instrument of the wood. Wind is discreetly used. It was repeated.

On Thursday afternoon McDowell's suite in A minor, Herbert's dramatic cantata and Adam's mass will be performed for the first time. The evening concert will be of a miscellaneous nature, with many selections from the works of Wagner.

PHILIP HALE.

Paderewski on Nikisch and his Orchestra.

At the last concert of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, Paderewski, who was the soloist, gave these words of praise:

> "I consider the Boston Symphony Orchestra the best in the world, not excepting the orchestra of the Conservatoire in Paris. There are a few better instruments in the Conservatoire, but, as a whole, the Boston Symphony Orchestra stands above it. It is fortunate in its director, for Mr. Nikisch is much superior to the conductor of the Conservatoire. After the performance of my concerto in Brooklyn, in which Mr. Nikisch directed the accompaniment, I declared I would never play the piece again; and I will not, as its perfection may not be reached again."

N.Y. MUSICAL COURIER.

COLORED PAPER

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON 1891-92.

CONCERTS. 362

No.

Premium.

Name.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON 1891-92.

CONCERTS. 525

No.

Premium.

Name.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON 1891-92.

586

REHEARSALS.

No.

Premium.

Name.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON 1891-92.

474

REHEARSALS.

No.

Premium.

Name.

Boston Music Hall,
Eleventh Season 1891-92

CC 311

1

THE BOSTON

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Public * Rehearsal,

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 9, AT 2.30.

ADMIT ONE, - - C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

SEASON TICKET, 1891-92

Wednesday, Oct. 21
Wednesday, Nov. 18.
Wednesday, Dec. 16

Wednesday, Jan. 27
Monday, Feb. 29
Wednesday, April 6.

[illegible]

FLOOR

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 24

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL

Bridge's Oratorio "The Repentance of Nineveh"

THE FIRST TIME IN AMERICA

Micellaneous Music at Afternoon and Evening Concerts

WORCESTER, Sept. 23.—[SPECIAL to the POST.]—The programme of the second concert of the Music Festival this afternoon was as follows:

Symphony, No. 4, in D minor..............Schumann
Aria, "O Fatal Gift," from Don Carlos........Verdi
Mrs. Julie L. Wyman.
Two movements from Symphony No. 4, in F minor..........................Tschaikowsky
Concerto Violoncello, in A minor, Op. 33..Saint-Saëns
Mr. Herbert.
Scena and Aria, "Bella mia fiamma, addio,"...Mozart
Mrs. S. C. Ford.
Suite, per gynt, op. 46............................Grieg

Five out of the six orchestral and vocal numbers were heard for the first time, so far as the concerts of the association are concerned, and whatever may be the merit of the individual selections, the programme as a whole was well chosen. The performance of the numbers delighted many people, for applause was frequent and hearty. But it is not possible to praise highly the work of the orchestra under Mr. Zerrahn's direction. Only a rough sketch of the Schumann symphony was presented, without color, and at times almost without form. The phrases of Schumann put on angularity. The song was hoarsely declaimed: it did not flow. The peculiar poetry of the composer was lost in the reading. And Tschaikowsky suffered in a like manner.

After all, it is no slight matter to educate a musical public to the enjoyment of the orchestral compositions of Schumann. There is but little to seize the popular attention; the colors are vague, often only suggested. The melancholy that drips from so many pages is distasteful to the sleek and contented, who go to concerts merely to aid digestion. The introduction of such symphonies at these concerts shows the real advance made during the past years of the association in the aims of the managers and the taste of the audience. And soon the audience will grow impatient and demand more finished and more musical performances.

The soloists were Mrs. Wyman, Mrs. Ford and Mr. Victor Herbert. Mrs. Wyman sang the well-known air from "Don Carlos," and although in portions it lies a little beyond the limit of her voice, the warmth and beauty of her tones, and the intelligence of her delivery atoned for a few trifling defects in her performance. Mrs. Ford sang the aria written by Mozart for Josephine Duschek. It demands a rich, full voice, and a free and expressive style rather than the agility called for by the conventional concert aria of the time, and Mrs. Ford sang it with understanding, particularly in the slow movement. The two singers were recalled, as was Mr. Herbert after his pleasing performance of Saint-Saëns's concerto for 'cello, which is not one of the composer's best works. With the exception of the delightful allegretto it is pale and entirely without the characteristic qualities of this man of great talent.

There are still traces of the "singing convention" even in the regular concerts of today. There was a long and dramatic pause after the first movement of the Schumann symphony, during which the orchestra was photographed by a man in the gallery amid considerable popular agitation. The cap was replaced, the orchestra breathed freely, and Schumann then had his turn. And perhaps it would be well in future to insist upon the rule that babies should be left in a cloak room and properly checked, for Mrs. Ford suffered severely from ill-timed and injudicious infantile imitations.

THIRD CONCERT.

Overture, "Iphigenia," Wagner's ending......Gluck
Dramatic Scene, "Hagar in the Desert"....Rubinstein
Mrs. Carl Alves.
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana".......Mascagni
Waltz, "Romeo and Juliet"........................Gounod
Mrs. Lillian Nordica.
The Repentance of Nineveh, a Dramatic Oratorio,
J. F. Bridge

The event of the day was Dr. Bridge's "The Repentence of Nineveh," a dramatic oratorio, for it was performed for the first time in America. The ambitious French or Italian composer dreams of the stage. The serious German plans a suite or symphony. But the Englishman regards the oratorio as the final word in music. And so he reads diligently the Bible, and the scores of Handel and Mendelssohn, and then he writes the dedication to his Queen. Oratorios have been made by learned doctors and professors upon nearly all the available subjects found in Holy Writ, from Genesis to the vision of John. The field is now limited. It is true that Dr. Bridge might still have taken Noah or even the man who threw stones at David; but he preferred Jonah. In his work he was assisted by Mr. Joseph Bennett, who is to English professors what Scribe was to the writers for the operatic stage. Now the true hero of the story of Jonah is the whale, and one would naturally expect the part to be sung by a deep bass with ingenious accompaniments of bassoons, bass-clarinet, trombones and tuba. There would also in this case be a grand opportunity for realistic music of the modern school, with the whale motif, the storm at sea, the joy and the subsequent agony of "the great fish," and the glee of Jonah at his escape. But in place of this we are introduced to the family of the King of Nineveh, which consisted, according to Mr. Bennett, of a wife and daughter. There is not the slightest allusion to the whale, but much is made of the mysterious gourd under which Jonah sat until it was withered. The plot is then simply this: The people of Nineveh and their King exult over the defeat of the Egyptians. Jonah announces the fall of the town; the Queen advises his death, but the daughter—a French composer would have written a love duet for her and the prophet—sides with Jonah. A period of thirty-eight days separates Part I. and Part II. The "Gourd motif" is heard, and Jonah, when the strange plant is withered, wishes to die, for which he is rebuked by the Lord. Part III. is devoted to the agony and repentance of the King and his family and his people. There is a furious storm, followed by sunshine and Jonah, and the work closes with a triumphal hymn. Mr. Bennett's book is a collection of bead-texts gathered from all quarters and strung upon the slender thread of Jonah's adventures in Nineveh. It is without interest, for no one of the characters is sympathetic or strongly drawn. Despairing Jonah beneath the gourd is merely a diluted Elijah seeking death.

[illegible] The music of Dr. Bridge [illegible] at least, a contrast to the ordinary modern oratorio, in that it is not merely a weak solution of Mendelssohn. There are a few echoes of "Elijah" but there are more evidences of the study of the school of today. There are traces of Meyerbeer, Goldmark and even Wagner. The great trouble with Dr. Bridge is that while he is often scholarly, and at times ingenious, he is deficient in genuine melody. The only striking tune in the oratorio is the announcement of the fall of Nineveh, and the notes of it form a Paris street cry. They have been used by Meyerbeer in the opera, and they without doubt come from the plain song of the church. The air of Prophet in the third part is graceful and flowing but it does not haunt. The other airs are manufactured, as are too many of the choruses. The composer uses freely the system of typical phrases and occasionally with good effect, the march motif, the warning motif, and the gourd. These are constantly recurring and too often they take the place of spontanicity. Nor is the accentuation of words free from reproach. In one or two instances it is absolutely and unnecessarily false.

The most original and effective numbers of the oratorio are the march, the chorus "It is the Voice of a God," and the sixteenth number, a recitative for the baritone.

This work was made to order for the Worcester Musical Festival in England, 1890. It was sung this evening. These have been the only performances, and it is doubtful whether it will be heard elsewhere, for as a whole the oratorio must be regarded a a failure. Neither the earnestness of the chorus nor the painstaking efforts of the soloists, Mrs. Nordica and Messrs. Johnson and Dufft, could change its character. The solos, with the few exceptions named, are dreary platitudes and the choruses are mere exercises of the school.

The performance of the oratorio was preceded by a short and miscellaneous concert in which Mrs. Nordica was enthusiastically applauded for her singing of the waltz from "Romeo and Juliet." This applause was excessive, for her bravura was by no means faultless. In the waltz, as in the brilliant air from "Mignon," her phrasing was careless, and some of her runs were smeared. Mrs. Alves sang an extraordinary thing by Rubinstein called "Hagar." It is rambling and tiresome, and the instrumentation of the accompaniment is alternately dry and boisterous. The "Intermezzo" from Mascagni's famous opera was given for the first time in America, it is claimed, with the original instrumentation. It is a warm and charming melody, played by the violins, with harp and organ accompaniment, with here and there an instrument of the wood. Wind is discreetly used. It was repeated.

On Thursday afternoon McDowell's suite in A minor, Herbert's dramatic cantata and Adam's mass will be performed for the first time. The evening concert will be of a miscellaneous nature, with many selections from the works of Wagner.

PHILIP HALE.

Paderewski on Nikisch and his Orchestra.

At the last concert of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, Paderewski, who was the soloist, gave these words of praise:

> "I consider the Boston Symphony Orchestra the best in the world, not excepting the orchestra of the Conservatoire in Paris. There are a few better instruments in the Conservatoire, but, as a whole, the Boston Symphony Orchestra stands above it. It is fortunate in its director, for Mr. Nikisch is much superior to the conductor of the Conservatoire. After the performance of my concerto in Brooklyn, in which Mr. Nikisch directed the accompaniment, I declared I would never play the piece again; and I will not, as its perfection may not be reached again."

N.Y. MUSICAL COURIER.

[12]

COLORED PAPER

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON 1891-92.

CONCERTS. 362

No.

Premium.

Name.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON 1891-92.

CONCERTS. 525

No.

Premium.

Name.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON 1891-92.

REHEARSALS. 586

No.

Premium.

Name.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON 1891-92.

REHEARSALS. 474

No.

Premium.

Name.

Boston Music Hall, CC 311
Eleventh Season 1891-92

1

THE BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Public ✳ Rehearsal,

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 9, AT 2.30.

ADMIT ONE. - - C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

SEASON TICKET, 1891-92

Wednesday, Oct. 21	Wednesday, Jan. 27
Wednesday, Nov. 18	Monday, Feb. 29
Wednesday, Dec. 16	Wednesday, April 6

EVENINGS AT EIGHT O'CLOCK.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

FLOOR

1	2	3	4	5	6

Boston Post

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 24, 1891

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL

Bridge's Oratorio "The Repentance of Nineveh"

THE FIRST TIME IN AMERICA

Micellaneous Music at Afternoon and Evening Concerts

WORCESTER, Sept. 23.—[SPECIAL to the POST.]—The programme of the second concert of the Music Festival this afternoon was as follows:

Symphony, No. 4, in D minor............Schumann
Aria, "O Fatal Gift," from Don Carlos........Verdi
Mrs. Julie L. Wyman.
Two movements from Symphony No. 4, in F minor..........................Tschaikowsky
Concerto Violoncello, in A minor, Op. 33..Saint-Saëns
Mr. Herbert.
Scena and Aria, "Bella mia fiamma, addio,"...Mozart
Mrs. S. C. Ford.
Suite, per gynt, op. 46.........................Grieg

Five out of the six orchestral and vocal numbers were heard for the first time, so far as the concerts of the association are concerned, and whatever may be the merit of the individual selections, the programme as a whole was well chosen. The performance of the numbers delighted many people, for applause was frequent and hearty. But it is not possible to praise highly the work of the orchestra under Mr. Zerrahn's direction. Only a rough sketch of the Schumann symphony was presented, without color, and at times almost without form. The phrases of Schumann put on angularity. The song was hoarsely declaimed: it did not flow. The peculiar poetry of the composer was lost in the reading. And Tschaikowsky suffered in a like manner.

After all, it is no slight matter to educate a musical public to the enjoyment of the orchestral compositions of Schumann. There is but little to seize the popular attention; the colors are vague, often only suggested. The melancholy that drips from so many pages is distasteful to the sleek and contented, who go to concerts merely to aid digestion. The introduction of such symphonies at these concerts shows the real advance made during the past years of the association in the aims of the managers and the taste of the audience. And soon the audience will grow impatient and demand more finished and more musical performances.

The soloists were Mrs. Wyman, Mrs. Ford and Mr. Victor Herbert. Mrs. Wyman sang the well-known air from "Don Carlos," and although in portions it lies a little beyond the limit of her voice, the warmth and beauty of her tones, and the intelligence of her delivery atoned for a few trifling defects in her performance. Mrs. Ford sang the aria written by Mozart for Josephine Duschek. It demands a rich, full voice, and a free and expressive style rather than the agility called for by the conventional concert aria of the time, and Mrs. Ford sang it with understanding, particularly in the slow movement. The two singers were recalled, as was Mr. Herbert after his pleasing performance of Saint-Saëns's concerto for 'cello, which is not one of the composer's best works. With the exception of the delightful allegretto it is pale and entirely without the characteristic qualities of this man of great talent.

There are still traces of the "singing convention" even in the regular concerts of today. There was a long and dramatic pause after the first movement of the Schumann symphony, during which the orchestra was photographed by a man in the gallery amid considerable popular agitation. The cap was replaced, the orchestra breathed freely, and Schumann then had his turn. And perhaps it would be well in future to insist upon the rule that babies should be left in a cloak room and properly checked, for Mrs. Ford suffered severely from ill-timed and injudicious infantile imitations.

THIRD CONCERT.

Overture, "Iphigenia," Wagner's ending.......Gluck
Dramatic Scene, "Hagar in the Desert"....Rubinstein
Mrs. Carl Alves.
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana".......Mascagni
Waltz, "Romeo and Juliet"................Gounod
Mrs. Lillian Nordica.
The Repentance of Nineveh, a Dramatic Oratorio, J. F. Bridge

The event of the day was Dr. Bridge's "The Repentence of Nineveh," a dramatic oratorio, for it was performed for the first time in America. The ambitious French or Italian composer dreams of the stage. The serious German plans a suite or symphony. But the Englishman regards the oratorio as the final word in music. And so he reads diligently the Bible, and the scores of Handel and Mendelssohn, and then he writes the dedication to his Queen. Oratorios have been made by learned doctors and professors upon nearly all the available subjects found in Holy Writ, from Genesis to the vision of John. The field is now limited. It is true that Dr. Bridge might still have taken Noah or even the man who threw stones at David; but he preferred Jonah. In his work he was assisted by Mr. Joseph Bennett, who is to English professors what Scribe was to the writers for the operatic stage. Now the true hero of the story of Jonah is the whale, and one would naturally expect the part to be sung by a deep bass with ingenious accompaniments of bassoons, bass-clarinet, trombones and tuba. There would also in this case be a grand opportunity for realistic music of the modern school, with the whale motif, the storm at sea, the joy and the subsequent agony of "the great fish," and the glee of Jonah at his escape. But in place of this we are introduced to the family of the King of Nineveh, which consisted, according to Mr. Bennett, of a wife and daughter. There is not the slightest allusion to the whale, but much is made of the mysterious gourd under which Jonah sat until it was withered. The plot is then simply this: The people of Nineveh and their King exult over the defeat of the Egyptians. Jonah announces the fall of the town; the Queen advises his death, but the daughter—a French composer would have written a love duet for her and the prophet—sides with Jonah. A period of thirty-eight days separates Part I. and Part II. The "Gourd motif" is heard, and Jonah, when the strange plant is withered, wishes to die, for which he is rebuked by the Lord. Part III. is devoted to the agony and repentance of the King and his family and his people. There is a furious storm, followed by sunshine and Jonah, and the work closes with a triumphal hymn. Mr. Bennett's book is a collection of bead-texts gathered from all quarters and strung upon the slender thread of Jonah's adventures in Nineveh. It is without interest, for no one of the characters is sympathetic or strongly drawn. Desparing Jonah beneath the gourd is merely a diluted Elijah [illegible] to Nineveh. [illegible] watched the [illegible] the cowardly Jonah and has introduced cheap and theatrical effects for the benefit of the musician, such for instance as the storm scene. He has not improved upon the simplicity of the original, which unlike the cantata, is short and to the point. The music of Dr. Bridge is in one respect, at least, a contrast to the ordinary modern oratorio, in that it is not merely a weak solution of Mendelssohn. There are a few echoes of "Elijah" but there are more evidences of the study of the school of today. There are traces of Meyerbeer, Goldmark and even Wagner. The great trouble with Dr. Bridge is that while he is often scholarly, and at times ingenious, he is deficient in genuine melody. The only striking tune in the oratorio is the announcement of the fall of Nineveh, and the notes of it form a Paris street cry. They have been used by Meyerbeer in the opera, and they without doubt come from the plain song of the church. The air of Prophet in the third part is graceful and flowing but it does not haunt. The other airs are manufactured, as are too many of the choruses. The composer uses freely the system of typical phrases and occasionally with good effect, the march motif, the warning motif, and the gourd. These are contatantly recurring and too often they take the place of spontanicity. Nor is the accentuation of words free from reproach. In one or two instances it is absolutely and unnecessarily false.

The most original and effective numbers of the oratorio are the march, the chorus "It is the Voice of a God," and the sixteenth number, a recitative for the baritone.

This work was made to order for the Worcester Musical Festival in England, 1890. It was sung this evening. These have been the only performances, and it is doubtful whether it will be heard elsewhere, for as a whole the oratorio must be regarded a a failure. Neither the earnestness of the chorus nor the painstaking efforts of the soloists, Mrs. Nordica and Messrs. Johnson and Dufft, could change its character. The solos, with the few exceptions named, are dreary platitudes and the choruses are mere exercises of the school.

The performance of the oratorio was preceded by a short and miscellaneous concert in which Mrs. Nordica was enthusiastically applauded for her singing of the waltz from "Romeo and Juliet." This applause was excessive, for her bravura was by no means faultless. In the waltz, as in the brilliant air from "Mignon," her phrasing was careless, and some of her runs were smeared. Mrs. Alves sang an extraordinary thing by Rubinstein called "Hagar." It is rambling and tiresome, and the instrumentation of the accompaniment is alternately dry and boisterous. The "Intermezzo" from Mascagni's famous opera was given for the first time in America, it is claimed, with the original instrumentation. It is a warm and charming melody, played by the violins, with harp and organ accompaniment, with here and there an instrument of the wood. Wind is discreetly used. It was repeated.

On Thursday afternoon McDowell's suite in A minor, Herbert's dramatic cantata and Adam's mass will be performed for the first time. The evening concert will be of a miscellaneous nature, with many selections from the works of Wagner.

PHILIP HALE.

Paderewski on Nikisch and his Orchestra.

At the last concert of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, Paderewski, who was the soloist, gave these words of praise:

"I consider the Boston Symphony Orchestra the best in the world, not excepting the orchestra of the Conservatoire in Paris. There are a few better instruments in the Conservatoire, but, as a whole, the Boston Symphony Orchestra stands above it. It is fortunate in its director, for Mr. Nikisch is much superior to the conductor of the Conservatoire. After the performance of my concerto in Brooklyn, in which Mr. Nikisch directed the accompaniment, I declared I would never play the piece again: and I will not, as its perfection may not be reached again."

N.Y. MUSICAL COURIER

COLORED PAPER

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON 1891-92.

CONCERTS.

No.

Premium.

Name.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON 1891-92.

CONCERTS.

No.

Premium.

Name.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON 1891-92.

REHEARSALS.

No.

Premium.

Name.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SEASON 1891-92. 474

REHEARSALS.

No.

Premium.

Name.

Boston Music Hall,
Eleventh Season 1891-92

1

THE BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Public ✳ Rehearsal,

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 9, AT 2.30.

ADMIT ONE, - - C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

:o:

SEASON TICKET, 1891-92

Wednesday, Oct. 21	Wednesday, Jan. 27
Wednesday, Nov. 18.	Monday, Feb. 29
Wednesday, Dec. 16	Wednesday, April 6.

EVENINGS AT EIGHT O'CLOCK.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6

FLOOR

Boston Post

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 24, 1891

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL

Bridge's Oratorio "The Repentance of Nineveh"

THE FIRST TIME IN AMERICA

Micellaneous Music at Afternoon and Evening Concerts

WORCESTER, Sept. 23.—[SPECIAL to the POST.]—The programme of the second concert of the Music Festival this afternoon was as follows:

Symphony, No. 4, in D minor............Schumann
Aria, "O Fatal Gift," from Don Carlos........Verdi
Mrs. Jude L. Wyman.
Two movements from Symphony No. 4, in F minor..........Tschaikowsky
Concerto Violoncello in A minor, Op. 33..Saint-Saëns
Mr. Herbert.
Scena and Aria, "[illegible] mamma, addio."...Mozart
Mrs. S. C. Ford.
Suite, Peer Gynt, Op. 46..........Grieg

Five out of the six orchestral and vocal numbers were heard for the first time, so far as the concerts of the association are concerned, and whatever may be the merit of the individual selections, the programme as a whole was well chosen. The performance of the numbers delighted many people, for applause was frequent and hearty. But it is not possible to praise highly the work of the orchestra under Mr. Zerrahn's direction. Only a rough sketch of the Schumann symphony was presented, without color, and at times almost without form. The phrases of Schumann put on angularity. The song was hoarsely declaimed; it did not flow. The peculiar poetry of the composer was lost in the reading. And Tschaikowsky suffered in a like manner.

After all, it is no slight matter to educate a musical public to the enjoyment of the orchestral compositions of Schumann. There is but little to seize the popular attention; the colors are vague, often only suggested. The melancholy that drips from so many a page is distasteful to the sleek and contented, who go to concerts merely to aid digestion. The introduction of such symphonies at these concerts shows the real advance made during the last years of the association in the aims of the managers and the taste of the audience. And soon the audience will grow impatient and demand more finished and more musical performances.

The soloists were Mrs. Wyman, Mrs. Ford and Mr. Victor Herbert. Mrs. Wyman sang the well-known air from "Don Carlos," and although in portions it lies a little beyond the limit of her voice, the warmth and beauty of her tones, and the intelligence of her delivery atoned for a few trifling defects in her performance. Mrs. Ford sang the aria written by Mozart for Josephine Duschek. [illegible] a rich, full voice, and a free and [illegible] style rather than the agility called for [illegible] the conventional [illegible] and Mrs. Ford sang it with understanding, particularly in the slow movement. [illegible] singers were recalled, as was Mr. Herbert after his pleasing performance of Saint-Saëns's concerto for 'cello, which is not one of the composer's best works. With the exception of the delightful allegretto it is [illegible] without the characteristic qualities of this man of great talent.

There are still traces of the "singing convention" even in the regular concerts of today. There was a long and dramatic pause after the first movement of the Schumann symphony, during which the orchestra was photographed by a man in the gallery. [illegible] considerable popular agitation. The camera was replaced, the orchestra breathed freely, and Schumann then had his turn. And perhaps it would be well in future to insist upon the rule that babies should be left in a cloak room and properly checked, for Mrs. Ford suffered severely from [illegible] and injudicious infantile imitations.

THIRD CONCERT.

Overture, "Iphigenia," Wagner's ending..........Gluck
Dramatic Scene, "Hagar in the Desert"....Rubinstein
Mrs. Carl Alves.
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana"......Mascagni
Waltz, "Romeo and Juliet"...............Gounod
Mrs. Lillian Nordica.
The Repentance of Nineveh, a Dramatic Oratorio.
J. F. Bridge

The event of the day was Dr. Bridge's "The Repentence of Nineveh," a dramatic oratorio, for it was performed for the first time in America. The ambitious French or Italian composer dreams of the stage. The serious German plans a suite or symphony. But the Englishman regards the oratorio as the final word in music. And so he reads diligently the Bible, and the scores of Handel and Mendelssohn, and then he writes the dedication to his Queen. Oratorios have been made by learned doctors and professors upon nearly all the available subjects found in Holy Writ from Genesis to the vision of John. The field is now limited. It is true that Dr. Bridge might still have taken Noah or even the man who threw stones at David; but he preferred Jonah. In his work he was assisted by Mr. Joseph Bennett, who is to English professors what Scribe was to the writers for the operatic stage. Now the true hero of the story of Jonah is the whale, and one would naturally expect the part to be sung by a deep bass with ingenious accompaniments of bassoons, bass-clarinet, trombones and tuba. There would also in this case be a grand opportunity for realistic music of the modern school, with the whale motif, the storm at sea, the joy and the subsequent agony of "the great fish," and the glee of Jonah at his escape. But in place of this we are introduced to the family of the King of Nineveh, which consisted, according to Mr. Bennett, of a wife and daughter. There is not the slightest allusion to the whale, but much is made of the mysterious gourd under which Jonah sat until it was withered. The plot is then simply this: The people of Nineveh and their King exult over the defeat of the Egyptians. Jonah announces the fall of the town; the Queen advises his death, but the daughter—a French composer would have written a love duet for her and the prophet—sides with Jonah. A period of thirty-eight days separates Part I. and Part II. The "Gourd motif" is heard, and Jonah, when the strange plant is withered, wishes to die, for which he is rebuked by the Lord. Part III. is devoted to the agony and repentance of the King and his family and his people. There is a furious storm, followed by sunshine and Jonah, and the work closes with a triumphal hymn. Mr. Bennett's book is a collection of bead-texts gathered from all quarters and strung upon the slender thread of Jonah's adventures in Nineveh. It is without interest, for no one of the characters is sympathetic or strongly drawn. Desparing Jonah beneath the gourd is merely a diluted Elijah desiring death.

[illegible] story Mr. Bennett has wrenched the simple narrative of the cowardly Jonah and has introduced cheap and theatrical effects for the benefit of the musician, such for instance as the storm scene. He has not improved upon the simplicity of the original, which unlike the cantata, is short and to the point. The music of Dr. Bridge is in one respect, at least, a contrast to the ordinary modern oratorio, in that it is not merely a weak solution of Mendelssohn. There are a few echoes of "Elijah" but there are more evidences of the study of the school of today. There are traces of Meyerbeer, Goldmark and even Wagner. The great trouble with Dr. Bridge is that while he is often scholarly, and at times ingenious, he is deficient in genuine melody. The only striking tune in the oratorio is the announcement of the fall of Nineveh, and the notes of it form a Paris street cry. They have been used by Meyerbeer in the opera, and they without doubt come from the plain song of the church. The air of Prophet in the third part is graceful and flowing but it does not haunt. The other airs are manufactured, as are too many of the choruses. The composer uses freely the system of typical phrases and occasionally with good effect, the march motif, the warning motif, and the gourd. These are contatantly recurring and too often they take the place of spontanicity. Nor is the accentuation of words free from reproach. In one or two instances it is absolutely and unnecessarily false.

The most original and effective numbers of the oratorio are the march, the chorus "It is the Voice of a God," and the sixteenth number, a recitative for the baritone.

This work was made to order for the Worcester Musical Festival in England, 1890. It was sung this evening. These have been the only performances, and it is doubtful whether it will be heard elsewhere, for as a whole the oratorio must be regarded a a failure. Neither the earnestness of the chorus nor the painstaking efforts of the soloists, Mrs. Nordica and Messrs. Johnson and Dufft, could change its character. The solos, with the few exceptions named, are dreary platitudes and the choruses are mere exercises of the school.

The performance of the oratorio was preceded by a short and miscellaneous concert in which Mrs. Nordica was enthusiastically applauded for her singing of the waltz from "Romeo and Juliet." This applause was excessive, for her bravura was by no means faultless. In the waltz, as in the brilliant air from "Mignon," her phrasing was careless, and some of her runs were smeared. Mrs. Alves sang an extraordinary thing by Rubinstein called "Hagar." It is rambling and tiresome, and the instrumentation of the accompaniment is alternately dry and boisterous. The "Intermezzo" from Mascagni's famous opera was given for the first time in America, it is claimed, with the original instrumentation. It is a warm and charming melody, played by the violins, with harp and organ accompaniment, with here and there an instrument of the wood. Wind is discreetly used. It was repeated.

On Thursday afternoon McDowell's suite in A minor, Herbert's dramatic cantata and Adam's mass will be performed for the first time. The evening concert will be of a miscellaneous nature, with many selections from the works of Wagner.

PHILIP HALE.

---

work to-night. The performance disclosed the

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 86.
THURSDAY, SEPT. 24, 1891.

WORCESTER MUSIC FESTIVAL.

Programmes of the Second Day Greatly Enjoyed.

[Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald.]

WORCESTER, Sept. 23, 1891. The bright sun of today put a new aspect upon the festival scenes in this city, and the streets have been filled with gay crowds of music lovers during the intervals between the sessions at Mechanics Hall. The programmes of the day have delighted the big audiences in attendance, and have afforded a constant variety of instrumental and vocal successes. This afternoon's programme was begun with an admirable reading of Schumann's symphony No. 4, in D minor, under the baton of Mr. Carl Zerrahn, in which the many beauties of the several movements were given with excellent effect.

The singers of the afternoon were Mrs. J. L. Wyman, who sung the aria "O Fatal Gift," from Verdi's "Don Carlos," and Mrs. S. C. Ford, who contributed Mozart's "Bella Mia Fiamma Addio." The Verdi aria served to display the vocal skill and musical taste of Mrs. Wyman to excellent advantage, and her delivery of the number was listened to with rapt attention, the value of the singer's gifts being recognized by a pronounced recall at its conclusion.

Mrs. Ford had an equally gratifying success in her contribution to the day's selections, her artistic merits gaining a quick recognition from her audience, and her sterling worth as a vocalist won her a great ovation and a recall as she concluded the aria.

Mr. Victor Herbert was the instrumental soloist of the afternoon, his selection being the concerto for 'cello, in A minor, op. 33, by Saint-Saens. Mr. Herbert fills many responsible positions nowadays in these festival schemes, and his many duties are attended to with so much skill and tact that he has become a general favorite with both chorus and singers. He is first a musician, and then a 'cello player, and his masterly performance in the concerto today served to show his great ability as a 'cellist to the best possible advantage, his absolute command of the technique of the 'cello, his skill in making the instrument sing the tuneful leading themes of the work with fine effect.

The remaining numbers of the afternoon programme consisted of the "Peer Gynt" suite by Grieg, and the andante and scherzo from Tschaikowsky's symphony No. 4, in F minor, these selections calling out the best work of the splendid body of musicians making the festival orchestra.

The extreme heat made the hall almost a place of torture, and the singers and players had to endure physical discomforts that have seldom been equalled in earlier years.

The concert this evening gave evidence of the enterprise of the association in making this season's scheme, for it had as its leading work the dramatic oratorio by Dr. J. F. Bridge of London, Eng., "The Repentance of Nineveh," its first American production, and also included in its numbers the now famous intermezzo from Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" and the "Hagar in the Desert" scene by Rubinstein, which has had but a single previous hearing in this country.

The overture "Iphigenia," by Gluck, and Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" waltz, filled out the evening's selections, Mrs. Carl Alves being the singer in the Rubinstein number and Mme. Lillian Nordica in the Gounod waltz.

In the oratorio the solo parts were assigned as follows:

King's Daughter.......................Mme. Nordica
Queen....................................Mrs. Alves
King.................................Mr. Carl Dufft
Jonah...........................Mr. Herbert Johnson

After a hearing of Dr. Bridge's work it is difficult to decide whether to commend the enterprise shown in producing this example of the English school of composers of today or to condemn the poor judgment shown in such a waste of time and money.

Had the work been announced as a cantata, many false impressions would have been avoided. Every concert patron knows what to expect in English cantatas, and enters upon a hearing of such works without the faintest anticipation of finding a single musical idea completed in the composition.

"The Repentance" proved to be a cantata in form, and its repetition will hardly be requested by last evening's audience. The best part of the work is in the orchestral score, but this is by no means far above the conventional in its forms or combinations.

The soloists were badly handicapped by the style of the work, but each one of the quartet did what could be done with the music assigned them. The tenor role of Jonah takes leading prominence in the several scenes arranged for musical illustration by the veteran Joseph Bennett, and in singing the wearying, trying numbers of his role Mr. Johnson gave new evidence of the rapid strides he is making toward the leading roles of the standard oratorios.

Mme. Nordica's splendid abilities were poorly utilized in giving her such music to sing, and her gracious acquiescence in assuming such a duty was fully recognized by her audience, as well as by the association.

Mme. Alves and Mr. Dufft labored faithfully and intelligently to give some interest to their numbers, and the chorus and orchestra are to be similarly commended.

It is very pleasant to turn to the opening numbers of the programme after such a disappointment in the leading feature of the evening's programme.

First mention is fairly due to Mme. Nordica, who entered the scene of her conquest with queenly grace, and found herself surrounded by willing subjects when she concluded the brilliant waltz song. Such singing by such an artist will never fail to find an instant response from an American audience, and the triumph which resulted from her interpretation of this selection is but the beginning of the honors that await her through her tour.

The song was admirably chosen to display all the beauties of her vocal gifts, and the result was an ovation such as few artists have gained in Worcester. She responded by singing the "Mignon" polonaise, which called out anew the applause of her hearers.

Rubinstein's dramatic scene appeals more successfully to the musician than to the music lover, and, although Mme. Alves did thoroughly artistic work throughout the trying numbers, it was not until the beautiful finale was reached that she succeeded in holding the interest of her audience. Her voice is one to take great satisfaction in, and she sings with a degree of skill and taste that disarms adverse criticism.

The intricate and elaborate orchestral scene was admirably played, and greatly enjoyed as a study.

The Mascagni intermezzo was awaited with great interest, and quickly gained the same approval as the idea and its treatment have always received since Gounod first gave it form. It is an exquisite and dainty bit of orchestral writing, and shows that its composer exhibited excellent taste in choosing the form for this portion of his opera. It was applauded, and its capital interpretation was repeated to satisfy the audience.

Boston Journal.
THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 24, 1891.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

A Symphony Concert—Mme. Nordica's First Appearance.

Special Dispatch to The Boston Journal.

WORCESTER, Sept. 23. The concert this afternoon at the Worcester Festival was essentially a symphony concert. The chorus had no part in the programme, and, with the exception of two lady soloists, the work was done entirely by the orchestra and an instrumental soloist. The programme was of just the right length for a matinee performance. White dresses largely predominated among the ladies, for it was excessively warm. Not for many years has the weather been at such a high temperature during festival week.

The opportunities for hearing the symphonic works of the great masters are limited among the large class of patrons of the festival, so that it is wisdom on the part of the management to devote one or two concerts to their performance. Particularly so when the association has the services of such an orchestra. There was given for the opening number Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D minor, followed by two movements from Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor, and the Peer Gynt Suite of Grieg. All these numbers were marked "First Worcester Festival Performance" on the programme, and if this be true, it is certainly time they were given, for it is here that the educational scheme of the association finds ample opportunity. Those who have attended the concerts of the Symphony Orchestra in Boston have heard them all—the latter many times; at no time, probably, when it was played as poorly as this afternoon. This is unfortunate, for the standard for educational purposes should be put on a high plane. The other numbers received a better interpretation, and it is possible, after all, that the extreme heat may have been responsible for the ending of the Peer Gynt suite. Victor Hubert played a concerto on the violoncello by St. Saens—a difficult thing, calling for admirable technique and great agility on the strings. Mr. Hubert played it excellently—he always plays well—and was rewarded with hearty applause. He has given much more interesting things before Worcester audiences, but this was new.

The local soloists were Mrs. Julie L. Wyman and Mrs. Lenbury C. Ford. Both ladies are artistes. Mrs. Wyman sang that ancient and well worn aria, "O don Fatale," by Verdi, and it was especially commendable because it is a pleasure, once in a while, to hear such a number given as it should be. It was a practical lesson to the young singers, of whom there were many in the hall, which should not be forgotten. Mrs. Wyman's manner and taste are so refined, her every tone is so artistic that she easily takes rank among the first singers in this country. In response to a persistent encore she gave a little song in the same delightfully artistic way and charmed the Worcester audience completely. Mrs. Ford was also a stranger to the festival audience, and chose the scena and aria, "Bella mia fiamma, addio," by Mozart, and for an encore sang a bolero by Delibes. Mrs. Ford has a rich and sympathetic organ, especially in the medium register, and both her numbers were given to the great pleasure of the audience. The concert was surely an artistic success, both from an educational and musical point of view.

The evening concert was devoted to the performance of "The Repentance of Nineveh," by Dr. Bridge, preceded by solos from Mrs. Alves and Mme. Nordica, and a couple of orchestral selections, one of which was the intermezzo from that much talked of "Cavelleria Rusticana" of Mascagni. Rumor has it that the work will be given at Worcester, early in October, in its entirety by the Emma Juch Opera Company. Be that as it may, the intermezzo, as given under Mr. Zerrahn, was interesting and delightfully rendered, and was a novelty which was fully appreciated. It had to be repeated. The "Repentance of Nineveh," in which the chorus participated, was composed by Dr. J. F. Bridge for the Worcester (England) Festival of 1890, and this was its first performance in America. The text was written by Joseph Bennett from the book of Jonah, and treats entirely of the repentance of the King of Assyria and the people of Nineveh, after the destruction of the city by the Lord, in accordance with the predictions of the prophet Jonah. The work is highly descriptive, and the orchestra plays a very important part in this. The expression in the solo and choral numbers is also a part of the oratorio, and the varying moods of the royal family, as they turn, one after another, in submission to the Lord, are very aptly expressed and make the entire work of much interest. The choruses were not given entirely, there being one or two omissions, which ought not to have happened in the presentation of a new work. There were present musical people from all parts of the country, and the general expression was that of commendation of the composer. For the rendition of the work this evening, there were assigned as soloists, Mme. Lillian Nordica as daughter of the King, Mrs. Carl Alves of New York as the Queen, Mr. Carl Dufft as the King and Herbert O. Johnson as Jonah. None of the artists were strangers to Worcester, excepting Mrs. Alves, and her work here, as in the early part of the evening, was worthy of the reputation which has placed her in one of the most prominent and lucrative contralto choir positions in New York city. The chorus, which is in excellent form this year, had prepared itself well for an interpretation of this new work, and sang grandly in all parts. The shading was even better than in the Arminius, and it is fortunate that so good a choir could be selected for the second performance of the "Repentance of Nineveh."

Preliminary to this, the orchestra played Gluck's overture to Iphigenia, with Wagner's ending, and Mrs. Carl Alves gave a dramatic scene "Hagar in the Desert" by Rubinstein. This is a long and descriptive scene for contralto, one of the author's recent compositions, with orchestral accompaniment, and has had but one previous performance in this country at the German Sangerfest at Detroit in 1889, when Mrs. Alves herself sang it. It calls for tenderness, descriptive and dramatic power, and was particularly fitted to the singer, who has a sympathetic, even and powerful voice, under good control and trained in a good school.

The event of the evening was the appearance of Mme. Nordica, who sang, just before the usual intermission, the well-worn waltz song, "Romeo and Juliet," by Gounod. Mme. Nordica was dressed in an elegant Parisian gown, sparkling with jewels, and she received an ovation from the moment she came in sight. Victor Hubert led the orchestra, and the difficult technique of the piece was easily overcome and made the most of by the singer. Mme. Nordica was in good voice—the change from the other country having no perceptible effect upon it. Her high notes were clear, true and powerful, and she was compelled to give as an encore another number of the same class of pyrotechnical composition, the polonaise from "Mignon." Later in the evening she gave a finished rendition of what little the soprano has to do in the "Repentance," and to-morrow she will be heard in a different style of music. That she has lost nothing, but gained much during her recent sojourn in Europe, is very evident, and her friends were delighted with her reception. To-morrow is the great day of the festival, and in the evening Wagner will hold nearly undisputed sway.

Boston Daily Globe.
THURSDAY, SEPT. 24.

MUSIC AT WORCESTER.

Standing Room Only at Each Performance.

Enthusiastic Reception Extended Mme. Lillian Nordica in the Evening.

With Entrancing Voice She Sung the Waltz Song from "Romeo and Juliet."

WORCESTER, Sept. 23.—Large audiences greeted both the afternoon and evening performances of the music festival, and the management was certainly flattered, as but standing room could be obtained.

The orchestra had the afternoon almost wholly to itself, and gave Schumann's D minor symphony and F minor symphony from Tschaikowsky, a violoncello concerto with Victor Herbert as soloist.

The vocalists were Mrs. Julia L. Wyman and Mrs. Seabury C. Ford.

The evening concert was a grand success, and brought Miss Lillian Nordica, whose appearance was the feature of the entertainment.

Her reception was the most enthusiastic ever given to an artist at a Wednesday evening performance and the applause was fervent and long.

Her presence on the stage was most captivating. Her personal charms alone gave her a hold on the audience, which was intensified by her entrancing voice.

She was in excellent voice, and her first selection, a waltz song from "Romeo and Juliet," was so wildly applauded that she reappeared and sang the "Mignon Polonaise."

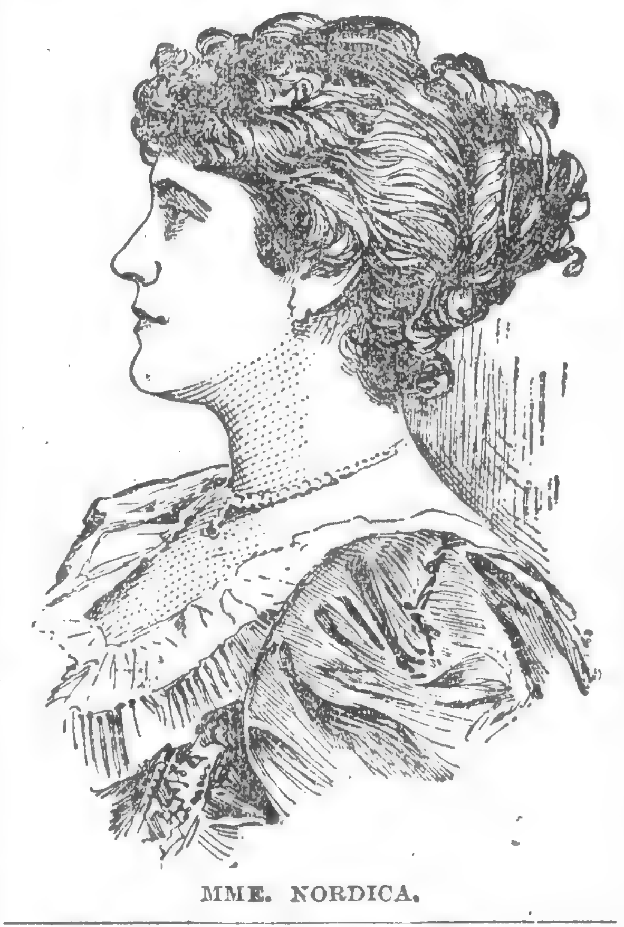
In "The Repentance of Nineveh" she sang the part of the daughter of the king. This piece was sung fer the first time in America, and was written expressly for the festival in Worcester, Eng., years ago.

The oratorio was not considered a great success in the chorus, but was relieved of its dulness by the solo parts.

ONE LOVELY CANTATRICE.

Slight Sketch of America's Queen of Song.

WORCESTER, Sept. 23.—Mme. Lillian Nordica, whose reappearance in America at the music festival here this evening occasioned such enthusiasm, is a singer in whose success Bostonians take especial pride.



MME. NORDICA.

It was in Boston that her unmistakable musical genius first manifested itself, and there the future prima donna received her first instruction in the art of which she is now so brilliant an exponent.

Boston remained her home until the greater inducements which London offers to a great artist decided her to take up her residence in that metropolis.

An American girl, gifted with a beautiful voice, by virtue of her high ambition and indomitable industry and perseverance she has reached the front rank in the musical profession, and has become one of the very few really great singers of the world.

The first engagement to bring Mme. Nordica prominently before the public was in 1878, when Mr. P. S. Gilmore selected her as soloist to accompany his famous band on its tour through Europe.

Opening in London, her singing immediately attracted attention and became a feature of the series of concerts given in the Crystal Palace.

The success she won here would have satisfied most young artists, but her ambition was opera.

Acting upon the advice of a distinguished critic, as soon as possible she entered upon a course of study with the famous Italian vocal trainer San Giovanni.

Under his guidance she was soon enabled to make her successful debut upon the operatic stage, an event which occurred at Brescia, the opera being Verdi's "La Traviata."

Continuing her studies and closely applying herself to the exacting demands of her profession she made rapid progress.

In 1886 she visited Boston as a member of Her Majesty's Italian opera company, under the management of Col. Mapleson, appearing as Gilda in "Rigoletto" and Violetta in "Traviata."

During this year the death of her husband, Mr. F. A. Gower, caused her retirement from the stage.

It will be remembered that Mr. Gower, who was said to have become a millionaire through his inventions in conection with the telephone, made a balloon ascension for the purpose of making scientific observations and was carried out to sea and lost.

In 1887 Mme. Nordica resumed her public career, becoming a member of Mr. Augustus Harris' company at Covent Garden and singing in "Faust" and "Les Huguenots" and "Don Giovanni" with the De Reszke brothers and Maurel.

Since that time she has added Elsa and Aida to her repertoire and her operatic career has been a succession of triumphs.

Like success has attended her appearances in concerts and oratorios.

Mme. Nordica remains in America until February for concerts under the management of C. A. Ellis.

Some of her principal engagements are with the Boston Symphony orchestra, the New York Philharmonic Society, the Handel and Haydn Society and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society.

She will also give operatic concerts in the principal cities, supported by her own company.

On Feb. 1 she returns to London, under engagement to Mr. Augustus Harris for opera at Covent Garden.

Boston Transcript
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1891.

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL.

Second Day—Two Miscellaneous Concerts of Interesting Character—A New English Oratorio.

[Special Correspondence of the Transcript.]

WORCESTER, Sept. 23.

Today Worcester has worn festival attire. The sun has shone brightly, and maids and matrons have alike rejoiced that liberty to wear summer gowns was not denied them. Every advantage was taken of the genial weather for never has there been seen a more charming audience in Mechanics' Hall than that gathered this afternoon. This excellent miscellaneous programme was performed:

Symphony, No. 4, in D minor..................Schumann
Aria, "O Fatal Gift," from "Don Carlos"..........Verdi
Mrs. Julie L. Wyman.
Andante and scherzo, Symphony No. 4..Tschaikowsky
Concerto violoncello, in A minor, op. 33.......St. Saens
Mr. Victor Herbert.
Scene and aria, "Bella mia fiamma, addio.......Mozart
Mrs. S. C. Ford.
Suite, "Peer Gynt," op. 46.......................Grieg

There was nothing new for the Boston connoiseurs, but every selection, save the aire from "Don Carlos," was new to Worcester festival audiences. The orchestra achieved quite a delirium in the last moment of the "Peer Gynt" suit, Mr. Zerrahn included; and in the scherzo of the admirable Russian was there an excellent spirit manifest. The symphony was generally well played. There was some admirable singing, and it would be hard to say which of the two women is entitled to first place. Worcester is fortunate in placing her festival in September, at a time when singers are at their best after a summer's rest. Mrs. Ford sang her aria in a thoroughly aatistic fashion, the tone being free and vibrant. Responding to a recall, she sang Delibar "Cadiz Maids" with an archney that immediately won her hearers. Mrs. Wyman sang the air by Verdi opera, in French. It seemed just a little more interesting because of this, though many bemoaned the change, forgetting that Mrs. Wyman is one of the few French taught singers who vocalize well the Gallic sounds. Her voice is the same luscious organ as of yore, and she sang with all the abandon the theme would permit. Mr. Herbert played St. Saens's neat music with the suavity and clearness which the French composer asks and which are characteristic of Mr. Herbert's style. Mr. Herbert, by the way, conducted the orchestra in the accompaniments to the arias and played the piano accompaniments at the afternoon concert yesterday. Mr. Heabert is versatile; tomorrow he will appear as composer.

The programme is tonight's concert was:

Overture from "Iphigenia," Wagner's ending....Gluck
Dramatic scene, "Hagar in the Desert,".....Rubinstein
Mrs. Carl Alves.
Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana"......Mascagni
Waltz from "Romeo and Juliet"..............Gounod
Mme. Lillian Nordica.
"The Repentance of Nineveh," dramatic oratorio,
Dr. J. F. Bridge
Daughter of the King, Mme. Nordica; Queen, Mrs. Alves; King, Carl Dufft; Jonah, Herbert Johnson.

We will look at the familiar faces first. Gluck's noble overture with Wagner's reverent close inspired the thought that daily study of Gluck might reveal the secret of dramatic strength with only simple means. Mme. Nordica was simply regal in a costume of indescribable gorgeousness. She sang the selection well enough, but it is not easy to enjoy a singer of Nordica's strength in a waltze. The polacca from "Mignon," sung in response to demands for more, was much better fitted to the singer. Nordica's voice is certainly in as good condition as when she was last heard in Boston; its quality is lovely and the art is excellent. She sings with so much enthusiasm and is so animated that it is no wonder her pathway is strewn with roses. "Hagar in the Desert" is a long descriptive setting of the story of Hagar and the thrifty Ishmael, which Rubenstein wrote a few years ago. It is an uneven work, the passages of a melodic character excelling in interest and beauty the rest, though there are moments of declamation which are fine. It is heavily scored and the singer was covered by the orchestra in one or two places. Mrs. Alves achieved a triumph in it, however. Those who remember her admirable work at an afternoon concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Music Hall, two seasons ago, will readily believe this. Not only does Mrs. Alves sing well, but she has a fine voice and has acquired a warmth and force which she did not possess before. The short phrases assigned to tenor and soprano were sung by Mr. Alves and Mrs. F. W. Russell.

Mr. Zerrahn failed to produce the effect possible with the intermezzo by Mascagni, slight as it is omits for strings, harp and organ. The piece consitts of a single vital melody led up to by a score or so of introductory measures. The main part of the theme is thrice brought to a climax. Though inadequately expressed the intermezzo had to be repeated.

Joseph Bennett of London, after reading the Book of Jonah, called on the excellent organist of Westminster Abbey and asked permission to make a book out of these Bible incidents to serve as basis for a musical exercise by the learned musician, Dr. Bridge looked at Mr. Bennett's story, and while reconnizing the absence of the whale episode and voting the undue emphasis given to the gourd incident decided to plunge into musical mathematics. The result is "The Repentance of Nineveh," which was produced at the English Worcester, in 1890' and which tonight was heard in our own Worcester. Dr. Bridge calls his work a dramatic oratorio. It takes about one hour to perform and consists largely of declamation and counterpointed writing for voices, Whenever the learned man happens to begin a melody, and there are at least three of these instances, he becomes frightened, lest it should take form and become clear to the ordinary cemprehension, so he whips up a modulation or pulls the whistle for the entrance of a theme, which of course brings on a total change of mood. Dr. Budge is a scholar who seems unwilling to be lucid. With him dignity and abstruseness are synonymous; there is no inspiration, no spontaneity in his musical illustrations of the agrieved prophet and the quaking of a proud people. The music is restless; modulations throng; the orchestra speaks in trumpet tones as soldiers march in triumph, or a wet populace seeks shelter from a chromatic tempest. Why continue? Sometime Dr. Bridge will be saying he wrote the "Nineveh"! The performance was generally good. Large cuts were wisely made. Some of the chorus singing can be praised for its expressive character, and, considering the difficult rhythms in which the choruses are written, the summing up is altogether creditable to both chorus and orchestra. Mme. Mordica sang with sincerity. Mrs. Alver excelled in declaring certain of the music allotted to her. Mr. Duff's voice has taken on a deeper tone within a year, and whether he is a better singer today than twelve months ago or not, he is at all events as conscientious as ever. Mr. Johnson must be praised for his work in a trying part. He had studied it assiduously and while his manner was somewhat stilted, there were moments of real expressive power. Mr. Johnson uses his voice with absolute ease and is constantly making strides in his art. The audience gave to "Ninevah" only a polite hearing. With such a work as Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon" lying untouched, it is a pity that the younger English school should suffer through the pedantry of Bridge.

G. H. WILSON.

INCOMPLETE

THE WORCESTER TELEGRAM.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1891.

NORDICA WEARS THE PALM.

Her Little French Waltz Song Catches Everybody in the Hall.

Symphony Orchestra Provides the Afternoon Program.

Little Chance For Grumbling at the Work Done.

Great Festival weather, these days; but too warm for comfort, in a crowded hall. It is a long time since the old thermom has climbed for the top notch during Festival week, as it has this year. But it is better than rain.

There was a lively rehearsal of the "Nineveh" work yesterday morning, at which Mme. Nordica made her first appearance.

The two concerts of the day were well made up and marked by entirely satisfactory performances. Surely, the Festival is going well.

But the afternoon concert had a hitch and it looks as if The Telegram may have to get the editor of the Lulu to write a code of rules for the guidance of all mothers who take their offspring to the concerts. The danger of disturbance, in the presence of very young children, has been hinted at before, and that the warning was needed was shown yesterday. While Mrs. Ford was singing her aria, a child up the soprano seats of the chorus set up a wail which at first sounded as if the oboe had broken loose and gone off on a spree with one of the clarinets. The mother hustled the child down the slot where the singers drop themselves, but not until everybody had been disturbed. Then Mr. Herbert who was conducting made a bad break. Mrs. Ford had paid no attention to the wail, but when the commotion had subsided, Mr. Herbert seemed to think he must act, and he stopped Mrs. Ford, much to her surprise, just as she was sliding up on an Eiffel tower note. He waited a moment, and then went on. Mrs. Ford bore the trying interruption with great grace, and lost none of her success in her song thereby. Bad as the infant's yell was, Mr. Herbert seemed to make the matter worse. He is such a pleasant chap that it is unfortunate that it should be necessary to speak of the matter.

The mother of the child afterward made an apology to Mrs. Ford, and explained that the disturbance was wholly accidental, the child having got a pinch from a bracelet.

But this does not alter the fact that the concert hall is no place for children too young to sit still and keep their tongues quiet. Before this particular "enfant terrible" squealed, there were two other small children chasing each other about in the soprano seats, to the disgust of the musicians and spectators. The hall committee ought to see to it that there is no repetition of this sort of thing, by positively refusing admittance to any child who is likely to whoop it up in this style.

The concert had one other interruption, excusable, however, when the photographer in the rear gallery got a plate of Mr. Zerrahn and the orchestra.

The evening concert had its charms, but was in danger of being credited with tediousness. Yet Nordica was there, smiling and coquettish, and she is a whole concert in herself.

For to-day, two fine miscellaneous programs are arranged, with an evening of Wagner.

It is comforting to think that people will get their good clothes out of the camphor, even if for one night only.

This was the way yesterday's work went.

ORCHESTRAL WORK.

An Afternoon of Symphony With Only Two Vocal Numbers.

The orchestra had a chance to display its versatility and any other excellent characteristic it possesses yesterday afternoon, for the second concert program was made up chiefly of orchestral numbers, though two ladies sang pleasing airs and lent color to the program.

The Schumann symphony, No. 4, which was the first number played, is neither as interesting nor as typical of the composer's work as the "Rhenish" symphony, which was played last year, or the delightful "Spring" symphony, which figured in the program of 1889. Schumann seemed seeking for novelty, in his treatment of this work, and it is interesting to know that after he had written it, he was not wholly satisfied with it, and made some changes in it. As rendered, and to the uninitiated, it makes a long performance, for Schumann ran the parts together, instead of following the rule of distinct movements. The orchestra played it in a way to merit no special praise or condemnation. But the two movements of the Tschaikowsky symphony, an andantino and a scherzo, were interesting enough, and the orchestra did its somewhat difficult part with spirit. The oboe leads off with the violoncellos and then the wind instruments follow, first the wood and then the brass taking up the music until a thoroughly dramatic climax is reached, and then comes a modulation of the whole, with the prettiest kind of an ending.

The characteristic of the scherzo is the picking of the strings. The violins have to pretty nearly wear their finger-tips off, and a near-sighted man might think it was a banjo concert if he didn't notice the difference in tone. There is no "plink, plank, plunk," however, and the effect of the string-picking is good. The movement is bright throughout.

The Boston Symphony orchestra has played the "Peer Gynt" suite in Mechanics hall, but this was the first time it has ever been given at a Festival concert, and inasmuch as Worcester does not usually crowd the hall when the Symphony orchestra comes here, it is safe to say that to about 90 per cent of the Worcester people in the audience it was an entirely new thing. It has certainly become one of the most popular works that have been played in symphony programs in recent years. In the first place, it is distinctive, and cleverly original. Grieg wrote this music for an operatic setting of the dramatic poem by Ibsen, the late idol of the fad worshippers. It is truly Norwegian, and whispers of the fjords and the glaciers, the mountains and the sunny valleys. The four movements which the orchestra played yesterday afternoon are not all that Grieg wrote, by any means, for there are five others, not yet arranged for like presentation. Competent judges, who have heard the whole in Stockholm, have besought the composer to undertake the necessary arrangements of the five parts remaining, and the musical world will hail with delight their presentation.

The first movement, which has been entitled "Daybreak," is a piece of simple descriptive writing, in the performance of which the strings bear the burden and the heavy pieces of the orchestra are not heard.

The second is a dirge, played by the muted or muffled strings only, and it is such a funeral march as would befit the burial of some hero of conflict who had withal an innate tenderness of spirit. It would do for Wellington, but never for Napoleon. But no such use of it was in the composer's mind, of course. It is, in fact, for the death of poor old Aase, the mother of the lad "Peer Gynt." It is soft and sweet in every phrase. The splendid work of the strings here must be warmly commended and the fine feeling that Mr. Zerrahn brought out.

The third movement, in mazurka time, gives the strings full play again, and the final movement, a march of the most novel character, [illegible] the Mountain King" is the general title, and evidently the Titans are bowling in all the alleys, as Rip Van Winkle found them up among the Catskills. From the strong, vigorous work of the strings and horns, the ascendency goes to the latter, and then comes bang, crash, rattle and roar, in which the cymbals and the tympani get in a tremendous amount of work in a very short time. It is brusque, unconventional, almost startling. Grieg is no plagiarist. This is clever work, which it would be hard for most composers to steal successfully. The orchestra did play it well, and in the hullaballoo of the brassiest brass and the banging drums and cymbals, there was plenty of artistic method shown. The orchestra throughout had its triumph in this suite.

Victor Herbert played a violoncello concerto of Saint Saens, with a faithful backing of the orchestra. There are three short movements, bright and full of dash, but with nothing of the firework act about them. Mr. Herbert's performance was faithful and satisfactory, and he got a neat round of applause, spatted out from between kid-glove palms almost exclusively, for which reason he ought to appreciate it the more. Mr. Zerrahn showed his approval of his associate by giving him a handshake and a "Good!" but Mr. Herbert was not recalled.

Mrs. Seabury Ford had a trying scena and aria from Mozart, "Bella mia flammo, addio," to sing, and her strong full soprano made it a mighty taking thing. She phrased it beautifully, from first to last, and sang the air so sweetly and sympathetically, and so true to time and tune, that she must be accorded great praise. They called her back two or three times, and her somewhat unconventional idea of throwing kisses created a tremendous enthusiasm among what few men there were present. Mrs. Ford came back and sang a French song of Delibes, "The Maids of Cadiz," which was not really as pleasing as her first effort, and she did not reach for the high notes as if she were as sure of getting there as she seemed to in the Mozart number.

Mrs. Julie L. Wyman's contralto voice, which is to be heard in Arthur Adams's mass this afternoon, created a favorable impression in the Verdi air, "O Fatal Gift," from "Don Carlos." She sang for an encore "In the Twilight," by Nevin. Mrs. Wyman's voice is even and sweet in quality. She was not altogether artistic in her method.

NORDICA GOT THE ROSES.

A Long Evening Concert Brings Out Some Fine Work.

The evening concert was a long one, rather too long, considering the nature of the works performed. It lasted from 10 minutes before 8 until 20 minutes past 10, and though the audience did not become actually restive, there was scant courtesy shown the fine ending of the "Nineveh," and everybody seemed anxious to get out into the fresh air.

The program combined orchestral, vocal and oratorio work, the first number being a welcome overture, that from Gluck's opera, "Iphigenia in Aulis," with the ending which Wagner wrote.

The dramatic scene, "Hagar in the desert," which introduced Mrs. Carl Alves to the audience, is a strong piece of writing by Rubinstein. It seemed as if it might have been better placed in some other program, where the long oratorio was not to follow. Mrs. Alves, however, displayed her splendidly trained contralto voice to great advantage. There are some passages in the scene which are the reverse of interesting, though the biblical story itself is a moving one. Mrs. Alves sang with fine feeling the mother's pathetic, wailing appeal to the Lord, and in her closing note of praise rose grandly to the demands of the composer.

Mr. Alves, who had to remain unseen, sang the brief tenor part of the angel, and Mr. Frank W. Ruggles sang the soprano, supposably a boy's, for the part of Ishmael.

Probably the "youngest" work performed at the Festival is the intermezzo from Pietro Mascagni's prize opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana," which was just produced in Rome a little more than a year ago, and has not as yet reached America. This performance of the intermezzo was the first introduction of any part of the work to an American audience. It was delightful in every measure. Simple, and full of tender harmonies, it proved very fetching. The brass had no part in the soft strains, and to the violins' part the cellos lent warmth and color, while the harp was also utilized with good effect. This charming thing the orchestra seemed anxious to do just right. Even Mr. Zerrahn was melted by the appeal of the audience for more, and, though he had denied to Mrs. Alves an opportunity to gratify the audience with an encore, owing to the length of the program, he yielded in this instance, and repeated.

Madame Nordica took the greenhouse. Somebody who admired her very much, and knew she would bear off the honors, had arranged to present her a "slight floral tribute," which should be a stunner. It was. When she had done singing the Gounod waltz song, a young man was seen struggling upon the stage with something resembling a section of a greenhouse. Really, it was a tremendous basket of roses, tied with a pale green ribbon as large as a child's sash. The roses were beauties and put everything else in the line of floral tributes in the shade; but Mme Nordica was dismayed. She gave a little gasp and looked appealing at Victor Herbert, who gallantly sailed in and struggled away with the roses. It was a sincere tribute, of course, but it had a comical side.

How sweet she looked—Madame Nordica, when she came upon the stage. Her costume included some gauzy things which resembled rings, and she looked like old pictures of Good Queen Bess, only Elizabeth wasn't a beauty, and Nordica is fascinating. The trip and laugh of the Gounod waltz song from "Romeo and Juliet," "Ah, je veux vivre," she sang in the gayest manner of the French, and in tones clear, penetrating and sweet. There was no refusing the people this time, and her encore was the brilliant polonaise from Ambrose Thomas's "Mignon," a thing familiar to all concert goers.

This ended the miscellaneous half of the program, and the evening was wearing late already. The intermission was hardly more than long enough to say "How d'y do?" to one's neighbor, when the bugle call—heretofore not used, by the way—called time, and the people took their seats.

It is not necessary to analyze here the dramatic oratorio which Dr. Bridge has wrought out of the Bible story, and entitled "The Repentance of Nineveh." Briefly, the Prophet Jonah predicts to the king of Assyria the destruction of the city within 40 days; he despairs on the 39th day, is rebuked by the Lord; on the 40th day a great thunderstorm frightens court and people, and Jonah recites the goodness and forbearance of the Lord.

Until the third part was reached the chorus did not do its work as it did the "Arminius" on Tuesday night, but the soloists were wisely chosen and sang with great effect, Mme. Nordica as the King's Daughter, Mrs. Alves as the Queen, Herbert Johnson as Jonah, and Carl Dufft as the King.

Mr. Johnson's firm, even tenor was agreeable in every case, and suited well the part.

Mr. Dufft has a deep, rich voice, and threw great expression into his King's part. When he sang "Who shall come down against us," he was proud, haughty, peerless, and sang splendidly.

E. N. Anderson, who trained the "distant chorus" for a small but important part, deserves to have it said his singers could not have done better. The effect was excellent.

The chorus lacked fire in several places. When the male chorus was called for the "Voice of the Lord" part, several of the ladies wanted to be "in it." Perhaps they did not know whether they sang or not; perhaps they weren't paying attention. Bad enough, in either case.

The orchestration of the "Nineveh" is interesting in every way, full of strokes of originality, modern in spirit and fervid in thought.

This concert will go as a most successful feature of the week. It is to be hoped that none will be longer, however.

SCHERZOS ON THE HALF-SHELL.

Items of Festival Interest Gleaned Everywhere.

Last night's attendance was the most brilliant of the week, thus far. Few seats were left untaken, the ladies were more elaborately dressed and among the gentlemen evening dress was the rule. The request of the management that ladies appear without hats was generally complied with.

It was a long-suffering audience, for the hall was uncomfortable throughout the evening. Devices have failed thus far to ventilate Mechanics hall as it should be ventilated. It was unusually warm Festival weather, yet there can be no doubt that the ventilation facilities were deficient.

Madame Nordica received after her singing of the waltz from Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet," a rather too extensive floral basket, from friends. The basket was constructed of pinks and roses, the body being a mass of roses.

Victor Herbert thinks from the concerts thus far the Festival bids fair to be the most successful since his connection with it. Both he and Carl Zerrahn speak of the chorus as doing more excellent work than ever before.

Mrs. Annie Louise Kimball, nee Gage, of Concord, N. H., well known in Boston as a singer, is attending the Festival. She is a friend of Madame Nordica.

Mrs. Jennie Patrick-Walker arrived in the city yesterday, and will, during the week, be the guest of Mrs. C. Henry Hutchins.

Mrs. Wyman wore yesterday afternoon a dress of black figured silk, en truine, with a corsage bouquet of pink roses. Mrs. Ford wore a costume of black velvet, with black lace trimming.

Each of the evening concerts thus far has presented a delightful symphony of color in the multitude of fans awave. The field of fans is one of the pleasing Festival sights. The moving signs of femininity give an impression of a vast field of brilliant blossoms swayed by breezes.

Yesterday afternoon the chorus seats were more generally filled than on the day before. There, as in the audience on the floor, a great majority were ladies.

Herbert D. Foster, formerly of the Worcester Academy faculty, and now of Cambridge, has been attending the Festival. He returned, yesterday, to Cambridge.

Miss Everett, assistant instructor in elocution at Wellesley, is among the Festival goers.

Madame Nordica's costume of last evening was a work of art in its line. It was of cream brocade silk, with court train and high, spreading Queen Elizabeth collar. She wore a profusion of diamonds, fully a score all told. The cluster of diamonds in her hair was very costly.

The husband of Mrs. Kathinka Paulsen-White was formerly a student at Worcester Academy, and has a number of friends in this city.

The chorus of the people of Nineveh, in "The Repentance of Nineveh," was conducted, last evening, by E. N. Anderson. Most of the members belonged to the Gounod club. The chorus was made up of Mrs. Charles A. Merrill, Mrs. Henry F. Harris, Mrs. J. W. Mitchell and Mrs. Charles S. Stoughton, sopranos; Mrs. May Sleeper Ruggles and Mrs. J. H. Howell, contraltos; Thomas A. Callahan, Charles S. Stoughton, Thomas Hamilton, Harold Powers and George Bancroft, tenors, and George Sanborn, B. A. Barber, Charles J. Marshall, Henry F. Harris, A. W. Parmelee and John H. Howell, basses.

With Madame Nordica is her aunt, Mrs. A. C. Northup. With her travels also a French maid, who is apparently as much an artist in her line as Madame Nordica is in hers.

Signor Campanini leaves for New York tomorrow morning with his wife, who travels with him constantly. Signor Campanini speaks enthusiastically of Worcester audiences and of the Festival management. He speaks also of the chorus as the finest of its character with which he has ever sung. He has not been in this city since he sang with his own company here in the Ideal Concert course, four years ago.

Albert Lester King arrived last evening and is registered at the Bay State house.

Mrs. Carl Alves wore last evening a costume of pink crepe and silk, decollette with diamonds. Mr. and Mrs. Alves return to New York, Saturday, where Mrs. Alves has a long season of engagements before her.

It was evident at intermission, last evening, that the audience desired to catch a glimpse of Nordica at short range. Hardly had she finished her selection from "Mignon," when the space beneath the curve of seats, usually sacred to chorus and artists, was beseiged by the curious ones. Nordica was given an ovation as a side issue, and seemingly did not weary of it. Part of the time she chattered brightly in Italian with that other great artist Campanini, and the remainder of the time received her friends and congratulations.

N. H. Allen, organist of Centre church, Hartford, and R. P. Paine, conductor of the New Britain Choral society, are Festival attendants.

Among well known Hartford musical people present at the concerts are Mary Beeman, violin soloist; Mrs. Lester Sweet, soprano; Miss Nettie L. Brown, organist; and Mrs. J. W. Woodbridge, soprano.

New-York Daily

FOUNDED BY HORACE GREELEY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1891.

THE MUSIC AT WORCESTER.

THE AFTERNOON AND EVENING CONCERTS OF THE SECOND DAY.

BRIDGE'S "REPENTANCE OF NINEVEH" HAS ITS FIRST AMERICAN PERFORMANCE—A WORK WITHOUT GREAT ORIGINALITY.

[BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.]

Worcester Mass. Sept. 23.—Save for an occasional lapse into things which smacked of the puerility of taste begotten of old habits, and perhaps inseparable from a systtm which makes a week's musical feast offset fifty-one weeks of musical famine, the two festival concerts given to-day were dignified entertainments which, when they did not satisfy a lofty standard of judgment, at least stimulated curiosity and irritated the critical faculty. The afternoon programme was well arranged and the offences against taste were of the kind that, under the circumstances, must be viewed as venial.

The public here makes a holiday out of festival week. As a matter of fact, they are more interested in the style, texture and color of a singer's gown than in the character of her music, and diversion is more desired than edification. When Mrs. Ford sang one of Mozart's concert airs, which, despite its archaic character, was yet exceedingly interesting in parts and a most admirable agency for the exhibition of the singer's ability, she was listened to with dutiful respect. When she supplemented the classical air with the familiar arch and artful song by Delibes, about two loyal maids of Cadiz, she was rapturously applauded. When Schumann's Symphony in D-minor was violently dismembered to enable a photographer to take a picture of the orchestra the performance was accepted by the audience with great good humor and as a distinct contribution to the pleasure of the day. That much of the significance and beauty of the symphony grows out of the fact of its organic unity, to conserve which the composer conceived it as a single piece to be played without pauses between the movements, and employed the device of recurrent themes, does not seem to have been thought of, even by the conductor, Mr. Zerrahn. How, then, was the public to know or to care?

In the evening two compositions dealing with Biblical subjects were separated by the waltz from Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet," and because Miss Nordica, who is the first lady of the festival, sang it and because the public like such music regardless of its fitness or want of fitness, and could never be guilty of not liking the first lady of the festival, no matter how she sang this rapid show piece and the polonaise from "Mignon," which she sang afterward to quiet the tempest of applause, it marked the high tide of the popular delight since the festival began. It will take some time yet to rectify shortcomings of this character, but they will be rectified, and then, when the methods of study have been bettered and the choir has been strengthened in its weak points, notably in the tenor division, Worcester will be able to boast, not only that it is the only city in the world that enjoys a festival every year, but also that its festivals are in every respect on an exalted artistic plane. Then it will exert a puissant influence on choral culture throughout the land, and the musical historian will sing its praises "in saecula saeculorum, amen."

The instrumental numbers in the afternoon's scheme, besides the symphony of Schumann, were the andante and pizzicato scherzo from Tschaikowsky's Symphony in F-minor, Grieg's "Peer Gynt" music, and Saint-Saens's Concerto in A-minor for violoncello. This concerto was played by Victor Herbert, who is factotum in ordinary to the festival; assistant conductor, piano-forte accompanist and commissioned composer. In the last capacity he will appear to-morrow afternoon, when an ambitious work for solo voices, chorus and orchestra entitled "The Captive" will have its first performance. As a virtuoso on his chosen instrument, he gave great pleasure to-day, though I fear that all the concerto except a daintily conceived middle part was caviare to the general. The singers at the matinee were two of the most popular women of our concert-rooms, both representatives of the West, Mrs. Julie L. Wyman, of Chicago, who sang Verdi's "O Don Fatale," and on a recall Ethelbert Nevins's "Twilight," and Mrs. Seabury C. Ford, of Cleveland, who sang Mozart's "Bella Mia Fiamma, Addio," and the pretty Delibes trifle already mentioned. The tasteful manner in which Mrs. Ford declaimed the recitative of Mozart's concert air and sang the slow part gave me a much higher opinion of her merits than I had hitherto entertained. She endured a very severe test like an artist.

In the evening the interest of music-lovers centred in a dramatic scene for contralto voice and orchestra entitled "Hagar in the Desert," composed by Rubinstein, and sung with real pathos and refined and truthful feeling by Mrs. Carl Alves, of New-York, and a dramatic oratorio by Dr. J. F. Bridge, organist of Westminster Abbey, entitled "The Repentance of Nineveh." This latter work, which was composed for the English Worcester festival of last year, had its first American performance on this occasion. The reason of its choice, among the many novelties of its class, which the English festivals stimulate every year, is not patent. Perhaps a desire to encourage fracternal relations between the two Worcesters had something to do with it. Without displaying marked originality, Dr. Bridge and Joseph Bennett, the compiler of the book of words, have exercised considerable ingenuity in building up a sequence of incidents which adapt themselves well to treatment in the style of the modern dramatic oratorio, a style which rests chiefly on Mendelssohn's "Elijah," but is modified by the employment of the modern device of representative themes or typical phrases in the musical score. In the conduct of the characters and their physiognomy, the work smacks a good deal of "Elijah," which, as we know, is not a bad model. But as a prophet, Jonah, who is the hero of this work, fell about as far short of Elijah as Dr. Bridge's music falls short of Mendelssohn's. The irreverent and the scoffers seemed inclined to-night to find fault with Messrs. Bennett and Bridge for omitting the episode of Jonah's adventure with the whale, which makes up one-half of the Biblical story touching him, and refused to be comforted with the incident of the gourd, of which the authors of the oratorio make so much that they were obliged to include a "gourd theme" in their melodic catalogue. But they that sit in the seats of the scornful are hard to please, even when the music of an English organist is offered for their delectation.

Time will not allow of even a hurried estimate of the work to-night. The performance disclosed the fact

MORNING Worcester Spy
THE SPY SHOULD HAVE THE EYE OF ARGUS: HE IS HONORABLE IF HE DO BUT LOOK TO THE WELFARE OF THE COMMONWEALTH

WORCESTER.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 24, 1891.

NORDICA'S TRIUMPH.

WARM PRAISE, TOO, WON BY OTHER ARTISTS.

GOOD MUSIC AROUSES GREAT ENTHUSIASM.

"THE REPENTANCE OF NINEVEH," "HAGAR IN THE DESERT" AND SEVERAL NEW ORCHESTRAL WORKS—LARGE AUDIENCES AT BOTH CONCERTS.

The second day of the festival has come and gone, and still there is joy on the popular face. Two concerts were given yesterday, in which there was very much that was good, some that was superb, some that was mediocre, and nothing that was positively bad. That averages considerably higher than the bulk of human experiences. The "Repentance of Nineveh" cannot be described as an inspiring work, but nevertheless something may honestly be said in its praise. The other choral novelty, "Hagar in the Desert," is well worth hearing again, and in past years the orchestra has seldom awakened to such heights of enthusiasm so early in the week.

Mme. Nordica's reappearance in America, after her long series of triumphs abroad, was only a continuation of her famous successes. She was rapturously received, recalled again and again, and applauded till she would have no more. Her art is of a very high order and her stage presence fascinating. The other evening soloists were also of high order, and Mrs. Alves, the only other stranger to festival audiences, will never be recognized as a stranger again. She made a hit.

This afternoon, when American composers will be heard, and this evening, the "artists' night," which will be devoted chiefly to Wagner, with Nordica, Campanini, Del Puente and Wilczek as the stars, give fair promise of enjoyable concerts.

◆

FIRST SYMPHONY CONCERT.

LARGE AUDIENCE, MUCH APPLAUSE, NEW MUSIC AND FAIR SOLOISTS.

Yesterday afternoon there was a symphony program and a matinee audience. Scarcely 200 men were in the throng that sat through the long concert and clapped their hands vigorously in spite of the hot weather. That audience applauded roundly every movement, every soloist and every piece of music—something which could not be said of every Wednesday afternoon concert. If the people were not pleased with everything, they politely declined to show any want of appreciation, though there was much less reason for finding pleasure in some of the numbers than in others. Obviously the concert never dragged.

It was well in some respects that the Schumann symphony was first and not last on the program. The people were not too tired to make some feint at demonstration, even after the first movement, and to increase it after subsequent movements. Schumann does not appeal deeply to the average audience. His melody is not at all of the popular order, and his instrumentation (the weakest point in this master's musical equipment) is not of that picturesque sort which still satisfies the popular ear when the bare melody does not satisfy it. A love for Schumann's orchestral music is an acquired taste with the musical amateur.

The D minor symphony, which was heard yesterday for the first time at a Worcester festival, is one of the most interesting of Schumann's short series of symphonies. In it he exhibits most clearly his characteristic yearning for unity of form, and he has connected the movements more closely by reminiscent or recapitulating themes than in any other. He carried his own ideas in this matter so far beyond any of his predecessors that he originally called the work a "symphonic fantasie." Still another reason for that name was the internal, structural character of the movements themselves. The orchestra played with rather less than the expected unity, but, on the whole, theirs was a poetic exposition of the work, even if a trifle more of energy, and much more unity might sometimes have been employed.

Mrs. Julie L. Wyman, who was the first soloist, scarcely did enough to warrant a serious estimate of her vocal ability. Her song was that familiar festival aria, "O, fatal gift," from Verdi's obsolete opera, "Don Carlos." It is a pleasant melody, without special power of any sort, and in it Mrs. Wyman showed that she had a voice of some training and some capacity for the expression of feeling. Her encore was Nevins' light but pretty song, "At Twilight."

The two movements from Tschaikowsky's F minor Symphony (No. 4), which made another festival novelty, have been established as popular favorites elsewhere, and apparently they made a good impression on the festival audience. They are striking pieces, because of their highly original form, their interesting motives and their rich instrumental effects. The performance of the andante lacked somewhat of the customary accent, and therefore sounded somewhat tame at times, but the scherzo, which might seem less surely destined for satisfactory execution, was marred only by a lack of unity among the strings. Regarded in all lights, however, it must be considered one of the most gratifying of the novelties.

It was with a sigh of delightful expectation that musical people realized that Victor Herbert was to appear before the festival in a work of large proportions and serious meaning. St. Saens' A minor concerto for the 'cello gives a fair idea of the French composer's masterly orchestration. It is full of light and shade and strong contrasted tone colors. It contains good melody, too, and ample opportunity for the display of virtuosity. It is not remarkable for depth or for fine feeling, but it has abundant good feeling. It pleases. Mr. Herbert was somewhat nervous yesterday, and he did not exhibit his finished technique so fully as he has exhibited it at other times, but he played with earnestness, as he always plays, and there was no lack of warm feeling and no absence of high artistic ideas. The flattering demonstration made by the audience when he appeared was deserved by him as a musician, and their no less friendly recognition of his performance was deserved by him as an accomplished 'cellist.

Mrs. Seabury C. Ford, who sang one of Mozart's concert "scenes," "Bella mia fiamma, addio," has more voice than cultivation. She would appear to be what many people like to call "a natural singer." She has some native talent. She was received very kindly by her listeners, and when called back the second time (as was Mrs. Wyman) she sang Delibes' French song, "Two pretty girls of Cadiz," which she did well enough for ordinary concert purposes, but she had no evident warrant for singing it at a symphony concert.

The matinee closed with a very vivacious performance of Grieg's "Peer Gynt" suite, which was the fifth festival novelty, but which has been so often played elsewhere that extended notice would be superfluous.

◆

REPENTANCE OF NINEVEH.

THE ORATORIO CONTAINS GOOD MUSIC, BUT LACKS DRAMATIC POWER—EVERYTHING ELSE EXCELLENT.

If four such soloists as Mme. Nordica, Mrs. Carl Alves, Herbert Johnson and Carl Dufft cannot impart to the music of the "Repentance of Nineveh" more inspiration and more stirring dramatic power than was to be felt at last night's concert, Dr. Bridge's Jonah and the entire population of his "Nineveh" are already dead in the belly of a very large whale, and they will stay there. It is preposterous to suppose that a singer who could bring such superb effects out of Rubinstein's "Hagar in the Desert" would fail utterly in "Nineveh," if there was anything to be brought out of "Nineveh." Similar observations will be applicable to the three other soloists. There was not a genuine dramatic climax of appreciable power till the final chorus was reached. "Nineveh" is more or less of a puzzle. It is evident from their writings that some of the London critics were at a loss to pronounce definitely upon it, after its first performance. This difficulty is easily explained. Despite its failure to reach desired heights of dramatic intensity, it contains much that is not only scholarly and ingenious, but positively beautiful. The melody contains much that is very attractive, and only occasionally commonplace. The harmony is varied and strong. The pictorial music, as, for example, that which represents the thunder storm and the rush and roar of the rabble, is often original and realistic. Yet every time that the listener is led to expect and to yearn for a climax that shall clinch the argument and give vent to the accumulated passion, hope is unfulfilled and enthusiasm stifled. Inability to stir the human heart at such a crisis is necessarily a fatal defect. A part of it is to be explained by a mental or emotional lack in the composer's nature. A part may also be attributed to his indiscreet use of the orchestra, and particularly to his ineffective combination of orchestra and voices.

No serious fault can be found with the soloists, with the orchestra or with the chorus. The band played well, the chorus, though sometimes uncertain and sometimes painfully slow in attack, generally sang with spirit and vigor whenever there was an opportunity for a display of either quality, and the soloists were very much more than competent. Carl Dufft, as the king, was never lacking in dramatic intelligence, and Herbert Johnson sang his extremely quiet lines so well that he received very properly the second round of applause given in the oratorio. His lines were so very quiet that he overlooked some opportunities for the display of passion. Mme. Nordica, as the queen, won the only other popular recognition by singing one aria very effectively. Mrs. Alves is always dramatic, but she could get very little real power out of her lines. The solo work, as a rule, was not at all difficult. The choral parts were very hard.

A select choir, behind the stage, under E. N. Anderson, sang the far away chorus of the people of Nineveh, in part two. In Worcester, England, the complaint was made that the hidden chorus sang out of tune. Last night the chorus sang in good tune and with fine discretion.

Dr. J. Frederick Bridge, organist at Westminster Abbey, has never written anything else so important as the oratorio that was first produced at the Worcester (England) festival a year ago. A setting for Mr. Gladstone's Latin translation of the "Rock of Ages," a cantata, "Callirhoe," and a short "Hymn to the Creator," is the sum total of his work outside the abbey. It is clear that he is not an experienced composer. Possibly that fact might have been gleaned from his inefficient handling of the orchestra. His counterpoint indicates the contrary. He is a scholar, a learned musician. He has followed Wagner, but he has not lost sight of ancient models. The formal aria has gone, and the scene, with chorus, orchestra and solo, combined to meet the exigencies of the situation, has taken its place. On the other hand he has made free use of counterpoint, and is even so old-fashioned as to write a bit of fugue now and then. He has made good melody sometimes, but it is the modern operatic melody, very much toned down. He has adhered to ancient counterpoint, but he has been as bold and as rapid as any modern in arriving at a harmonic climax. The old-fashioned conservative will not always approve of his harmonies. Furthermore he employs the bit motive, or typical melodic theme, with all the lavishness that might be expected of Wagner. There is a "divine justice" theme, a "divine mercy" theme, a "gourd" theme, etc., etc., and they are constantly recurring. In short, ancient and modern methods are dove-tailed together in a way that is bewildering.

He has had little experience with the orchestra, and his instrumentation is his weakest point. He has picturesque ideas, but knows not how to realize them all. The instrumental score is often thick, cloudy and unintelligible.

That prominent London critic who described Dr. Bridge's "Repentance of Nineveh" as "an unacted musical drama" struck squarely at the truth. It brings to mind a question of importance. Is "Nineveh" adapted for adequate representation by oratorio? Are all the scenes and incidents, as told in the text, capable of full exemplification without the aid of scenery, costumes and acting? This is only the specialization of a general problem that once vexed the old masters. Whether certain accessories of the theatre should or should not be introduced in oratorio was settled in the negative in Handel's time by the influence of no less a person than the bishop of London. Oratorio and opera, the two most complex forms of dramatic expression in music, have existed, side by side, with well defined boundaries, for some centuries. The limitations of oratorio are somewhat more narrow than those of opera. There are bounds to its capacity for expression. It seems to the writer that "Nineueh" sometimes oversteps those bounds. A stage is needed, or at least a bulk of explanatory notes, to make its pictorial meaning clear. Music alone cannot supply the deficiency. The "Messiah" does not require such aid. Neither does the "Creation," nor the "Elijah," nor yet, in modern times, the "Arminius." To attempt too much is a fault in music.

The first part of the evening's program was a thing of beauty, and a joy while it lasted. The clearly defined score of Gluck's overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis" came out in beautiful contrast to the crowded scores of modern orchestral music hitherto heard at the festival, and it was finely played by the orchestra. The intermezzo from Mascagni's now famous opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana" (which is to be heard at the theatre entire; Oct. 5) was a very dainty bit of romance for the strings, reinforced by harp and organ, and the people vigorously compelled its repetition. These were the only orchestral works.

Rubinstein's dramatic scene, "Hagar in the Desert," is a very strong representation of the mother's woe and the boy's plaintive cry of "Water, water," with the story of divine interposition and salvation. The vocal part is brimful of dramatic power, and the instrumental is pictorial in a very high degree. Mrs. Alves sang Hagar's part with supreme effectiveness, and established her reputation here as a finished vocalist. The incidental music of the dying boy and the ministering angel were well sung by Mrs. May Sleeper Ruggles and Carl Alves, husband and teacher of the contralto.

The first part of the program ended with Nordica's delicious rendering of Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" waltz song, the complete captivation of the audience, the singer's imperative recall, and her brilliant singing of the "Mignon" polonaise.

◆

CHAT AND GOSSIP.

TALKS WITH ARTISTS AND GLEANINGS FROM THE HOTELS.

Visitors continued to arrive in great numbers yesterday, and the hotels are packed full.

At the Bay State are: W. H. Leonore and George S. Sydney, Brooklyn; Max G. Kaufman, Charles O. Welch, E. A. Unger, Seth Nichols, Miss Grace Raven, George E. Willard, W. E. Tucker, Charles E. Lyall, New York; N. F. Nichols and Kittie Nichols, Newton, N. H.; A. Asher, Thomas P. Currier, T. B. Lovejoy, H. C. Tuckerson, E. A. Hall, B. Fisher, Fred G. Pettigrove, William L. Peavy, John B. Newkirk, Max Zadz, C. T. Deng, E. W. Newbigin, Henry D. Yeaton, A. Nettle, Chester Snow, Jr., F. H. Shephard, F. M. Dean, H. J. Phillips, W. G. Fitch, Chas. W. Gray, Boston; E. M. Dexter, Philadelphia; C. W. Grosvenor, Pomfret, Ct.; F. H. Adriance, Hartford, Ct.; C. H. Prescott, R. B. Gifford, Salem; A. W. Loche, North Adams; J. W. Ellis, Woonsocket; W. H. Clymer, Philadelphia.

At the Lincoln House, B. Bochus, New York; Mrs. R. F. Herrick, North Adams; D. M. Cowie, Webster; Rev. E. S. Best, Spencer; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Woodbridge and Miss Woodbridge, Miss M. Curtis, Lenox.

Mrs. Edward Williams, Mrs. T. F. Williams, Mrs. T. B. Crosby, Miss Blanche Horton and Miss Mackunion, all of Yarmouth, N. S., are attending the festival.

Miss Lena Little was present at yesterday afternoon's concert as a listener.

Mr. and Mrs. Dexter of Philadelphia arrived yesterday, and are stopping at the Bay State House. Mrs. Dexter will be better remembered as Mrs. J. M. Osgood, who was a great favorite at former music festivals.

Mrs. and Miss Hall of Boston also arrived yesterday.

C. Whitney Coombs, the composer, arrived last night from New York, and will stay with Ben T. Hammond during the remainder of the festival.

Signor Campanini and James O'Neill, who is playing Monte Cristo at the Worcester Theatre, met at the Bay State House last evening for the first time in three years and enjoyed a hearty handshake. The last time these two actors met was in San Francisco. Mr. O'Neill recalled with delight a performance of "Carmen" which he saw in New York, in which Sig. Campanini took part. Mrs. O'Neill was very sure that a young soldier who came in in an early scene was Campanini. Mr. O'Neill doubted the identity of the actor, and soon a performer entered who gave evidence of great dramatic ability. His actions were most natural and his grace attracted applause. "That's Companini," whispered O'Neill to his wife, and sure enough, when the tenor opened his song the audience fairly went wild. The two old actors chatted on various subjects congenial to both, and separated the best of friends.

Carl Zerrahn was very emphatic last night in his statement that the chorus work, and in fact the whole festival, superior to any yet given. He highly complimented Mme. Nordica when speaking of her triumph at the evening concert.

Mrs. Jennie Patrick-Walker is a guest of Mr. and Mrs. C. Henry Hutchins.

Manager C. A. Ellis of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was in the audience last night.

Mme. Nordica gave a private recital to a few intimate friends at her apartments at the Bay State House yesterday morning. She will rehearse at Mechanics Hall at 9 A. M. today.

Tickets may be obtained at the hall ticket office for all concerts except tonight. All seats are sold for tonight, but admissions will be sold to the customary number.

NORDICA, HER GOWN AND FLOWERS.

Madame Nordica was the star of the evening, and her appearance was awaited with great impatience. No sooner had she shown her face beyond the curtain than the applause began. Every step she made was the signal for more prolonged applause, and when she reached the platform under escort of Victor Herbert a perfect ovation awaited her. It was a triumph well earned by laborious study. There were those in the audience who rembered unknown Lillian Norton, whom Carl Zerrahn brought here years ago to sing before a Worcester audience. She was then a bright young American, with a voice like rippling laughter and promises of a great future. Those who saw her that night long ago would hardly recognize the struggling young singer in the magnificently proportioned woman who sang Gounod's waltz song from Romeo and Juliet to them last night. Her carriage was superb, her form a model for sculptors and her face one that the entire audience looked on and admired.

Her costume was designed for her by Worth, for use on just such occasions. It was of heavy brocaded cream-colored silk, square cut at the neck, in front, and with a huge Elizabethan collar, fairly studded with pearls. The skirt was full and was cut en train. Great clusters of diamonds ornamented the corsage and in her hair fluttered jeweled butterflies of diamonds of priceless value.

Laies in the audience fairly gasped with admiration, and the newspaper men saw in the famous and bewilderingly beautiful singer a woman who, in spite of her fame, had always a kind word for the interviewer.

When her first song had come to an end a thunder of applause shook the hall, and an usher struggled to the platform with a huge basket of roses, which Madame Nordica received with a smile of delight, but which she was unable to carry away. Victor Herbert jumped into the breach, encircled the great basket of roses, and followed the radiant singer off the stage, while the audience fairly went wild with delight.

"Oh! isn't it lovely?" said Mme. Nordica to a Spy man. "Who sent it?"

The card of the sender was carefully sealed into a ribbon which was tied onto the handle. Then came the encore and more applause, and Mme. Nordica was never happier in her life.

Boston Daily Globe.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 25.

ARTISTS' NIGHT AT WORCESTER.

Mme. Nordica Again Arouses Enthusiasm at Festival—Mr. Adams' Mass Well Received.

WORCESTER, Sept. 24.—The music festival today was, as the others preceding it, a grand success.

The afternoon concert opened with G. A. Adams' mass in C minor.

Mr. Adams was a Worcester county man, and is well remembered today by the music lovers who used to know and hear him, His work was accorded a grand reception.

The soloists were Mrs. J. P. Walker, Mrs. J. L. Wyman, Messrs. A. L. King and G. R. Clark, with chorus and orchestra.

The afternoon was given up wholly to American composers, and the mass by Mr. Adams, as well as Mr. Herbert's dramatic cantata, were written for the Worcester festival. They were intended for solo and chorus work.

R. A. McDowell's orchestral suite in A minor in four movements was well received, and was followed by the ballad, "The Heavenly Messenger," by C. Whitney Coombs, which was sung by Carl Dufft for the first time in America.

Victor Herbert's cantata, "The Captive," was earnestly heard, and in this piece Mrs. O. C. Ford bore away the honors. The chorus work was not as good as the musicians expected, and in this piece, as in others, some blame was laid to the orchestra. The audience as a whole, however, was pleased.

Tonight was artists' night, and the programme was made up largely of selections from Wagner. The programme was:

A Faust overture..........Wagner
Romanza, Eri Tu (Masked Ball)..........Verdi
Sig. Del Puente.
Aria (Sampson and Delilah)..........Saint-Saens
Miss Lena Little.
Lohengrin's Narration (Lohengrin)..........Wagner
Sig. Campanini.
Two movements for strings, Heart Wounds, Spring..........Grieg
Aria, let the bright seraphim (Sampson)....Handel
Mme. Nordica.
The trumpet obligato by Mr. P. Muller.
Solo for violin, Fantasie Caprice......Vieuxtemps
Mr. Franz Wilczek.
Trio (I Lombardi)..........Verdi
Mme. Nordica, Sig. Campanini, Sig. Del Puente.
Intermission.
Wagner selections. Siegfried and Gotterdammerung
Siegfried's Passage to Brunnhilde's Rock, Morning Dawn and Rhine Journey..........
Arranged by Richter
The Flying Dutchman, Sentas ballad..Mme. Nordica
Violin, prize song, (Meistersingers).......Wagner
Mr. Wilczek.
Lohengrin, prayer and finale, act I.
Elsa..........Mme. Nordica
Ortrud..........Miss Little
Lohengrin..........Sig. Campanini
Frederick..........Sig. Del Puente
Henry I..........Dr. G. R. Clarke

Mme. Nordica was a success, as she was last evening, and proved a popular favorite. The trio, with Nordica, Sig. Campanini and Sig. Del Puente, was a feature of the concert.

The orchestra did much to redeem the work of the chorus, which was not considered up to the standard for an artists' evening.

The audience was a very fashionable one, and the hall was so crowded that large premiums were offered for seats, and as late as 9 o'clock a single admission, with standing room only, cost the purchaser $1.

Boston Post

FRIDAY MORNING, SEPT. 25, 1891.

THE MUSIC FESTIVAL

McDowell's Suite and "The Captive" of Victor Herbert

SUNG IN WORCESTER YESTERDAY

An Old-Fashioned but Unsatisfactory Evening Concert

WORCESTER, Sept. 24.—[SPECIAL to the POST.]—At the Music Festival today the afternoon programme was as follows:

Mass, in C minor......................G. A. Adams
Suite, in A minor, Op. 42............E. A. McDowell
In a Haunted Forest.
Summer Idyl.
The Shepherdess's Song.
Forest Spirits.
Ballad, "The Heavenly Message,".....C. W. Coombs
Mr. Carl Dufft.
INTERMISSION.
The Captive.............................V. Herbert

The concert was spun out this afternoon to an undue length, and the first number should have been omitted. Mr. Adams, the composer of a mass in C minor is dead. He was well known and highly esteemed in this town and it was at the request of many of his friends that the mass appeared upon the programme. It was an injudicious act of piety, for the composition is unworthy of serious attention. To criticise it in detail would be an unnecessary and disagreeable duty. Suffice it to say that it gave the audience the pleasure of hearing once more the rich and beautiful voice of Mrs. Wyman and of paying tribute to her rare art. Mrs. Patrick Walker, too, was loudly applauded for her singing of an otherwise thankless part.

The suite of Mr. McDowell was played for the first time, and it pleased both the musician and the layman. It is an admirable example of "programme music" without the programme. That is to say, the movements are named, but there is no appended catalogue of details, and the hearer is free to draw his own conclusions from the modest premises of the composer. The work is characterized by imagination, esprit, and manly refinement. Mr. McDowell is here fantastic, but in his most daring flights he preserves his sanity. His sentiment is genuine, and it is entirely free from sentimentality. His instrumentation is delightful throughout, and although most carefully thought out it seems frank and spontaneous. Nor does he repeat an effect ad nauseam because he himself is pleased with it. He has the uncommon gift, the gift so seldom given to composers of the modern school, of knowing when he is through, of knowing that it is time to stop. It is to be regretted that Mr. McDowell was not present to witness the success of his work, and it is to be hoped that the suite will be heard this season at one of the Symphony Concerts in the town where he is held in such sincere respect.

Mr. Dufft, a very pleasing baritone, was heard in a song, "The Heavenly Message," by C. W. Coombs. The song might have been written by a favorite English composer for English drawing rooms. It is a piece of mawkish sentimentality, unworthy of the singer and the occasion. And the same audience that had just before approved so heartily of the art of Mr. McDowell applauded boisterously this cheap and common song. Mr. Dufft was recalled and sang Lassen's well known "It Was a Dream."

"The Captive," a dramatic cantata for solo voices, chorus and orchestra, was composed by Mr. Victor Herbert, who led his work, for this festival. The text is taken from a poem by Baumbach, and is suggestive of a musical setting. It is the familiar story of a prisoner, who will not marry a compassionate maiden even to save his life, simply because he loves another.

It would be perhaps unfair to pronounce a judgment upon Mr. Herbert's work, for it was not sung today in its completeness. Over twenty pages of very important choruses were omitted because the chorus was unable to sing the pages that were therefore stricken out. And in the chief and most passionate portion of the cantata, in which the soprano pleads for the prisoner's life and is seconded in her request by the chorus, the soprano unaided was obliged to shout her longings above the rage and fury of an orchestral storm. From an artistic standpoint, it would then have been well if Mr. Herbert had withdrawn the cantata from the programme; but, naturally enough, he wished to hear the music upon which he has labored for so long.

From two hearings of "The Captive" in its mutilated form, it would seem, first, that Mr. Herbert is more skilled in writing for instruments than for voices. Many of the progressions would have frightened stouter singers than the members of this chorus, who are inclined to shy at altered cords and unexpected entrances. Without doubt even in disregarding the capabilities of average singers, the composer gains striking effects—that is, he would if his music were only sung. It is not unkind to say that his work is beyond the musical intelligence of the Worcester chorus as it is now constituted: it is not necessary, therefore, to point the finger at this place and at that where the composer's intentions were not carried out.

In his treatment of the instruments he has been more happy, and many of his orchestral pages are ingeniously written. But the great question of originality now enters, and it must be confessed that Mr. Herbert has too often followed closely in the footsteps of famous men. Not that he has been guilty of plagiarism, but there are memories of "Tristan" and "The Ring." Berlioz greets us in the march, and Raff and Goldmark chat amicably with the composer, so that his conversation with the audience is thereby affected. Although the originality of the themes may be questioned, there is no denying the skilful manner in which they are employed, and the cantata is almost always interesting and at times exceedingly effective. It was warmly received. Mrs. Ford, by her dramatic interpretation of the maiden's part, proved a very tower in time of trouble. She well deserved the enthusiastic demonstration that followed after her long and trying scene. And Mr. Herbert was equally fortunate in his choice of a baritone. The "Cantata" should be heard under more favorable circumstances, when it could be sung by a smaller and picked chorus.

FIFTH CONCERT.

Faust Overture................................Wagner
Romanza, "Eri tu," "Masked Ball,"..........Verdi
Sig. Del Puente.
Aria, "Sampson and Delila,"............Saint-Saëns
Miss Lena Little.
Lohengrin's Narration, "Lohengrin,"........Wagner
Mr. Campanini.
Two movements for strings, "Heart Wounds," "Spring,".............................Grieg
Aria, "Let the Bright Seraphim," "Sampson,". Handel
Mrs. Nordica.
The trumpet obligato by Mr. P. Muller.
Solo for violin, Fantasie Caprice........Vieuxtemps
[illegible]
Mrs. Nordica, Messrs. Campanini and Del Puente.
"Siegfried's Passage to Brunnhilde's Rock, Morning Dawn and Rhine Journey," "Siegfried, and Gotterdammerung," arranged by Richter; "The Flying Dutchman," Senta's Ballad.......Wagner
Mrs. Nordica.
Violin, "Prize Song," "Meistersinger,"......Wagner
Mr. Wilczek.
Lohengrin, Prayer and Finale, Act. I.

The evening concert was a concert of the old-fashioned king, where each soloist came armed with a favorite tune. The programme was of a catholic nature, including the early style of Verdi and the later of Wagner. People who were bored by the "Faust" overture looked forward to the costume of Mrs. Nordica and her friendly competition with the trumpet. Mrs. Nordica finally appeared and sang the familiar air from "Sampson." Her tones were hard and metallic and her phrasing was questionable. In response to a most enthusiastic call she sang the air from Rossini's "Barber" and her performance was unworthy of a superficially taught amateur.

Miss Little sang the beautiful aria from Saint Saen's "Sampson." This evening it was Sampson's turn; last night it was Jonah's, and if Delilah had not courted the hero with more passion than in Miss Little's song, Sampson would not have lost his hair. From the standpoint of the pedagogue, however, Miss Little's singing was admirable. The climax of enthusiasm, and also of all that is bad in vocalization, was reached in the trio, for the three singers simply shouted. They were recalled with frenetic applause and they shouted for the second time. Mr. Wilczek played with a small tone and considerable skill. He, too, was recalled, and so was Campanini and so was Del Puente. The selections from Wagner were not an antidote to the musical evil of what had gone before. Mr. Zerrahn is not at his ease in orchestral numbers of such magnitude, and the instrumentation of the "Lohengrin" finale was an arrangement for an orchestra of moderate size.

Perhaps it is still necessary for the financial secretary of the festival to give a concert of so called popular names, but it is not necessary that the performance of the members should be of so little worth. The concert of last night did not rise in dignity or merit above the level of cheap Sunday night concerts given in large cities during the summer.

Friday afternoon Mr. Rummel will be heard in Rubensteins & Minor Concerto, and the festival will be closed by a performance of "Israel in Egypt" in the evening.

PHILIP HALE.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

FRIDAY MORNING, SEPT. 25, 1891.

HERBERT'S "CAPTIVE."

It Makes a Decided Success at the Worcester Festival—A Modern Musical Model.

WORCESTER, Sept. 24.—This afternoon at the Musical Festival was given up to American composers, and none of the works have ever been played before except Coombs' song, "The Heavenly Message," which has been heard in Leipsic. Other works were by Arthur Adams, mass in C minor, E. A. McDowell's new suite in A minor "A Haunted Forest", "Summer Idyl," "Shepherdess Song" and "Forest Spirits," and finally Victor Herbert's dramatic cantata, "The Captive." The two last pieces aroused very great enthusiasm.

"The Captive" is Herbert's most important composition. It was begun in 1889, soon after the completion of the suite for strings, and work upon it has occupied the composer during portions of two years. Mr. Herbert found his subject in a German poem by Rud. Baumbach, the English version of which is by E. Buck.

The musical model of "The Captive" is a modern one, was performed without break or rest (a means of enhancing the dramatic effectiveness of any musical composition) and abounded in "motive work," the principal characters and the dominating thought of the work being given representative themes or melodies, which appeared in the orchestra when mention of them was prominent in the vocal part, they are used singly and in combination; the scoring is for full modern orchestra, including harp, drums and cymbals. The character of the harmonies, the shifting tonality and the abounding color, proclaimed Mr. Herbert's progressive ideas.

The orchestral prelude (in D minor) though containing the melodic germs of the work, deals rather with its poetic idea. The first measures announced the theme of the legend with the succeeding phrase (chords in descending semitones) as answer. The "Love theme," suggesting the captive's faithfulness, comes in with the lento section; this is carried to a climax and is followed by a suggestion only of the second captive theme—which later on is developed in the single baritone aria. The first vocal section of the work is a descriptive chorus, allegro moderato, charmingly instrumentated, which as it develops reaches a powerful climax.

This is followed by a funeral march, andante, and chorus. At the close of the first vocal section the theme of the maiden is heard (oboe.) The march subject is again taken up and a long dramatic scene for chorus and soprano solo ensues, in which the composer's musicianship is shown in a strong light. The theme of the maiden receives its fullest statement with the appearance of the soprano air, un poc piu tranquillo, at the words "set him free that mine own for life he be." The close of the scene is reached through a long and effective climax.

After some measures of recitative comes the aria for baritone andante expressivo, built upon the melody referred to as the second captive theme; the union of themes in the accompaniment to this number will be noticed by the observant. A return to the march subject marks the end of the work proper.

In the evening the orchestra played Wagner's "Faust" overture and Grieg's two movements for strings, Del Puente sang "Eri Tu," Campanini sang Lohengrin's narrative, Nordica sang "Let the Bright Seraphim," Miss Lena Little sang an aria from St. Saen's "Sampson and Delilah," and Franz Wilczek, violinist, played a vieuxtemps fantasie and the Meistersinger prize song. Nordica, Campanini and Del Puente sang the trio from Lombardi. The orchestra played the Rioter Seigried-Gotter Dammerung music, and all five soloists, with chorus, sang the prayer and finale from "Lohengrin," act 1.

Both concerts were magnificent, and drew more people than the hall could comfortably hold.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 87.
FRIDAY, SEPT. 25, 1891.

WORCESTER MUSIC FESTIVAL.

Two Enjoyable Programmes Rendered Yesterday.

Some Notable Productions by American Musicians—A Brilliant Array of Vocal and Instrumental Talent—Overflowing Audiences Present Afternoon and Evening.

[SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE BOSTON HERALD.]

WORCESTER, Sept. 24, 1891. The third day of the annual music festival here has been concluded, and the general verdict appears to be that the programmes of this afternoon and evening make the crowning triumph of the scheme, considered purely from the standpoint of enjoyment.

The afternoon was one of novelty, a mass in C minor by G. A. Adams being given its first production; a suite in A minor for full orchestra by E. A. McDowell having the first public hearing; a song, "The Heavenly Message," by C. Whitney Coombs, being sung for the first time in this country, and Mr. Victor Herbert's dramatic cantata, "The Captive," receiving its first production on this occasion.

It is difficult to sum up the characteristics of such a programme heard under such circumstances. The heat was well nigh unbearable, and a sitting of two hours and a half was necessary to listen to all the works on the list.

The soloists in the mass were Mrs. J. P. Walker, Mrs. J. L. Wyman, and Messrs. A. L. King and George R. Clark, and these singers, with the chorus and orchestra, found ample opportunities in the tuneful settings given the traditional work by Mr. Adams, who is put down as a musician of eastern Massachusetts. It is a work in the simplest of forms, and is an excellent example of musical forms which do not call for analytical treatment in order to win them appreciation. Though essentially conventional in its forms, the mass is a most enjoyable evidence of the value of this conservative musician's abilities. The mass is as melodious as those of Rossini, with the simplicity of a Haydn composition, and the voices of the singers are at all times treated as being of first importance. The work finds its artistic climax in the "Sanctus," but many other portions of the mass show the musical ability of the composer

To Splendid Advantage.

The mass had the advantage of an excellent performance, the chorus turning out in full ranks and giving their best efforts in their singing of the several tuneful chorus numbers. The principal success in the solo numbers was made in the "Agnus Dei," in which Mrs. Wyman achieved a pronounced triumph. The soprano work made heavy demands upon Mrs. Walker's voice, but she sung with all her usual good taste, and gained a well merited recognition of her efforts. The less important solo work given the tenor and bass was well interpreted by Messrs. King and Clark.

Mr. McDowell's new suite shows this accomplished composer in a far different light from that in which he has been seen in his earlier orchestral works. He has given a hint of his thoughts while writing this suite by styling its four movements: "In a Haunted Forest," "Summer Idyl," "The Shepherdess' Song" and "Forest Spirits."

These suggestions very clearly indicate the characteristics of the four parts of the composition, and the fanciful musical ideas in which it abounds were immediately appreciated and keenly enjoyed by this afternoon's audience. The general characteristics recall some of the best of the fantastic forms of Saint-Saens and Grieg, especially the latter's "Peer Gynt," but there is, nevertheless, a distinct and delightful originality in it all that met with well-merited commendation from all who heard the excellent performance under Mr. Zerrahn's baton.

Mr. Carl Dufft's contribution to the day's novelties, the song for baritone by Coombs, proved an effective and pleasing number, and it was so admirably sung that Mr. Dufft was recalled and added Lassen's "Dream" as an encore number.

Mr. Herbert's cantata came on when singers and audience were alike well nigh prostrated by the heat, and it would be an injustice to this most competent musician and composer to pass conclusively upon the characteristics of the composition under such circumstances. The men of the orchestra, whose endurance surpasses all comprehension, labored nobly with their portion of the composition, and showed the work in this particular to be one of great beauty and originality. It is to hoped that the cantata will be heard again under more favorable circumstances.

This evening the great miscellaneous programme, which annually makes

An Important Feature of the Scheme, was heard, and those of the advanced school who decry such concerts may be interested to know that not a seat or niche of standing room could be bought when the doors opened, and that good seats for the evening have been in demand at prices well up to that fixed for the entire festival scheme. The programme which called out such a patronage was as follows:

"A Faust Overture"........................Wagner
Romanza, "Eri tu," from "The Masked Ball," Verdi
Sig. Del Puente.
Aria, "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson and Dalilah"..............Saint-Saens
Miss Lena Little.
Lohengrin's Narrative, from "Lohengrin".. Wagner
Sig. Campanini.
Two movements for strings...............Grieg
"Heart Wounds," "Spring."
Aria, "Let the Bright Seraphim," from "Samson"......................................Handel
Mme. Nordica.
The trumpet obbligato by Mr. P. Muller.
Solo for violin, "Fantaisie Caprice".... Vieuxtemps
Mr. Franz Wilczek.
Trio from "I Lombardi"....................Verdi
Mme. Nordica, Sig. Campanini, Sig. Del Puente.
INTERMISSION.
Wagner selections.
"Siegfried" and "Gotterdammerung." } "Siegfried's Passage to Brunnhilde's Rock," "Morning Dawn" and "Rhine Journey."
Arranged by Richter.
"The Flying Dutchman"..............Senta's Ballad.
Mme. Nordica.
Violin......"Prize Song" from "Die Meistersinger."
Mr. Wilczek.
"Lohengrin,"..........Prayer and finale, for act I.
Elsa..............................Mme. Nordica.
Ortrud................................Miss Little.
Lohengrin.......................Sig. Campanini.
Frederick........................Sig. Del Puente.
Henry I.............................Dr. G. R. Clark.

The results attending the performance of this programme were decidedly damaging to those who have been talking advanced school doctrines to the directors of these festivals. A community that will pay $5 a seat to hear such a programme, and whose residents will get into a frenzy of delight over the "Una Voce" and the "Lombardi" trio, offers a discouraging field for the modern German [illegible] the Italian school has not been shaken by the bluster of the modern school adherents, such an evening was a delight, and their views were very popular in the big audience of this evening. There is little need to go into extended comment upon such a programme by such artists. The character of the selection is known to All True Music Lovers.

The fine ability of those who took part in the several selections insured the success which was realized. The two events of the evening were the "Una Voce," sung by Mme. Nordica, as an encore, and the "Lombardi" trio, the audience simply throwing aside all restraint in giving expression to their delight over the singing of those familiar numbers.

The Handel aria gained a great ovation for Mme. Nordica, who, it may be said, fairly outshone all the gorgeous apparel displayed by soloists in former years, and, when her repeated acknowledgments failed to quiet the applause, she added as an encore the "Una Voce," and gained even a greater demonstration of approval than that following her first number.

In the great trio her voice rang out with splendid effect, and quite electrified her hearers, as well as Sig. Campanini and Del Puente. Mr. Wilczek, the violinist, was heard for the first time here, and quite won his audience by his brilliant playing of his numbers. His technical attainments are beyond all criticism, and his tone is singularly pure and true at all times. He has a particularly graceful stage presence, and his playing well deserved the enthusiastic applause which necessitated an encore number of his announced selections.

The selections from the Wagner operas of the composer's tuneful period were heartily enjoyed, and the beauties of the tone pictures from the later music dramas were also greatly appreciated.

Despite the length of the programme and the almost unendurable heat, the immense audience listened spellbound to the last note.

The ladies of the chorus put on their whitest and gayest gowns for the evening, and the audience took a decidedly gala appearance in honor of the "Artists' night."

Boston Daily Traveller

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1891.

THE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

American Works Exhibited Yesterday Afternoon—The Evening Programme.

WORCESTER, Sept. 24.—This afternoon at the musical festival was given up to American composers, and none of the works have ever been played before except Coombs's song, "The Heavenly Message," which has been heard in Leipsic. Other works were by Arthur Adams, mass in C minor, E. A. McDowell's new suite in A minor "A Haunted Forest," "Summer Idyl," "Shepherdess Song," and "Forest Spirits," and finally Victor Herbert's dramatic cantata, "The Captive." The two last pieces aroused very great enthusiasm.

"The Captive" is Herbert's most important composition. It was begun in 1889, soon after the completion of the suite for strings, and work upon it has occupied the composer during portions of two years. Mr. Herbert found his subject in a German poem by Rud. Baumbach, the English version of which is by E. Buck.

In the evening the orchestra played Wagner's "Faust" overture and Grieg's two movements for strings, Del Puente sang "Eri Tu," Campanini sang Lohengrin's narrative, Nordica sang "Let the Bright Seraphim," Miss Lena Little sang an aria from St. Saen's "Samson and Delilah," and Franz Wilczek, violinist, played a Vieuxtemps fantasie and the Meistersinger prize song. Nordica, Campanini and Del Puente sang the trio from "Lombardi." The orchestra played the Rioter Seigfried Gotterdammerung music, and all five soloists, with chorus, sang the prayer and finale from "Lohengrin," act 1.

Boston Journal.

FRIDAY MORNING, SEPT. 25, 1891.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

A Triumph for the American Composer—Artists' and Wagner Night.

Special Dispatch to The Boston Journal.

WORCESTER, Sept. 24. Thursday is always the great day of the Worcester Festival. The people from the surrounding country fill the town, and between the concerts the principal streets are dazzling with beauty. To-day was no exception. For once the speculators were advertising for evening concert tickets and the demand was simply enormous. The chorus did its work in the afternoon, leaving the evening almost entirely to the artists, the single exception being the prayer and finale to Act I. of Wagner's "Lohengrin," in which it participated. The ladies were in their most fetching attire and a large share of the gentlemen in the regulation claw-hammer coat. It was the gayest day and evening of festival week.

The afternoon was devoted entirely to compositions by American composers, with the additional attraction that every number had its first public performance in this country. Very creditable was this to the management of the festival, and the interest kept the vast audience seated till the close of a long programme. First of all came a mass by G. Arthur Adams, who died at North Brookfield less than a year ago, but whose composition had been accepted for performance before his death. Mr. Adams was an organist in this city years ago. In recent years he was well known in Boston, and the score was rewritten with the aid of his wife on his death bed. The work follows the usual form of the Latin Church, and is meritorious in many ways. The quartette of soloists who aided in its interpretation were Mrs. Jennie Patrick-Walker, Mrs. Julia L. Wyman, Albert Lester King and Dr. G. R. Clark. The work of the soloists, save a single exception for the soprano and tenor, is not particularly grateful, though no exception could be taken to the performance. It was a fine quartette. Mrs. Walker's clear and always reliable voice, in excellent form after the summer's rest, was particularly welcome, and in the single solo in the "Sanctus" she was accorded almost an ovation. Mr. King also did good work in his single solo. And this is true of the other members of the quartette. Considerable attention had been paid by the composer to the orchestration, and the development of the "Et Resurrixit," which was considered the most effective part of the mass, was entirely cut. There were also other cuts in the work. It is hard to explain this unwarrantable proceeding. The management, at the outset, laid great stress on the new works for the chorus which were to be given, two of which had been composed especially for Worcester. It had proved an attraction for musical people from all parts of the country. But it is found that not one of these works, but only excerpts from them, have been given. Were they well known and familiar, it could be excused, but the public have a right, and properly, to judge of a composition from its entire performance.

Following this came the first performance of a suite in A minor for orchestra by E. A. McDowell. Mr. McDowell's compositions have become known of late very favorably. Several have been given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the introduction of this Suite into the afternoon programme was a true pleasure. It is divided into four parts, called "In a Haunted Forest," "Summer Idyl," "The Shepherdess' Song" and "Forest Spirits." It is entirely poetic, and the movements display great skill as well as imagination. Every movement is delicious; it was excellently played by the orchestra and very favorably received. Next came a song, "The Heavenly Message," by Mr. C. Whitney Coombs, a young American, who has been studying in Europe and England for many years, and came home to reside in New York last season. The composition is along the line of the English school, and was sung by Mr. Carl Dufft, to the accompaniment of the orchestra, in a very clear and dramatic style. Mr. Dufft is a favorite at Worcester, and the enthusiasm was so great that he was compelled to sing an encore. He was handsomely complimented by the author, who was in the audience. Mr. Herbert conducted.

Last on the programme came Victor Herbert's cantata "The Captain." Nothing that has been announced has attracted more interest than this composition. Mr. Herbert has occupied a unique position at the Worcester Festivals for the past few years. He has assisted Mr. Zerrahn in conducting notably the operatic arias of the solo artists, has played the piano accompaniments, is a fine solo and violoncello player, has been heard on that instrument every year, and he also has an excellent reputation as an orchestral conductor. He has become almost an inseparable part of the festival. Though of Irish parentage, Mr. Herbert considers himself thoroughly American, and desires to be ranked among American composers. The composition is entirely modern in its form. The scoring is for full modern orchestra, and the dominating thought of the work is given representative themes or melodies which appear in the orchestra when the mention of them is prominent in the vocal part. The orchestration is a veritable picture, and the work is to be given without a break from the beginning. The performance has been attended with difficulties, and while a good idea could be obtained of the opening and closing of it, it is evident that there are great possibilities unto which this afternoon's performance did not attain. The work is difficult for both orchestra and chorus. Mr. Herbert himself conducted and the choir evidently did not understand him as they do Mr. Zerrahn. So that from the rehearsals held by him it was impossible to give the whole of the scene for soprano and chorus—the long and effective climax being left out entirely. What was given was open to much criticism in the choral parts. The orchestral scoring is very heavy and magnificent, and for the soprano it needs a soprano like Lilli Lehmann. As it was Mrs. Ford struggled through it very commendably, but she had not voice enough. The single baritone solo was assigned to Mr. Dufft, and it was acceptably done. The closing chorus was rendered in such a manner as to approximate an idea of its grandeur and beauty, and Mr. Herbert was greeted with an ovation at the close such as is rarely heard at Worcester. The audience fairly yelled, and shouts of "Herbert, Herbert," made pandemonium for a time. It was a great triumph, despite the drawbacks of the performance.

The evening concert was a succession of triumphs for well-known artists. This is the programme:

A Faust overture..........Wagner
Romanza, "Eri tu," from "The Masked Ball"........Verdi
Sig. Del Puente.
Aria, "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson and Dalilah"..........St. Saens
Miss Lena Little.
Lohengrin's Narrative, from "Lohengrin"..........Wagner
Sig. Campanini.
Two Movements for Strings..........Grieg
"Heart Wounds," "Spring."
Aria, "Let the bright Seraphim," from "Samson"..Handel
Mme. Nordica.
The trumpet obligato by Mr. P. Muller.
Solo for violin, "Fantasie Caprice"..........Vieuxtemps
Mr. Franz Wilczek.
Trio from "I Lombardi"..........Verdi
Mme. Nordica, Sig. Campanini, Sig. Del Puente.

WAGNER SELECTIONS.

"Siegfried and Gotterdammerung." } "Siegfried's Passage to Brunnhilde's Rock, Morning Dawn and Rhine Journey."
(Arranged by Richter.)
"The Flying Dutchman"..........Senta's Ballad
Violin.........."Prize Song" from "Die Meistersinger."
Mr. Wilczek.
"Lohengrin"..........Prayer and Finale, for Act I.
Elsa..........Mme. Nordica
Ortrud..........Miss Little
Lohengrin..........Sig. Campanini
Frederick..........Sig. Del Puente
Henry I..........Dr. G. R. Clark

A review of this programme would not be possible at this time, nor is it needed. The enthusiasm of the audience was catching, and everything was applauded. Del Puente made his first appearance, as did Franz Wilczek, the violinist. Campanini and Mme. Nordica were in excellent voice, the latter singing Lohengrin's narrative, and in the concerted numbers by Verdi and Wagner as no other artist in this country can sing them. Mme. Nordica is better suited to the music rendered this evening than to the bravura selections of last night, and she sang the Handel aria in magnificent style. The Lohengrin number at the close was one of the grandest things yet given at the festival. Del Puente sang his favorite "Toreador" song as an encore. Mme. Nordica gave the aria "Una Voce" to piano accompaniment as an encore to "Let the Bright Seraphim" and the audience would have kept Campanini singing until the end of the evening had not the genial tenor interposed an objection. Wilczek, the violinist, played both selections admirably. The closing concert to-morrow evening will be devoted to a performance of Handel's "Israel in Egypt."

The New-York Times.

TEN PAGES.

NEW-YORK, THURSDAY, SEPT. 24, 1891.

"THE REPENTANCE OF NINEVEH."

A DISAPPOINTING DAY AT THE WORCESTER MUSIC FESTIVAL.

WORCESTER, Mass., Sept. 23.—The results of the second day of the music festival at this place have been disappointing. This is simply explained. The principal interest of the day centered in the production of "The Repentance of Nineveh," the dramatic oratorio written by Dr. J. Frederick Bridges, organist of Westminster Abbey, for last year's festival at Worcester, England. Much was expected, but little was received.

The work is a notable specimen of English industry and learning, together with that total lack of melodic invention which characterizes contemporaneous choral writings in the tight little island. But perhaps it would be as well first to say a word or two about the book. The author of it is Mr. Joseph Bennett, a distinguished anti-Wagnerite musical critic and operatic librettist. He is distinguished in England. This is a distinction with a difference. The book on Jonah is one of the shortest in the Bible, and perhaps its most dramatic episode is the temporary restriction of Jonah's activity within the confines of a whale. Mr. Bennett remembers the difficulties which Wagner had with the dragon and omitted the whale, probably to the great relief of Dr. Bridges, who would undoubtedly have had great difficulty in embodying the Behemoth in tones. Dr. Bridges was not afraid to compose a theme to represent Jonah's gourd, but a gourd is a small and inoffensive product of the earth. It did not swallow Jonah. The whale did, and he might have swallowed the unhappy composer.

The scheme of Mr. Bennett's book is boldly simple. The King comes home from a war and is feeling rather happy, when Jonah prophesies that the city will be destroyed in forty days. The prophet is threatened with death, but the King's daughter, a product of Mr. Bennett's weird fancy, intercedes for him. Jonah goes away and reposes in the shadow of his gourd. Thirty-nine days have passed and Ninevah has not been destroyed. The gourd withers and Jonah objects in a minor key. The voice of the Lord in four parts reproaches him. The next scene shows the royal family and the people of Ninevah assembled before the palace on the fortieth day. All are frightened, except the Queen. There is a thunderstorm. Every one cries for mercy, and then Jonah proclaims that the Lord is long-suffering, after which all join in a hymn of praise, and the oratorio ends.

And that is what Mr. Joseph Bennett fondly imagines is matter for a dramatic oratorio. Perhaps more space has already been given to this prosy work than it deserves, but it must be added that the music is worthy of the book. It is like the earth before the creation, without form and void. It is like eternity, in that it has no beginning, middle, nor end. It has no climax and it has no point. It has no melody, and its harmonies are not worthy of consideration. The rhythms are awkward, and the composer has taken unjustifiable liberties with the accents of the Queen's English, considering that the book is dedicated to her most gracious Majesty by "her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subject and servant." This is hazardous. If her gracious Majesty has a fair acquaintance with her own tongue, she may not consider Dr. Bridges a very dutiful subject, though his loyalty is plainly shown in the care with which he has refrained from writing a single measure that might cause any loyal Briton to suspect him of either Dreibund or Slavonic tendencies. On the contrary, there could be no surer way to preserve the peace of Europe than to compel all persons whose blood beats with the pulse of impending war to sit through a performance of "The Repentence of Nineveh," for they would sink into a deep and contended slumber, the wicked would cease from troubling, and the weary be at rest.

The performance of this soothing example of Oxford musical learning was passable. The soloists were Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Carl Alves, Herbert Johnson, and Carl Dufft. The ladies both sang well. Mr. Johnson's style was peaceful and appropriate. Mr. Dufft imparted breadth and dignity to the measures of the King. The chorus sang without precision, vim, or color. The orchestra was at least inoffensive.

The performance of the oratorio was preceded by four selections, the overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis," by Gluck; Rubinstein's dry and uninteresting scene, "Hagar in the Wilderness," well sung by Mrs. Alves; the pretty intermezzo from Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana," and the waltz song from Gounod's sugary "Romeo and Juliet," sung tolerably by Mme. Nordica. Her singing delighted the audience, and the applause compelled her to respond with the polacca from "Mignon," which she did not sing in a manner worthy of her supposed rank as an artist.

The afternoon concert was chiefly instrumental. The orchestra played Schumann's D minor symphony, the andantino and scherzo of Tschaikowsky's F minor symphony, and Grieg's "Peer Gynt" suite. Victor Herbert played in his usual excellent style Saint-Saëns's concerto in A minor for violoncello. Mrs. Julie Wyman sang very well, indeed, the aria "Oh, Fatal Gift" from Verdi's "Don Carlos," and Mrs. S. C. Ford sang in a praiseworthy manner Mozart's concert aria, "Bella mia Fiamma."

The best work done by the orchestra in the course of the day was in the Gluck overture this evening. The Schumann symphony was a colorless smear. The features of to-morrow's concerts will undoubtedly be E. A. MacDowell's new orchestral suite and Victor Herbert's cantata, "The Captive," though it is expected that the performance of the latter will not be of the first quality.

THE WORCESTER TELEGRAM.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1891.

WAGNER'S GREATEST MUSIC.

The Artists Shine Forth in a Brilliant Concert.

American Composers Recognized in the Afternoon.

People Present at the Evening Concert.

Both socially and musically, last night's Festival concert reached the pinnacle, and, with the remembrance of past successes in mind, it is safe to say that no better Thursday night performance has yet been listed in the annals of the association's successes.

The afternoon concert, introducing several new works, and giving American composers the preference, was a success in itself. Yesterday was a red letter day.

The morning rehearsal was patronized by an audience that completely filled the hall.

There is one unfortunate thing about having the piano at the extreme left, out of sight of most of the audience. The singers, when they come out for an encore, have to stand at the left of the stage, and people in the north gallery get slight view of them. But almost anything is better than stumbling over chair and music stands in attempting to reach the instrument on the stage.

To-day, comes another symphony concert, and Franz Rummel, the pianist, and, to close the Festival, the "Israel in Egypt." It ought to be a great performance.

The audience last night was the swellest that Worcester could furnish. The Telegram's reporters recognized scores of the people present, and the following is a partial list:—

PEOPLE WHO LISTENED.

Names of Those Who Helped Make the Audiences.

Among those present during the day were Mayor F. A. Harrington and wife.
Hon. Joseph H. Walker and wife.
Hon. Edward L. Davis.
Alderman Lyman A. Ely and wife.
Rev. Dr. D. O. Mears and wife.
Rev. Dr. Archibald McCullagh and wife.
Rev. Dr. A. Z. Conrad and wife.
Hon. Henry L. Parker.
Hon. John R. Thayer and wife.
Alderman George C. Whitney and wife.
Col. Samuel E. Winslow and wife.
Joseph Walker and wife.
Principal John G. Wight and wife.
District Attorney F. A. Gaskill.
Fred L. Coes and wife.
Charles F. Rugg and wife.
Rev. C. M. Southgate and wife.
Charles A. Merrill and wife.
Friewaldau C. Thayer and wife.
Dr. Henry S. Knight and wife.
A. M. Stone and wife.
Elmer G. Tucker and wife.
William H. Cook and wife.
H. B. Lincoln and wife.
F. W. Ruggles and wife.
Freeman Brown and wife.
George N. Morse and wife.
Dr. F. H. Kendrick and wife.
Richard J. Healey and wife.
E. I. Comins and wife.
Edward Green and wife.
George F. Hutchins and wife.
B. D. Allen and wife.
Seth Richards and wife.
George T. Witherby and wife.
Arthur E. Dennis and wife.
H. H. Merriam and wife.
J. A. Colvin and wife.
Elmer Tucker and wife.
C. A. Richardson and wife.
Matthew J. Whittall and wife.
Rev. F. W. Bailey,
E. A. Goodnow,
Loring Coes,
C. M. Bent,
W. S. Kennedy,
C. A. Williams,
O. B. Hadwen,
Harry D. Nye,
Newton Darling,
L. E. B. Lamson,
Arthur E. Gray,
Dr. E. D. Fitch,
E. L. Sumner,
A. H. Merriam,
W. A. Gray,
J. M. Barrett,
Arthur J. Barrett,
W. H. Gaylord,
Dwight Dunn,
D. Osborne Earle,
Dr. A. W. Eldred,
Richard Hammond,
Mrs. A. P. Marble,
Mrs. Charles W. Smith,
Mrs. John C. Cutter,
Mrs. Harriet Goodrich,
Miss Lillie Davis,
Miss Mila Whitney,
Miss Christine Rice,
Miss Jessie Morse,
Miss Gunnison,
Miss Everett,
Miss May Gaskill,
Mrs. Frank H. Mason,
Mrs. W. S. Barton,
Mrs. C. G. Stowell,
Mrs. H. T. Osborne,
Miss Hattie Blood,
Miss Mamie Eaton,
Miss Mildred Crompton,
Miss Parker,
Miss Lamson,
Miss Ella Marble,
Miss Grace Bigelow,
Miss Sadie Hill,
Miss Nellie Marble,
Miss Evangeline Houghton,
Joseph S. Davis,
Stephen Salisbury,
Col. E. B. Glasgow,
E. F. Thompson,
Ben T. Hammond,
H. H. Chamberlin,
George Calvin Rice,
Harry Towne,
Paul B. Morgan,
Henry Goodman,
Fred W. White,
H. B. Swart,
J. K. Greene,
George T. Woodward,
A. H. Hammond,
George Bancroft,
George Moore,
Frank B. Hall,
George Walker,
George D. Kelly,
Walter Perley Hall,
Willis E. Sibley,
Mrs. J. A. Rice,
Mrs. W. Ansel Washburn,
Mrs. W. H. Coughlin,
Miss Anna Colvin,
Miss Millie Eaton,
Miss Carrie Earle,
Miss Lottie Wilder,
Miss Elizabeth Parmelee,
Miss Monroe,
Mrs. C. E. Minkler,
Mrs. S. E. Lawton,
Mrs. Adams Claflin,
Miss Mabel Davis,
Miss Josephine Smith,
Miss Mabel Stone,
Miss Ruth Stone,
Miss Fannie Hair,
Miss Dottie Prentice,
Miss Edith Washburn,
Miss Mary Doe,
Miss Maud S. Bosworth,
Miss Lottie Taft,
Miss Grace Hill,
Miss Adelaide Wyman.

FIRST PERFORMANCES.

Victor Herbert's "Captive" Received With a Strong Show of Enthusiasm.

The afternoon concert was notable for the fact that three of the works performed had their first presentation at that time, and the two choral compositions had the further distinction of having been written especially for the Worcester Festival.

Victor Herbert's dramatic cantata, "The Captive," is his most important work, up to date, and in it is to be discerned no little promise for the future. The chorus did not wholly do him justice, yesterday afternoon, and it looked at times as if the orchestra would have to be prodded with a stick; but the work itself is a good one.

It occupied about 45 minutes, and had no break whatever. It begins with a prelude full of poetic suggestion. The first chorus, in moderately quick time, shaded to a slower movement at the conclusion, is a happy introduction to the story, with fine work for the instruments to do, as well as the chorus. The chorus sang this part better than it did others following.

The slow funeral march, which represents the warriors passing by with their chained captive, who is doomed to death, is sufficiently lugubrious, and the undertone of sorrow is well [illegible]

The solo and chorus following brought on Mrs. Seabury Ford again, in a scene strongly dramatic and working up to an almost frenzied climax, in which the soprano and the heavy brass have a tussle of the hardest kind for supremacy. Yesterday the odds seemed to be with the brass, at first, and Mrs. Ford's voice was put to its best. She surmounted the difficulty more than at first appeared likely.

They Needed Yeast.

The chorus did not seem wholly sure whether it would be better to sing the next chorus standing or sitting. Several desperate waves of Mr. Herbert's hand, however, finally got them all up.

Mr. Carl Dufft had a long recitative, which he did not sing with enthusiasm, but his smooth, firm voice was true to the notes and suffered no mishap.

Mr. Herbert must be given a great deal of credit for the concluding chorus, which was sung, like the first one, better than the intermediate work. It is thoroughly artistic, and is brought to a dramatic climax, with a strong and harmonious blending of the voices.

When it was done, the hand-clapping was quickly supplemented by cheering, which was generally taken up, and Mr. Herbert certainly had the most gratifying evidence of the good will of his audience. His work in conducting was of great interest, because of the sure index it is to a composer's own ideas and sentiments.

The program of the afternoon opened with the mass in C minor, which the lamented G. Arthur Adams wrote for production at our Festival and which was here first given a place on the program. Worcester people know the composer well. A North Brookfield boy, the son of Charles Adams, prominent in many ways throughout the commonwealth, he gave evidence of the possession of talent at an early age. He chummed somewhat with Lon Stoddard, and was a musician for the love of it, careless of preserving his work, often of value to which he did not grant it title, and, in his instincts, Bohemian to the core. Yet this mass which was performed yesterday is certainly pervaded with a deep religious spirit, the beautiful music combining with the sonorous Latin of the magnificent Roman church service in a way which might almost be believed to catch the ear of the harkening archangels.

Nature of the Work.

This work depends on the chorus as well as upon the strong solo parts, for a faithful interpretation, and the chorus seemed to appreciate it for the most part; but they did not always get out the first note on time. The attack was slow, for instance, where there is a glorious strain of praise, "Osanna in excelsis." "Sanna" isn't "Osanna," nor "Hosanna," by a good deal. But the "Cum sancto spiritu" chorus was splendidly done, and the "Give us peace" at the end, also.

Mrs. Jennie Patrick-Walker has been a church singer of note, though not in work of this kind. Her soprano solo, just after the creed, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Sabbaoth. The heavens and earth are full of thy glory," was a magnificent performance. The purity of her voice was no less marked than the depth of expression, and the sustaining power would attract the notice of the veriest tyro.

The alto solo, "O lamb of God, who takest away the sins of the world," was Mrs. Julie L. Wyman's opportunity to sing well. Mrs. Wyman's voice is smooth and even. It would be a mistake to give it too ambitious music, but she sang this supplication to the throne of grace with tenderness and the touch of an apparent faith which is exactly what the composer designed to have appear.

Mr. Albert Lester King, whose blond pompadour was matched by his equally blond voice, seemed to have little idea of what "Thou only art holy" means. His voice is rather thin and not always true to the work in hand.

Dr. G. R. Clark, the Ruggles-street quartet basso, sang the part with Mrs. Walker in a deep voice, which was lacking in flexibility and yet had a satisfactory strength.

The quartet and chorus "Blessed be he who cometh in the name of the Lord," was a fine thing.

It is only a suggestion for the making of future program books that when the Latin words are to be sung, as they were yesterday, it would be better to give a literal translation, especially of the mass, than to print the English words written to fit the music.

The mass is an enduring monument to the composer, and is unlikely ever to be heard with any sensation other than those of pleasure and profit.

Orchestral Music.

The suite by E. A. MacDowell, which was the other "first performance" of the afternoon, is one of the most pleasing works the orchestra has played. Mr. MacDowell is an American, like Arthur Adams, and taken with the "Captive," since Mr. Herbert likes to be ranked as an American composer, it showed the possibilities of American musical talent.

This suite has four movements, similar in subject matter, though varied in time. "In a Haunted Forest," "A Summer Idyl," "The Shepherdess Song," and "Forest Spirits" are the titles, and the rest is left to the imagination.

The opening movement is sustained by the full orchestra, and from a somewhat languorous beginning, awakes to a decided liveliness. The "Summer Idyl" and the "Shepherdess Song" are both short, the first in lively time, and the second a slow movement, while the full orchestra again takes up the work in the last movement.

Carl Dufft was the only artist who had "a song to sing" at the afternoon concert. It was "The Heavenly Message," here first sung in America, the program said. It might have been improved upon as a selection for a Festival concert. Mr. Dufft sang it so well that he was called back, and then he sang a little ballad that made a pretty encore.

BRILLIANT MUSIC.

The Evening Program Studded With Gems of Song.

It is not easy to recall an "artists' night" concert more notable for its program or for the performance of the selections thereon than was that of last evening.

Wagner was the central figure in the program, and the first magnitude stars of the Festival did the singing.

The "Faust Overture," with which the concert opened, is decidedly Faustlike in its spirit, and the orchestra put that spirit in it throughout.

Then came Del Puente, who smiled like a June morning. He was as airy as a dancing master, and indulged in a remarkable red handkerchief. His agreeable baritone was never more agreeable than in the "Eri tu" air from Verdi's "Masked Ball." He had a gracefulness of expression that captivated the audience, and when he came back, after a long recall, and the orchestra struck into the famous "Toreador" song from "Carmen," the audience, recognizing it, applauded the selection and, afterward, the singer again. Del Puente kissed his hand and made the little gestures learned in opera. He was very stagey.

Miss Lena Little sang the air from "Samson and Delilah," "My heart at thy sweet voice swift unfolds like a flower." The slow movement she sang especially well. It was an artistic performance, but not a popular one.

Campanini made his appearance in

The "Narrative" of Lohengrin, from the great Wagner opera. He exhibited his marvellous range of voice at the expense of gracefulness, and grew as red as a lobster before he finally let go his last high notes. He sang for an encore the "Addio" from "Mignon." But it was in the trio that he was resplendent.

The audience was introduced a second time to Grieg's Norwegian music, in the "Elegiac melody" for stringed orchestra—cleverly rendered.

Mme. Nordica was triumphant in the "Samson" air, "Let the bright Seraphim," with the notes of a trumpet giving an effective color to the piece. Clear and strong were her tones, and her easy, confident manner lent no little charm to the song. The audience could not have too much of Nordica, and she was called back to sing an air of Rossini, "Te Berliere."

Franz Wilczek is a young man, already a virtuoso. When he played the Vieuxtemp's caprice he commanded the closest attention of his hearers. He fingered and bowed in the most artistic way, and made of the music, "in itself" a characteristically delightful work of the composer, a strong addition to the program. His encore piece was a very Spanish-like gypsy dance of Pablo de Sarasate.

The great trio, "What new delight is cheering me," from Verdi's "I Lombardi," brought out Del Puente, Campanini and Madame Nordica. It was a fortunate combination in most respects. Del Puente was more likeable than ever. Mme. Nordica sang against the tenor and baritone with great power and lost none of the sweetness of her voice. Campanini sang as if to break something. If the truth be told, Campanini simply yelled. It was a musical yell, no doubt; but it is entirely just to say that his performance was not characterized by thorough good taste. It is no use for a singer to split his throat. The trio had to have an encore, and it sufficed to repeat, including the yell, perhaps somewhat modified.

The intermission came late, but it was not cut short, and the great hall presented a truly festal and social scene. When the bugle sounded the "retreat," there was a lively squeezing into place, and the orchestra took up the Richter arrangement of "Siegfried's passage to Brunnhilde's rock, "Morning dawn and Rhine journey," from "Siegfried" and the "Gotterdammerung." This is picturesque Wagnerian scenic work, and the instruments handled it well.

Mme. Nordica came on once more to sing Senta's ballad from the "Flying Dutchman," in which she was on a par with her previous splendid efforts, but it was too late for recalls.

Franz Wilczek played again, this time the "Prize song" from "Die Meistersinger," and then came the closing, the prayer and finale to act one of Lohengrin. All the vocal artists of the earlier program had part in this, with the addition of Dr. Clark, whose bass was effective and agreeable. The chorus sang Wagner better than was to be looked for.

The Wagnerian program was a success. The people liked it. It was interesting to think how great a stir the first production of "Lohengrin" created in Paris, last week, and how the hostile Frenchmen were completely melted by the music of the hated German and acknowledged his power in applause which must have come hard to them.

The people understand Wagner better than they did in times past and their appreciation of these selections from his works speaks well for the educational forces constantly at work in the Festival scheme.

ABOUT THE AUDIENCE.

Notes That Will Interest Artists and Audience Alike.

At points of yesterday morning's rehearsal, both Campanini and Nordica took the dictation of affairs into their own hands. In both cases the orchestra stood the brunt of criticism, and once Campanini mounted the patriotically draped rostrum and swung the baton.

Rev. W. W. Sleeper of Stoneham, formerly of this city, is, with his wife, attending the week's concerts.

Mrs. Julia L. Wyman left immediately after her afternoon appearance for Boston. From there she goes to Chicago, where she is to sing next Sunday. She has an engagement with Nikish, and is to travel with him during the present season in the East. Albert Lester King also left yesterday, going to New York.

James MaGranahan, the well known composer of religious hymns, was at the concert, last evening, with his wife. Mr. MaGranahan, who wrote several of his hymns in this city, was greeted by many of his friends. He is to be in the city through to-day.

Mrs. E. A. McDowell, wife of the composer whose suite in A minor was given its first bow to an audience, yesterday afternoon, was present during the concert.

Madame Nordica's costumes will become a Festival tradition. If the Worth, in which she was attired Wednesday, was magnificent, there is no adjective to describe that which she wore last evening. It, too, was a Worth, and elaboration was written in every detail. It was a Venetian costume, the idea being carried out even to the richly embroidered headdress, which bore a wealth of diamonds. The dress itself was of pale green satin, with fawn colored velvet trimmings, richly embroidered. The garment was cut with a court train. Madame Nordica wore a profusion of diamonds.

All the hotels are full to overflowing. Among visitors who are in attendance are Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Gould Carr, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Wilmot V. Metcalf, Northfield, Minn.; Miss Soule, Taunton; Miss Isabelle T. Clark, Portland; W. H. Leowani, Brooklyn; George S. Sydney, Brooklyn; N. T. Nichols, Miss Kittie Nichols, Newton, N. H.; E. M. Dexter and wife, Philadelphia; Thomas P. Currier, Boston; Henry D. Yeaton, Boston; Fred Roblin, New York; Charles W. Gray, Boston;

Worcester Spy

THE SPY SHOULD HAVE THE EYE OF ARGUS: HE IS HONORABLE IF HE DO BUT LOOK TO THE WELFARE OF THE COMMONWEALTH

WORCESTER.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 25, 1891.

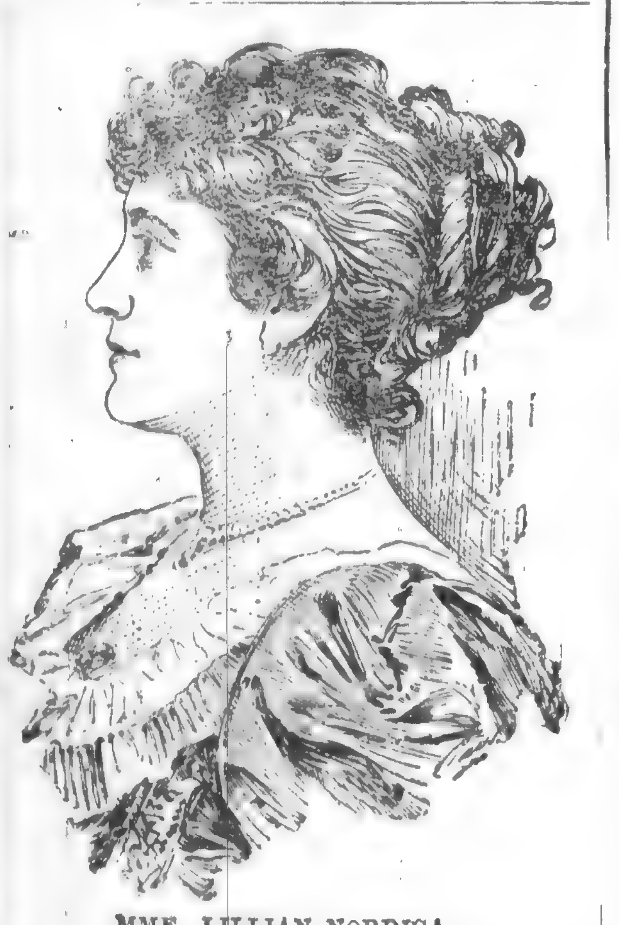
AMERICANS AND WAGNER.

THEY MONOPOLIZED TWO CONCERT PROGRAMS.

THE TIDE OF FESTIVAL SUCCESS STILL UNSTEMMED.

NEARLY ALL THE NEW MUSIC COMES OUT FINELY—A BRILLIANT EVENING PERFORMANCE AND A SPLENDID AUDIENCE.

After the third day has passed, and after two successive concerts have developed so much enthusiasm as was shown yesterday, there is a strong temptation to recount the fortunes of war, and to look over the list of killed, wounded and missing. Only one is reported dead, only one was seriously wounded, and, up to the present time, nothing and nobody is missing. These somewhat sanguinary observations are inspired by the reflection that disappointment seems to be an ordained factor of human experience in general, and not of Worcester festivals in particular. On the whole, it appears that the festival thus far has been the most satisfactory that has been given for five years—perhaps the most satisfactory ever given. Certainly it is the most dignified and the most worthy of the name. No soloist that has been weighed in the balance has been found seriously wanting in the part assigned. As a whole, the corps of soloists has proved to be exceptionally efficient. The new music has turned out well. "Nineveh" is dead and "The Captive" has been badly lacerated, but it is not beyond resuscitation and recovery under proper surgical treatment. None of the works announced has been given up, and every soloist has responded at roll call.



MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

The concerts yesterday were not disappointing. The afternoon was given up to American composers exclusively, and none of the music had ever before been executed in public save Mr. Coombs' song, which had been heard in Germany. Of the other music, McDowell's new suite is the most important work, not only because of the fame of the composer (who is recognized abroad), but because of its high intrinsic merit. Some may question whether Mr. Herbert's cantata is worth the effort necessary to its thoroughly adequate performance, but nobody can doubt its absolute beauty, or fail to recognize the musicianly cleverness with which it is constructed. Of the evening performance little really need be said, except that Wagner monopolized it, that the program as a whole was interesting, that the soloists were artists of large artistic accomplishments; that there was no disappointment, and that the audience was enthusiastic.

ALL NEW MUSIC.

McDOWELL'S ORCHESTRAL SUITE AND HERBERT'S CANTATA THE MOST IMPORTANT FEATURES.

The performance of G. Arthur Adams' mass in C minor, with which the afternoon concert began, was a deserved tribute to a talented and conscientious musician, who lived and died within the immediate personal influence of the Worcester festival and its promotors. Its dignified, churchly music presents numerous features that the people will applaud, as they did yesterday. The quartet who sang the solo and concerted numbers was well suited to give a worthy interpretation of even a more ambitious work. The singers were Mrs. Jennie Patrick-Walker, Mrs. J. L. Wyman, Albert Lester King and Dr. G. R. Clark. Mr. King's Quoniam tu solus, Mrs. Wyman's Et incanatus and agnus dei and Mrs. Walker's sanctus, together with various bits of concerted music and choruses, evoked hearty applause. This was its first public performance.

Mr. McDowell's suite in A minor, op. 42, which was also brought out for the first time, proved to be an extraordinarily delicate example of mysticism and romance. Hitherto Mr. McDowell has confined himself with fidelity to music of a more formal character, but the first flight of his unrestrained imagination shows that his muse is well trained, circumspect and skillful. Some day the genesis and evolution of the modern orchestral suite will be an interesting historical study. It is a characteristic modern growth, a result of the reaching out after new forms of expression for ideas, such as the romantic school of composers has believed to be inexpressible in the old classic forms? The classic suite is by no means the suite of modern romanticists.

A technical analysis of Mr. McDowell's lovely music is of no special value to the occasional reader now. The first movement, "In a haunted forest," is largamente misterioso, with all the mystery and suggestiveness that the bassoons, 'celli, double basses and drums, assisted by the entire wood wind, the horns and the violins pizzicato can lend to it. It puts the listener in the same frame of mind as Reade's "The House and the Brain," or Bulwer's "Strange Story." Next comes a summer idyl, allegretto grazioso, with all the grace and dreamy sweetness of the woods in summer. The third movement is a dainty song for a shepherdess, andantino semplice, full of freshness and innocence. The finale, an orgie of forest spirits, is as weird, tumultuous and preternatural as "Tam O'Shanter." It is a molto allegro and the instrumentation returns to character of the first movement, only with an increase of vigor that sometimes amounts to positive fury. The first and last movements are by far the most effective of the suite. Before the close there is a brief episode, somewhat slow, wherein the ghouls and goblins stay their mad flight for a moment before making a final wild rush, accelerando, and disappearing in a roar of wind and storm. The suite caused emphatic demonstrations of pleasure on the part of the audience.

C. Whitney Coombs, the composer of "The Heavenly Message," did not appear personally. His song is a sort of Virginia Gabriel music with orchestral accompaniment. Carl Dufft, to whom it was assigned, won very flattering applause for his resonant voice and his straightforward singing. The piece was unworthy of its surroundings. Mr. Dufft's encore was Lessen's "Es War ein Traum," very prettily sung.

Victor Herbert's dramatic cantata, "The Captive," written especially for the festival, deserved a more thorough performance than it received. It was sadly cut. Nevertheless enough was given, however, to demonstrate the very great beauty of the work. The choral parts are very difficult, and so little progress had the chorus once made in the study of the music that it was given up and remained discarded for some days. It may wisely be repeated next year, when, with longer training, a more worthy performance may be given. The soloists, Mrs. Seabury C. Ford and Mr. Dufft, did themselves credit. Mrs. Ford, the soprano, fairly redeemed herself. Hers was a very embarrassing situation, in the ensemble (midway of the work), where the orchestra blew and fiddled with its utmost strength, and where the full chorus, which should have been present to balance things, was entirely omitted because the big choir had not mastered the difficult music. Other large portions of the work were omitted for similar reason.

It has become a trite remark nowadays to say that a composer's work shows the influence of Wagner. Mr. Adams' mass certainly did not show that influence. Mr. McDowell's suite showed it in a degree, but Mr. Herbert's cantata most of all. The finale, with the sopranos shrieking in their topmost register, the full orchestral covering every register, the sudden suspension for a brief pianissimo, and then the final crash, is almost a reminiscence of Bayreuth. Mr. Herbert's long experience with the orchestra has made him quite a master of its possibilities, and his new cantata demonstrates that he can also write effectively for voices in mass or in solo, and that he knows how to combine them splendidly with the orchestra. There will doubtless be some who say that he does not write well for voices. This criticism is based on much the same ground as are similar criticisms of other and older composers, notably Beethoven. He writes music so hard that singers and conductors despair of ever executing it properly. To a certain degree this is of course a fault. Music must be adapted to the instrument for which it is designed. Nevertheless there are much worse faults than this, and the graver faults Mr. Herbert happily avoids. He is always interesting, and very seldom ineffective. His melody is manly, yet sympathetic and appropriate to the sentiment to be exemplified. His instrumentation is finished, rich and strongly colored, and his harmony is varied and satisfying. Finally, the romantic story of his cantata is worth the telling. A warrior captive, doomed to death, but selected for redemption by a princess, on condition of marrying her, prefers death rather than prove false to his betrothed at home.

Of the choral performance it is only necessary to say that the great body of singers seemed afraid of the work. Certain passages demanding special vigor and sharp attack sometimes failed of their immediate effect because of this. Mr. Herbert, who conducted, worked like a Trojan, and it is gratifying to record that much of the choral work performed was finely done. The final chorus was given with such admirable spirit, such unity and such strength as to prove that the association chorus is fully equal to the work if adequate training be given them.

Before the harmony of the last chord had died away the people were on their feet, cheering and clapping their hands and shouting, "Herbert," "Herbert." The young composer laid down his baton, bowed again and again to audience, chorus and orchestra, and held a reception all the way to the dressing room, shaking hands with soloists, players and other friends.

A POLYGLOT CONCERT.

GREAT ARTISTS, GOOD MUSIC AND A TYPICAL "ARTISTS' NIGHT" AUDIENCE.

The evening concert was long, but its story is soon told. It was good. The artists were all of recognized ability, and, with one or two exceptions, they sang or played music that was worthy of them. As an "artists' night," it was more than an ordinary success, for there was less to object to. Every seat in the house was taken, and there was a fringe of "standees" along the side aisles and extending far into the west ante-room. Enthusiasm ran high, for there was something on the program for everybody. With Handel, Wagner, Verdi, Grieg and St. Saens each represented, what could any one desire? Classicist, romanticist, Wagnerite and Italianissimo—each found his own private dish on the bill of fare. It was a polyglot program—sung in English, German, Italian and French, while there was Norse and Spanish music to be played. When Campanini sang in "Arminius" Tuesday night, patrons enjoyed the spectacle of seeing as well as hearing an Italian singing German music in English. Last night the same singer became so excited while singing in the first act of "Lohengrin" that he forsook the English text entirely, and sang the German music in Italian.

The audience was quite as hilarious as ever it was in the "good old times" of cheaper music. Nearly everybody was encored. With such a list of soloists, nothing but carelessness on the part of the artist could bring disappointment. As was the case with Nordica, in the Mignon polonaise, Wednesday night, even a great artist may strike a wrong note, or may lose her place in the score. Happily nothing serious happened last night to mar the perfection of the work. To mention the names of the singers should be equivalent to saying that the work was well done.

The concert began with a good interpretation of Wagner's "Faust Overure," and Del Puente then sang with abundant fervor the "Eri tu" romance" from Verdi's "Masked Ball" His encore was a sprightly rendering of the "Carmen" Toreador's song. Miss Lena Little sang "My heart at thy sweet voice," an aria from St. Saens' "Samson and Delilah," and sang it well, but without special power. Campanini sang the "Lohengrin" narrative and carried all before him. He had had quite a scene with the orchestra at the morning rehearsal because he found that the accompaniment was not Wagner's own (to which he had been accustomed), and he couldn't get the expected cues. "Vere is da horn? I do not hear it," he said with emphasis. Happily the difficulty was satisfactorily adjusted. His encore was a Mignon song. He was singing less easily than usual. Mme. Nordica then appeared in, "Let the bright seraphim," and stirred up another furore. Her response was "The Barber of Seville" aria, "Una voce poco fa," which was the least enjoyable thing she had sung. The Handel aria was not begun auspiciously, but it progressed and came out finely, despite an occasional divergence of trumpet and voice. Franz Wilczek, the young violinist, played a tuneful, but not trivial fantasie caprice, written by Vieuxtemps, and displayed good poetic sentiment, as well as thorough command of technique. He also was vociferously recalled. He played a Sarasate Gipsy dance, that begins with a tune and ends with a fizz-click-snip-snap-bang. To finish this part of the program, Nordica, Campanini and Del Puente gave the famous trio from "I Lombardi," with a dash that fairly took the audience off their feet. It had to be repeated.

The second part of the program was devoted wholly to Wagner. First there was Hans Richter's concert arrangement of Siegfried's passage to Brunnhilde's rock, morning dawn and Rhine journey ("Siegfried" and "Gotterdammerung"), for orchestra. Mme. Nordica sang "Senta's ballad" from the "Flying Dutchman," and achieved another popular triumph. Then came the "Meistersinger" prize song, played by Mr. Wilczek, exactly why on the violin it is impossible to say. Last of all was the prayer and finale from the first act of "Lohengrin," with Mme. Nordica, Miss Little, Campanini, Del Puente and Dr. G. R. Clark as soloists, with chorus and orchestra. The Wagner music was well done and never lacked for popular applause. Wagner seldom lacks that nowadays. The "Lohengrin" finale, especially, was sung and played with adequate power and dramatic appreciation, and gave the concert a very forceful ending.

Some excuse is to be made for soloists who have sung with the little piano that stands at one side between the stage. It is tuned a half tone above the orchestral pitch, and from its position it can be very imperfectly heard by the singer on the stage. This is said to account for some curious lapses of tune in certain encores. The embarrassment of the situation is obvious to all singers.

GATHERED IN THE ANTE-ROOMS.

RECEPTIONS TO NORDICA AND ZERRAHN—WHAT THE ARTISTS SAY ABOUT THEIR WORK—CAMPANINI'S MASCOT.

There's a little world all by itself back of the portieres which hang at the front of the stage, and which extend to the east entrances to the hall, and here the artists congregate and gossip over the concerts. Here everybody can speak half a dozen languages and feel as much at home in one as in the others. Here there is nervousness and excitement and a constant flutter, and each has a criticism to offer, which would make the ablest critic in the hall fairly green with envy. Then there are French maids and chaperons and a well-patronized ice water tank and the general hurly-burly of the mysterious place commonly known as "behind the scenes." During the intermission a crowd of inquisitive and curious persons takes a run through this space, whispers in an awe-struck voice, "That's she," "There's Campanini," stands for a moment awe-struck, then wanders back to its proper place outside the portiere, the orchestra strikes up and the artists resume their gossip. Everybody, of course, talked last night about Mme. Nordica's success and the lovely singer was overwhelmed with congratulations.

Campanini also came in for a lion's share of praise, and Del Puente was a great favorite.

When Campanini had finished his solo and had received an overwhelming encore, he attempted a selection from Mignon with piano accompaniment, and, while the majority of the audience was wholly satisfied, he came back to the artists' room completely disgusted, and complained vehemently because the instrument had been tuned half a tone higher than the orchestral pitch.

Madame Nordica had the same difficulty to surmount in her encore, but she caught the pitch quickly and completed her solo to the evident satisfaction of the audience.

Miss Lena Little is a bright, vivacious New Orleans girl, who has won a reputation by hard work. She has a splendid figure and is an interesting conversationalist, entertaining a Spy reporter last evening with information gained during her travels. She leaves for New York tonight, and will sing in Milwaukee next week.

Mrs. Ford goes to New York tonight to study for a few weeks. She has been approached for an engagement at the Taunton music festival. Campanini and Herbert both leave for home tonight.

Mme. Nordica held a short reception at her apartments at the Bay State, last evening, after the concert. Only intimate friends were present, and the tired but supremely happy prima donna enjoyed the entertainment to the utmost. There was no formality, and only one or two Worcester friends were among the party. Ben T. Hammond was there and Eben Francis Thompson, the other guests being from out of town. Mme. Nordica will leave the city today.

Carl Zerrahn was also given an informal reception at his rooms in the same hotel, to which Campanini and other artists were invited.

The audience last evening was the best dressed of the week, many ladies being in full evening costume and many gentlemen who had not worn a dress suit before at a festival, donned a swallow-tail and added to the festive appearance of the gathering. The artists notice the attention paid to dress and many compliments were paid the audience.

Nearly all the ladies in the chorus were in white.

Mme. Nordica was more charming than ever last night, and wore another Worth creation of even more conspicuous beauty than the costome of the night before. It was in reproduction an old Venetian robe, with a skirt of sea foam green satin, cut en train, elaborately trimmed with apslique velvet in delicate red colorings brocaded with gold. The waist was cut round at the neck, the top of the corsage encircled with a band of sapphires and diamonds; long sleeves also thickly studded with gems. A petit bonnet was the crowning glory of the costume, and on its design M. Worth himself spent three days of hard study. Fully $10,000 in diamonds gave an eclat to this gown, which was simply stunning.

Mrs. Ford awoke yesterday with a fearful headache, which threatened to sadly interfere with her day's werk, but rather heroic measures saved the day, and at the opening of the afternoon concert she was in splendid spirits.

Miss Mary Howe was the centre of attraction during the afternoon concert, and held a miniature reception during the intermission. She has grown a bit heavier. but is as handsome as ever. She is stopping with Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Marble.

Campanini was present at Wednesday evening's concert as a listener, and heard for the first time the orchestral production of the intermezzo from the Cavalleria Rusticana. He studied the entire opera with the composer Mascagni, in Pulma, Italy, and when informed by a Spy man yesterday that Emma Juch would produce the entire work here in October he said with a shrug, "Ah! these Americans, they are constantly hunting for something new, and in this opera they have a good thing. They don't appreciate such works, however, as Europeans do." He then quoted "Il Trovatore," which was such a phenomenal success at its first performances. but which is now completely lost sight of in the chase for novelties.

Festival audiences are patient and willing to accept most any choice of music by the management, but the "Repentance of Nineveh" is sorely criticised by all. Some didn't like the music, and all agree that it was too long drawn out. Many expressed an opinion that the program would have been more satisfactory if Nineveh had been destroyed earlier in the evening and the rest of the performance given while the ruins were being removed.

Signor Campanini has a "mascot." It is an unassuming cane, cut from a malacca joint and ornamented with a silver crook. This he always carries with him, rain or shine, and says that his luck is invariably good while it is near by.

Hotel proprietors are beaming with joy, and the registers were crowded with names again last night.

At the Bay State House are: Edward W. Lowe, Franz Wilczek, D. Kaplaw, D. J. Levett and wife, H. P. Wood, J. A. Von Geuchton, E. C. Fischer, Wm. C. Adams, J. L. Lovie, Miss Anna B. Evans of New York; D. Scudder, E. A. Thayer, Chas. A. White, Fred B. Curler, Jonas M. Miles, G. H. Chadwick, Chester Snow, Jr., Max Zach, Wm. H. Gray, George W. Wheeler, Peter Barr, Edward E. Hall of Boston; Fred W. Patterson, Mt. Vernon, N. Y.; A. N. Dorchester, Providence; L. J. Lockett, Southwick; J. M. Young, Hamilton, Canada; A. McNaff, Montreal; H. R. Luther, J. Achner, Cambridge; Henry F. Trask, Springfield; R. W. Thurston and wife, Mrs. Jefferson Borden, Jr., Mrs. J. H. Franklin, Fall River; H. L. Metherson, Pomfret; Mrs. A. Gardner, T. P. Coughler, West Gardner; E. Hannachs, Newark; N. H. Spencer, Hartford; C. H. Hobbs and wife, Thorndike; George W. Wakeman, Bridgeport; John W. Ellis, Bridgeport; E. H. Stevens, Fitchburg; Marcus Herbert, Albany; George Sampson, St. Louis; Gardiner Taft, Concord, Mass.; A. Van Raalter, New York.

Mrs. A. F. Baldwin and Mrs. George A. Walker of Dorchester, sisters of Mme. Nordica, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Savels, 10 Melville street.

Miss Fanny Berry of the Remenyi Concert Company and Miss Emma Rice, contralto of Dr. Miner's Church, Boston, while attending the festival are the guests of Mrs. F. M. Clark.

James McGranahan, the gospel song writer and singer, was present with his wife at the festival concert last evening. His numerous friends will be glad to hear of his improving health.

TODAY'S REHEARSAL.

William A. Howland, the young Worcester baritone, has been invited by the festival management to sing an aria to a festival audience at 9 o'clock this morning. Franz Rummel rehearses the Rubinstein piano concerto, with orchestra, at 9.15. Mrs. Ford rehearses her "Bolero," from the "Sicilian Vespers," directly afterward, and Dr. G. R. Clark takes up the aria "She Alone Charmeth My Sadness," from the "Queen of Sheba," after which the chorus, soloists, orchestra and organ rehearse "Israel in Egypt."

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1891.

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL.

Third Day—A Programme of Novelties in the Afternoon—Works by American Composers—Artists' Night.

[Special Correspondence to the Transcript.]

WORCESTER, Sept 24.

What may fairly be considered the most interesting of the programmes prepared for this festival was that of this afternoon. It was as follows:

Mass in C minor..........................G. A. Adams
Solos by Mrs. J. P. Walker, Mrs. J. L. Wyman, Messrs. A. L. King and G. R. Clark.
Suite for orchestra in A minor, op. 42.E. A. MacDowell
"In a Haunted Forest;" Summer Idyl;" "The Shepherdess's Song;" "Forest Spirits."
Ballad, "The Heavenly Message"..C. Whitney Coombs
Mr. Carl Dufft.
Dramatic Cantata, "The Captive"........Victor Herbert
Solos by Mrs. S. C. Ford, Mr. Dufft.

All the music was new, only the ballad by Coombs having had a previous hearing any where, and that was in susceptible Europe The mass by Adams, and Mr. Herbert's piece were commissioned by the festival committee, while MacDowell's suite, had not been played elsewhere, though it was not Mr. Thomas's fault that it was not given as announced, together with Chadwick's "Melpomene" overture, at one of his New York concerts this summer. The mass need not detain us. It was written several years ago, and a wise procrastination withheld it from the public until this season, when the committee decided to perform it. It was an error. Mr. Adams, who is not living, might have become a composer, had he studied longer. The mass is musical, but not the work of a musician. Crude harmonies and unvocal writing meet one at every step. In his airs Mr. Adams shows himself a fertile but not a polished melodist, though his tunes have a certain saccharine quality pleasing to the ear of the half-cultured. The work was given with judicious cuts, and the chorus portions were generally well done. To the contralto voice falls the most effective of the solos; the bass, tenor and soprano parts suffer from the composer's experimenting, and in order named. Mrs. Walker did all that was possible with her trying music to make it interesting, and failed; Mr. King likewise; the tenor, by the way, did not appear at his best. Dr. Clark's deep bass made a good diapason for the quartet, and in his solos he was conscientious. The instrumentation of the mass is not unworthy the general level of ability apparent in the other portions. The mass was well received. Mr. MacDowell's new suite is a work of great fascination. The full modern orchestra, with all the adjuncts of percussion, is used in the first and fourth movements, the middle ones being more lightly scored. It is impossible to make extended comment on it at this time; and as the work must come to a hearing in Boston ere long, there will be an opportunity for Transcript readers to judge for themselves. What an artist our modest townsman is! What imagination, nice sense of proportion and color sense is his! In no one of his concertos or symphonic poems which have been heard in Boston is there so charming a touch as in this new suite, which is natural and spontaneous in every bar. The musical invention displayed is admirable, the quick flashes of humor in the more descriptive movement, their gayety and life are simply captivating. Here Mr. MacDowell is the American Moszkowsky. But he needs no such pillar of comparison. He is himself a lovely musical spirit. The sentiment of the slow movements is deep, though their length is brief. Indeed brevity and conciseness are prominent merits of the work, when everything moves naturally and without superfluous orchestral verbiage. The performance showed Mr. Zerrahn very much in earnest; it was not such a reading as the music will get later, but it was more than creditable. It was a great step for Worcester to take the work in advance of all others and bring it to performance. Mr. Coombs has seen the songs of Sullivan, and yet makes us think he thinks he knows a thing or two himself. He is said to be an industrious and worthy young man. Mr. Dufft has a fervent manner in singing and a good voice; he is naturally a good vocalist, but at present he seems to be experimenting with methods. That Mr. Herbert's cantata is less original than clever is admitted. That he has been a willing disciple of the instrumental school of the master of Bayreuth is true. But Mr. Herbert has studied long and faithfully and is emulating the manner of the musician who moves the world today, and has achieved a real success. His cantata is dramatic in spirit, though its story is silly. The orchestration is ingenious and artistic, displaying really fine musicianship. The work develops naturally, and in his use of themes there is a finely poetic feeling. The choral writing is difficult. So awkward rhythmically is the most important scene that an awful gash was made in it, taking away all the choir parts (it is a powerful ensemble of soprano and choir), leaving the single voice with only a surging orchestra beneath, a proceeding which sacrificed not only the most vigorous parts for choir, but marred the artistic contour of the whole. Had it not been for the impassioned singing of Mrs. Ford at this point, utter failure would have resulted, as the composer's meaning was completely set at naught by practising this artifice. "The Captive" was enthusiastically received. It should be said of the singing in the final chorus that it was the most spirited and musical of anything thus far this week. Mr. Herbert conducted.

"Artists' night" is a tradition in Worcester. It is an unfortunate one in many respects, for however much improvement the programme may show (and the one quoted below is vastly superior to any of its predecessors) the vicious practice of allowing extra performances on recalls neutralizes the possible artistic result. Tonight Mechanics' Hall was filled with a radiant audience. Beyond quoting the programme and mentioning the fact that Mr. Wilczek is a fine artist, we will not go. The list is—

"A Faust Overture"..................................Wagner
Romanza, Eri tu from "The Masked Ball"..........Verdi
Mr. Del Puente.
Aria from "Samson and Delila"....................St. Saëns
Miss Lena Little.
Lohengrin's Narration..............................Wagner
Mr. Campanini.
Two Movements for Strings—"Heart Wounds," "Spring"..................................Grieg
Aria, Let the Bright Seraphim from "Samson" .Handel
Mme. Nordica.
Solo for Violin, Fantasie Caprice...............Vieuxtemp
Franz Wilczek.
Trio from "I Lombardi"..............................Verdi
Mme. Nordica, Sig. Campanini and Sig. Del Puente.
Wagner Selections:
"Siegfried" and "Die Götterdämmerung": Siegfried's passage to Brunnhilde's Rock; Morning dawn and Rhine journey. Arranged by Richter.
"The Flying Dutchman," Senta's Ballad.
Mme. Nordica.
Violin, "Prize Song" from "Die Meistersinger."
Mr. Wilczek.
Lohengrin, Prayer and Finale, Act I—Elsa, Mme. Nordica; Ortrud, Miss Little; Lohengrin, Mr. Campanini; Frederick, Mr. Del Puente; Henry I., Dr. G. R. Clark.

Think of following the trio from "I. Lombardi" with the Nibelungen arrangement! But criticism on a Worcester festival Thursday-night affair is wasted.

G. H. WILSON.

[illegible] Post

[illegible] MORNING, SEPT. 26, 1891.

MUSIC IN WORCESTER

Some Closing Words Concerning the Festival

HANDEL'S "ISRAEL IN EGYPT"

Franz Rummel's Performance on the Pianoforte a Noble Effort

WORCESTER, Sept. 24.—[SPECIAL to the POST.]—This is the last day of the festival, and, therefore, it may not be impertinent to review hastily the work of the week.

The question of what selections are suitable for such a festival is not easily answered, and it is not surprising that there should be widely differing opinions among even the managers, although each one of them is solely influenced by zeal for the prosperity of the society. Naturally they wish to present novelties; at the same time they realize the limitations of the capacity of a chorus made up of so many, who, while they may be earnest, are not all truly musical in the proper sense of the word. The managers also realize that the rehearsals with orchestra are necessarily few in number, and that they cannot expect to give a finished performance of a new work of moderate difficulty. They justly fear the reproach of old fogyism. They must please the taste of the subscribers to the concerts, for in them they have financial life. Now what are they to do?

This is a question more easily asked than answered. The musician would reply that in matters of art, perfection or a close approach to perfection is of first importance, and that an admirable performance of one of the simpler chorals of Bach is more to be desired than a rough and boisterous presentation of an ancient or modern work of large dimensions. He would say that it is a wrong to the composer and to the composition to give to the public a mutilated version imperfectly sung. But the manager would reply by saying, "We must give new works. We have a large chorus and some of them read with difficulty. Some of the members are old, and their voices are false and wiry, but they have been faithful in the past, and we can not wound them to the quick by now asking them to leave us. We know that the first performance will be rough, but if the work is worthy of repetition, the future performances will be better. Meanwhile, we provide an orchestra and soloists of reputation, and as the people cannot yet listen patiently for four days to music of genuine worth, we must give a concert with ear-tickling numbers, otherwise we should not be able to provide players and singers for the great works demanded by the more intelligent."

These conflicting opinions arise wherever there are large choral societies. The day may come when to the musician's joy seventy-five or 100 picked singers will give the oratorios and cantatas of fame, and thereby the works well-known will in many cases seem novelties.

But as long as choruses are of the size and character of the Worcester Association, perfect performances can not be expected.

In certain respects the festival of this year is a step in advance. This is particularly seen in the introduction of novelties of worth. I mean by novelties, works that are new to these audiences. The character of the two novelties given yesterday was enough to lend dignity to the purposes of the association, and the managers deserve the hearty thanks of all American musicians for the welcome given by them to the exquisite suite of McDowell and the ingeniously constructed cantata of Herbert.

There is still much to be desired in the work done by the chorus. That which has been already sung was given this week with a certain degree of confidence, but with a painful lack of legitimate and necessary expression.

The audiences have been enabled to hear some excellent singing, and Mrs. Wyman, Mrs. Ford, Mrs. Alves and Miss Little have in different degree shown that the art of song is not entirely lost. Campanini sang in "Arminius" superbly, but in the "operatic concert" he was false to his own artistic nature and looked to the gallery for sympathy, which he found. Messrs. Johnson, Meyn and Dufft are to be commended heartily for the intelligence of their endeavors and to be often praised for the success of the attempts. Mr. Wilczek played with taste and more than ordinary skill pieces that too commonly are the excuse for rank sensationalism. And Mr. Herbert showed his versatile talents as composer, director and virtuoso.

Whether these festivals serve in the musical education of the public is another matter. Personality in music still prevails. The soloist excites the popular attention, when the symphony is listened to with conventional respect. The meretricious singer is more enthusiastically received that the one who deserves the applause. But this is an old complaint, and Worcester is not alone the scene of misdirected enthusiasm.

The programme of this afternoon included the "Egmont" overture, Dvorak's Symphony in D minor, Lalo's Rhapsody in A and two songs sung by Mrs. Ford and Dr. Clark. But the feature of the concert was the fine performance of Rubinstein's concerto in D minor for pianoforte and orchestra, the pianoforte part of which was played by Mr. Franz Rummel. Although Mr. Runnel's playing was occasionally unclean, as in a few passages in the first and last movements, his interpretation as a whole was noble in its dignity, fire and pathos. He was thrice recalled, and finally in response he played a nocturne by Brassin.

The festival closed with an interesting performance of "Israel in Egypt." The choruses and solos were judiciously selected and the overture to the oratorio was played for the first time in America. The overture is in the familiar style of Handel, but additional parts were arranged for it by Michael Costa, which make it more noisy. Whether it has been thus improved is another matter. The choruses of "Israel," that is the greater number of those chosen for this occasion—were familiar to the chorus and they were sung for the most part with precision and power. They were also sung in the traditional manner—that is, with nearly the same degree of force from the beginning to the end. Whether this [illegible] whether they were so sung in Handel's time these are questions hard [illegible] but it is equally hard [illegible] that Handel did not [illegible] variety of expression. Nor did [illegible] that the chorus of this evening [illegible] yesterday. The [illegible] Mr. Herbert Johnson and Mr. M. W. Whitney. The latter was most heartily applauded for his singing of the air of the first part, and the famous duet as given by Messrs. Whitney and Dufft awoke unbounded enthusiasm. In many respects the final concert was the most pleasing of the series, so far as the work of the chorus is considered. This is the twenty-fifth year of Mr. Carl Zerrahn's connection with the Worcester association and the event was fitly commemorated at the beginning of the concert. As soon as he appeared upon the stage he was greeted with an orchestral salute, and both chorus and audience joined in long-continued applause. The Hon. Edward L. Davis, the president of the Association, in a gracefully worded and feeling speech, expressed publicly to Mr. Zerrahn the thanks of the association and the city their heartfelt appreciation of his faithful labors, and their best wishes for the future years of usefulness. Then Mr. Davis presented Mr. Zerrahn with a check for the very substantial amount of $1500. Mr. Zerrahn was visibly affected and he spoke a few words of sincere gratitude to the audience, the chorus and the orchestra.

PHILIP HALE.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPT. 26, 1891.

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL.

The scheme of the annual Music Festival at Worcester—the thirty-fourth in the unbroken series—comes up more nearly to a metropolitan standard than any of its predecessors. The advance which has been made in ten years is remarkable and honorable, and at first it is not easy to believe that such a dignified and ambitious week's work has been evolved by easy and unforced gradations from the convention-like programmes of the early Eighties. The improvement is shown less in the choice of two or three great compositions—because some such have been presented regularly for a good many years—but in the exclusion of banalities, by the elevation of the schools and performance of the orchestral music, and finally by the original presentation of works written or secured expressly for the occasion. We have not the space to go into the minutiæ of the season, but we shall endeavor to chronicle its chief elements as matters of interest in the musical history of the State and of importance as being brought so near to Boston itself. Passing over for the moment the first afternoon programme, which was principally composed of pleasant light matters, the real work of the week began with the third Worcester performance (with a new cast, of course) of Bruch's "Arminius," as it was to end last evening with Handel's "Israel in Egypt," preceded by the first reading in America of the author's overture to the "Occasional" oratorio, according to Costa's extended score. Between these, on different dates, were placed these absolute novelties: Dr. Bridge's dramatic oratorio, "The Repentance of Nineveh"; Mr. Herbert's cantata, "The Captive," written for the festival; Mr. E. A. MacDowell's suite in A-minor; Mr. G. A. Adams's Mass in C-minor; Coomb's "Heavenly Message," and the now famous intermezzo from Mascagin's "Cavalleria Rusticana," not before played from his orchestration in this country. New to Worcester were: The trio for harp and flutes, from Berlioz's "Childhood of Christ"; Schumann's fourth symphony; the pendante and scherzo from Tschaikowsky's F-minor symphony; Grieg's "Peer Gynt" suite; Lohengrin's Narrative; Dvorák's second symphony; Lalo's orchestral rhapsody; two string movements by Grieg; and several good arias of operatic caste, introduced partly to gratify the popular taste for a bit of soufflé and partly to display the virtuosity of artists who, while engaging in more serious work, still desired to shine in their favorite departments. Half of the "Artist's Night"—Thursday—was assigned to Wagner; who was advantageously represented by Richter's arrangements from "Siegfried" and the "Götterdämmerung," so well known here; Senta's ballad from the "Dutchman," the "Prize Song" from the "Mastersingers" (played as a violin solo), and the finale to the first act of "Lohengrin." Instrumental solos were provided in compositions for Mr. G. W. Morgan, the veteran organist, and his daughter, the harpist; in St. Saëns's violoncello concerto in A-minor, for Mr. Herbert; Vieuxtemps's "Fantasy Caprice," for Mr. Wilczek; and Rubinstein's fourth concerto, for Mr. Rummel. The trio alluded to above, brought in Messrs. Heindl and Fox, and Mr. Miller had the trumpet part in "Let the bright Seraphim." The overtures were Gluck's "Iphigenia," Beethoven's "Egmont" and Wagner's "Faust."

To present this various array of compositions, the association had its own chorus of about five hundred, an orchestra of just about sixty, almost every one a Symphony man, Mr. Kneisel leading; Mr. B. D. Allen, for organist; Mr. Herbert for assistant conductor and accompanist, soloists both popular and capable, and Mr. Zerrahn for chief of all these forces. The solo list was headed by Mme. Nordica, making the first appearance of her present tour, to whom were assigned the soprano rôle in "Nineveh," and in the Wagner music and airs from Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" and "Samson." Signor Campanini of course had the Lohengrin parts and the forceful rôle in "Arminius." Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker had the lead in the "Israel" and the Mass; the rest of the soprano songs were divided between Mrs. Paulsen-White, Miss Laura M. Burnham and Mrs. Seabury C. Ford. Miss Lena Little was the "Arminius" contralto, and Mrs. Alves took the oratorio music, Mrs. Benzing and Mrs. Wyman having arias. Mr. A. L. King came from New York for the tenor part in the Mass, and Mr. Herbert O. Johnson sang a song or two and the tenor music of the "Nineveh. Mr. Meyn was the Arminius, Mr. Del Puente had opera music, Mr. M. W. Whitney and Mr. Carl Dufft took most of the oratorio bass rôles, and D. G. R. Clark was appointed to the Mass and a bass song or two.

—Mme. Nordica, through Manager C. A. Ellis, is fast filling up all the time she wishes to give to concerts this winter. It is not yet decided whether she will sing in the Abbey Italian operas or not.

BOSTON [illegible]

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE [illegible]

VOL. XC., NO. 88.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 26, 1891.

WORCESTER'S MUSIC FESTIVAL.

Final Programmes Heard by Great Audiences.

[Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald]

WORCESTER, Sept. 25, 1891. The final programmes of the 34th annual music festival here have been heard, the big audiences have again filled the hall regardless of the tortures inflicted by its atmospheric conditions during the week, the singers of the chorus of the society have again rallied about their veteran leader, Zerrahn, and won his beaming smiles of commendation by their attention and good work, and the directors of the old association are again congratulating themselves that it is all over, and that a tidy sum up in the thousands is to be left for the treasury after all the bills are paid.

Without doubt, the men who have been prodding the association to take an advanced position in musical matters are actuated by the best motives, but, as they stand, banner in hand, shouting "Excelsior!" this evening, they must feel that their theories do not find general acceptance hereabout.

The afternoon concert today had for its instrumental numbers the "Egmont" overture, Dvorak's second symphony, Rubinstein's piano concerto in D minor, No. 4, and the rhapsody for orchestra in A by Lalo. The selections were varied by Mrs. S. C. Ford's singing of the bolero from Verdi's "Sicilian Vespers," and Dr. G. R. Clark's interpretation of the recitative and aria from "The Queen of Sheba," "She Alone Charmeth My Sadness."

The men of the orchestra have seldom had such a test of their endurance as that given by the afternoon's programme. The hall was so thoroughly heated by the uses of the week and the high temperature outside that the audience could with difficulty support existence. To play through such a programme was in itself an undertaking to be dreaded, and yet the performance of the several numbers was, under Mr. Zerrahn's direction, evidently a source of enjoyment to all who could bear the heat of the hall.

Mr. Franz Rummel was the pianist, and his brilliant interpretation of the Rubinstein concerto was in keeping with his successes during his last season. Dr. Clark was, unfortunately, severely indisposed, and appeared rather than to cause disappointment. Under the circumstances he acquitted himself most creditably, and an appreciative round of applause rewarded his effort.

Mrs. Ford was as great a favorite as ever, and merited the favor shown her.

This evening the festival ended with selections from the "Israel in Egypt," which was preceded by the first performance in this country of the overture to the "Occasional Oratorio," by Handel, as arranged by Sir Michael Costa. The solo parts of the "Israel" were assigned to Mrs. Jennie Patrick-Walker, soprano; Mrs. Carl Alves, contralto; and Messrs. Herbert Johnson, tenor; Carl Dufft, baritone, and M. W. Whitney, bass.

No words can give an idea of the degree of physical suffering endured in listening to the final performance this evening, for, despite all the efforts to supply air suitable to breathe, the hall was like a furnace, and the hundreds of gas jets destroyed what little life there was in the air.

After electric lighting has been in vogue a quarter of a century, its use may possibly be applied to the hall used for these annual gatherings.

Despite the heat the grand chorus rallied again for a final effort and sung the familiar chorus numbers included in the evening's selections, with admirable spirit. The soloists gave excellent support in the limited opportunities afforded them, Mrs. Alves winning especial favor for her artistic vocal work, and Messrs. Dufft and Whitney creating a great impression by their singing of the famous duet, "The Lord is a Man of War."

Mr. Johnson's recitative singing was thoroughly pleasing, and the aria, "The Enemy Said," was delivered in a masterly manner, showing a command of the requisites for the best work of this class, such as few in the field of oratorio work possess.

Mr. Whitney's noble voice was used with all his usual success, and this artist was made the recipient of a grand ovation after "God Looking Down."

The Handel overture proved a most enjoyable novelty, and added a great interest to the performance.

Mr. Zerrahn was welcomed on his entrance with a fanfare from the orchestra and the rising of the chorus, and a pleasant interruption occurred just after the intermission, when President Davis, in the name of the chorus, the association and the patrons of the festival, expressed his appreciation of Mr. Zerrahn's quarter of a century's service as the association's festival leader, and presented him with a check for $1500 as a tribute from the chorus, the association and a few personal friends.

Mr. Zerrahn returned his thanks in a few eloquent words, and, after expressing his personal obligations to the singers and the faithful orchestral players, he took occasion to call attention to the fact that Worcester is the only city in the world that supports an annual music festival.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 26, 1891.

RUMMEL MADE A HIT.

Great Enthusiasm Over His Playing at the Worcester Festival—Carl Zerrahn Gets $1500.

WORCESTER, Sept. 25.—Franz Rummel, pianist, made the hit of the season at the festival concert this afternoon, playing Rubinstein's D minor concerto. The people imperatively demanded his return when he played Brassin's nocturne. The other instrumental numbers were Beethoven's Egmont overture, Dvorak's D minor symphony and Lalo's Rhapsody in A. It was all new to the festival save "Egmont," and the audience was very enthusiastic. Dr. G. R. Clark sang an aria from the "Queen of Sheba," and Mrs. Seabury C. Ford sang the bolero from the "Sicilian Vespers," and both were well received, Mrs. Ford being encored. The festival closed with a rousing performance of Handel's "Israel in Egypt." The choral work was by far the best of the week, and the soloists were admirable. They were Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker, Mrs. Carl Alves, Herbert Johnson, Carl Dufft and M. W. Whitney. "Israel in Egypt" was preceded by the martial overture to Handel's "Occasional" oratorio.

This completed Carl Zerrahn's 25th year as festival conductor. At the intermission Pres. E. L. Davis presented him in behalf of the association with a purse of $1500. This week has seen the greatest artistic success and the largest audiences ever known at a Worcester festival.

The overture to the "Occasional" oratorio had never been performed with Sir Michael Costa's instrumentation before. The parts were specially imported from England for the festival.

THE BOSTON [illegible]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER [illegible]

WORCESTER FESTIVAL [illegible]

Conductor Zerrahn Gets a Purse With $1500 in It.

[Special Despatch to the News.]

WORCESTER, Sept. 25.—The Worcester music festival closed today with two largely attended concerts. In the afternoon Franz Rummell, the pianist, made the hit of the season, playing Rubenstein's D minor concerto. In response to an imperative recall he played Brassin's "Nocturne." Other instrumental numbers were Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, D'Vorak's D minor symphony, and Lalos' rhapsody in A, all new to the festival save "Egmont."

Dr. G. R. Clark sang "Aria" from "Queen of Sheba," and Mrs. Seabury C. Ford sang the bolero from "Sicilian Vespers." The closing concert tonight was a rousing performance of Handel's "Israel in Egypt." The choral work was the best of the week, and the soloists admirable.

They were Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker, Mrs. Carl Alves, Herbert Johnson, Carl Dufft and Myron W. Whitney.

This completed Carl Zerrahn's 25th year as festival conductor. At intermission President Edward L. Davis presented him in behalf of the association with a purse of $1500. This week has witnessed the greatest artistic success and largest audiences ever known at the Worcester festival.

The North American

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1891.

THEY'RE FOND OF MUSIC IN BOSTON.

Special Dispatch to The North American.

BOSTON, Sept. 24.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has in the last few years come to be an institution of well-nigh national reputation, and the success attending its annual series of concerts interests a vast public scattered throughout the States. During the week at Music Hall every seat for the twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals, as well as for the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts, have been sold. The maintenance of the orchestra is the private undertaking of a private citizen, and therefore no official statement can be made of the actual financial results of the concerts, but the most careful estimate shows that fully $100,000 has been paid into the box office for the coming symphony season. In addition to this there are 12,000 seats sold during the season at the rehearsals at twenty-five cents each, with as many more admissions at the concerts. The first rehearsal takes place October 9 and the first concert the following evening.

Boston Post

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 26, 1891.

MUSIC IN WORCESTER

Some Closing Words Concerning the Festival

HANDEL'S "ISRAEL IN EGYPT"

Franz Rummel's Performance on the Pianoforte a Noble Effort

WORCESTER, Sept. 24.—[SPECIAL to the POST.]—This is the last day of the festival, and, therefore, it may not be impertinent to review hastily the work of the week.

The question of what selections are suitable for such a festival is not easily answered, and it is not surprising that there should be widely differing opinions among even the managers, although each one of them is solely influenced by zeal for the prosperity of the society. Naturally they wish to present novelties; at the same time they realize the limitations of the capacity of a chorus made up of so many, who, while they may be earnest, are not all truly musical in the proper sense of the word. The managers also realize that the rehearsals with orchestra are necessarily few in number, and that they cannot expect to give a finished performance of a new work of moderate difficulty. They justly fear the reproach of old fogyism. They must please the taste of the subscribers to the concerts, for in them they have financial life. Now what are they to do?

This is a question more easily asked than answered. The musician would reply that in matters of art, perfection or a close approach to perfection is of first importance, and that an admirable performance of one of the simpler chorals of Bach is more to be desired than a rough and boisterous presentation of an ancient or modern work of large dimensions. He would say that it is a wrong to the composer and to the composition to give to the public a mutilated version imperfectly sung. But the manager would reply by saying, "We must give new works. We have a large chorus and some of them read with difficulty. Some of the members are old, and their voices are false and wiry, but they have been faithful in the past, and we can not wound them to the quick by now asking them to leave us. We know that the first performance will be rough, but if the work is worthy of repetition, the future performances will be better. Meanwhile, we provide an orchestra and soloists of reputation, and as the people cannot yet listen patiently for four days to music of genuine worth, we must give a concert with ear-tickling numbers, otherwise we should not be able to provide players and singers for the great works demanded by the more intelligent."

These conflicting opinions arise wherever there are large choral societies. The day may come when to the musician's joy seventy-five or 100 picked singers will give the oratorios and cantatas of fame, and thereby the works well-known will in many cases seem novelties.

But as long as choruses are of the size and character of the Worcester Association, perfect performances can not be expected.

In certain respects the festival of this year is a step in advance. This is particularly seen in the introduction of novelties of worth, I mean by novelties, works that are new to these audiences. The character of the two novelties given yesterday was enough to lend dignity to the purposes of the association, and the managers deserve the hearty thanks of all American musicians for the welcome given by them to the exquisite suite of McDowell and the ingeniously constructed cantata of Herbert.

There is still much to be desired in the work done by the chorus. That which has been already sung was given this week with a certain degree of confidence, but with a painful lack of legitimate and necessary expression.

The audiences have been enabled to hear some excellent singing, and Mrs. Wyman, Mrs. Ford, Mrs. Alves and Miss Little have in different degree shown that the art of song is not entirely lost. Campanini sang in "Arminius" superbly, but in the "operatic concert" he was false to his own artistic nature and looked to the gallery for sympathy, which he found. Messrs. Johnson, Meyn and Dufft are to be commended heartily for the intelligence of their endeavors and to be often praised for the success of the attempts. Mr. Wilczek played with taste and more than ordinary skill pieces that too commonly are the excuse for rank sensationalism. And Mr. Herbert showed his versatile talents as composer, director and virtuoso.

Whether these festivals serve in the musical education of the public is another matter. Personality in music still prevails. The soloist excites the popular attention, when the symphony is listened to with conventional respect. The meretricious singer is more enthusiastically received that the one who deserves the applause. But this is an old complaint, and Worcester is not alone the scene of misdirected enthusiasm.

The programme of this afternoon included the "Egmont" overture, Dvorak's Symphony in D minor, Lalo's Rhapsody in A and two songs sung by Mrs. Ford and Dr. Clark. But the feature of the concert was the fine performance of Rubinstein's concerto in D minor for pianoforte and orchestra, the pianoforte part of which was played by Mr. Franz Rummel. Although Mr. Kunnel's playing was occasionally unclean, as in a few passages in the first and last movements, his interpretation as a whole was noble in its dignity, fire and pathos. He was thrice recalled, and finally in response he played a nocturne, by Brassin.

The festival closed with an interesting performance of "Israel in Egypt." The choruses and solos were judiciously selected and the overture to the oratorio was played for the first time in America. The overture is in the familiar style of Handel, but additional parts were arranged for it by Michael Costa, which make it more noisy. Whether it has been thus improved is another matter. The choruses of "Israel," that is the greater number of those chosen for this occasion—were familiar to the chorus and they were sung for the most part with precision and power. They were also sung in the traditional manner—that is, with nearly the same degree of force from the beginning to the end. Whether this is right, whether they were so sung in Handel's time—these are questions hard to solve; but it is equally hard to believe that Handel did not employ some variety of expression. Nor did it seem possible that the chorus of this evening [illegible] of yesterday. The solos were sung very acceptably by Mrs. Patrick Walker Mrs. Alves, Mr. Herbert Johnson and Mr. M. W. Whitney. The latter was most heartily applauded for his singing of the air of the first part, and the famous duet as given by Messrs. Whitney and Dufft awoke unbounded enthusiasism. In many respects the final concert was the most pleasing of the series, so far as the work of the chorus is considered. This is the twenty-fifth year of Mr. Carl Zerrahn's connection with the Worcester association and the event was fitly commemorated at the beginning of the concert. As soon as he appeared upon the stage he was greeted with an orchestral salute, and both chorus and audience joined in long-continued applause. The Hon. Edward L. Davis, the president of the Association, in a gracefully worded and feeling speech, expressed publicly to Mr. Zerrahn the thanks of the association and the city their heartfelt appreciation of his faithful labors, and their best wishes for the future years of usefulness. Then Mr. Davis presented Mr. Zerrahn with a check for the very substantial amount of $1500. Mr. Zerrahn was visibly affected and he spoke a few words of sincere gratitude to the audience, the chorus and the orchestra.

PHILIP HALE.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPT. 26, 1891.

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL.

The scheme of the annual Music Festival at Worcester—the thirty-fourth in the unbroken series—comes up more nearly to a metropolitan standard than any of its predecessors. The advance which has been made in ten years is remarkable and honorable, and at first it is not easy to believe that such a dignified and ambitious week's work has been evolved by easy and unforced gradations from the convention-like programmes of the early Eighties. The improvement is shown less in the choice of two or three great compositions—because some such have been presented regularly for a good many years—but in the exclusion of banalities, by the elevation of the schools and performance of the orchestral music, and finally by the original presentation of works written or secured expressly for the occasion. We have not the space to go into the minutiæ of the season, but we shall endeavor to chronicle its chief elements as matters of interest in the musical history of the State and of importance as being brought so near to Boston itself. Passing over for the moment the first afternoon programme, which was principally composed of pleasant light matters, the real work of the week began with the third Worcester performance (with a new cast, of course) of Bruch's "Arminius," as it was to end last evening with Handel's "Israel in Egypt," preceded by the first reading in America of the author's overture to the "Occasional" oratorio, according to Costa's extended score. Between these, on different dates, were placed these absolute novelties: Dr. Bridge's dramatic oratorio, "The Repentance of Nineveh"; Mr. Herbert's cantata, "The Captive," written for the festival; Mr. E. A. MacDowell's suite in A-minor; Mr. G. A. Adams's Mass in C-minor; Coomb's "Heavenly Message," and the now famous intermezzo from Mascagin's "Cavalleria Rusticana," not before played from his orchestration in this country. New to Worcester were: The trio for harp and flutes, from Berlioz's "Childhood of Christ"; Schumann's fourth symphony; the pendante and scherzo from Tschaikowsky's F-minor symphony; Grieg's "Peer Gynt" suite; Lohengrin's Narrative; Dvorák's second symphony; Lalo's orchestral rhapsody; two string movements by Grieg; and several good arias of operatic caste, introduced partly to gratify the popular taste for a bit of souplé and partly to display the virtuosity of artists who, while engaging in more serious work, still desired to shine in their favorite departments. Half of the "Artist's Night"—Thursday—was assigned to Wagner; who was advantageously represented by Richter's arrangements from "Siegfried" and the "Götterdammerung," so well known here; Senta's ballad from the "Dutchman," the "Prize Song" from the "Mastersingers" (played as a violin solo), and the finale to the first act of "Lohengrin." Instrumental solos were provided in compositions for Mr. G. W. Morgan, the veteran organist, and his daughter, the harpist; in St. Saëns's violoncello concerto in A-minor, for Mr. Herbert; Vieuxtemps's "Fantasy Caprice," for Mr. Wilczek; and Rubinstein's fourth concerto, for Mr. Rummel. The trio alluded to above, brought in Messrs. Heindl and Fox, and Mr. Miller had the trumpet part in "Let the bright Seraphim." The overtures were Gluck's "Iphigenia," Beethoven's "Egmont" and Wagner's "Faust."

To present this various array of compositions, the association had its own chorus of about five hundred, an orchestra of just about sixty, almost every one a Symphony man, Mr. Kneisel leading; Mr. B. D. Allen, for organist; Mr. Herbert for assistant conductor and accompanist, soloists both popular and capable, and Mr. Zerrahn for chief of all these forces. The solo list was headed by Mme. Nordica, making the first appearance of her present tour, to whom were assigned the soprano rôle in "Nineveh," and in the Wagner music and airs from Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" and "Samson." Signor Campanini of course had the Lohengrin parts and the forceful rôle in "Arminius." Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker had the lead in the "Israel" and the Mass; the rest of the soprano songs were divided between Mrs. Paulsen-White, Miss Laura M. Burnham and Mrs. Seabury C. Ford. Miss Lena Little was the "Arminius" contralto, and Mrs. Alves took the oratorio music, Mrs. Benzing and Mrs. Wyman having arias. Mr. A. L. King came from New York for the tenor part in the Mass, and Mr. Herbert O. Johnson sang a song or two and the tenor music of the "Nineveh. Mr. Meyn was the Arminius, Mr. Del Puente had opera music, Mr. M. W. Whitney and Mr. Carl Dufft took most of the oratorio bass rôles, and D. G. R. Clark was appointed to the Mass and a bass song or two.

Mme. Nordica, through Manager C. A. Ellis, is fast filling up all the time she wishes to give to concerts this winter. It is not yet decided whether she will sing in the Abbey Italian operas or not.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 88.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 26, 1891.

WORCESTER'S MUSIC FESTIVAL.

Final Programmes Heard by Great Audiences.

[Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald]

WORCESTER, Sept. 25, 1891. The final programmes of the 34th annual music festival here have been heard, the big audiences have again filled the hall regardless of the tortures inflicted by its atmospheric conditions during the week, the singers of the chorus of the society have again rallied about their veteran leader, Zerrahn, and won his beaming smiles of commendation by their attention and good work, and the directors of the old association are again congratulating themselves that it is all over, and that a tidy sum up in the thousands is to be left for the treasury after all the bills are paid.

Without doubt, the men who have been prodding the association to take an advanced position in musical matters are actuated by the best motives, but, as they stand, banner in hand, shouting "Excelsior!" this evening, they must feel that their theories do not find general acceptance hereabout.

The afternoon concert today had for its instrumental numbers the "Egmont" overture, Dvorak's second symphony, Rubinstein's piano concerto in D minor, No. 4, and the rhapsody for orchestra in A by Lalo. The selections were varied by Mrs. S. C. Ford's singing of the bolero from Verdi's "Sicilian Vespers," and Dr. G. R. Clark's interpretation of the recitative and aria from "The Queen of Sheba," "She Alone Charmeth My Sadness."

The men of the orchestra have seldom had such a test of their endurance as that given by the afternoon's programme. The hall was so thoroughly heated by the uses of the week and the high temperature outside that the audience could with difficulty support existence. To play through such a programme was in itself an undertaking to be dreaded, and yet the performance of the several numbers was, under Mr. Zerrahn's direction, evidently a source of enjoyment to all who could bear the heat of the hall.

Mr. Franz Rummel was the pianist, and his brilliant interpretation of the Rubinstein concerto was in keeping with his successes during his last season. Dr. Clark was, unfortunately, severely indisposed, and appeared rather than to cause disappointment. Under the circumstances he acquitted himself most creditably, and an appreciative round of applause rewarded his effort.

Mrs. Ford was as great a favorite as ever, and merited the favor shown her.

This evening the festival ended with selections from the "Israel in Egypt," which was preceded by the first performance in this country of the overture to the "Occasional Oratorio," by Handel, as arranged by Sir Michael Costa. The solo parts of the "Israel" were assigned to Mrs. Jennie Patrick-Walker, soprano; Mrs. Carl Alves, contralto; and Messrs. Herbert Johnson, tenor; Carl Dufft, baritone, and M. W. Whitney, bass.

No words can give an idea of the degree of physical suffering endured in listening to the final performance this evening, for, despite all the efforts to supply air suitable to breathe, the hall was like a furnace, and the hundreds of gas jets destroyed what little life there was in the air.

After electric lighting has been in vogue a quarter of a century, its use may possibly be applied to the hall used for these annual gatherings.

Despite the heat the grand chorus rallied again for a final effort and sung the familiar chorus numbers included in the evening's selections, with admirable spirit. The soloists gave excellent support in the limited opportunities afforded them, Mrs. Alves winning especial favor for her artistic vocal work, and Messrs. Dufft and Whitney creating a great impression by their singing of the famous duet, "The Lord is a Man of War."

Mr. Johnson's recitative singing was thoroughly pleasing, and the aria, "The Enemy Said," was delivered in a masterly manner, showing a command of the requisites for the best work of this class, such as few in the field of oratorio work possess.

Mr. Whitney's noble voice was used with all his usual success, and this artist was made the recipient of a grand ovation after "God Looking Down."

The Handel overture proved a most enjoyable novelty, and added a great interest to the performance.

Mr. Zerrahn was welcomed on his entrance with a fanfare from the orchestra and the rising of the chorus, and a pleasant interruption occurred just after the intermission, when President Davis, in the name of the chorus, the association and the patrons of the festival, expressed his appreciation of Mr. Zerrahn's quarter of a century's service as the association's festival leader, and presented him with a check for $1500 as a tribute from the chorus, the association and a few personal friends.

Mr. Zerrahn returned his thanks in a few eloquent words, and, after expressing his personal obligations to the singers and the faithful orchestral players, he took occasion to call attention to the fact that Worcester is the only city in the world that supports an annual music festival.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 26, 1891.

RUMMEL MADE A HIT.

Great Enthusiasm Over His Playing at the Worcester Festival — Carl Zerrahn Gets $1500.

WORCESTER, Sept. 25.—Franz Rummel, pianist, made the hit of the season at the festival concert this afternoon, playing Rubinstein's D minor concerto. The people imperatively demanded his return when he played Brassin's nocturne. The other instrumental numbers were Beethoven's Egmont overture, Dvorak's D minor symphony and Lalo's Rhapsody in A. It was all new to the festival save "Egmont," and the audience was very enthusiastic. Dr. G. R. Clark sang an aria from the "Queen of Sheba," and Mrs. Seabury C. Ford sang the bolero from the "Sicilian Vespers," and both were well received, Mrs. Ford being encored. The festival closed with a rousing performance of Handel's "Israel in Egypt." The choral work was by far the best of the week, and the soloists were admirable. They were Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker, Mrs. Carl Alves, Herbert Johnson, Carl Dufft and M. W. Whitney. "Israel in Egypt" was preceded by the martial overture to Handel's "Occasional" oratorio.

This completed Carl Zerrahn's 25th year as festival conductor. At the intermission Pres. E. L. Davis presented him in behalf of the association with a purse of $1500. This week has seen the greatest artistic success and the largest audiences ever known at a Worcester festival.

The overture to the "Occasional" oratorio had never been performed with Sir Michael Costa's instrumentation before. The parts were specially imported from England for the festival.

THE BOSTON NEWS.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1891.

WORCESTER FESTIVAL ENDED.

Conductor Zerrahn Gets a Purse With $1500 in It.

[Special Despatch to the NEWS.]

WORCESTER, Sept. 25.—The Worcester music festival closed today with two largely attended concerts. In the afternoon Franz Rummell, the pianist, made the hit of the season, playing Rubenstein's D minor concerto. In response to an imperative recall he played Brassin's "Nocturne." Other instrumental numbers were Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, D'Vorak's D minor symphony, and Lalos' rhapsody in A, all new to the festival save "Egmont."

Dr. G. R. Clark sang "Aria" from "Queen of Sheba," and Mrs. Seabury C. Ford sang the bolero from "Sicilian Vespers." The closing concert tonight was a rousing performance of Handel's "Israel in Egypt." The choral work was the best of the week, and the soloists admirable.

They were Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker, Mrs. Carl Alves, Herbert Johnson, Carl Dufft and Myron W. Whitney.

This completed Carl Zerrahn's 25th year as festival conductor. At intermission President Edward L. Davis presented him in behalf of the association with a purse of $1500. This week has witnessed the greatest artistic success and largest audiences ever known at the Worcester festival.

The North American

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1891.

THEY'RE FOND OF MUSIC IN BOSTON.

Special Dispatch to The North American.

BOSTON, Sept. 24.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has in the last few years come to be an institution of well-nigh national reputation, and the success attending its annual series of concerts interests a vast public scattered throughout the States. During the week at Music Hall every seat for the twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals, as well as for the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts, have been sold. The maintenance of the orchestra is the private undertaking of a private citizen, and therefore no official statement can be made of the actual financial results of the concerts, but the most careful estimate shows that fully $100,000 has been paid into the box office for the coming symphony season. In addition to this there are 12,000 seats sold during the season at the rehearsals at twenty-five cents each, with as many more admissions at the concerts. The first rehearsal takes place October 9 and the first concert the following evening.

[19]

Boston Post

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 26, 1891.

MUSIC IN WORCESTER

Some Closing Words Concerning the Festival

HANDEL'S "ISRAEL IN EGYPT"

Franz Rummel's Performance on the Pianoforte a Noble Effort

WORCESTER, Sept. 24.—[SPECIAL to the POST.]—This is the last day of the festival, and, therefore, it may not be impertinent to review hastily the work of the week.

The question of what selections are suitable for such a festival is not easily answered, and it is not surprising that there should be widely differing opinions among even the managers, although each one of them is solely influenced by zeal for the prosperity of the society. Naturally they wish to present novelties; at the same time they realize the limitations of the capacity of a chorus made up of so many, who, while they may be earnest, are not all truly musical in the proper sense of the word. The managers also realize that the rehearsals with orchestra are necessarily few in number, and that they cannot expect to give a finished performance of a new work of moderate difficulty. They justly fear the reproach of old fogyism. They must please the taste of the subscribers to the concerts, for in them they have financial life. Now what are they to do?

This is a question more easily asked than answered. The musician would reply that in matters of art, perfection or a close approach to perfection is of first importance, and that an admirable performance of one of the simpler chorals of Bach is more to be desired than a rough and boisterous presentation of an ancient or modern work of large dimensions. He would say that it is a wrong to the composer and to the composition to give to the public a mutilated version imperfectly sung. But the manager would reply by saying, "We must give new works. We have a large chorus and some of them read with difficulty. Some of the members are old, and their voices are false and wiry, but they have been faithful in the past, and we can not wound them to the quick by now asking them to leave us. We know that the first performance will be rough, but if the work is worthy of repetition, the future performances will be better. Meanwhile, we provide an orchestra and soloists of reputation, and as the people cannot yet listen patiently for four days to music of genuine worth, we must give a concert with ear-tickling numbers, otherwise we should not be able to provide players and singers for the great works demanded by the more intelligent."

These conflicting opinions arise wherever there are large choral societies. The day may come when to the musician's joy seventy-five or 100 picked singers will give the oratorios and cantatas of fame, and thereby the works well-known will in many cases seem novelties.

But as long as choruses are of the size and character of the Worcester Association, perfect performances can not be expected.

In certain respects the festival of this year is a step in advance. This is particularly seen in the introduction of novelties of worth, I mean by novelties, works that are new to these audiences. The character of the two novelties given yesterday was enough to lend dignity to the purposes of the association, and the managers deserve the hearty thanks of all American musicians for the welcome given by them to the exquisite suite of McDowell and the ingeniously constructed cantata of Herbert.

There is still much to be desired in the work done by the chorus. That which has been already sung was given this week with a certain degree of confidence, but with a painful lack of legitimate and necessary expression.

The audiences have been enabled to hear some excellent singing, and Mrs. Wyman, Mrs. Ford, Mrs. Alves and Miss Little have in different degree shown that the art of song is not entirely lost. Campanini sang in "Arminius" superbly, but in the "operatic concert" he was false to his own artistic nature and looked to the gallery for sympathy, which he found. Messrs. Johnson, Meyn and Dufft are to be commended heartily for the intelligence of their endeavors and to be often praised for the success of the attempts. Mr. Wilczek played with taste and more than ordinary skill pieces that too commonly are the excuse for rank sensationalism. And Mr. Herbert showed his versatile talents as composer, director and virtuoso.

Whether these festivals serve in the musical education of the public is another matter. Personality in music still prevails. The soloist excites the popular attention, when the symphony is listened to with conventional respect. The meretricious singer is more enthusiastically received that the one who deserves the applause. But this is an old complaint, and Worcester is not alone the scene of misdirected enthusiasm.

The programme of this afternoon included the "Egmont" overture, Dvorak's Symphony in D minor, Lalo's Rhapsody in A and two songs sung by Mrs. Ford and Dr. Clark. But the feature of the concert was the fine performance of Rubinstein's concerto in D minor for pianoforte and orchestra, the pianoforte part of which was played by Mr. Franz Rummel. Although Mr. Runnel's playing was occasionally unclean, as in a few passages in the first and last movements, his interpretation as a whole was noble in its dignity, fire and pathos. He was thrice recalled, and finally in response he played a nocturne by Brassin.

The festival closed with an interesting performance of "Israel in Egypt." The choruses and solos were judiciously selected and the overture to the oratorio was played for the first time in America. The overture is in the familiar style of Handel, but additional parts were arranged for it by Michael Costa, which make it more noisy. Whether it has been thus improved is another matter. The choruses of "Israel," that is the greater number of these chosen for this occasion—were familiar to the chorus and they were sung for the most part with precision and power. They were also sung in the traditional manner—that is, with nearly the same degree of force from the beginning to the end. Whether this is right, whether they were so sung in Handel's time—these are questions hard to solve; but it is equally hard to believe that Handel did not employ some variety of expression. Nor did it seem possible that the chorus of this evening [illegible] chorus of yesterday.

---

solos were sung very acceptably by Mrs. Patrick Walker, Mrs. Alves, Mr. Herbert Johnson and Mr. M. W. Whitney. The latter was most heartily applauded for his singing of the air of the first part, and the famous duet as given by Messrs. Whitney and Dufft awoke unbounded enthusiasism. In many respects the final concert was the most pleasing of the series, so far as the work of the chorus is considered. This is the twenty-fifth year of Mr. Carl Zerrahn's connection with the Worcester association and the event was fitly commemorated at the beginning of the concert. As soon as he appeared upon the stage he was greeted with an orchestral salute, and both chorus and audience joined in long-continued applause. The Hon. Edward L. Davis, the president of the Association, in a gracefully worded and feeling speech, expressed publicly to Mr. Zerrahn the thanks of the association and the city their heartfelt appreciation of his faithful labors, and their best wishes for the future years of usefulness. Then Mr. Davis presented Mr. Zerrahn with a check for the very substantial amount of $1500. Mr. Zerrahn was visibly affected and he spoke a few words of sincere gratitude to the audience, the chorus and the orchestra. PHILIP HALE.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPT. 26, 1891.

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL.

The scheme of the annual Music Festival at Worcester—the thirty-fourth in the unbroken series—comes up more nearly to a metropolitan standard than any of its predecessors. The advance which has been made in ten years is remarkable and honorable, and at first it is not easy to believe that such a dignified and ambitious week's work has been evolved by easy and unforced gradations from the convention-like programmes of the early Eighties. The improvement is shown less in the choice of two or three great compositions—because some such have been presented regularly for a good many years—but in the exclusion of banalities, by the elevation of the schools and performance of the orchestral music, and finally by the original presentation of works written or secured expressly for the occasion. We have not the space to go into the minutiæ of the season, but we shall endeavor to chronicle its chief elements as matters of interest in the musical history of the State and of importance as being brought so near to Boston itself. Passing over for the moment the first afternoon programme, which was principally composed of pleasant light matters, the real work of the week began with the third Worcester performance (with a new cast, of course) of Bruch's "Arminius," as it was to end last evening with Handel's "Israel in Egypt," preceded by the first reading in America of the author's overture to the "Occasional" oratorio, according to Costa's extended score. Between these, on different dates, were placed these absolute novelties: Dr. Bridge's dramatic oratorio, "The Repentance of Nineveh"; Mr. Herbert's cantata, "The Captive," written for the festival; Mr. E. A. MacDowell's suite in A-minor; Mr. G. A. Adams's Mass in C-minor; Coomb's "Heavenly Message," and the now famous intermezzo from Mascagin's "Cavalleria Rusticana," not before played from his orchestration in this country. New to Worcester were: The trio for harp and flutes, from Berlioz's "Childhood of Christ"; Schumann's fourth symphony; the pendante and scherzo from Tschaikowsky's F-minor symphony; Grieg's "Peer Gynt" suite; Lohengrin's Narrative; Dvorák's second symphony; Lalo's orchestral rhapsody; two string movements by Grieg; and several good arias of operatic caste, introduced partly to gratify the popular taste for a bit of soufflé and partly to display the virtuosity of artists who, while engaging in more serious work, still desired to shine in their favorite departments. Half of the "Artist's Night"—Thursday—was assigned to Wagner; who was advantageously represented by Richter's arrangements from "Siegfried" and the "Götterdämmerung," so well known here; Senta's ballad from the "Dutchman," the "Prize Song" from the "Mastersingers" (played as a violin solo), and the finale to the first act of "Lohengrin." Instrumental solos were provided in compositions for Mr. G. W. Morgan, the veteran organist, and his daughter, the harpist; in St. Saëns's violoncello concerto in A-minor, for Mr. Herbert; Vieuxtemps's "Fantasy Caprice," for Mr. Wilczek; and Rubinstein's fourth concerto, for Mr. Rummel. The trio alluded to above, brought in Messrs. Heindl and Fox, and Mr. Miller had the trumpet part in "Let the bright Seraphim." The overtures were Gluck's "Iphigenia," Beethoven's "Egmont" and Wagner's "Faust."

To present this various array of compositions, the association had its own chorus of about five hundred, an orchestra of just about sixty, almost every one a Symphony man, Mr. Kneisel leading; Mr. B. D. Allen, for organist; Mr. Herbert for assistant conductor and accompanist, soloists both popular and capable, and Mr. Zerrahn for chief of all these forces. The solo list was headed by Mme. Nordica, making the first appearance of her present tour, to whom were assigned the soprano rôle in "Nineveh," and in the Wagner music and airs from Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" and "Samson." Signor Campanini of course had the Lohengrin parts and the forceful rôle in "Arminius." Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker had the lead in the "Israel" and the Mass; the rest of the soprano songs were divided between Mrs. Paulsen-White, Miss Laura M. Burnham and Mrs. Seabury C. Ford. Miss Lena Little was the "Arminius" contralto, and Mrs. Alves took the oratorio music, Mrs. Benzing and Mrs. Wyman having arias. Mr. A. L. King came from New York for the tenor part in the Mass, and Mr. Herbert O. Johnson sang a song or two and the tenor music of the "Nineveh. Mr. Meyn was the Arminius, Mr. Del Puente had opera music, Mr. M. W. Whitney and Mr. Carl Dufft took most of the oratorio bass rôles, and D. G. R. Clark was appointed to the Mass and a bass song or two.

Mme. Nordica, through Manager C. A. Ellis, is fast filling up all the time she wishes to give to concerts this winter. It is not yet decided whether she will sing in the Abbey Italian operas or not.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 88.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 26, 1891.

WORCESTER'S MUSIC FESTIVAL.

Final Programmes Heard by Great Audiences.

[Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald]

WORCESTER, Sept. 25, 1891. The final programmes of the 34th annual music festival here have been heard, the big audiences have again filled the hall regardless of the tortures inflicted by its atmospheric conditions during the week, the singers of the chorus of the society have again rallied about their veteran leader, Zerrahn, and won his beaming smiles of commendation by their attention and good work, and the directors of the old association are again congratulating themselves that it is all over, and that a tidy sum up in the thousands is to be left for the treasury after all the bills are paid.

Without doubt, the men who have been prodding the association to take an advanced position in musical matters are actuated by the best motives, but, as they stand, banner in hand, shouting "Excelsior!" this evening, they must feel that their theories do not find general acceptance hereabout.

The afternoon concert today had for its instrumental numbers the "Egmont" overture, Dvorak's second symphony, Rubinstein's piano concerto in D minor, No. 4, and the rhapsody for orchestra in A by Lalo. The selections were varied by Mrs. S. C. Ford's singing of the bolero from Verdi's "Sicilian Vespers," and Dr. G. R. Clark's interpretation of the recitative and aria from "The Queen of Sheba," "She Alone Charmeth My Sadness."

The men of the orchestra have seldom had such a test of their endurance as that given by the afternoon's programme. The hall was so thoroughly heated by the uses of the week and the high temperature outside that the audience could with difficulty support existence. To play through such a programme was in itself an undertaking to be dreaded, and yet the performance of the several numbers was, under Mr. Zerrahn's direction, evidently a source of enjoyment to all who could bear the heat of the hall.

Mr. Franz Rummel was the pianist, and his brilliant interpretation of the Rubinstein concerto was in keeping with his successes during his last season. Dr. Clark was, unfortunately, severely indisposed, and appeared rather than to cause disappointment. Under the circumstances he acquitted himself most creditably, and an appreciative round of applause rewarded his effort.

Mrs. Ford was as great a favorite as ever, and merited the favor shown her.

This evening the festival ended with selections from the "Israel in Egypt," which was preceded by the first performance in this country of the overture to the "Occasional Oratorio," by Handel, as arranged by Sir Michael Costa. The solo parts of the "Israel" were assigned to Mrs. Jennie Patrick-Walker, soprano; Mrs. Carl Alves, contralto; and Messrs. Herbert Johnson, tenor; Carl Dufft, baritone, and M. W. Whitney, bass.

No words can give an idea of the degree of physical suffering endured in listening to the final performance this evening, for, despite all the efforts to supply air suitable to breathe, the hall was like a furnace, and the hundreds of gas jets destroyed what little life there was in the air.

After electric lighting has been in vogue a quarter of a century, its use may possibly be applied to the hall used for these annual gatherings.

Despite the heat the grand chorus rallied again for a final effort and sung the familiar chorus numbers included in the evening's selections, with admirable spirit. The soloists gave excellent support in the limited opportunities afforded them, Mrs. Alves winning especial favor for her artistic vocal work, and Messrs. Dufft and Whitney creating a great impression by their singing of the famous duet, "The Lord is a Man of War."

Mr. Johnson's recitative singing was thoroughly pleasing, and the aria, "The Enemy Said," was delivered in a masterly manner, showing a command of the requisites for the best work of this class, such as few in the field of oratorio work possess.

Mr. Whitney's noble voice was used with all his usual success, and this artist was made the recipient of a grand ovation after "God Looking Down."

The Handel overture proved a most enjoyable novelty, and added a great interest to the performance.

Mr. Zerrahn was welcomed on his entrance with a fanfare from the orchestra and the rising of the chorus, and a pleasant interruption occurred just after the intermission, when President Davis, in the name of the chorus, the association and the patrons of the festival, expressed his appreciation of Mr. Zerrahn's quarter of a century's service as the association's festival leader, and presented him with a check for $1500 as a tribute from the chorus, the association and a few personal friends.

Mr. Zerrahn returned his thanks in a few eloquent words, and, after expressing his personal obligations to the singers and the faithful orchestral players, he took occasion to call attention to the fact that Worcester is the only city in the world that supports an annual music festival.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 26, 1891.

RUMMEL MADE A HIT.

Great Enthusiasm Over His Playing at the Worcester Festival — Carl Zerrahn Gets $1500.

WORCESTER, Sept. 25.—Franz Rummel, pianist, made the hit of the season at the festival concert this afternoon, playing Rubinstein's D minor concerto. The people imperatively demanded his return when he played Brassin's nocturne. The other instrumental numbers were Beethoven's Egmont overture, Dvorak's D minor symphony and Lalo's Rhapsody in A. It was all new to the festival save "Egmont," and the audience was very enthusiastic. Dr. G. R. Clark sang an aria from the "Queen of Sheba," and Mrs. Seabury C. Ford sang the bolero from the "Sicilian Vespers," and both were well received, Mrs. Ford being encored. The festival closed with a rousing performance of Handel's "Israel in Egypt." The choral work was by far the best of the week, and the soloists were admirable. They were Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker, Mrs. Carl Alves, Herbert Johnson, Carl Dufft and M. W. Whitney. "Israel in Egypt" was preceded by the martial overture to Handel's "Occasional" oratorio.

This completed Carl Zerrahn's 25th year as festival conductor. At the intermission Pres. E. L. Davis presented him in behalf of the association with a purse of $1500. This week has seen the greatest artistic success and the largest audiences ever known at a Worcester festival.

The overture to the "Occasional" oratorio had never been performed with Sir Michael Costa's instrumentation before. The parts were specially imported from England for the festival.

THE BOSTON NEWS.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1891.

WORCESTER FESTIVAL ENDED.

Conductor Zerrahn Gets a Purse With $1500 in It.

[Special Despatch to the News.]

WORCESTER, Sept. 25.—The Worcester music festival closed today with two largely attended concerts. In the afternoon Franz Rummell, the pianist, made the hit of the season, playing Rubenstein's D minor concerto. In response to an imperative recall he played Brassin's "Nocturne." Other instrumental numbers were Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, D'Vorak's D minor symphony, and Lalos' rhapsody in A, all new to the festival save "Egmont."

Dr. G. R. Clark sang "Aria" from "Queen of Sheba," and Mrs. Seabury C. Ford sang the bolero from "Sicilian Vespers." The closing concert tonight was a rousing performance of Handel's "Israel in Egypt." The choral work was the best of the week, and the soloists admirable.

They were Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker, Mrs. Carl Alves, Herbert Johnson, Carl Dufft and Myron W. Whitney.

This completed Carl Zerrahn's 25th year as festival conductor. At intermission President Edward L. Davis presented him in behalf of the association with a purse of $1500. This week has witnessed the greatest artistic success and largest audiences ever known at the Worcester festival.

The North American

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1891.

THEY'RE FOND OF MUSIC IN BOSTON.

Special Dispatch to The North American.

BOSTON, Sept. 24.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has in the last few years come to be an institution of well-nigh national reputation, and the success attending its annual series of concerts interests a vast public scattered throughout the States. During the week at Music Hall every seat for the twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals, as well as for the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts, have been sold. The maintenance of the orchestra is the private undertaking of a private citizen, and therefore no official statement can be made of the actual financial results of the concerts, but the most careful estimate shows that fully $100,000 has been paid into the box office for the coming symphony season. In addition to this there are 12,000 seats sold during the season at the rehearsals at twenty-five cents each, with as many more admissions at the concerts. The first rehearsal takes place October 9 and the first concert the following evening.

[illegible]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER [illegible]

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL.

Fourth Day—Miscellaneous Programme in the Afternoon—Handel's "Israel in Egypt" and a Presentation in the Evening.

[Special Correspondence to the Transcript.]

WORCESTER, Sept. 25.

For a number of years the afternoon programme of Friday at the Worcester festival has been one of the best of the series; that of today, excepting one number, was admirable in point of dignity and scope, albeit too long. Here it is in full:

Overture to "Egmont.......Beethoven
Recitative and aria, "She alone charmeth my sadness," from "The Queen of Sheba"....Gounod
Dr. G. R. Clark.
Symphony, No. 2, in D minor, Op. 70.......Dvorak
Concerto for pianoforte, No. 4, in D minor..Rubinstein
Mr. Franz Rummel.
Bolero from "The Sicilian Vespers".......Verdi
Mrs. S. C. Ford.
Rhapsody in A.......Lalo

The symphony, concerto and rhapsody were new in Worcester. The last named was best played of the three, rather a strange fact when it is remembered that it was one hundred and forty minutes distant on the programme from "Egmont" and that the temperature in the concert hall was at a torrid standard. The slow movement of the symphony, was, however, played with fine expression. Both of the singers appeared under disadvantages, Dr. Claus coddling a sore throat and Mrs. Ford resisting a blinding headache. Nevertheless they passed the ordeal without disaster. Dr. Clark's voice is a serviceable bass and he sings earnestly; it is a question how far he can temper his generally heavy style, or whether the voice itself is one that will please in circles which hear Whitney, Babcock and Fischer. Mrs. Ford sang the Bolero archly, though with apparent effort. Mr. Rummel felt the heat of the hall and seemed somewhat more constrained than when at his very best. The degree of difference was, however, slight, for his reading of the solo part of the concerto was admirable in its artistic balance, and as a piece of virtuosity was fine, though Rubinstein's concerto is not altogether intended for a display of that quality. He was deservedly recalled, and played with that beautiful singing tone of which he is master a nocturne by Brassin.

Tonight the performance of "Israel in Egypt" was preceded by the overture to Handel's "Occasional Oratorio." The overture, which probably had not been heard in the country before, was played as arranged by Costa—that is, with augmented brass and wood. It is a vigorous and interesting composition, even in the Handelian dialect; in the coda of Sir Michael's arrangement the sonorous brass is a real help to Handel. The choruses of Handel's "Israel" are fully within the grasp of the Worcester choir to do well. Last year some of the more popular ones were given for the first time here; tonight the selections included several of those previously omitted which with judicious drafts of those already familiar made a fairly representative showing of Handel's choral masterpiece. In the solo portions most of the airs of the appendix were sung, and the two or three better known duos in the regular work. It makes little difference what the order of performing is. Handel drew from his melting pot and his scrapbook, and flung "Israel" together. The only coherent portion of the work is that which was originally intended for a separate cantata, namely, the second part

The solos were sung by Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker, Mrs. Carl Alves, Herbert Johnson and Myron W. Whitney. Mrs. Walker sang her one air with that certainty of style and of method which make her great in oratorio. Her declaration of the opening phrase in the final chorus was effective, more because of the art of the singer than for prodigality of tone. Mrs. Alves sang her solo, "Thou shalt bring them in," most expressively. Her school is a thoroughly good one, and she is its master; moreover in the matter of voice production she is an example of what is best in this most misunderstood of the arts. As has been said before, it is a "liberal education" to hear her sing, and Mrs. Alves's voice while lacking somewhat in the sympathetic quality is always agreeable; it is deep rather than high, but the scale through nearly two octaves is without break. The delivery of the air, "The Enemy Said," by Mr. Johnson, was not quite so unrestrained as last year. In an attempt to take a high A at the close, he missed making a tour de force, and also marred the effect of the aria as a whole; for he phrased it well and his vocalization was good. Mr. Whitney, who began to renew his artistic youth the moment he left the undignified surroundings of light opera, was in fine voice, and though obliged to substitute a staccato for a legato touch in the florid parts of the aria, "Wave on Wave," yet his singing was noble in style and vocally noble too. In the duet, "The Lord is a Man of War," Carl Dufft was associated with his, and the result was the finest performance of the most effective of the solo number in "Isreal" the writer ever heard. Mr. Dufft is an artist of great capacity, and an intelligent student of vocal means. It is a matter of regret that the rarely heard duet, "The Lord is my Strength," though originally announced, had to be omitted because the alto part is too high for Mrs. Alves to sing well. There was a large and enthusiastic audience. Mr. Zerrahn was greeted with enthusiasm on his entrance, and during the intermission was presented with a check for a handsome snm in recognition of his faithful services to Worcester, and particularly in commemoration of his having served twenty-five years as conductor of the Worcester County Musical Association. Mr. Davies made the speech and Mr. Zerrahn answered with a volubility quite surprising.

Just a word of retrospect. Barring an unfortunate choice in the most important choral novelty produced this season, the thirty-fourth festival is the most notable of any the Worcester association has held. The gain in catholicity, particularly as regards the orchestral selections, is astounding, and all the miscellaneous programme showed a sifting of the finical and trivial elements which heretofore have been unfavorable conditions in programmes that were otherwise artistic. All this shows that the management is inclined to be receptive of modern ideas, that the fair criticism and argument proposed this year by disinterested critics has had weight. As it is not possible to take a backward step now, the future of the Worcester festival in this particular is assured. Concerning solo artists, the standard of the year was certainly high. There were no better in the country than those who appeared at the [illegible] ended. But it is the efficiency of [illegible] chorus that most concerns the [illegible] observer. The voices are good, but [illegible] as a whole is [illegible] in technique [illegible] not half developed, or else [illegible] the more difficult portions of almost [illegible] work [illegible] is wholly

---

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 27, 1891.

THE WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The thirty-fourth annual festival of the Worcester County Musical Association was held at Mechanics' Hall, Worcester, last week. It opened Tuesday afternoon with an organ, harp and song recital, at which Mr. G. W. Morgan and Miss Maud Morgan, Miss Laura M. Burnham, Mrs. Paulsen White, Mrs. Ada May Benzing and Mr. Herbert Johnson were the performers.

Mr. Morgan played with considerable technical uncertainty and little rhythmical clearness an uninteresting concert piece by Thiele and his own fantaisie on themes from "Tannhauser." It must be said, however, that his efforts were received with much applause. Miss Morgan was also heard in two solos, in the second of which, the trio for two flutes and harp from "The Childhood of Christ," by Berlioz, she was assisted by Messrs. E. M. Heindl and Paul Fox. Both were tastefully rendered and gave no little pleasure. Mr. Johnson, in a charming air from Ponchielli's "La Gioconda," fully sustained the reputation he has won of being one of Boston's first tenors. Mrs. Paulsen White, who was somewhat over weighted with an aria by Massenet; Mrs. Benzing, in a song by Mattei, and Miss Burnham, in the cavatina, "Carnival of Venice," were all moderately successful and were cordially received.

At the evening concert Max Bruch's oratorio, "Arminius," was given, the soloists being Miss Lena Little, Messrs. Campanini and Meyn. Mr. Carl Zerrahn was enthusiastically greeted as he came upon the platform, and the effective character of the chorus singing was clear proof that his ability and zeal in no wise diminish as the years go by.

Miss Little gave much satisfaction by her artistic singing of the part of the priestess. She has perhaps never been heard hereabouts to better advantage. Mr. Meyn sang the strong, dramatic music of "Arminius" with appropriate breadth and fire, his conception showing the grasp of a genuine musician. Campanini once more gave astonishing evidence of his staying powers as a vocalist as well as of his dramatic intensity of feeling. In his interpretation of the death of Sigemund he appeared with all his old time strength, and the burst of applause that followed showed the extent of the appreciation of his splendid work.

At the orchestral concert Wednesday afternoon the opening number was Schumann's Symphony in D minor. When the fact that this work is one of Mr. Nikisch's prime favorites is recalled, the quality of the playing by the orchestra will be easily understood. In spite of the immense advantage of having under him so fine a body of men, however, Mr. Zerrahn, through his somewhat heavy lead, failed to give anything more than a conventional colorless reading of the symphony. It is true that the noticeably smaller body of men must be taken into consideration, and also the circumstance that the orchestra was practically surrounded by the audience (the chorus seats being well filled). To so place an orchestra is to place it in a position were much of the life of the tone produced is necessarily absorbed. Two movements from Tschaikowsky's symphony in F minor, and Grieg's "Peere Gynt" suite were the remaining orchestral numbers, and were more effectively played. The soloists were numerous and able. Mrs. Julia L. Wyman sang the aria, "O Fatal Gift," from Verdi's "Don Carlos," with great breadth and unusual warmth of style. In Mozart's scena and aria, "Bella mia fiamma, addio," Mrs. S. C. Ford displayed her brilliant, flexible voice to fine advantage, and an artistic comprehension of the music as well. And Mr. Victor Herbert, the talented 'cello player of New York gave an expressive and brilliant performance of St. Saen's concerts in A minor. All were heartily received, the two ladies being compelled to respond with songs. Mr. Herbert's able conducting of the orchestral, and his playing of the piano accompaniments, deserves an added word of praise.

The third concert Wednesday evening began with an indifferent performance of Gluck's overture, "Iphigenia," which was followed by a dramatic scene, "Hagar in the Desert," Rubinstein, opus 92. The piece is long and tiresome, and is one more instance of the Russian composer's present barrenness of idea. Mrs. Carl Alves apparently made of it all that was possible, and at times sang with much expression. Next came Mrs. Lillian Nordica, in the waltz song from Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet." Her popularity was emphatically attested by the tremendous applause that her appearance evoked; and her brilliant and "stylish" (if one may say so) intepretation of that "fetching" concert piece proved clearly that she well understands how to reach the heart of the dear public. For an encore she sang the polonaise from "Mignon," an unwarrantably long number. The intermezzo from the much talked of new opera "Cavalleria Rusticana," by the youthful genius, Mascagni, which was played as originally scored, was also heard in the first part of the evening. Standing alone in a miscellaneous concert, it of course lost all its significance; and all that can be said of it is that it is a very pretty tune.

The remainder of the programme was devoted to "The Repentance of Nineveh," a dramatic oratorio, by Dr. J. F. Bridge, the English composer. This work, written for the Worcester Festival in England of 1890 has not been performed elsewhere since that time. Although it has interesting moments in melody and instrumentation and contains one or two striking solos and choruses, it seems as a whole dreary and unprofitable. The composer shows undoubted acquaintance with modern orchestral devices and effects and considerable skill in their use; but he too often permits his music to become noisy and his pages to be covered with unattractive and almost endless recitative. Mrs. Nordica sang the part of the daughter of the king clearly and artistically, at times very expressively. This may also be said of Mrs. Alves, as the queen; and Mr. Carl Dufft and Mr. Johnson were by no means behind in their renderings of the parts of the king and Jonah. The chorus work was earnest and strong, if not always adequate, and orchestra and conductor did their best.

The fourth concert on Thursday afternoon included four works, all new to the United States. The first was a mass in C minor, by G. Arthur Adams. This young man, who died not long ago, possessed decided musical talent. He was an excellent pianist and organist; and there is no doubt that if ill health, and an extremely modest and sensitive nature had not weighed too heavily upon him, he would have ranked well among the most able American musicians of today. His desire to try his hand at so serious a work as a mass shows truly the refined noble bent of his mind, which all who knew him were sure to remember. The mass was well sung by the chorus, with Mrs. J. P. Walker, Mrs. Wyman, Messrs. A. L. King and G. R. Clark in the solo parts, and was listened to with close and sympathetic attention by the large audience. The second number was a suite in A minor, opus 42, by E. A. MacDowell. Next came a ballad, "The Heavenly Message," by C. Whitney Coombs, sung by Mr. Dufft. Though broadly and expressively sung, it proved to be a piece of ordinary merit. The last number was Mr. Victor [illegible]'s "The Captive." The performance, inadequate as it was, left agreeable impressions and the desire to hear the cantata again under more favorable circumstances. Mr. Herbert conducted in an able manner and orchestra and chorus are to be commended for succeeding as well as they did in view of the difficulties of the work and the insufficient rehearsals. At its conclusion Mr. Herbert was recalled several times.

Thursday evening a grand miscellaneous concert was given, at which most of the noted soloists appeared. Wagner's "A Faust Overture," "Senta's ballad," "Lohengrin's narration" and the prayer and finale from the first act of the same opera, and Richter's arrangement from the "Nibelungen Ring," were the principal numbers. Friday afternoon the second symphony concert took place. In the evening the festival closed with a performance of "Israel in Egypt." Altogether the festival was a pronounced success. The management's enterprise, as displayed in their choice of works and soloists, was seemingly duly rewarded, for the attendance greatly exceeded the capacity of the hall, and general satisfaction is felt at the efforts which were made to place the concerts of this institution on a much higher level than those of previous years have attained.

T. P. CURRIER.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 27, 1891.

—Mme. Nordica was more charming than ever Friday night at Worcester. She wore another Worth creation of even more conspicuous beauty than the costume of the night before. It was in reproduction an old Venetian robe, with a skirt of sea foam green satin, cut en train, elaborately trimmed with applique velvet, in delicate red colorings brocaded with gold. The waist was cut round at the neck, the top of the corsage encircled with a band of sapphires and diamonds; long sleeves also thickly studded with gems. A petit bonnet was the crowning glory of the costume, and on its design M. Worth himself spent three days of hard study. Fully $10,000 in diamonds gave an eclat to this gown, which was simply stunning. Mlle. Nordica held a reception at her rooms at the Bay State after the concert. Mr. Zerrahn also gave an informal one at the same hotel.

—Mme. Lillian Norton evidently captured the town at the Worcester festival last week by her beauty of face and costume as well as by her exquisite art. She was a strikingly handsome figure the opening night in a trailing gown of silver brocade with pearls lavishly embroidered upon it. Mr. C. A. Ellis of the Music Hall, her manager, was at Worcester part of the week.

—Mme. Nordica held a short reception at her apartments at the Bay State, Friday evening, after the concert. Only intimate friends were present, and the tired but supremely happy prima donna enjoyed the entertainment to the utmost. There was no formality, and only one or two Worcester friends were among the party. Carl Zerrahn was also given an informal reception at his rooms in the same hotel, to which Campanini and others were asked.

Mme. Nordica filled the first engagement of her American tour at the Worcester festival last week. Her fine vocalism aroused great enthusiasm, and her success was most emphatic. On the night of her second appearance every seat in the house was sold, and speculators reaped a harvest, easily finding customers at $5 a seat.

All the season tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra have been sold. The first concert will take place on Oct. 10. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist.

The Kneisel quartet concerts at Union Hall will be given on Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7. This organization will also give a series of concerts at Sherry's new concert hall, Fifth av., New York, during the season.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Vendue.

THIS is an exciting time in Boston, and people come from mountain and sea shore to attend. There was an unusually large attendance this year, including more ladies than ever. Auctioneer Jackson says his enduring voice is wholly natural, with no special training or knack about it. On Monday he talked from ten o'clock till twilight, with scarcely any intermission, selling the twelve-dollar seats for the miscalled Rehearsals, that is, the Friday afternoon concerts. The seats are sold one by one, in rows from platform to rear; and premiums are not bidden for choice of seats, but for ihe particular seat offered, though the bidder for one seat has the option of taking three more in line at the same premium. This year the number of single seats sold was unprecedented, and many bought two and three. The speculators were on hand and bid freely, prices ranging higher than ever before. There was Donelly, from the Adams House, calm, imperturbable, good natured, buying hundreds of seats, mostly to fill orders, he says. He is not compelled to "walk up to the captain's office" and settle after each purchase like ordinary bidders, but gives his check when all is done. More nervous is Cashin, from Young's Hotel, moving to and fro and purchasing with anxious face. Thayer, from the Parker House, has his younger representative on the ground, who does not buy so extensively. Other speculators are Stewart, who has an office upstairs on 120 Tremont street, and Wadsworth, a downtown clerk, whose name the auctioneer calls over and over again. Then there is Miss Charlotte Hawes, fresh from the Bayreuth Festival, who bids good prices for a few seats she specially desires, and picks up sundry others which go for unconsidered premiums. Many other musicians and literarians are buying,—Capen, Fay, Wilson, Spaulding, S. J. Barrows, Tyler. By some accident duplicate orders have been given to two agents, and this booms a couple of seats up to one hundred and eleven dollars premium. This makes each seat cost over five dollars for each concert; but this is not so high as last year, when the largest premium was a hundred and fifty dollars. Mr. Conelly (and there is no better judge) says that prices ruled higher by at least five per cent. than last year.

On Tuesday the auctioneer does not have to work so hard or talk so long. The sale is for the matinee seven-and-a-half-dollar seats—that is, those on the floor under the rear balcony, and the rear seats in the whole lower balcony. Of course the premiums are lower, and the traders buy many at a trifling advance. There are a few surprising sales, however. One elderly lady is bound to have a certain seat, and up she bounces it into the teens, though its neighbors go for five dollars or less. The wall row seats are at first unbought; but the seller puts them up again at the last minute, and they go for a quarter-dollar premium only; yet they are the best of the under-balcony seats, because they afford decent room for one's legs; for the settees in that quarter are not only narrow and cramped but movable, and so liable to be jammed against the sitters in the adjacent rows? whereas, in the back row, you have the wall behind and an aisle in front, and are much less disturbed. Similar comfortable seats upstairs bring much better prices, because they afford better view and ventilation. Take it for all in all, there is prevalent good humor and seldom any grumbling or misunderstanding. Once or twice, when he is weary, the auctioneer inadvertently jumps his bidders up an extra dollar; but they don't care, for the dollar would be bidden anyhow. Occasionally there are two claims for the same bid, and the sale is repeated. Once in an age Jackson fails to spot the bidder; for even the sun has spots, so why not Jackson; but his courtesy, fairness and quickness are constant as the sun, and roll on majestically, "without haste, without rest." Two recorders sit at his feet, to note each sale, as number, name and premiums are declared. A card memorandum is at once carried by an attendant urchin to the doorway counter, where the purchaser finds the order and its corresponding tickets awaiting him, and where Superintendent C. A. Ellis and his assistants have all they can do to take the money and drafts, and satisfy those disgruntled people who think something is awry, when really it is their own fault for failing to give their names to the recorders, and to remember their numbers.

Wednesday was a day of rest for all participants; but on Thursday the fun began again, with the more expensive seats for the evening concerts, for which (as usual) prices ranged much lower than for the matinees, the highest bids being $36 and $29. Mr. Jackson's throat showed signs of huskiness. Professor Royce, of Cambridge, was one of the first buyers.

On Friday is the finale, with the lower-priced seats. De Seve, C. N. Allen, and many other musicians are among the buyers. Rev. J. M. Marsters is there, and snaps up his favorite front corner of the upper balcony for only a dollar premium. One purchaser kicks. He thinks the seats should be sold in the exact order of their numbering, which sometimes would give an advantage in the last four seats allowed, even though the first was less desirable; but Mr. Ellis decides that the order of former years must be observed, and go from one side balcony to another, leaving the rear balcony till later. Indeed, if it were otherwise, old buyers might reasonably complain of the unexpected change. There is some confusion in the balcony sale, which would be avoided by placing the seat diagrams vertically on the selling board, as the seats are located in the hall and as they are printed on the small diagrams, instead of posting them in parallel rows from right to left. However, diligent study enables one to get things nearly straight, and perhaps next year this simple change may be adopted. Everybody is weary. Even the auctioneer misses a larger bid for the very last seat, from a long voiced buyer. Superintendent Ellis is glad the annual sale is so satisfactorily over. It should be noted that the second balcony is left unsold at the matinees, for the benefit of rushers who pay a quarter for admission simply; but for evening this balcony also is sold. This year not a seat was left over for sale at the office, and so we shall happily miss the long cue of squatters who heretofore have waited days for a chance at the window. By the way, this window, after all these years, has been shifted to a better location, in the immediate entrance way of the lower vestibule. Taking one consideration with another, this auction is as fair as can well be, both to the public and Manager Higginson, though I am not sure it might not be better to sell each seat for outside prices, without any regular price to build upon.

THOUGH no tickets were left over for the matinees from the auction, some seventy-five remained from Thursday's sale of higher priced evening seats; but they dissappeared the next forenoon. It is calculated that the total receipts exceeded a hundred thousand dollars, and that the prices averaged about one dollar apiece for each seat, for each of the forty-eight concerts.

Boston Transcri

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1891.

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL.

Fourth Day—Miscellaneous Programme in the Afternoon—Handel's "Israel in Egypt" and a Presentation in the Evening.

[Special Correspondence to the Transcript.]

WORCESTER, Sept. 25.

For a number of years the afternoon programme of Friday at the Worcester festival has been one of the best of the series: that of today, excepting one number, was admirable in point of dignity and scope, albeit too long. Here it is in full:

Overture to "Egmont.......................Beethoven
Recitative and aria, "She alone charmeth my sadness," from "The Queen of Sheba"....Gounod
Dr. G. R. Clark.
Symphony, No. 2, in D minor, Op. 70...........Dvorak
Concerto for pianoforte, No. 4, in D minor..Rubinstein
Mr. Franz Rummel.
Bolero from "The Sicilian Vespers"..............Verdi
Mrs. S. C. Ford.
Rhapsody in A..Lalo

The symphony, concerto and rhapsody were new in Worcester. The last named was best played of the three, rather a strange fact when it is remembered that it was one hundred and forty minutes distant on the programme from "Egmont" and that the temperature in the concert hall was at a torrid standard. The slow movement of the symphony, was, however, played with fine expression. Both of the singers appeared under disadvantages, Dr. Claus coddling a sore throat and Mrs. Ford resisting a blinding headache. Nevertheless they passed the ordeal without disaster. Dr. Clark's voice is a serviceable bass and he sings earnestly; it is a question how far he can temper his generally heavy style, or whether the voice itself is one that will please in circles which hear Whitney, Babcock and Fischer. Mrs. Ford sang the Bolero archly, though with apparent effort. Mr. Rummel felt the heat of the hall and seemed somewhat more constrained than when at his very best. The degree of difference was, however, slight, for his reading of the solo part of the concerto was admirable in its artistic balance, and as a piece of virtuosity was fine, though Rubinstein's concerto is not altogether intended for a display of that quality. He was deservedly recalled, and played with that beautiful singing tone of which he is master a nocturne by Brassin.

Tonight the performance of "Israel in Egypt" was preceded by the overture to Handel's "Occasional Oratorio." The overture, which probably had not been heard in the country before, was played as arranged by Costa—that is, with augmented brass and wood. It is a vigorous and interesting composition, even in the Handelian dialect; in the coda of Sir Michael's arrangement the sonorous brass is a real help to Handel. The choruses of Handel's "Israel" are fully within the grasp of the Worcester choir to do well. Last year some of the more popular ones were given for the first time here; tonight the selections included several of those previously omitted which with judicious drafts of those already familiar made a fairly representative showing of Handel's choral masterpiece. In the solo portions most of the airs of the appendix were sung, and the two or three better known duos in the regular work. It makes little difference what the order of performing is. Handel drew from his melting pot and his scrapbook, and flung "Israel" together. The only coherent portion of the work is that which was originally intended for a separate cantata, namely, the second part

The solos were sung by Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker, Mrs. Carl Alves, Herbert Johnson and Myron W. Whitney. Mrs. Walker sang her one air with that certainty of style and of method which make her great in oratorio. Her declaration of the opening phrase in the final chorus was effective, more because of the art of the singer than for prodigality of tone. Mrs. Alves sang her solo, "Thou shalt bring them in," most expressively. Her school is a thoroughly good one, and she is its master; moreover in the matter of voice production she is an example of what is best in this most misunderstood of the arts. As has been said before, it is a "liberal education" to hear her sing, and Mrs. Alves's voice while lacking somewhat in the sympathetic quality is always agreeable; it is deep rather than high, but the scale through nearly two octaves is without break. The delivery of the air, "The Enemy Said," by Mr. Johnson, was not quite so unrestrained as last year. In an attempt to take a high A at the close, he missed making a tour de force, and also marred the effect of the aria as a whole; for he phrased it well and his vocalization was good. Mr. Whitney, who began to renew his artistic youth the moment he left the undignified surroundings of light opera, was in fine voice, and though obliged to substitute a staccato for a legato touch in the florid parts of the aria, "Wave on Wave," yet his singing was noble in style and vocally noble too. In the duet, "The Lord is a Man of War," Carl Dufft was associated with his, and the result was the finest performance of the most effective of the solo number in "Isreal" the writer ever heard. Mr. Dufft is an artist of great capacity, and an intelligent student of vocal means. It is a matter of regret that the rarely heard duet, "The Lord is my Strength," though originally announced, had to be omitted because the alto part is too high for Mrs. Alves to sing well. There was a large and enthusiastic audience. Mr. Zerrahn was greeted with enthusiasm on his entrance, and during the intermission was presented with a check for a handsome sum in recognition of his faithful services to Worcester, and particularly in commemoration of his having served twenty-five years as conductor of the Worcester County Musical Association. Mr. Davies made the speech and Mr. Zerrahn answered with a volubility quite surprising.

Just a word of retrospect. Barring an unfortunate choice in the most important choral novelty produced this season, the thirty-fourth festival is the most notable of any the Worcester association has held. The gain in catholicity, particularly as regards the orchestral selections, is astounding, and all the miscellaneous programme showed a sifting of the finical and trivial elements which heretofore have been unfavorable conditions in programmes that were otherwise artistic. All this shows that the management is inclined to be receptive of modern ideas, that the fair criticism and argument proposed this year by disinterested critics has had weight. As it is not possible to take a backward step now, the future of the Worcester festival in this particular is assured. Concerning solo artists, the standard of the year was certainly high. There were no better in the country than those who appeared at the festival just ended. But it is the efficiency of the Worcester chorus that most concerns the interested observer. The voices are good, but the choir as a whole is deficient in technique. Its capabilities are not half developed, or else why should the more difficult portions of almost every work selected be omitted? Is is wholly owing to insufficient rehearsal.

G. H. WILSON.

9]

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 27, 1891.

THE WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The thirty-fourth annual festival of the Worcester County Musical Association was held at Mechanics' Hall, Worcester, last week. It opened Tuesday afternoon with an organ, harp and song recital, at which Mr. G. W. Morgan and Miss Maud Morgan, Miss Laura M. Burnham, Mrs. Paulsen White, Mrs. Ada May Benzing and Mr. Herbert Johnson were the performers.

Mr. Morgan played with considerable technical uncertainty and little rhythmical clearness an uninteresting concert piece by Thiele and his own fantaisie on themes from "Tannhauser." It must be said, however, that his efforts were received with much applause. Miss Morgan was also heard in two solos, in the second of which, the trio for two flutes and harp from "The Childhood of Christ," by Berlioz, she was assisted by Messrs. E. M. Heindl and Paul Fox. Both were tastefully rendered and gave no little pleasure. Mr. Johnson, in a charming air from Ponchielli's "La Gioconda," fully sustained the reputation he has won of being one of Boston's first tenors. Mrs. Paulsen White, who was somewhat over weighted with an aria by Massenet; Mrs. Benzing, in a song by Mattei, and Miss Burnham, in the cavatina, "Carnival of Venice," were all moderately successful and were cordially received.

At the evening concert Max Bruch's oratorio, "Arminius," was given, the soloists being Miss Lena Little, Messrs. Campanini and Meyn. Mr. Carl Zerrahn was enthusiastically greeted as he came upon the platform, and the effective character of the chorus singing was clear proof that his ability and zeal in no wise diminish as the years go by.

Miss Little gave much satisfaction by her artistic singing of the part of the priestess. She has perhaps never been heard hereabouts to better advantage. Mr. Meyn sang the strong, dramatic music of "Arminius" with appropriate breadth and fire, his conception showing the grasp of a genuine musician. Campanini once more gave astonishing evidence of his staying powers as a vocalist as well as of his dramatic intensity of feeling. In his interpretation of the death of Sigemund he appeared with all his old time strength, and the burst of applause that followed showed the extent of the appreciation of his splendid work.

At the orchestral concert Wednesday afternoon the opening number was Schumann's Symphony in D minor. When the fact that this work is one of Mr. Nikisch's prime favorites is recalled, the quality of the playing by the orchestra will be easily understood. In spite of the immense advantage of having under him so fine a body of men, however, Mr. Zerrahn, through his somewhat heavy lead, failed to give anything more than a conventional colorless reading of the symphony. It is true that the noticeably smaller body of men must be taken into consideration, and also the circumstance that the orchestra was practically surrounded by the audience (the chorus seats being well filled). To so place an orchestra is to place it in a position were much of the life of the tone produced is necessarily absorbed. Two movements from Tschaikowsky's symphony in F minor, and Grieg's "Peere Gynt" suite were the remaining orchestral numbers, and were more effectively played. The soloists were numerous and able. Mrs. Julia L. Wyman sang the aria, "O Fatal Gift," from Verdi's "Don Carlos," with great breadth and unusual warmth of style. In Mozart's scena and aria, "Bella mia fiamma, addio," Mrs. S. C. Ford displayed her brilliant, flexible voice to fine advantage, and an artistic comprehension of the music as well. And Mr. Victor Herbert, the talented 'cello player of New York gave an expressive and brilliant performance of St. Saen's concerts in A minor. All were heartily received, the two ladies being compelled to respond with songs. Mr. Herbert's able conducting of the orchestral, and his playing of the piano accompaniments, deserves an added word of praise.

The third concert Wednesday evening began with an indifferent performance of Gluck's overture, "Iphigenia," which was followed by a dramatic scene, "Hagar in the Desert," Rubinstein, opus 92. The piece is long and tiresome, and is one more instance of the Russian composer's present barrenness of idea. Mrs. Carl Alves apparently made of it all that was possible, and at times sang with much expression. Next came Mrs. Lillian Nordica, in the waltz song from Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet." Her popularity was emphatically attested by the tremendous applause that her appearance evoked; and her brilliant and "stylish" (if one may say so) intepretation of that "fetching" concert piece proved clearly that she well understands how to reach the heart of the dear public. For an encore she sang the polonaise from "Mignon," an unwarrantably long number. The intermezzo from the much talked of new opera "Cavalleria Rusticana," by the youthful genius, Mascagni, which was played as originally scored, was also heard in the first part of the evening. Standing alone in a miscellaneous concert, it of course lost all its significance; and all that can be said of it is that it is a very pretty tune.

The remainder of the programme was devoted to "The Repentance of Nineveh," a dramatic oratorio, by Dr. J. F. Bridge, the English composer. This work, written for the Worcester Festival in England of 1890 has not been performed elsewhere since that time. Although it has interesting moments in melody and instrumentation and contains one or two striking solos and choruses, it seems as a whole dreary and unprofitable. The composer shows undoubted acquaintance with modern orchestral devices and effects and considerable skill in their use; but he too often permits his music to become noisy and his pages to be covered with unattractive and almost endless recitative. Mrs. Nordica sang the part of the daughter of the king clearly and artistically, at times very expressively. This may also be said of Mrs. Alves, as the queen; and Mr. Carl Dufft and Mr. Johnson were by no means behind in their renderings of the parts of the king and Jonah. The chorus work was earnest and strong, if not always adequate, and orchestra and conductor did their best.

The fourth concert on Thursday afternoon included four works, all new to the United States. The first was a mass in C minor, by G. Arthur Adams. This young man, who died not long ago, possessed decided musical talent. He was an excellent pianist and organist; and there is no doubt that if ill health, and an extremely modest and sensitive nature had not weighed too heavily upon him, he would have ranked well among the most able American musicians of today. His desire to try his hand at so serious a work as a mass shows truly the refined noble bent of his mind, which all who knew him were sure to remember. The mass was well sung by the chorus, with Mrs. J. P. Walker, Mrs. Wyman, Messrs. A. L. King and G. R. Clark in the solo parts, and was listened to with close and sympathetic attention by the large audience. The second number was a suite in A minor, opus 42, by E. A. MacDowell. Next came a ballad, "The Heavenly Message," by C. Whitney Coombs, sung by Mr. Dufft. Though broadly and expressively sung, it proved to be a piece of ordinary merit. The last number was Mr. Victor Herbert's "The Captive." The performance, inadequate as it was, left agreeable impressions and the desire to hear the cantata again under more favorable circumstances. Mr. Herbert conducted in an able manner and orchestra and chorus are to be commended for succeeding as well as they did in view of the difficulties of the work and the insufficient rehearsals. At its conclusion Mr. Herbert was recalled several times.

Thursday evening a grand miscellaneous concert was given, at which most of the noted soloists appeared. Wagner's "A Faust Overture," "Senta's ballad," "Lohengrin's narration" and the prayer and finale from the first act of the same opera, and Richter's arrangement from the "Nibelungen Ring," were the principal numbers. Friday afternoon the second symphony concert took place. In the evening the festival closed with a performance of "Israel in Egypt." Altogether the festival was a pronounced success. The management's enterprise, as displayed in their choice of works and soloists, was seemingly duly rewarded, for the attendance greatly exceeded the capacity of the hall, and general satisfaction is felt at the efforts which were made to place the concerts of this institution on a much higher level than those of previous years have attained.

T. P. CURRIER.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 27, 1891.

—Mme. Nordica was more charming than ever Friday night at Worcester. She wore another Worth creation of even more conspicuous beauty than the costume of the night before. It was in reproduction an old Venetian robe, with a skirt of sea foam green satin, cut en train, elaborately trimmed with applique velvet, in delicate red colorings brocaded with gold. The waist was cut round at the neck, the top of the corsage encircled with a band of sapphires and diamonds; long sleeves also thickly studded with gems. A petit bonnet was the crowning glory of the costume, and on its design M. Worth himself spent three days of hard study. Fully $10,000 in diamonds gave an eclat to this gown, which was simply stunning. Mlle. Nordica held a reception at her rooms at the Bay State after the concert. Mr. Zerrahn also gave an informal one at the same hotel.

—Mme. Lillian Norton evidently captured the town at the Worcester festival last week by her beauty of face and costume as well as by her exquisite art. She was a strikingly handsome figure the opening night in a trailing gown of silver brocade with pearls lavishly embroidered upon it. Mr. C. A. Ellis of the Music Hall, her manager, was at Worcester part of the week.

—Mme. Nordica held a short reception at her apartments at the Bay State, Friday evening, after the concert. Only intimate friends were present, and the tired but supremely happy prima donna enjoyed the entertainment to the utmost. There was no formality, and only one or two Worcester friends were among the party. Carl Zerrahn was also given an informal reception at his rooms in the same hotel, to which Campanini and others were asked.

Mme. Nordica filled the first engagement of her American tour at the Worcester festival last week. Her fine vocalism aroused great enthusiasm, and her success was most emphatic. On the night of her second appearance every seat in the house was sold, and speculators reaped a harvest, easily finding customers at $5 a seat.

All the season tickets for the public rehearsals and concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra have been sold. The first concert will take place on Oct. 10. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist.

The Kneisel quartet concerts at Union Hall will be given on Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7. This organization will also give a series of concerts at Sherry's new concert hall, Fifth av., New York, during the season.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

NEW YORK, SATURDAY. SEPTEMBER 26, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Vendue.

THIS is an exciting time in Boston, and people come from mountain and sea shore to attend. There was an unusually large attendance this year, including more ladies than ever. Auctioneer Jackson says his enduring voice is wholly natural, with no special training or knack about it. On Monday he talked from ten o'clock till twilight, with scarcely any intermission, selling the twelve-dollar seats for the miscalled Rehearsals, that is, the Friday afternoon concerts. The seats are sold one by one, in rows from platform to rear; and premiums are not bidden for choice of seats, but for the particular seat offered, though the bidder for one seat has the option of taking three more in line at the same premium. This year the number of single seats sold was unprecedented, and many bought two and three. The speculators were on hand and bid freely, prices ranging higher than ever before. There was Donelly, from the Adams House, calm, imperturbable, good natured, buying hundreds of seats, mostly to fill orders, he says. He is not compelled to "walk up to the captain's office" and settle after each purchase like ordinary bidders, but gives his check when all is done. More nervous is Cashin, from Young's Hotel, moving to and fro and purchasing with anxious face. Thayer, from the Parker House, has his younger representative on the ground, who does not buy so extensively. Other speculators are Stewart, who has an office upstairs on 120 Tremont street, and Wadsworth, a downtown clerk, whose name the auctioneer calls over and over again. Then there is Miss Charlotte Hawes, fresh from the Bayreuth Festival, who bids good prices for a few seats she specially desires, and picks up sundry others which go or unconsidered premiums. Many other musicians and literarians are buying,—Capen, Fay, Wilson, Spaulding, S. J. Barrows, Tyler. By some accident duplicate orders have been given to two agents, and this booms a couple of seats up to one hundred and eleven dollars premium. This makes each seat cost over five dollars for each concert; but this is not so high as last year, when the largest premium was a hundred and fifty dollars. Mr. Conelly (and there is no better judge) says that prices ruled higher by at least five per cent. than last year.

On Tuesday the auctioneer does not have to work so hard or talk so long. The sale is for the matinee seven-and-a-half-dollar seats—that is, those on the floor under the rear balcony, and the rear seats in the whole lower balcony. Of course the premiums are lower, and the traders buy many at a trifling advance. There are a few surprising sales, however. One elderly lady is bound to have a certain seat, and up she bounces it into the teens, though its neighbors go for five dollars or less. The wall row seats are at first unbought; but the seller puts them up again at the last minute, and they go for a quarter-dollar premium only; yet they are the best of the under-balcony seats, because they afford decent room for one's legs; for the settees in that quarter are not only narrow and cramped but movable, and so liable to be jammed against the sitters in the adjacent rows; whereas, in the back row, you have the wall behind and an aisle in front, and are much less disturbed. Similar comfortable seats upstairs bring much better prices, because they afford better view and ventilation. Take it for all in all, there is prevalent good humor and seldom any grumbling or misunderstanding. Once or twice, when he is weary, the auctioneer inadvertently jumps his bidders up an extra dollar; but they don't care, for the dollar would be bidden anyhow. Occasionally there are two claims for the same bid, and the sale is repeated. Once in an age Jackson fails to spot the bidder; for even the sun has spots, so why not Jackson; but his courtesy, fairness and quickness are constant as the sun, and roll on majestically, "without haste, without rest." Two recorders sit at his feet, to note each sale, as number, name and premiums are declared. A card memorandum is at once carried by an attendant urchin to the doorway counter, where the purchaser finds the order and its corresponding tickets awaiting him, and where Superintendent C. A. Ellis and his assistants have all they can do to take the money and drafts, and satisfy those disgruntled people who think something is awry, when really it is their own fault for failing to give their names to the recorders, and to remember their numbers.

Wednesday was a day of rest for all participants; but on Thursday the fun began again, with the more expensive seats for the evening concerts, for which (as usual) prices ranged much lower than for the matinees, the highest bids being $36 and $29. Mr. Jackson's throat showed signs of huskiness. Professor Royce, of Cambridge, was one of the first buyers.

On Friday is the finale, with the lower-priced seats. De Seve, C. N. Allen, and many other musicians are among the buyers. Rev. J. M. Marsters is there, and snaps up his favorite front corner of the upper balcony for only a dollar premium. One purchaser kicks. He thinks the seats should be sold in the exact order of their numbering, which sometimes would give an advantage in the last four seats allowed, even though the first was less desirable; but Mr. Ellis decides that the order of former years must be observed, and go from one side balcony to another, leaving the rear balcony till later. Indeed, if it were otherwise, old buyers might reasonably complain of the unexpected change. There is some confusion in the balcony sale, which would be avoided by placing the seat diagrams vertically on the selling board, as the seats are located in the hall and as they are printed on the small diagrams, instead of posting them in parallel rows from right to left. However, diligent study enables one to get things nearly straight, and perhaps next year this simple change may be adopted. Everybody is weary. Even the auctioneer misses a larger bid for the very last seat, from a long voiced buyer. Superintendent Ellis is glad the annual sale is so satisfactorily over. It should be noted that the second balcony is left unsold at the matinees, for the benefit of rushers who pay a quarter for admission simply; but for evening this balcony also is sold. This year not a seat was left over for sale at the office, and so we shall happily miss the long cue of squatters who heretofore have waited days for a chance at the window. By the way, this window, after all these years, has been shifted to a better location, in the immediate entrance way of the lower vestibule. Taking one consideration with another, this auction is as fair as can well be, both to the public and Manager Higginson, though I am not sure it might not be better to sell each seat for outside prices, without any regular price to build upon.

THOUGH no tickets were left over for the matinees from the auction, some seventy-five remained from Thursday's sale of higher priced evening seats; but they dissappeared the next forenoon. It is calculated that the total receipts exceeded a hundred thousand dollars, and that the prices averaged about one dollar apiece for each seat, for each of the forty-eight concerts.

[20]

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 27.

COMING MUSIC.

The musical season is on the eve of its opening, and we shall soon be in the midst of a hurricane of concerts. From present indications, the probabilities are that we shall have more music than ever before, and music-lovers, real and pretended, are likely to be embarrassed by the quantity of riches set forth for their delectation. The first note will be sounded by the Symphony concerts, which, of course, form the piece de resistance of the season's musical feast. Other equally rich and cloying entrées in the shape of chamber concerts will shortly follow in profusion, and recital plum pudding, mince pie and other bilious luxuries in the way of dessert will not be lacking, to say nothing of the purely ornamental odds and ends that will fill in the vacant spaces on the heavily-laden table. It is superfluous to suggest that "classical" music will form the staple of these entertainments, and will, as usual, delight the few that understand and appreciate it, and bore the many who do not understand it but who wish to appear to do so. Tunes, as in the past, will, when by any accident they are heard, be frowned at openly and enjoyed secretly; and also, as in the past, what is clear and easily comprehended will be voted vulgar and commonplace, and what is recondite and baffling will be voted the "proper caper." It is to be hoped that the Symphony concert programmes may be more eclectic in character, better arranged in respect to contrasts and less heavy generally than they were last season. Even the most serious of concerts may be "classical" without becoming dreary; and if master-composers do not consider it beneath their dignity to write bright and melodious music, surely conductors need not feel it beneath their dignity to present it. There is cant in art as in everything else, and of all cants, the very cant of cant is that which insists in ignoring the beautiful because it is easy of comprehension, in favor of the ugly because it is not. This may seem like heresy to the exclusive few, who, believing that the worth of music is in exact proportion to the difficulty found in understanding it, wish to reserve to themselves the sacred privilege of dilating with the right emotion; but to the many who love music for music's sake and who are charmed by what it does rather than by what it does not tell them, it will appear very much in the light of common sense.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1891.

Notes and Announcements.

Among those interested in the future of musical art in this city there is a general feeling of disappointment that the scheme proposed last spring by Mr. Nikisch for the incorporation of the Boston Singers with the Boston Symphony Orchestra has met with obstacles of detail which necessitate the postponement and, it may be, the abandonment of the enterprise. The principle reason lies probably in the fact that the outside engagements of the orchestra are so numerous for this season that, unless there were some readjustment of these arrangements, the additional work demanded by the union of the two societies for the extra concerts proposed would have severely taxed the players. It is to be earnestly hoped that this combination of splendidly drilled forces will not be allowed to come to naught.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

The Saturday Evening Paper.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch conductor, will give its annual series of eight concerts in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings, October 15, November 12, December 3, December 31, January 21, February 25, March 24, and April 21. The fine acoustics of this audience room gives great effect to the performances of the large orchestra, and many who were disappointed in securing seats for the Boston concerts will doubtless avail themselves of this opportunity. Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, Herr Eugen D'Albert and other eminent soloists will appear in this series. Season tickets will be on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, on and after October 10.

The program of the first Symphony rehearsal and concert, October 9-10, will be as follows: Beethoven's overture, "Dedication of the House;" Wagner's "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal;" and Schumann's spmphony in E flat. Mrs. Lillian Nordica will sing the prayer from "Tannhaeuser" and Beethoven's "Ah! perfido!"

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE.

THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

with assistance of

Mme. LILLIAN NORDICA,
Mrs. JULIE M. WYMAN,
Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT,

AND OTHER EMINENT SOLOISTS,

will give a series of

EIGHT CONCERTS,

on

THURSDAY EVENINGS,

October 15th, November 12th, December 3d and 31st, 1891, January 21st, February 25th, March 24th and April 21st, 1892.

Season Tickets, with reserved seats for the series, $6, will be on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, October 10th.

Sale opens at eight A. M.

A limited number of seats have been reserved for College Officers and invited guests.

THE

KNEISEL QUARTET,

OF BOSTON,

FRANZ KNEISEL, 1ST VIOLIN.
OTTO ROTH, 2D VIOLIN.
L. SVECENSKI, VIOLA,
ALWIN SCHROEDER, VIOLONCELLO.

SEASON 1891-92.

Six Subscription Concerts

IN

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET,

MONDAY EVENINGS,

October 19th, November 23d, December 28th, 1891, January 25th, February 15th, and March 7th, 1892.

ASSISTING ARTISTS:

Mme. JOACHIM,
Mrs. ARTHUR NIKISCH,
Mme. FANNY BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER,
Mr. XAVER SCHARWENKA,
Mr. F. BUSONI,
Mr. SAMUEL SANFORD.

The Programmes will include, among others, the following compositions:

QUINTET, (new)	Brahms
GRANDE QUARTET in B major,	Beethoven
QUARTET,	Paganini
QUINTET,	Sinding
SUITE,	F. Ries
QUARTET,	A. Borodin
QUARTET,	Bazzini
SONATA, (Teufels Triller,)	Tartini
QUARTET, A major,	Schumann

Season Tickets, with reserved seats, $6 will be sold to subscribers only, at the Box Office, Music Hall, Friday, October 9th, at 9 A M. Subscription list now open at Music Hall.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 4, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the assistance of Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, Mr. Eliot Hubbard, Mr. Eugen D'Albert and other eminent soloists, will give a series of eight concerts in Sanders Theatre on Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, 1891, Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, at $6 will be on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, Oct. 10.

The first public rehearsal and concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place at Music Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Mme. Nordica is the soloist and the programme will be as follows: Overture, "Dedication of the House," Beethoven; aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; symphony in E flat, No. 3 (Rheinish), Schumann.

The Kneisel Quartet, (Frank Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; L. Svecenski, viola; Alwin Schroeder, violoncello,) will give six subscription concerts in Union Hall, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891; Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The assisting artists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats, will be sold for $6 to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 A. M. The sub scription list is now open at Music Hall.

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

EIGHT CONCERTS

ON THURSDAY EVENINGS,

Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21.

Mme. LILLIAN NORDICA, Mrs. JULIE M. WYMAN, Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT and other eminent soloists will appear. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, $6. ☞The sale of season tickets opens at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, Saturday, Oct. 10, at 8 A.M. A limited number of seats have been reserved for college officers and invited guests.

KNEISEL QUARTET

UNION HALL, 48 Boylston Street.

SIX SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS,

MONDAY EVENINGS,

Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15, March 7,

Soloists: Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeigler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni. Mr. S. Sanford.

Season Tickets, with reserved seats, $6, will be sold to Subscribers Only at the box office Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 A. M. Subscription list now open at Music Hall.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, OCT. 4, 1891

Speaking of the Worcester festival Light says: Beautiful Mme. Nordica, with her magnificent dress, which made the people's eyes stick out, and might just as well have had thousand-franc notes pinned on for trimming, so far as expense went, was regal in her manner, and she sang like a seraph. After the Handel air, "Let the bright seraphim," she sang the Rossini "Barber of Seville" air, "Una Voce," and then she went out with a storm of applause following her. The Festival has never had a more popular star than Nordica. It is partly due to her wonderful ability, and partly due to her fascinating manner. Her other single piece was "Senta's Ballad," from the "Flying Dutchman," and this she sang with equal success. * * * We mention Mme. Nordica last, because she was the best, and because it is pleasant to leave a notice of this concert, thinking of her and her captivating songs. She was down for the exquisite waltz song of Gounod, "Ah, je veux vivre," and she sang it bewitchingly. Her second selection was recognizable to about everyone present who had ever heard any singing to mention. It was the dashing polonaise from "Mignon," and this also pleased the people greatly.

Next Friday and Saturday the Symphonies begin.

The programme of the first rehearsal and concert of the Symphony orchestra, next Friday and Saturday, will be as follows: Beethoven's overture, "The Dedication of the House;" Wagner's "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," and Schumann's Symphony in E flat (Rhenish). Mrs. Lillian Nordica will sing Elizabeth's prayer from "Tannhauser" and Beethoven's "Ah! perfido." Nordica was in magnificent voice at the Worcester festival and doubtless will give her many admirers a great treat.

The first concert of the Kneisel quartette will be given in Union hall, Monday evening, Oct. 19.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 27.

COMING MUSIC.

The musical season is on the eve of its opening, and we shall soon be in the midst of a hurricane of concerts. From present indications, the probabilities are that we shall have more music than ever before, and music-lovers, real and pretended, are likely to be embarrassed by the quantity of riches set forth for their delectation. The first note will be sounded by the Symphony concerts, which, of course, form the piece de resistance of the season's musical feast. Other equally rich and cloying entrées in the shape of chamber concerts will shortly follow in profusion, and recital plum pudding, mince pie and other bilious luxuries in the way of dessert will not be lacking, to say nothing of the purely ornamental odds and ends that will fill in the vacant spaces on the heavily-laden table. It is superfluous to suggest that "classical" music will form the staple of these entertainments, and will, as usual, delight the few that understand and appreciate it, and bore the many who do not understand it but who wish to appear to do so. Tunes, as in the past, will, when by any accident they are heard, be frowned at openly and enjoyed secretly; and also, as in the past, what is clear and easily comprehended will be voted vulgar and commonplace, and what is recondite and baffling will be voted the "proper caper." It is to be hoped that the Symphony concert programmes may be more eclectic in character, better arranged in respect to contrasts and less heavy generally than they were last season. Even the most serious of concerts may be "classical" without becoming dreary; and if master-composers do not consider it beneath their dignity to write bright and melodious music, surely conductors need not feel it beneath their dignity to present it. There is cant in art as in everything else, and of all cants, the very cant of cant is that which insists in ignoring the beautiful because it is easy of comprehension, in favor of the ugly because it is not. This may seem like heresy to the exclusive few, who, believing that the worth of music is in exact proportion to the difficulty found in understanding it, wish to reserve to themselves the sacred privilege of dilating with the right emotion; but to the many who love music for music's sake and who are charmed by what it does rather than by what it does not tell them, it will appear very much in the light of common sense.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1891.

Notes and Announcements.

Among those interested in the future of musical art in this city there is a general feeling of disappointment that the scheme proposed last spring by Mr. Nikisch for the incorporation of the Boston Singers with the Boston Symphony Orchestra has met with obstacles of detail which necessitate the postponement and, it may be, the abandonment of the enterprise. The principle reason lies probably in the fact that the outside engagements of the orchestra are so numerous for this season that, unless there were some readjustment of these arrangements, the additional work demanded by the union of the two societies for the extra concerts proposed would have severely taxed the players. It is to be earnestly hoped that this combination of splendidly drilled forces will not be allowed to come to naught.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

The Saturday Evening Paper.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch conductor, will give its annual series of eight concerts in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings, October 15, November 12, December 3, December 31, January 21, February 25, March 24, and April 21. The fine acoustics of this audience room gives great effect to the performances of the large orchestra, and many who were disappointed in securing seats for the Boston concerts will doubtless avail themselves of this opportunity. Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, Herr Eugen D'Albert and other eminent soloists will appear in this series. Season tickets will be on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, on and after October 10.

The program of the first Symphony rehearsal and concert, October 9-10, will be as follows: Beethoven's overture, "Dedication of the House;" Wagner's "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal;" and Schumann's spmphony in E flat. Mrs. Lillian Nordica will sing the prayer from "Tannhaeuser" and Beethoven's "Ah! perfido!"

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE.

THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

with assistance of

Mme. LILLIAN NORDICA,

Mrs. JULIE M. WYMAN,

Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT,

AND OTHER EMINENT SOLOISTS,

will give a series of

EIGHT CONCERTS,

on

THURSDAY EVENINGS,

October 15th, November 12th, December 3d and December 31st, January 21st, February 25th, March 24th and April 21st, 1892.

Season Tickets, with reserved seats for the series, $6, will be on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, October 10th.

Sale opens at eight A. M.

A limited number of seats have been reserved for College officers and invited guests.

THE

KNEISEL QUARTET,

OF BOSTON,

FRANZ KNEISEL, 1ST VIOLIN.
OTTO ROTH, 2D VIOLIN.
L. SVECENSKI, VIOLA,
ALWIN SCHROEDER, VIOLONCELLO.

SEASON 1891-92.

Six Subscription Concerts

IN

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET.

MONDAY EVENINGS,

October 19th, November 23d, December 28th, 1891, January 25th, February 15th and March 7th, 1892.

ASSISTING ARTISTS:

Mme. JOACHIM,
Mrs. ARTHUR NIKISCH,
Mme. FANNY BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER,
Mr. XAVER SCHARWENKA,
Mr. F. BUSONI,
Mr. SAMUEL SANFORD.

The Programmes will include, among others, the following compositions:

QUINTET, (new)	Brahms	SUITE.	F. Ries
GRANDE QUARTET in B major,	Beethoven	QUARTET.	A. Borodin
QUARTET.	Paganini	QUARTET.	Bazzini
QUINTET.	Sinding	SONATA, (Teufels Triller,)	Tartini
		QUARTET, A major.	Schumann

Season Tickets, with reserved seats, $6 will be sold to subscribers only, at the Box Office, Music Hall, Friday, October 9th, at 9 A. M. Subscription list now open at Music Hall.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 4, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the assistance of Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, Mr. Eliot Hubbard, Mr. Eugen D'Albert and other eminent soloists, will give a series of eight concerts in Sanders Theatre on Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, 1891, Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, at $6 will be on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, Oct. 10.

The first public rehearsal and concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place at Music Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Mme. Nordica is the soloist and the programme will be as follows: Overture, "Dedication of the House," Beethoven; aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; symphony in E flat, No. 3 (Rheinish), Schumann.

The Kneisel Quartet, (Frank Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; L. Svecenski, viola; Alwin Schroeder, violoncello,) will give six subscription concerts in Union Hall, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891; Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The assisting artists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats, will be sold for $6 to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 A. M. The subscription list is now open at Music Hall.

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

EIGHT CONCERTS

ON THURSDAY EVENINGS,

Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21.

Mme. LILLIAN NORDICA, Mrs. JULIE M. WYMAN, Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT and other eminent soloists will appear. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, $6. ☞The sale of season tickets opens at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, Saturday, Oct. 10, at 8 A. M. A limited number of seats have been reserved for college officers and invited guests.

KNEISEL QUARTET

UNION HALL, 48 Boylston Street.

SIX SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS,

MONDAY EVENINGS,

Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15, March 7,

Soloists: Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeigler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni, Mr. S. Sanford.

Season Tickets, with reserved seats, $6, will be sold to Subscribers Only at the box office Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 A. M. Subscription list now open at Music Hall.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, OCT. 4, 1891

Speaking of the Worcester festival Light says: Beautiful Mme. Nordica, with her magnificent dress, which made the people's eyes stick out, and might just as well have had thousand-franc notes pinned on for trimming, so far as expense went, was regal in her manner, and she sang like a seraph. After the Handel air, "Let the bright seraphim," she sang the Rossini "Barber of Seville" air, "Una Voce," and then she went out with a storm of applause following her. The Festival has never had a more popular star than Nordica. It is partly due to her wonderful ability, and partly due to her fascinating manner. Her other single piece was "Senta's Ballad," from the "Flying Dutchman," and this she sang with equal success. * * * We mention Mme. Nordica last, because she was the best, and because it is pleasant to leave a notice of this concert, thinking of her and her captivating songs. She was down for the exquisite waltz song of Gounod, "Ah, je veux vivre," and she sang it bewitchingly. Her second selection was recognizable to about everyone present who had ever heard any singing to mention. It was the dashing polonaise from "Mignon," and this also pleased the people greatly.

Next Friday and Saturday the Symphonies begin.

The programme of the first rehearsal and concert of the Symphony orchestra, next Friday and Saturday, will be as follows: Beethoven's overture, "The Dedication of the House;" Wagner's "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," and Schumann's Symphony in E flat (Rhenish). Mrs. Lillian Nordica will sing Elizabeth's prayer from "Tannhauser" and Beethoven's "Ah! perfido." Nordica was in magnificent voice at the Worcester festival and doubtless will give her many admirers a great treat.

The first concert of the Kneisel quartette will be given in Union hall, Monday evening, Oct. 19.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 4, 1891.

The Boston Symphony orchestra opens its season at Music Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the coming week. For these performances Mr. Nikisch announces the following programme: Overture, "Dedication of the House," op. 124, Beethoven; aria, "Ah Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; symphony in E flat, No. 3 (Rhenish), Schumann. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist.

The Kneisel string quartet announces six subscription concerts in Union Hall, 48 Boylston street, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891, and Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The assisting artists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats, $6, will be sold to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 A. M. The subscription list is now open at Music Hall.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, with assistance of Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, and other eminent soloists, will give a series of eight concerts at Sander's Theatre, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings, October 15, November 12, December 3 and 31, 1891; January 21, February 25, March 24, and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, $6, will be on sale at the University bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, Oct. 10.

I hear that Mr. Arthur Nikisch and his wife have been expressing among their friends at home the most enthusiastic pleasure at the reception which they have met in Boston.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1891.

First Symphony Concert.

The first performances of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at Music Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the present week.

Mme. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist, and Mr. Nikisch announces the following programme:

Overture, Dedication of the House...... Beethoven
Aria, Ah, Perfido.................... Beethoven
Good Friday Spell, from Parsifal......... Wagner
Aria from Tannhauser.................... Wagner
Symphony in E flat, No. 3.............. Schumann

The Cambridge concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra will take place at Sanders' Theatre on Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21.

Among the soloists already engaged are Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julia M. Wyman, Mr. Eliot Hubbard and Mr. Eugen D'Albert.

Season tickets with reserved seats for the series at $6 will be on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, Oct. 10. A limited number of seats are reserved for college officers and invited guests.

——Boston is very true to its own institutions generously, writes the New York Sun, and the news which Mr. Comee makes public concerning the season of the Boston symphony orchestra is so remarkable as to be worth chronicling. The symphony orchestra gives 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals and 24 Saturday evening concerts every year. A week ago the box sheet of the Music Hall was thrown open for this entire series of 48 performances and before the week was ended every seat for every performance of the 24 weeks had been sold. This seems to be the highest attainable result in an amusement enterprise. We have never had anything quite so complete as this in New York, even during the height of the idolatry of Theodore Thomas, a few years ago.

Kneisel Quartet Concerts.

Six subscription concerts will be given by the Kneisel quartet at Union Hall on Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7. The organization will have the assistance of Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwentsa, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford.

The programmes will include, among others, the following compositions; Quintet (new), Brahms; grand quartet in B major, Beethoven; quartet, Paganini; quintet, singing; suite, F. Ries; quartet, A. Borodin; quartet, Bazzini; sonata (Teufels Triller), Tartini; quartet, A major Schumann.

Season tickets, with reserved seats ($6), will be sold to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 a. m.

——Mr. and Mrs. Nikisch are settled in their pleasant home in Brookline after several visits at country houses.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 4, 1891.

The Boston Symphony orchestra opens its season at Music Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the coming week. For these performances Mr. Nikisch announces the following programme: Overture, "Dedication of the House," op. 124, Beethoven; aria, "Ah Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; symphony in E flat, No. 3 (Rhenish), Schumann. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist.

The Kneisel string quartet announces six subscription concerts in Union Hall, 48 Boylston street, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891, and Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The assisting artists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats, $6, will be sold to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 A. M. The subscription list is now open at Music Hall.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, with assistance of Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, and other eminent soloists, will give a series of eight concerts at Sander's Theatre, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings, October 15, November 12, December 3 and 31, 1891; January 21, February 25, March 24, and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, $6, will be on sale at the University bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, Oct. 10.

I hear that Mr. Arthur Nikisch and his wife have been expressing among their [illegible]

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Nikisch, with the assistance of Mrs. Lilian Nordica, Mrs. Julia M. Wyman, Eugen D'Albert and others will give eight concerts at Sander's Theatre, Cambridge, Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, 1891; Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats, will be on sale at the University bookstore, Cambridge, on and after next Saturday.

The Kneisel Quartet will give six concerts in Union Hall Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891; Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The list of solo artists engaged includes the names of Mmes. Joachim, Nikisch and Bloomfield-Zeisler and Messrs. Xaver Scharwenka, Ferruccio Busoni and Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats, will be sold to subscribers only, at the office, Music Hall, next Friday. The subscription list is open at the hall.

EVENING POST, New York, N. Y.

Date 10-9

Local Musical Notes.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, Conductor, will give the first of its series of six concerts at Chickering Hall, on Tuesday evening, November 3. Mme. Giglio Nordica will be the soloist and will then make her first appearance in New York this season.

437

---

ipping from World
New York N Y

te 10/4

Each year sees an increase in the number of concerts given in New York by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This year it will be six. Next year it may be ten, and the year after the occasional visits may be to Boston. And all this is because New York is, as a metropolis should be, the music centre of the country.

43

Boston Musical Herald.

BOSTON, JANUARY, 1892.

→+ ELEVENTH SEASON, 1891-'92. +←

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

PRESS COMMENTS.

N. Y. World, Nov. 8, 1891.
"Among the three or four foremost orchestras of the world."

N. Y. Sun, Nov. 4, 1891.
"The palm of supremacy over all kindred organizations on this side o the water."

N. Y. Herald, Nov. 4, 1891.
"The finest body of strings ever heard in this country."

N. Y. Recorder, Nov. 4, 1891.
"Nothing like it in New York, neither in quality nor in ensemble."

N. Y. Evening Post, Nov. 4, 1891.
"As a Schumann conductor, Mr. Nikisch has no superior, perhaps no equal."

Phila. Press, Nov. 5, 1891.
"In the foreground of renown in America."

Phila. Enquirer, Nov. 5, 1891.
"A prospect of the most brilliant season in its history."

Phila. Record, Nov. 5, 1891.
"The most proficient band of musicians ever organized in this country."

Brooklyn Eagle, Nov. 7, 1891.
"The rival of any force of the kind in the world."

Baltimore American, Nov. 6, 1891.
"Enthusiastically received by the entire audience."

Annual Spring Tour begins April 25.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager, MUSIC HALL, BOSTON.

MUSIC IN NEW YORK.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Chickering Hall introduced two unfamiliar compositions to the music lovers of New York and presented Mr. Nikisch and his band in one of their most amiable moods as interpreters of two pieces of well known music. The program was not such a one as New York is accustomed to set down as peculiarly interesting, and the generous approval bestowed by the audience, which was splendid in numbers and character, was therefore all the more complimentary to the orchestra and its leader. The opening number was a symphonic poem by one of the gifted young men of Germany, Richard Strauss, the shadow of whose form it was thought by some might be seen last summer falling athwart the conductor's chair in the Wagner theatre at Bayreuth. The work was called "Don Juan," and the listeners were invited to discover in it musical equivalents for some rather impassioned sentiments set forth by the German poet Lenau.

So far as Mr. Nikisch's attitude in the premises is concerned, it must be said that it showed him in a capital light, for he has seldom conducted anything in New York which disclosed so perfect a command of the free rhapsodical style of interpretation as this symphonic poem. It was really inspiring, and almost provoked regret as leaving nothing finer in respect of finesse and virility to be attained in the infinitely loftier compositions for orchestra which followed, Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony and the prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

The solo feature of the concert was a concerto for violoncello by Robert Volkmann, played by Mr. Alwin Schroeder, a fine artist in every respect and one whom it would have been a great pleasure to hear in a composition more worthy of his talents. In Volkmann's concerto it is so difficult to find occasions for praise that it is scarcely worth while to print them.

The eighth of the Boston Symphony Concerts resolved itself into an apotheosis of Paderewski! One is almost excused for quoting Cæsar's three V's. The program began with Beethoven's fourth symphony in B flat, which was played in a manner to satisfy the most exacting. It would have been hard to improve upon it; it had the right life, fire, shading; gloriously played was the second movement (adagio). Mr. Nikisch reached and kept his highest level.

A new piano quartet by Christian Sinding, was the important item in the second Kneisel Quartet program. Sinding is a Norseman, and comes of a poetic race. His quartet is free in form, melodically interesting, and often of great beauty, is put together artistically, and sounds well. The pianist was Mr. Ferrucio Busoni, a personal friend of the composer. Mr. Busoni had assisted at various performances of the quartet in Europe, and on this occasion was en rapport with the work in hand, playing with fluency, sureness and grace. As an ensemble player, he certainly ranks with the best who have been heard in Boston. It is carrying coals to Newcastle, to praise the work of the Kneisel Quartet; but, no more beautiful playing has been done by them than in the slow movement of the A major quartet of Schumann, which, with the D major quartet by Haydn, completes the list of works performed at this concert.

Boston, while the performance of the entire list was something to be accepted without question, as quite perfect. As all the poets connected with this paper are engaged in other departments, our brief mention of the concert will, we fear, be devoid of imagery.

The overture was the long-promised prelude to Lalo's opera, "Le Roi d'Ys." It was not so long ago that "Le Roi d'Ys" put Paris into a state of pleasurable excitement, and effectually placed its struggling and talented composer on a firm pedestal in the public eye. The opera, it will be remembered, has been promised at various times, by various managers in this country; but, unless given within a few days in New Orleans, all promises have thus far been in vain. The overture, which escapes strict form with an air of pleasant license, is a highly-colored, sonorous, and, in parts, grandiose work: melodically, its themes, which are the motifs of the opera, are of Breton origin. As a piece of instrumentation, it is most skillful; but it is the skill with which the colors are put upon the canvas, that gives it its particular strength. Strong as it is in robust force, its quieter sections are very delicately scored and full of beauty. The overture was followed by a new suite for violin and orchestra, entitled, "Les Veillées de l'Ukraine," composed by Mr. C. M. Loeffler, who is well known to Symphony concert patrons as Mr. Kneisel's companion at the first desk of the first violins, and also as solo performer. Mr. Loeffler was his own interpreter of the solo part. Mr. Loeffler is a pupil of Kiel, in Berlin, and of various Parisian masters. The suite is his fourth important work, it having of expression in the middle movements being less ambitious than that employed in the Introduction and the Finale. While Mr. Loeffler has yet to learn artistic moderation, and does not quite know the benefit of revision and condensation, his composition is convincing testimony of a fine musical mind drilled in technical points, and a faculty in instrumentation which presages marked results in the future. There is much variety, harmonically and rhythmically, in the work, whose melodiousness is one of its potent charms. It was well played by the orchestra, while the composer, as performer, received an ovation, due to his personal popularity and to the artistic excellence of the performance. Raff's "Lenore" symphony proved Mr. Nikisch's chef d'œuvre, thus far this season. It was glowingly, wonderfully played, from the first to the last page: Boston never heard a superior reading. Miss Marguerite Hall was the vocal soloist at the concert. She sang a Ballad, "There was an Ancient King," by Mr. Henschel, written with orchestral accompaniment; and a brace of songs by Schubert, to the exquisite piano accompaniment of Mr. Nikisch. The Ballad was new here. It is a musicianly work, as everything is that Mr. Henschel does. Miss Hall's voice is not large, and whatever of effect was lost in the interpretation of Mr. Henschel's piece, is due to this fact. The songs were well sung. Artistically, Miss Hall has improved since she was last heard here, and has succeeded in smoothing out her vocal scale, so that a fairly equable voice production results. The voice itself is agreeable.

The program of the seventh Symphony concert was: overture, "Iphigenia in Aulis," Gluck (with Wagner's ending); Concerto for Violin in D, Brahms; symphony in C (No. 9), Schubert. This concert introduced M. Adolph Brodsky, concert-master of the Symphony Society orchestra, of New York, who had not been heard here. He is an artist of the Wilhelmj type, manly, virile and eloquent. The noble concerto, greatest of its kind, which Mr. Kneisel brought forward during the Symphony season of 1889-90, received a fitting interpretation at Mr. Brodsky's hands. His technique is ample and satisfying. His tone is large and free, and of splendid muscularity. Broad in style, reposeful, artistic, was his playing, there being no element wanting to place the interpreter in perfect accord with the composer. His performance was heartily applauded, and he was several times recalled. The symphony, "of heavenly length," was ably played last season by Mr. Nikisch. Wagner's modest efforts to help Mr. Gluck with nineteenth century audiences have been more or less maligned; but Richard seldom made an error.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 4, 1891.

The Boston Symphony orchestra opens its season at Music Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the coming week. For these performances Mr. Nikisch announces the following programme: Overture, "Dedication of the House," op. 124, Beethoven; aria, "Ah Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; symphony in E flat, No. 3 (Rhenish), Schumann. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist.

The Kneisel string quartet announces six subscription concerts in Union Hall, 48 Boylston street, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891, and Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The assisting artists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats, $6, will be sold to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 A. M. The subscription list is now open at Music Hall.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, with assistance of Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, and other eminent soloists, will give a series of eight concerts at Sander's Theatre, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings, October 15, November 12, December 3 and 31, 1891; January 21, February 25, March 24, and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, $6, will be on sale at the University bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, Oct. 10.

I hear that Mr. Arthur Nikisch and his wife have been expressing among their friends at home the most enthusiastic pleasure at the reception which they have met in Boston.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1891.

First Symphony Concert.

The first performances of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at Music Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the present week.

Mme. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist, and Mr. Nikisch announces the following programme:

Overture, Dedication of the House...... Beethoven
Aria, Ah, Perfido...................... Beethoven
Good Friday Spell, from Parsifal......... Wagner
Aria from Tannhauser................... Wagner
Symphony in E flat, No. 3............... Schumann

The Cambridge concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra will take place at Sanders' Theatre on Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21.

Among the soloists already engaged are Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julia M. Wyman, Mr. Eliot Hubbard and Mr. Eugen D'Albert.

Season tickets with reserved seats for the series at $6 will be on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, Oct. 10. A limited number of seats are reserved for college officers and invited guests.

—Boston is very true to its own institutions generously, writes the New York Sun, and the news which Mr. Comee makes public concerning the season of the Boston symphony orchestra is so remarkable as to be worth chronicling. The symphony orchestra gives 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals and 24 Saturday evening concerts every year. A week ago the box sheet of the Music Hall was thrown open for this entire series of 48 performances and before the week was ended every seat for every performance of the 24 weeks had been sold. This seems to be the highest attainable result in an amusement enterprise. We have never had anything quite so complete as this in New York, even during the height of the idolatry of Theodore Thomas, a few years ago.

Kneisel Quartet Concerts.

Six subscription concerts will be given by the Kneisel quartet at Union Hall on Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7. The organization will have the assistance of Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwentsa, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford.

The programmes will include, among others, the following compositions: Quintet (new), Brahms; grand quartet in B major, Beethoven; quartet, Paganini; quintet, singing; suite, F. Ries; quartet, A. Borodin; quartet, Bazzini; sonata (Teufels Triller), Tartini; quartet, A major Schumann.

Season tickets, with reserved seats ($6), will be sold to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 a. m.

—Mr. and Mrs. Nikisch are settled in their pleasant home in Brookline after several visits at country houses.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 4, 1891.

The Boston Symphony orchestra opens its season at Music Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the coming week. For these performances Mr. Nikisch announces the following programme: Overture, "Dedication of the House," op. 124, Beethoven; aria, "Ah Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; symphony in E flat, No. 3 (Rhenish), Schumann. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist.

The Kneisel string quartet announces six subscription concerts in Union Hall, 48 Boylston street, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891, and Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The assisting artists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanf rd. Season tickets, with reserved seats, $6, will be sold to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 A. M. The subscription list is now open at Music Hall.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, with assistance of Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, and other eminent soloists, will give a series of eight concerts at Sander's Theatre, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings, October 15, November 12, December 3 and 31, 1891; January 21, February 25, March 24, and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, $6, will be on sale at the University bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, Oct. 10.

I hear that Mr. Arthur Nikisch and his wife have been expressing among their friends at home the most enthusiastic pleasure at the reception which they have met in Boston.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Nikisch, with the assistance of Mrs. Lilian Nordica, Mrs. Julia M. Wyman, Eugen D'Albert and others will give eight concerts at Sander's Theatre, Cambridge, Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, 1891; Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats, will be on sale at the University bookstore, Cambridge, on and after next Saturday.

The Kneisel Quartet will give six concerts in Union Hall Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891; Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The list of solo artists engaged includes the names of Mmes. Joachim, Nikisch and Bloomfield-Zeisler and Messrs. Xaver Scharwenka, Ferruccio Busoni and Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats, will be sold to subscribers only, at the office, Music Hall, next Friday. The subscription list is open at the hall.

EVENING POST, New York, N. Y.

Date 10-9

Local Musical Notes.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, Conductor, will give the first of its series of six concerts at Chickering Hall, on Tuesday evening, November 3. Mme. Giglio Nordica will be the soloist and will then make her first appearance in New York this season.

43

---

ipping from World New York N.Y.

te 10/11

Each year sees an increase in the number of concerts given in New York by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This year it will be six. Next year it may be ten, and the year after the occasional visits may be to Boston. And all this is because New York is, as a metropolis should be, the music centre of the country.

43

Boston Musical Herald.

BOSTON, JANUARY, 1892.

A new piano quartet by Christian Sinding, was the important item in the second Kneisel Quartet program. Sinding is a Norseman, and comes of a poetic race. His quartet is free in form, melodically interesting, and often of great beauty, is put together artistically, and sounds well. The pianist was Mr. Ferrucio Busoni, a personal friend of the composer. Mr. Busoni had assisted at various performances of the quartet in Europe, and on this occasion was en rapport with the work in hand, playing with fluency, sureness and grace. As an ensemble player, he certainly ranks with the best who have been heard in Boston. It is carrying coals to Newcastle, to praise the work of the Kneisel Quartet; but, no more beautiful playing has been done by them than in the slow movement of the A major quartet of Schumann, which, with the D major quartet by Haydn, completes the list of works performed at this concert.

Boston, while the performance of the entire list was something to be accepted without question, as quite perfect. As all the poets connected with this paper are engaged in other departments, our brief mention of the concert will, we fear, be devoid of imagery.

The overture was the long-promised prelude to Lalo's opera, "Le Roi d'Ys." It was not so long ago that "Le Roi d'Ys" put Paris into a state of pleasurable excitement, and effectually placed its struggling and talented composer on a firm pedestal in the public eye. The opera, it will be remembered, has been promised at various times, by various managers in this country; but, unless given within a few days in New Orleans, all promises have thus far been in vain. The overture, which escapes strict form with an air of pleasant license, is a highly-colored, sonorous, and, in parts, grandiose work: melodically, its themes, which are the motifs of the opera, are of Breton origin. As a piece of instrumentation, it is most skillful; but it is the skill with which the colors are put upon the canvas, that gives it its particular strength. Strong as it is in robust force, its quieter sections are very delicately scored and full of beauty. The overture was followed by a new suite for violin and orchestra, entitled, "Les Veillées de l'Ukraine," composed by Mr. C. M. Loeffler, who is well known to Symphony concert patrons as Mr. Kneisel's companion at the first desk of the first violins, and also as solo performer. Mr. Loeffler was his own interpreter of the solo part. Mr. Loeffler is a pupil of Kiel, in Berlin, and of various Parisian masters. The suite is his fourth important work, it having been

→+ ELEVENTH SEASON, 1891-'92. +←

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

PRESS COMMENTS.

N. Y. World, Nov. 8, 1891.
"Among the three or four foremost orchestras of the world."

N. Y. Sun, Nov. 4, 1891.
"The p lm of supremacy over all kindred organizations on this s de o the wa'er."

N. Y. Herald, Nov. 4, 1891.
"The finest body of strings ever heard in this country."

N. Y. Recorder, Nov. 4, 1891.
"Nothing like it in New York, neither in quality nor in ensemble."

N. Y. Evening Post, Nov. 4, 1891.
"As a Schumann conductor, Mr. Nikisch has no superior, perhaps no equal."

Phila. Press, Nov. 5, 1891.
"In the foreground of renown in America."

Phila. Enquirer, Nov. 5, 1891.
"A prospect of the most brilliant season in its history."

Phila. Record, Nov. 5, 1891.
"The most proficient band of musicians ever organized in this country."

Brooklyn Eagle, Nov. 7, 1891.
"The rival of any force of the kind in the world."

Baltimore American, Nov. 6, 1891.
"Enthusiastically received by the entire audience."

Annual Spring Tour begins April 25.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager, MUSIC HALL, BOSTON.

MUSIC IN NEW YORK.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Chickering Hall introduced two unfamiliar compositions to the music lovers of New York and presented Mr. Nikisch and his band in one of their most amiable moods as interpreters of two pieces of well known music. The program was not such a one as New York is accustomed to set down as peculiarly interesting, and the generous approval bestowed by the audience, which was splendid in numbers and character, was therefore all the more complimentary to the orchestra and its leader. The opening number was a symphonic poem by one of the gifted young men of Germany, Richard Strauss, the shadow of whose form it was thought by some might be seen last summer falling athwart the conductor's chair in the Wagner theatre at Bayreuth. The work was called "Don Juan," and the listeners were invited to discover in it musical equivalents for some rather impassioned sentiments set forth by the German poet Lenau.

So far as Mr. Nikisch's attitude in the premises is concerned, it must be said that it showed him in a capital light, for he has seldom conducted anything in New York which disclosed so perfect a command of the free rhapsodical style of interpretation as this symphonic poem. It was really inspiring, and almost provoked regret as leaving nothing finer in respect of finesse and virility to be attained in the infinitely loftier compositions for orchestra which followed, Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony and the prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

The solo feature of the concert was a concerto for violoncello by Robert Volkmann, played by Mr. Alwin Schroeder, a fine artist in every respect and one whom it would have been a great pleasure to hear in a composition more worthy of his talents. In Volkmann's concerto it is so difficult to find occasions for praise that it is scarcely worth while to print them.

The eighth of the Boston Symphony Concerts resolved itself into an apotheosis of Paderewski! One is almost excused for quoting Cæsar's three V's. The program began with Beethoven's fourth symphony in B flat, which was played in a manner to satisfy the most exacting. It would have been hard to improve upon it; it had the right life, fire, shading; gloriously played was the second movement (adagio). Mr. Nikisch reached and kept his highest level.

of expression in the middle movements being less ambitious than that employed in the Introduction and the Finale. While Mr. Loeffler has yet to learn artistic moderation, and does not quite know the benefit of revision and condensation, his composition is convincing testimony of a fine musical mind drilled in technical points, and a faculty in instrumentation which presages marked results in the future. There is much variety, harmonically and rhythmically, in the work, whose melodiousness is one of its potent charms. It was well played by the orchestra, while the composer, as performer, received an ovation, due to his personal popularity and to the artistic excellence of the performance. Raff's "Lenore" symphony proved Mr. Nikisch's chef d'œuvre, thus far this season. It was glowingly, wonderfully played, from the first to the last page: Boston never heard a superior reading. Miss Marguerite Hall was the vocal soloist at the concert. She sang a Ballad, "There was an Ancient King," by Mr. Henschel, written with orchestral accompaniment; and a brace of songs by Schubert, to the exquisite piano accompaniment of Mr. Nikisch. The Ballad was new here. It is a musicianly work, as everything is that Mr. Henschel does. Miss Hall's voice is not large, and whatever of effect was lost in the interpretation of Mr. Henschel's piece, is due to this fact. The songs were well sung. Artistically, Miss Hall has improved since she was last heard here, and has succeeded in smoothing out her vocal scale, so that a fairly equable voice production results. The voice itself is agreeable.

The program of the seventh Symphony concert was: overture, "Iphigenia in Aulis," Gluck (with Wagner's ending); Concerto for Violin in D, Brahms; symphony in C (No. 9), Schubert. This concert introduced M. Adolph Brodsky, concert-master of the Symphony Society orchestra, of New York, who had not been heard here. He is an artist of the Wilhelmj type, manly, virile and eloquent. The noble concerto, greatest of its kind, which Mr. Kneisel brought forward during the Symphony season of 1889–90, received a fitting interpretation at Mr. Brodsky's hands. His technique is ample and satisfying. His tone is large and free, and of splendid muscularity. Broad in style, reposeful, artistic, was his playing, there being no element wanting to place the interpreter in perfect accord with the composer. His performance was heartily applauded, and he was several times recalled. The symphony, "of heavenly length," was ably played last season by Mr. Nikisch. Wagner's modest efforts to help Mr. Gluck with nineteenth century audiences have been more or less maligned; but Richard seldom made an error.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 4, 1891.

The Boston Symphony orchestra opens its season at Music Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the coming week. For these performances Mr. Nikisch announces the following programme: Overture, "Dedication of the House," op. 124, Beethoven; aria, "Ah Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; symphony in E flat, No. 3 (Rhenish), Schumann. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist.

The Kneisel string quartet announces six subscription concerts in Union Hall, 48 Boylston street, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891, and Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The assisting artists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats, $6, will be sold to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 A. M. The subscription list is now open at Music Hall.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, with assistance of Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, and other eminent soloists, will give a series of eight concerts at Sander's Theatre, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings, October 15, November 12, December 3 and 31, 1891; January 21, February 25, March 24, and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, $6, will be on sale at the University bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, Oct. 10.

I hear that Mr. Arthur Nikisch and his wife have been expressing among their friends at home the most enthusiastic pleasure at the reception which they have met in Boston.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1891.

First Symphony Concert.

The first performances of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at Music Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the present week.

Mme. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist, and Mr. Nikisch announces the following programme:

Overture, Dedication of the House...... Beethoven
Aria, Ah, Perfido...................... Beethoven
Good Friday Spell, from Parsifal......... Wagner
Aria from Tannhauser...................... Wagner
Symphony in E flat, No. 3............. Schumann

The Cambridge concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra will take place at Sanders' Theatre on Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21.

Among the soloists already engaged are Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julia M. Wyman, Mr. Eliot Hubbard and Mr. Eugen D'Albert.

Season tickets with reserved seats for the series at $6 will be on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, Oct. 10. A limited number of seats are reserved for college officers and invited guests.

—Boston is very true to its own institutions generously, writes the New York Sun, and the news which Mr. Comee makes public concerning the season of the Boston symphony orchestra is so remarkable as to be worth chronicling. The symphony orchestra gives 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals and 24 Saturday evening concerts every year. A week ago the box sheet of the Music Hall was thrown open for this entire series of 48 performances and before the week was ended every seat for every performance of the 24 weeks had been sold. This seems to be the highest attainable result in an amusement enterprise. We have never had anything quite so complete as this in New York, even during the height of the idolatry of Theodore Thomas, a few years ago.

Kneisel Quartet Concerts.

Six subscription concerts will be given by the Kneisel quartet at Union Hall on Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7. The organization will have the assistance of Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwentsa, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford.

The programmes will include, among others, the following compositions: Quintet (new), Brahms: grand quartet in B major, Beethoven; quartet, Paganini; quintet, singing; suite, F. Ries; quartet, A. Borodin; quartet, Bazzini; sonata (Teufels Triller), Tartini; quartet, A major Schumann.

Season tickets, with reserved seats ($6), will be sold to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 a. m.

—Mr. and Mrs. Nikisch are settled in their pleasant home in Brookline after several visits at country houses.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 4, 1891.

The Boston Symphony orchestra opens its season at Music Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the coming week. For these performances Mr. Nikisch announces the following programme: Overture, "Dedication of the House," op. 124, Beethoven; aria, "Ah Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; symphony in E flat, No. 3 (Rhenish), Schumann. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist.

The Kneisel string quartet announces six subscription concerts in Union Hall, 48 Boylston street, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891, and Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The assisting artists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats, $6, will be sold to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall, Friday, Oct. 9, at 9 A. M. The subscription list is now open at Music Hall.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, with assistance of Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, Mr. Eugen D'Albert, and other eminent soloists, will give a series of eight concerts at Sander's Theatre, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings, October 15, November 12, December 3 and 31, 1891; January 21, February 25, March 24, and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, $6, will be on sale at the University bookstore, Cambridge, on and after Saturday, Oct. 10.

I hear that Mr. Arthur Nikisch and his wife have been expressing among their [illegible]

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Nikisch, with the assistance of Mrs. Lilian Nordica, Mrs. Julia M. Wyman, Eugen D'Albert and others will give eight concerts at Sander's Theatre, Cambridge, Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, 1891; Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats, will be on sale at the University bookstore, Cambridge, on and after next Saturday.

The Kneisel Quartet will give six concerts in Union Hall Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891; Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The list of solo artists engaged includes the names of Mmes. Joachim, Nikisch and Bloomfield-Zeisler and Messrs. Xaver Scharwenka, Ferruccio Busoni and Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats, will be sold to subscribers only, at the office, Music Hall, next Friday. The subscription list is open at the hall.

EVENING POST, New York, N. Y.

Date 10-9

Local Musical Notes.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, Conductor, will give the first of its series of six concerts at Chickering Hall, on Tuesday evening, November 3. Mme. Giglio Nordica will be the soloist and will then make her first appearance in New York this season.

437

Clipping from World
New York NY

Date 14

Each year sees an increase in the number of concerts given in New York by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This year it will be six. Next year it may be ten, and the year after the occasional visits may be to Boston. And all this is because New York is, as a metropolis should be, the music centre of the country.

43

Boston Musical Herald.

BOSTON, JANUARY, 1892.

E. N. LAFRICAIN, Mangr., 10 Hamilton Pl., Boston. | 514 Walnut St.

TH

MUSICAL YEAR-BOOK O

VOLUME IX

BY G. H. WILSON,

Sold only by

The ninth volume, to be published in May, will contain about 200 page
Canada, local events being classified. Its special features will include: ta the United States, and another embracing the world, of more important w ard choral works performed in the United States, with names of soloists;

Price of Year-Book, $1.00.

SEND FOR CIRCUL

Hand-books of the kind that Mr. Wilson has been issuing now for eight years do of the most fascinating writings which music calls out in this country.—H. E. K

MUSIC IN NEW YORK.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Chickering Hall introduced two unfamiliar compositions to the music lovers of New York and presented Mr. Nikisch and his band in one of their most amiable moods as interpreters of two pieces of well known music. The program was not such a one as New York is accustomed to set down as peculiarly interesting, and the generous approval bestowed by the audience, which was splendid in numbers and character, was therefore all the more complimentary to the orchestra and its leader. The opening number was a symphonic poem by one of the gifted young men of Germany, Richard Strauss, the shadow of whose form it was thought by some might be seen last summer falling athwart the conductor's chair in the Wagner theatre at Bayreuth. The work was called "Don Juan," and the listeners were invited to discover in it musical equivalents for some rather impassioned sentiments set forth by the German poet Lenau.

So far as Mr. Nikisch's attitude in the premises is concerned, it must be said that it showed him in a capital light, for he has seldom conducted anything in New York which disclosed so perfect a command of the free rhapsodical style of interpretation as this symphonic poem. It was really inspiring, and almost provoked regret as leaving nothing finer in respect of finesse and virility to be attained in the infinitely loftier compositions for orchestra which followed, Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony and the prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

The solo feature of the concert was a concerto for violoncello by Robert Volkmann, played by Mr. Alwin Schroeder, a fine artist in every respect and one whom it would have been a great pleasure to hear in a composition more worthy of his talents. In Volkmann's concerto it is so difficult to find occasions for praise that it is scarcely worth while to print them.

The eighth of the Boston Symphony Concerts resolved itself into an apotheosis of Paderewski! One is almost excused for quoting Cæsar's three V's. The program began with Beethoven's fourth symphony in B flat, which was played in a manner to satisfy the most exacting. It would have been hard to improve upon it; it had the right life, fire, shading; gloriously played was the second movement (adagio). Mr. Nikisch reached and kept his highest level.

A new piano quartet by Christian Sinding, was the important item in the second Kneisel Quartet program. Sinding is a Norseman, and comes of a poetic race. His quartet is free in form, melodically interesting, and often of great beauty, is put together artistically, and sounds well. The pianist was Mr. Ferrucio Busoni, a personal friend of the composer. Mr. Busoni had assisted at various performances of the quartet in Europe, and on this occasion was en rapport with the work in hand, playing with fluency, sureness and grace. As an ensemble player, he certainly ranks with the best who have been heard in Boston. It is carrying coals to Newcastle, to praise the work of the Kneisel Quartet; but, no more beautiful playing has been done by them than in the slow movement of the A major quartet of Schumann, which, with the D major quartet by Haydn, completes the list of works performed at this concert.

Boston, while the performance of the entire list was something to be accepted without question, as quite perfect. As all the poets connected with this paper are engaged in other departments, our brief mention of the concert will, we fear, be devoid of imagery.

The overture was the long-promised prelude to Lalo's opera, "Le Roi d'Ys." It was not so long ago that "Le Roi d'Ys" put Paris into a state of pleasurable excitement, and effectually placed its struggling and talented composer on a firm pedestal in the public eye. The opera, it will be remembered, has been promised at various times, by various managers in this country; but, unless given within a few days in New Orleans, all promises have thus far been in vain. The overture, which escapes strict form with an air of pleasant license, is a highly-colored, sonorous, and, in parts, grandiose work: melodically, its themes, which are the motifs of the opera, are of Breton origin. As a piece of instrumentation, it is most skillful; but it is the skill with which the colors are put upon the canvas, that gives it its particular strength. Strong as it is in robust force, its quieter sections are very delicately scored and full of beauty. The overture was followed by a new suite for violin and orchestra, entitled, "Les Veillées de l'Ukraine," composed by Mr. C. M. Loeffler, who is well known to Symphony concert patrons as Mr. Kneisel's companion at the first desk of the first violins, and also as solo performer. Mr. Loeffler was his own interpreter of the solo part. Mr. Loeffler is a pupil of Kiel, in Berlin, and of various Parisian masters. The suite is his fourth important work, it having been preceded by a violin sonata, string quartet, and sextet for strings. Of this list of chamber music, only one movement of the quartet has been heard in public, the Adamowski Quartet having included it in one of their Philadelphia programs, season of 1889–90. A collection of short tales by the Russian author Gogol, bearing the title, "Les Veillées de l'Ukraine," which, freely translated, we will call "Fireside Stories of the Ukraine," suggested, to Mr. Loeffler, musical treatment. The several movements, which the composer labels, Introduction and Pastorale, Rune, Dumka, Finale, are quite independent and bear no melodial connection; though it should be said that the melodies of the entire work are tunes native to "Little Russia." The first and fourth movements are treated in approximately strict overture form, while the Rune and Dumka are more simply framed. The solo instrument, though dominating, is ever a part of an harmonic structure, not merely an obligato voice: in fact, throughout the work, the musician, not the virtuoso, is preëminent. The composer scores his suite for full orchestra, with English horn and harp, the vehicle of expression in the middle movements being less ambitious than that employed in the Introduction and the Finale. While Mr. Loeffler has yet to learn artistic moderation, and does not quite know the benefit of revision and condensation, his composition is convincing testimony of a fine musical mind drilled in technical points, and a faculty in instrumentation which presages marked results in the future. There is much variety, harmonically and rhythmically, in the work, whose melodiousness is one of its potent charms. It was well played by the orchestra, while the composer, as performer, received an ovation, due to his personal popularity and to the artistic excellence of the performance. Raff's "Lenore" symphony proved Mr. Nikisch's chef d'œuvre, thus far this season. It was glowingly, wonderfully played, from the first to the last page: Boston never heard a superior reading. Miss Marguerite Hall was the vocal soloist at the concert. She sang a Ballad, "There was an Ancient King," by Mr. Henschel, written with orchestral accompaniment; and a brace of songs by Schubert, to the exquisite piano accompaniment of Mr. Nikisch. The Ballad was new here. It is a musicianly work, as everything is that Mr. Henschel does. Miss Hall's voice is not large, and whatever of effect was lost in the interpretation of Mr. Henschel's piece, is due to this fact. The songs were well sung. Artistically, Miss Hall has improved since she was last heard here, and has succeeded in smoothing out her vocal scale, so that a fairly equable voice production results. The voice itself is agreeable.

The program of the seventh Symphony concert was: overture, "Iphigenia in Aulis," Gluck (with Wagner's ending); Concerto for Violin in D, Brahms; symphony in C (No. 9), Schubert. This concert introduced M. Adolph Brodsky, concert-master of the Symphony Society orchestra, of New York, who had not been heard here. He is an artist of the Wilhelmj type, manly, virile and eloquent. The noble concerto, greatest of its kind, which Mr. Kneisel brought forward during the Symphony season of 1889–90, received a fitting interpretation at Mr. Brodsky's hands. His technique is ample and satisfying. His tone is large and free, and of splendid muscularity. Broad in style, reposeful, artistic, was his playing, there being no element wanting to place the interpreter in perfect accord with the composer. His performance was heartily applauded, and he was several times recalled. The symphony, "of heavenly length," was ably played last season by Mr. Nikisch. Wagner's modest efforts to help Mr. Gluck with nineteenth century audiences have been more or less maligned; but Richard seldom made an error.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.
—A WEEKLY PAPER—
NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

THE Supreme Court on Thursday, in a suit brought by Hamilton R. Squier as attorney for Max Bachert, of Boston, proprietor of the Boston Symphony Orchestral Club, against Mario Blodeck and Richard Stoelzer, rendered a decision restraining Blodeck and Stoelzer from using the words, "The Boston Symphony Club," as the title of their concert organization and from giving concerts under that name. The opinion was written by Judge O'Brien.

We wonder if Judge O'Brien was aware of the fact that the name "Boston Symphony," appropriated by Bachert, is the property of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and that in making use of the deceptive title "Boston Symphony Orchestral," adding merely the letter "l," this Max Bachert, Esq., was doing business on the great reputation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

What, pray you, is an "orchestral" club, anyhow? Is there such a thing as an "orchestral" club, unless it be a club consisting of members of orchestras? And even then the title would be far fetched and incongruous.

An inquiry into this matter on the part of the attorneys for the defense might have shown in court exactly what the attitude on this assumed title is of the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The people conducting that great institution have for years past been annoyed by the hybrid title of Bachert's club and have been compelled to resort to all sorts of explanations to clear the vexatious interference with the legitimate name and title of their organization.

They have consistently refused to make public the cause of their disturbance for fear of giving undue prominence to and advertising Bachert's scheme, although THE MUSICAL COURIER stepped into the breach on several occasions to explain the situation to the musical public.

From the view point of common decency the assumption of the name on the part of Bachert has been simply revolting, for it was known and instinctively felt that it was merely an attempt at trading on another name.

Judge O'Brien could not have known these circumstances; he could not have known them and then render such a decision.

Moreover "Boston Symphony Club," the name of the club of the defendants in this action, is a title to which appertains some logic. There can be such a thing as a symphony club without exaggeration. In this city we have a Philharmonic Orchestra and a Philharmonic Club, and neither is mistaken for the other. There can be a Symphony Orchestra and a Symphony Club without the slightest friction or interference. There is no play upon words involved and no attempt to utilize another title. An orchestra is one thing, a club another.

But a "Boston Symphony Orchestral Club" is the color of another horse. The dovetailing of the word "orchestral" is ridiculous from a musical view point, particularly when the character of the organization over which Bachert presides is considered, and the intention of the use to which it was or is to be put is too apparent to admit of any doubt as to the motive of the man who projected the scheme.

It might be suggested to carry this question up to a higher court and bring the managers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the stand. Now that publicity has been given to the scheme they might as well try their hands at the same kind of process Bachert just utilized. As a court decided in Bachert's favor under such peculiar circumstances, another court might decide in favor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is no longer a question of law, it is a question of morals. Can the Boston Symphony Orchestra continue to ignore the situation and permit Bachert to transact business as manager of the "Boston Symphony Orchestral Club" with all that that name implies?

He might go further under this decision and claim the very name of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The inaction of the latter organization may be used as the best evidence that he is the true owner of that title and that it is no longer the property of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Worcester Music Festival.

WORCESTER, Mass., September 26.

THE musical pilgrim who journeys hither at this time of the year finds himself set down in an atmosphere as full of enthusiasm as a thunder cloud is of electricity; for the people of this charming city are vastly proud of their fine chorus, their annual festival and all its belongings. During these four days politics, business and all else have to stand aside, while the musical procession marches by. People talk of nothing else. On the street, in the stores, wherever you may chance to be, the scraps of conversation which float to your ears run something after this fashion: "Oh, wasn't Nordica just divine?"—"Did you hear Campanini in"—"orchestration was immense"—"never heard it before"—"Zerrahn said"—"wish they'd do it again"—"fine voice, but"—"Herbert played"—"Hummel to morrow"—&c.

Now this genuine, home made, all wool and a yard wide kind of enthusiasm is extremely contagious. It affects even the stern critic, who will upon occasion point out to you a false note in the very harmony of the spheres. He comes here like a musical Saul of Tarsus, breathing out threatenings and slaughter, but, falling under the magic spell, selects his softest pen, a bottle of rose water for ink and lends himself generally to the promotion of the musical love feast which is going on.

Yet there is good foundation for this feeling of local pride. This is the thirty-fourth annual festival of the Worcester County Musical Association, and during all these years there has been steady progress upward from small beginnings to larger accomplishments, from the singing of light and trivial music to the production of great classical works, from the banding together of a few local singers to the evolution of the great and well trained chorus of to-day. The audiences, too, have kept pace with this growth, not only in numbers but in appreciation and musical intelligence, until nowadays for singer or player successfully to run the gauntlet of a Worcester festival is almost a passport to reputation and success.

People come to these concerts from all over New England, and even farther afield. All the week the hotels have been full to running over with visitors, performers and musical flotsam and jetsam of all sorts, while the seating your chair and thinking how delightful it is, a shimmering arpeggio runs down the strings (not up, like the usual pp ending) and it's all over with.

As for the "Peer Gynt" suite, after hearing it several times, I must confess that I'm getting tired of it. I offer this confession in much humbleness of spirit and with a deep conviction of deficient musical sense, for those who ought to know say that nowadays the nearer you get to the North Pole the higher you get in music; still—I'm getting tired of it. I know that it has the true Norwegian flavor, that it whispers of the pines and relates the history of the fjords and the fglaciers; yet—I am tired of it. And particularly tired of the finale, where all the instruments of percussion get to running amuck at one another. I have been in Africa and the South Sea islands, where they have large bands composed entirely of drums, tom-toms and cymbals (or something equivalent), and they play upon them with a vigor that I am sure would delight Mr. Grieg's heart could he hear them. But I wish that Grieg et id omne genus would leave that sort of music to the black fellows—they enjoy it.

Victor Herbert's playing of Saint-Saëns' concerto was marked by musical intelligence and a fine command of his instrument, and the two vocal numbers were of equal interest with the rest of the program, which is saying a great deal. Mrs. Wyman has an evenly developed voice of beautiful quality and a truly artistic method, while Mrs. Ford, despite some faults, accomplished what so many singers cannot—the singing of a Mozart aria as it should be sung.

Wednesday evening's coming was anxiously awaited by many, for with it came the advent of our own really and truly American prima donna, Nordica. Here is the program:

Overture, "Iphigenia," Wagner's ending	Gluck
"Hagar in the Desert," dramatic scena†	Rubinstein
Mrs. Carl Alves.
"Cavalleria Rusticana," intermezzo*	Mascagn
Waltz "Romeo and Juliet"	Gounod
Mrs. Lillian Nordica.
"The Repentance of Nineveh,"* a dramatic oratorio	Dr. J. F. Bridge
Daughter of the King	Mrs. Nordica
Queen	Mrs. Carl Alves
King	Mr. Carl Dufft
Jonah	Mr. Herbert Johnson

* First performance in America. † First time in Worcester.

The two instrumental pieces were heard with pleasure, and the intermezzo was repeated in answer to prolonged applause, but everybody was keeping at least one eye on the fourth number of the program, which bore the magic name of Nordica. Meantime Mrs. Carl Alves was heard for the first time, and rose to a height of instant popularity by her rendition of Rubinstein's dramatic, difficult, and, if I must tell the truth, unpleasing scena. There is plenty of scope in the voice part for intense dramatic expression, all the points of which Mrs. Alves faithfully brought out. But the orchestration—well, I suppose Hagar was in a very barren place.

But now, as the old hymn says, "the long expected hour is come," and upon the stage floats an entrancing vision of lovely woman, long trained Worth gown and flashing diamonds, and from somewhere out of this marvelous combination comes a voice whose first note stills every sound save its own and that of the accompanying orchestra. And when she is done, what a roar of applause! Nothing short of another song will satisfy them; so back she comes and gives the polonaise from "Mignon." Then comes the intermission, and everybody has a chance to catch his breath.

A ripple of amusement was caused by the appearance at the end of Nordica's song of a monster basket of roses, so large that when the young man had struggled up the steps and deposited it at her feet her only way of egress was completely barred. Nordica seemed somewhat in a dilemma over this tribute, which was altogether too large to be dealt with by a lady in concert costume, but Victor Herbert cut the Gordian knot by rushing forward and, preceding the prima donna, bore the huge trophy triumphantly to the anteroom.

Dr. Bridge's new oratorio, "The Repentance of Nineveh," received a careful and adequate presentation, but failed to arouse enthusiasm. The general verdict was "learned, but dry," and the vox populi was about right, as it frequently is. The orchestration is skillful and effective—much the best part of the work—most of the choral numbers proving labored and uninteresting. One would naturally expect the opposite of this from the organist of Westminster Abbey, who should certainly know how to treat voices. Some of the solos, notably one or two for tenor, have a natural flow of melody, but these are oases in the desert. The score abounds with skillful contrapuntal work and learned elaboration in the working out of the different themes, but the vital spark of genius is missing. The soloists all acquitted themselves more than creditably. I did not like a habit Mr. Dufft has at times of diminishing a note immediately after striking it. It makes him lose the point of more than one emphatic phrase. But I don't feel like picking flaws in his singing, as his work later in the festival was so excellently done.

This work was performed as a novelty, but its musical value will hardly ensure its repetition.

Thursday afternoon was given up chiefly to the works of American composers. First came a mass in C minor, by G. A. Adams, a young musician of the vicinity, recently deceased. This mass was his latest and most important composition, and received its initial performance at this time. It is written in the conventional style, and, while betraying to a certain degree both immaturity of musical thought and lack of technical ability, might be regarded as promising well for the future had the composer's life been spared. Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Wyman, A. L. King and Dr. G. R. Clark assumed the solo parts. To Mrs. Wyman's share fell the most melodious number, the "Agnus Dei," which she gave with much feeling.

This was followed by a new suite for orchestra (in A minor, op. 42) by E. A. MacDowell. To each of its four short movements is affixed a symbolic title—"In a Haunted Forest," "Summer Idyl," "The Shepherdess' Song, "Forest Spirits." Mr. MacDowell seems fond of the woods. The first movement begins pp, with ghostly mutterings and flutterings, rises and falls through ofttimes strange but never overstrained instrumentation, and finally dies out as it began. The second is charming and quiet; the shepherdess' song is sung principally by the clarinet against a background of muted strings, and the last movement is similar in character to the first, but the spirits are of a brighter and much more cheerful kind. The work is far above the average and, in spite of a hint of Grieg and again of Berlioz, shows much originality and an effective command of orchestral resources.

The third number was a song by C. Whitney Coombs, "The Heavenly Message." Mr. Carl Dufft's singing of it was so excellent that he was obliged to respond with Lassen's "It Was a Dream."

After the usual intermission came Victor Herbert's new work, "The Captive," written especially for this festival. The libretto tells in a few short verses how a knight on his way to execution passes beneath the window of a high born maid. She, moved by pity and love (at first sight I conjecture), beseeches his guards to release him, offering to marry him and, presumably, be responsible for his future good behavior. The guards, as usual in such cases, fall in with the idea, but the knight announces that his troth is already plighted and that no amount of vocal or instrumental persuasion can avail to change his heart. And so, faithful to his love, he passes along to his doom. This simple story, which could be told within the compass of a song, Mr. Herbert has magnified to the dimensions of a dramatic cantata. I will not attempt to criticise it, for that could not be adequately done upon only one hearing, and I do not wish to do any injustice to Mr. Herbert, whom I regard as a very able "all round" musician. There is much effective orchestration, a free use of the "Leit motif," some stirring climaxes and a remarkably good funeral march. The vocal parts are of extreme difficulty. Mrs. S. C. Ford took the part of the lovelorn maiden, and Carl Dufft that of the temptation resisting knight.

This was an afternoon of novelties, every number but Mr. Coombs' song being performed for the first time in public.

Thursday evening brought out the largest audience of the week, and most of the principal artists in the following program:

"A Faust Overture"	Wagner
Romanza, "Eri tu"	Verdi
Mr. Del Puente.
*Aria, from "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saëns
Miss Lena Little.
†"Lohengrin's Narrative," from "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Mr. Campanini.
*Two movements for strings, "Heart Wounds," "Spring"	Grieg
Aria, "Let the Bright Seraphim," from "Samson"	Händel
Mrs. Nordica.
The trumpet obligato by Mr. P. Müller.
Solo for violin, "Fantaisie Caprice"	Vieuxtemps
Mr. Franz Wilczek.
Trio, from "I Lombardi"	Verdi
Mrs. Nordica, Mr. Campanini and Mr. Del Puente.
WAGNER SELECTIONS.
*"Siegfried's Passage to Brünnhilde's Rock, Morning Dawn and Rhine Journey," "Siegfried" and "Götterdämmerung." (Arranged by Richter.)
*"Senta's Ballad," from "The Flying Dutchman"
Mrs. Nordica.
Violin, "Prize Song," from "Die Meistersinger"
Mr. Wilczek.
Prayer and finale, from Act I., "Lohengrin."
"Elsa"	Mrs. Nordica
"Ortrud"	Miss Little
"Lohengrin"	Mr. Campanini
"Frederick"	Mr. Del Puente
"Henry I."	Dr. G. R. Clark

* First time in Worcester. † First Worcester Festival performance.

The audience was a pretty sight. Full dress is the custom for "artists' night," and this with the flutter of a thousand fans of all colors made the hall look—as a poetic local scribe put it—"like a great bank of tropical flowers." A description in detail of these familiar numbers is unnecessary. Del Puente set the people wild with his magnificent singing both in his chosen selection and the inevitable "Toreador" which followed. Nordica repeated her triumph of the evening before, and everybody else got their full share of appreciation and applause. The audience was extremely enthusiastic and prolonged the generous program to an uncomfortable length by encoring pretty nearly everything and everybody.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give eight concerts in the Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21. Mmes. Lillian Nordica and Julie M. Wyman, Mr. Eugen D'Albert and other eminent musicians will assist. The sale of season tickets will begin at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, tomorrow morning. The first concert of the eleventh season in the Music Hall will be given tomorrow night in accordance with this programme: Overture, "Dedication of the House," Beethoven; aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhäuser," Wagner; symphony in E-flat, No. 3 (Rheinish) Schumann. Mme. Lillian Nordica will be the singer.

Boston Post

SATURDAY MORNING, OCT. 10, 1891.

The programme of the Symphony Concert this evening is as follows: Beethoven's overture "Dedication of the House:" Wagner's "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal;" and Schumann's symphony in E flat (Rhenish). Mrs. Lillian Nordica will sing Beethoven's aria "Ah! Perfido!" and Wagner's "O Hall of Song," from Tannhaeuser."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Mr. Nikisch, with the assistance of Mrs. Nordica, Mrs. Wyman, Messrs. Eliot Hubbard and Eugene D'Albert and other soloists will give a series of eight concerts at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, 1891; Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24, April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, $6, will be on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, on and after this morning. Sale opens at 8 a. m.

The Adamowski Quartette will give three concerts in Union Hall on Monday evenings Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. Among the selections performed will be a horn trio, by Brahms, a piano quartette, by Dvorak, and quartettes, by Tschaikowsky and Novacek.

Subscription list now open at Music Hall. Reserved seats will be on sale Saturday, Oct. 17, at 9 a. m.

The Kneisel Quartette will give six subscription concerts in Union Hall Monday evenings Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The quartette will be assisted by Mrs. Joachim, Mrs. Nikisch, Mrs. Zeisler, and Messrs. Busoni, Sanford and Scharawenka. The programmes will include the following compositions: Quintette, (new) Brahms; grand quartette in B major, Beethoven; quartette, Paganini; quintette, Sinding; suite, F. Ries; quartette, A. Borodin; quartette, Bazzini; sonata, (Teufels Triller) Tartini; quartette, A major, Schumann. Tickets for the season may now be obtained by subscribers at the box office of Music Hall.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 102.

SATURDAY, OCT. 10, 1891.

The first of the season's symphony concerts occurs at Music Hall this evening, with Miss Lillian Nordica as the soloist. The programme is overture, "Dedication of the House," Beethoven; aria, "Ah! Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria, from "Tannhauser," Wagner; symphony in E flat, No. 3 (Rhenish), Schumann.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCT. 10, 1891.

The Symphony Orchestra will give their usual series of Sanders Theatre concerts, one every four weeks, beginning next Thursday evening.

Nordica is a grand-daughter of old "Camp-meeting" John Allen. She ought to sing oratorio well.

The Kneisel string quartette announces six subscription concerts in Union Hall, 48 Boylston street, Monday evenings, October 19, November 23, December 28, 1891, and January 25, February 15 and March 7, 1892. The assisting artists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats, $6, are now on sale to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1891

The first of the Cambridge concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra will take place at Sanders Theater, Thursday evening. There are to be eight of these concerts, to take place November 12, December 3 and 31, January 21, February 25, March 24, and April 21. The sale of the seats at $6.00 for the series opens this morning at the University Bookstore. Among the soloists announced to appear are Mme. Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, and Mr. Eugen D'Albert.

The Kneisel quartet as organized for the coming season consists of Frank Kneisel, first violin; Otto Rotch, second violinist; L. Svecenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder, violoncello. They will give a series of six subscription concerts at Union Hall, Monday evenings October 19, November 23, December 28, January 25, February 15, and March 7, and the following artists have been engaged to assist them: Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni, and Mr. Samuel Sanford. The programs will include, among other compositions, Quintet, new, Brahms; Grand Quartet in B major, Beethoven; Quartet, Paganni; Quintet, Sinding; Suite, F. Ries; Quartet, A. Borodin; Quartet, Bazzini; Sonata, Teufels Triller, Tartini; Quartet, A major, Schumann.

Lillian Nordica is to sing in the Star course Monday evening, with a large orchestra to accompany her.

CHARLESTOWN ENTERPRISE

CHARLESTOWN NEWS.

Is issued by the Charlestown Enterprise Company every Saturday morning from No. 8 City square—Two Dollars a year in advance—Entered at the Boston Post Office as second-class mail matter.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1891.

The Kneisel Quartet is to give six subscription concerts on Monday evenings at Union Hall, Boylston street. The soloists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, and Messrs. Xaver Scharwenka, F. Busoni and S. Sanford. The first concert will be given Monday evening, October 19, and season tickets will be sold to subscribers only at the box office of Music Hall. The subscription list is now open.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 11, 1891.

First Symphony Concert, Soloist Mme. Nordica.

"Wang," "Ship Ahoy," "Indigo" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" All to Be Heard This Week—Mme. Laura Schirmer-Mapleson's Re-entre in "Lucia"—News, Gossip and Comment

The formal opening of the 11th season of the concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra occurred at Music Hall last evening. The event, like similar ones in former years, showed the great popularity of the orchestra with the local public, and again the seats of the hall were filled by representatives of the highest artistic and social circles. Mr. Arthur Nikisch is again conductor, and his own personal popularity was freshly attested by the ovation with which he was greeted upon his entrance.

But few changes were noticeable in the makeup of the organization. Here and there a familiar face was missed, but the leaders of the separate parts of the band are mainly the same, and wherever changes have been made the men appear to have been well chosen. Mr. Nikisch introduced his programme by a most acceptable performance of the Beethoven overture, "Dedication of the House." The composition was well chosen to show the command which Mr. Nikisch has already gained over his forces, and its performance displayed the excellence of the orchestra to splendid advantage.

The other orchestral features of the programme were the "Good Friday Spell" and Schumann's symphony No. 3 (the Rhenish). The Wagner selection was played in much the fashion that is expected in Mr. Nikisch's reading of such selections. While not altogether satisfying, its performance showed a fine command over the players, an intelligent understanding of the composition, and many excellencies in detail, which went far to atone for the lack of sentiment and feeling demanded in a perfect interpretation of this number.

The Schumann symphony was read with splendid results throughout, and several movements were admirably interpreted and showed the work in all its beauties. Mr. Nikisch has little cause to complain of a lack of appreciation of his efforts if the applause of his audience is to be taken as a criterion. The orchestral work of the evening was certainly an evidence that the concerts of the coming season are to show no falling off in this regard. Mr. Nikisch has evidently chosen his new men with care and good judgment, and the preliminary rehearsals of the season have already moulded them to his will to such a degree that the best results may be anticipated.

The singer of the evening was Mme. Lillian Nordica, a Boston girl, who has from time to time returned from her triumphs abroad to show her friends at home the artistic progress she is making. Her present visit has thus far proved a very fine success, and she and her friends have good reason to rejoice over the triumphs she has won at the Worcester festival and in last evening's concert. Her reception by the audience proved that she has not been forgotten in local musical circles, and the applause which followed her singing of both of her numbers was a high tribute to her vocal abilities. The Beethoven aria, "Ah Perfido," made her first selection, and served to show the advance she has made in her art since she was last here. In her broad dramatic treatment of the recitative and in the fine expression and feeling she gave to the aria her excellencies as a singer were made very apparent The aria from the Tannhaeuser, which made her second selection, was even more satisfying; and the fine stage presence of the singer added not a little to the impressiveness of this selection.

Mme. Nordica's voice is one of great purity; her intonations are delightfully accurate, and the breadth of style which she showed in this last aria surprised and charmed those most familiar with her former efforts. The audience rewarded her most generously, and she was repeatedly recalled to bow her acknowledgments.

The programme for next Saturday's concert is as follows: Tschaikowsky, suite, op. 55, first time in Boston. Mascagni, prelude from the opera "Cavalleria Rusticana," first time at these concerts. Beethoven, minuetto and finale (fugue) from string quartet, op. 59, No. 3, in C; played by all the strings; first time. Songs with piano, Schubert, "Der Neugierige"; Schumann, "Mondnacht"; Jensen, "Murmelnde Luftchen." Massenet, overture, "Phedre." The soloist will be Mr. William J. Winch, tenor.

The Adamowski quartet will give three concerts in Union Hall on Monday evenings, Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. Among the selections performed will be a horn trio, by Brahms, a piano quartet, by Dvorak, and quartets, by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. Subscription list now open at Music Hall.

Tomorrow is Mr. Nikisch's birthday. Gentlemen of the Tavern Club, please take notice, and make up your orders around the number 36.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1891.

LILLIAN NORDICA will be the soloist at the first Boston Symphony concert, which takes place at Chickering Hall, Nov. 3.

[illegible]

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1891.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, began its eleventh season of concerts at Music Hall last evening.

The soloist of the evening was Mme. Lillian Nordica, and the programme was made up as follows: Overture, "Dedication of the House," Beethoven; aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; "Good Friday Spell," Wagner; aria from "Tannhauser," and the Schumann symphony, No. 3.

Despite the interest attendant upon the opening of the series in regard to the orchestra and its leader, it must be admitted by those who were present that Mme. Nordica and her selections made a most important feature of the evening's attraction.

Accepting this as a fact, it would seem to be a wise course for the managers of these concerts to supply their patrons with a larger number of soloists than in former seasons.

Mme. Nordica is well known to Boston audiences.

She has in her former visits gained a position in the favor of the Boston public that is shared by few artists. Not a little pride has been taken in her triumphs abroad by Boston music lovers, and her standing among the world's artists was heartily recognized by the applause which greeted her upon her entrance.

Queenly in stature, graceful in pose, and elegant in all that goes to make an attractive stage presence, Mme. Nordica wins an audience even before she sings.

The pleasant impression she gives is, however, not alone restricted to her personal charms. Her singing is well calculated to please the most captious critic of vocal art.

In the Beethoven aria she displayed fine taste, and gave an interpretation of the aria which called out a grand ovation for the singer.

The Wagner aria was delivered with splendid effect, and the applause which followed it and recalled the artist to bow her acknowledgments was fully justified. Mme. Nordica has seldom made a more pronounced triumph in her artistic home, and her future successes will interest all who heard her last evening.

The orchestral work of the programme gave evidence of the faithful labors of Mr. Nikisch in the preparatory rehearsals.

Some changes have occurred in the membership of his organization, but the standard has been fully maintained, and the season's concerts will unquestionably again attest his great ability as a conductor.

The Beethoven overture has seldom been better played than on this occasion. It afforded a splendid opportunity to show the value of the orchestra, and the many beauties of the composition were faithfully depicted in the reading given by Mr. Nikisch.

The Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal" also had a most enjoyable interpretation. Mr. Nikisch is to be commended for the admirable finish with which this number was performed.

The beautiful Rhenish symphony was made a most enjoyable ending of the programme, its several movements being given with delightful clearness and intelligence. All in all the opening concert was in keeping with the record made by Mr. Nikisch in former seasons. His programme was well chosen, a competent soloist was supplied, and the audience was not detained beyond a reasonable limit.

—The first Symphony rehearsal of the eleventh season, Friday afternoon, drew out the largest representation of the society contingent yet gathered this season and the vast audience filled almost every seat. The sale of admission tickets was stopped the day previous, causing hundreds to be turned away on Friday. The centre of attraction, after Mr. Nikisch and his orchestra were given a royal welcome, was Mme. Nordica, who sang with such splendid spirit and in such glorious voice she was recalled three times amid great enthusiasm. She looked superbly handsome in a trained Worth gown of mauve brocade, the corsage and skirt bordered with silver fringe, and a line of silver outlining the open neck and edge of the long full sleeves. It was an exquisite dress and fitted Mme. Nordica's perfect figure faultlessly. Dr. O. W. Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Curtis, Mrs. Agassiz, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Higginson, Mr. Francis Bartlett and his daughter, Mrs. Herbert Sears, Mr. W. F. Weld—whom his friends were all glad to see out again—Mrs. Weld, Mr. C. F. Sprague and Miss Pratt, Mrs. G. B. Shattuck, Miss Elsie Perkins, Mrs. Charles Fairchild and daughters (who had seats in the balcony), Miss Thomas, Miss Lyman, Mr. Harry Wainwright, Mr. W. P. Blake, Dr. Sturgis Bigelow, Rev. Father Bodfish, Mr. John D. Williams, Col. Livermore and daughter, Mr. Edmund Dwight, Mrs. Sewell Fessenden, Miss Georgiana Putnam, Mr. Heinricks and Mr. and Mrs. Eliot Hubbard were among the many familiar season ticket-holders in the audience.

—Madame Nordica, who was accompanied at the "Cavalleria Rusticana" performance Tuesday night by her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Baldwin, looked distinguished and exceedingly handsome as she entered the hall, in a long French pearl-gray wrap, with cape heavily embroidered in white, and a small white and gold lace bonnet with pink roses. Her gown was of a similar tint as the wrap and trimmed with white lace. Madame Nordica is the guest of Mrs. Baldwin at her home in Dorchester.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, will give a series of eight concerts in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21. Among the soloists are: Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julia M. Wyman, Mr. Eugene D'Albert and other prominent artists. The dates for the Providence engagement are: Oct. 21, Nov. 18, Dec. 16, Jan. 27, Feb. 29 and April 6.

Next Saturday evening Mr. William Winch, tenor, will be the soloist, and the programme will include Tschaikowsky's suite op. 55 (new to Boston) the "Cavalleria Rusticana" prelude; the minuetta and finale from Beethoven's string quartet, op. 59, No. 3, in C, songs by Schubert, Schumann and Jansen and the "Phedre" overture.

—The Kneisel quartet, under the management of Mr. C. A. Ellis, will give six subscription concerts at Union Hall, beginning Monday evening, Oct. 19. Mrs. Nikisch will be, as last year, one of the leading soloists.

—Mr. and Mrs. Nikisch are at home Mondays at their house in High st., Brookline.

Star Course Concert.

Mme. Lillian Nordica is to sing in the Star Course concert tomorrow in three noteworthy selections, Gounod's "La Reine de Saba, Chopin's "Notturno," and a selection from "Mignon." She will be assisted by an excellent orchestra, who will play the [illegible] to "Jubel," by Weber; the [illegible] the "Midsummer Night's

---

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 11, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY.

THE OPENING CONCERT OF THE SEASON LAST NIGHT.

The eleventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was begun last evening in Music Hall. As has usually been the case of late years, nearly every seat was occupied by subscribers, and the occasion of the first night, together with the appearance of one of America's most gifted vocalists, combined to draw an additional number of people, who filled all the available standing room.

Generally speaking, the orchestra presented its well-known familiar aspect. Nearly all the leading players were to be seen, including Mr. Loeffler, who looked the picture of health in spite of his serious illness of last spring. Some important changes, nevertheless, have been made. Mr. Schroeder, late violoncellist of the noted Brodsky string quartette of Leipsic, takes the place of Mr. Hekking, who has gone over to Mr. Damrosch, in New York. He bears a high reputation, and will doubtless soon be heard as a soloist. Mr. Novacek, also of Leipsig, now leads the violas, and Mr. Guetter is the new first bassoon player. The third horn player is also new to the organization which this year will possess an extra performer on that instrument, as well as a third trumpeter. There would seem to be no question as to the strength of the orchestra.

Mr. Nikisch was heartily greeted as he appeared on the platform. The opening number was that exceedingly useful composition as far as name is concerned, but somewhat musty one, regarded from a musical point of view, Beethoven's overture, "Dedication of the House," opus 124. It certainly seems unfortunate that the great composer ever bestowed on this work the title it bears, since it is far better calculated to depress an audience into a state of gloomy silence than to create feelings of contagious liveliness. As an interesting example of how Beethoven could write in the so-called Handelian style, it may well find an occasional place on a symphony programme. But take away its name, and one might quite safely venture the assertion that it would never be heard at the dedication of any hall or theatre (it was written for the latter purpose), or as the first number of the first programme of a series of symphony concerts. And what an injustice, too, to Beethoven, to dig up this uninspired work for so important an occasion, when one of the "Leonore" overtures would have thrilled the very souls of the people present, and, without doubt, led them to the verge at least of enthusiasm.

As it was, the applause inspired by that feeling was reserved for Mrs. Lillian Nordica, the soloist of the evening, who was first heard in Beethoven's concert aria, "Ah Perfido." Mrs Nordica possessed so many of the elements of popularity that it is small wonder she is the favorite that she is. Aside from her magnetic personality and the truly American spirit that she invariably displays in everything she attempts, her earnest and artistic endeavors command respect. She forces the careful listener to conclude that she has studied hard and patiently, that she is thoroughly interested in her work; and these qualities together with her musical, resonant voice, and her dramatic manner of delivery must of necessity, seldom fail to hold the attention, and to win the applause of her audiences.

In the aria just mentioned, it can hardly be said that she sounded any great depths of passion; but her singing was artistic, intelligent as to phrasing, and brilliant and effective as to execution. In this, as well as in her second number, the aria, "Oh Hall of Song," from "Tannhauser," she frequently gave evidence of the strong dramatic ability she is known to possess; and at the conclusion of both she was recalled several times.

The remaining numbers were the music from the third act of "Parsifal," called "Good Friday Spell," and Schumann's third symphony in E flat. The first is a concert piece made up of the music which accompanies "the anointing of Parsifal; his baptism by Kundry; and his reflections upon his position as King of the Grail," naturally, an arrangement interesting to hear. But why it should have been injected into the programme of this concert is one of the mysteries that are past finding out. The symphony is too well known to require extended comment. As a whole, the programme must be considered altogether too sombre in character for one of the principal events of Boston's musical season; and hard to be accounted for, unless perhaps on the ground that Mr. Nikisch wished to impress strongly upon the minds of the subscribers to these concerts the seriousness of their undertaking.

Of the playing by the orchestra, it must be said that, although it would be impossible for so splendid a body of men to fail to play splendidly, to a greater or less degree, it was not by any means a fair example of what they are capable of. One could but involuntarily recall to mind the beautiful technical finish of the band at the commencement of its first season under Mr. Nikisch, and contrast it with the frequently harsh and ragged playing of last evening. But perhaps this disappointing condition of things was due to the enforced separation of the men during the summer months.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the assistance of eminent soloists, will give a series of eight concerts in Sanders Theatre on Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, 1891; Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, at $6, are on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge.

The Kneisel Quartet, (Frank Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; L. Svecenski, viola; Alwin Schroeder, violoncello;) will give six subscription concerts in Union Hall, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891; Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The assisting artists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fannie Bloomfield Zeilger, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats at $6 at Music Hall.

—Mr. Charles A. Ellis, manager of Music Hall, has taken apartments at the Ludlow, Copley Square, for the winter.

[24]

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give eight concerts in the Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21. Mmes. Lillian Nordica and Julie M. Wyman, Mr. Eugen D'Albert and other eminent musicians will assist. The sale of season tickets will begin at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, tomorrow morning. The first concert of the eleventh season in the Music Hall will be given tomorrow night in accordance with this programme: Overture, "Dedication of the House," Beethoven; aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhäuser," Wagner; symphony in E-flat, No. 3 (Rheinish), Schumann. Mme. Lillian Nordica will be the singer.

Boston Post

SATURDAY MORNING, OCT. 10, 1891.

The programme of the Symphony Concert this evening is as follows: Beethoven's overture "Dedication of the House:" Wagner's "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal;" and Schumann's symphony in E flat (Rhenish). Mrs. Lillian Nordica will sing Beethoven's aria "Ah! Perfido!" and Wagner's "O Hall of Song," from Tannhaeuser."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Mr. Nikisch, with the assistance of Mrs. Nordica, Mrs. Wyman, Messrs. Eliot Hubbard and Eugene D'Albert and other soloists will give a series of eight concerts at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, 1891; Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24, April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, $6, will be on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge, on and after this morning. Sale opens at 8 a. m.

The Adamowski Quartette will give three concerts in Union Hall on Monday evenings Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. Among the selections performed will be a horn trio, by Brahms, a piano quartette, by Dvorak, and quartettes, by Tschaikowsky and Novacek.

Subscription list now open at Music Hall. Reserved seats will be on sale Saturday, Oct. 17, at 9 a. m.

The Kneisel Quartette will give six subscription concerts in Union Hall Monday evenings Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The quartette will be assisted by Mrs. Joachim, Mrs. Nikisch, Mrs. Zeisler, and Messrs. Busoni, Sanford and Scharawenka. The programmes will include the following compositions: Quintette, (new) Brahms; grand quartette in B major, Beethoven; quartette, Paganini; quintette, Sinding; suite, F. Ries; quartette, A. Borodin; quartette, Bazzini; sonata, (Teufels Triller) Tartini; quartette, A major, Schumann. Tickets for the season may now be obtained by subscribers at the box office of Music Hall.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 102.

SATURDAY, OCT. 10, 1891.

The first of the season's symphony concerts occurs at Music Hall this evening, with Miss Lillian Nordica as the soloist. The programme is overture, "Dedication of the House," Beethoven; aria, "Ah! Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria, from "Tannhauser," Wagner; symphony in E flat, No. 3 (Rhenish), Schumann.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCT. 10, 1891.

The Symphony Orchestra will give their usual series of Sanders Theatre concerts, one every four weeks, beginning next Thursday evening.

Nordica is a grand-daughter of old "Camp-meeting" John Allen. She ought to sing oratorio well.

The Kneisel string quartette announces six subscription concerts in Union Hall, 48 Boylston street, Monday evenings, October 19, November 23, December 28, 1891, and January 25, February 15 and March 7, 1892. The assisting artists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats, $6, are now on sale to subscribers only, at the box office, Music Hall.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10. 1891

The first of the Cambridge concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra will take place at Sanders Theater, Thursday evening. There are to be eight of these concerts, to take place November 12, December 3 and 31, January 21, February 25, March 24, and April 21. The sale of the seats at $6.00 for the series opens this morning at the University Bookstore. Among the soloists announced to appear are Mme. Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, and Mr. Eugen D'Albert.

The Kneisel quartet as organized for the coming season consists of Frank Kneisel, first violin; Otto Rotch, second violinist; L. Svecenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder, violoncello. They will give a series of six subscription concerts at Union Hall, Monday evenings October 19, November 23, December 28, January 25, February 15, and March 7, and the following artists have been engaged to assist them: Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni, and Mr. Samuel Sanford. The programs will include, among other compositions, Quintet, new, Brahms; Grand Quartet in B major, Beethoven; Quartet, Paganni; Quintet, Sinding; Suite, F. Ries; Quartet, A. Borodin; Quartet, Bazzini; Sonata, Teufels Triller, Tartini; Quartet, A major, Schumann.

Lillian Nordica is to sing in the Star course Monday evening, with a large orchestra to accompany her.

CHARLESTOWN ENTERPRISE

CHARLESTOWN NEWS.

Is issued by the Charlestown Enterprise Company every Saturday morning from No. 8 City square——Two Dollars a year in advance—Entered at the Boston Post Office as second-class mail matter.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1891.

The Kneisel Quartet is to give six subscription concerts on Monday evenings at Union Hall, Boylston street. The soloists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, and Messrs. Xaver Scharwenka, F. Busoni and S. Sanford. The first concert will be given Monday evening, October 19, and season tickets will be sold to subscribers only at the box office of Music Hall. The subscription list is now open.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 11, 1891.

First Symphony Concert, Soloist Mme. Nordica.

"Wang," "Ship Ahoy," "Indigo" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" All to Be Heard This Week—Mme. Laura Schirmer-Mapleson's Re-entre in "Lucia"—News, Gossip and Comment

The formal opening of the 11th season of the concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra occurred at Music Hall last evening. The event, like similar ones in former years, showed the great popularity of the orchestra with the local public, and again the seats of the hall were filled by representatives of the highest artistic and social circles. Mr. Arthur Nikisch is again conductor, and his own personal popularity was freshly attested by the ovation with which he was greeted upon his entrance.

But few changes were noticeable in the makeup of the organization. Here and there a familiar face was missed, but the leaders of the separate parts of the band are mainly the same, and wherever changes have been made the men appear to have been well chosen. Mr. Nikisch introduced his programme by a most acceptable performance of the Beethoven overture, "Dedication of the House." The composition was well chosen to show the command which Mr. Nikisch has already gained over his forces, and its performance displayed the excellence of the orchestra to splendid advantage.

The other orchestral features of the programme were the "Good Friday Spell" and Schumann's symphony No. 3 (the Rhenish). The Wagner selection was played in much the fashion that is expected in Mr. Nikisch's reading of such selections. While not altogether satisfying, its performance showed a fine command over the players, an intelligent understanding of the composition, and many excellencies in detail, which went far to atone for the lack of sentiment and feeling demanded in a perfect interpretation of this number.

The Schumann symphony was read with splendid results throughout, and several movements were admirably interpreted and showed the work in all its beauties. Mr. Nikisch has little cause to complain of a lack of appreciation of his efforts if the applause of his audience is to be taken as a criterion. The orchestral work of the evening was certainly an evidence that the concerts of the coming season are to show no falling off in this regard. Mr. Nikisch has evidently chosen his new men with care and good judgment, and the preliminary rehearsals of the season have already moulded them to his will to such a degree that the best results may be anticipated.

The singer of the evening was Mme. Lillian Nordica, a Boston girl, who has from time to time returned from her triumphs abroad to show her friends at home the artistic progress she is making. Her present visit has thus far proved a very fine success, and she and her friends have good reason to rejoice over the triumphs she has won at the Worcester festival and in last evening's concert. Her reception by the audience proved that she has not been forgotten in local musical circles, and the applause which followed her singing of both of her numbers was a high tribute to her vocal abilities. The Beethoven aria, "Ah Perfido," made her first selection, and served to show the advance she has made in her art since she was last here. In her broad dramatic treatment of the recitative and in the fine expression and feeling she gave to the aria her excellencies as a singer were made very apparent. The aria from the Tannhaeuser, which made her second selection, was even more satisfying; and the fine stage presence of the singer added not a little to the impressiveness of this selection.

Mme. Nordica's voice is one of great purity; her intonations are delightfully accurate, and the breadth of style which she showed in this last aria surprised and charmed those most familiar with her former efforts. The audience rewarded her most generously, and she was repeatedly recalled to bow her acknowledgments.

The programme for next Saturday's concert is as follows: Tschaikowsky, suite, op. 55, first time in Boston. Mascagni, prelude from the opera "Cavalleria Rusticana," first time at these concerts. Beethoven, minuetto and finale (fugue) from string quartet, op. 59, No. 3, in C; played by all the strings; first time. Songs with piano, Schubert, "Der Neugierige"; Schumann, "Mondnacht"; Jensen, "Murmelnde Luftchen." Massenet, overture, "Phedre." The soloist will be Mr. William J. Winch, tenor.

The Adamowski quartet will give three concerts in Union Hall on Monday evenings, Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. Among the selections performed will be a horn trio, by Brahms, a piano quartet, by Dvorak, and quartets, by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. Subscription list now open at Music Hall.

Tomorrow is Mr. Nikisch's birthday. Gentlemen of the Tavern Club, please take notice, and make up your orders around the number 36.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1891.

LILLIAN NORDICA will be the soloist at the first Boston Symphony concert, which takes place at Chickering Hall, Nov. 3.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1891.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, began its eleventh season of concerts at Music Hall last evening.

The soloist of the evening was Mme. Lillian Nordica, and the programme was made up as follows: Overture, "Dedication of the House," Beethoven; aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; "Good Friday Spell," Wagner; aria from "Tannhauser," and the Schumann symphony, No. 3.

Despite the interest attendant upon the opening of the series in regard to the orchestra and its leader, it must be admitted by those who were present that Mme. Nordica and her selections made a most important feature of the evening's attraction.

Accepting this as a fact, it would seem to be a wise course for the managers of these concerts to supply their patrons with a larger number of soloists than in former seasons.

Mme. Nordica is well known to Boston audiences.

She has in her former visits gained a position in the favor of the Boston public that is shared by few artists. Not a little pride has been taken in her triumphs abroad by Boston music lovers, and her standing among the world's artists was heartily recognized by the applause which greeted her upon her entrance.

Queenly in stature, graceful in pose, and elegant in all that goes to make an attractive stage presence, Mme. Nordica wins an audience even before she sings.

The pleasant impression she gives is, however, not alone restricted to her personal charms. Her singing is well calculated to please the most captious critic of vocal art.

In the Beethoven aria she displayed fine taste, and gave an interpretation of the aria which called out a grand ovation for the singer.

The Wagner aria was delivered with splendid effect, and the applause which followed it and recalled the artist to bow her acknowledgments was fully justified. Mme. Nordica has seldom made a more pronounced triumph in her artistic home, and her future successes will interest all who heard her last evening.

The orchestral work of the programme gave evidence of the faithful labors of Mr. Nikisch in the preparatory rehearsals.

Some changes have occurred in the membership of his organization, but the standard has been fully maintained, and the season's concerts will unquestionably again attest his great ability as a conductor.

The Beethoven overture has seldom been better played than on this occasion. It afforded a splendid opportunity to show the value of the orchestra, and the many beauties of the composition were faithfully depicted in the reading given by Mr. Nikisch.

The Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal" also had a most enjoyable interpretation. Mr. Nikisch is to be commended for the admirable finish with which this number was performed.

The beautiful Rhenish symphony was made a most enjoyable ending of the programme, its several movements being given with delightful clearness and intelligence. All in all the opening concert was in keeping with the record made by Mr. Nikisch in former seasons. His programme was well chosen, a competent soloist was supplied, and the audience was not detained beyond a reasonable limit.

—The first Symphony rehearsal of the eleventh season, Friday afternoon, drew out the largest representation of the society contingent yet gathered this season and the vast audience filled almost every seat. The sale of admission tickets was stopped the day previous, causing hundreds to be turned away on Friday. The centre of attraction, after Mr. Nikisch and his orchestra were given a royal welcome, was Mme. Nordica, who sang with such splendid spirit and in such glorious voice she was recalled three times amid great enthusiasm. She looked superbly handsome in a trained Worth gown of mauve brocade, the corsage and skirt bordered with silver fringe, and a line of silver outlining the open neck and edge of the long full sleeves. It was an exquisite dress and fitted Mme. Nordica's perfect figure faultlessly. Dr. O. W. Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Curtis, Mrs. Agassiz, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Higginson, Mr. Francis Bartlett and his daughter, Mrs. Herbert Sears, Mr. W. F. Weld—whom his friends were all glad to see out again—Mrs. Weld, Mr. C. F. Sprague and Miss Pratt, Mrs. G. B. Shattuck, Miss Elsie Perkins, Mrs. Charles Fairchild and daughters (who had seats in the balcony), Miss Thomas, Miss Lyman, Mr. Harry Wainwright, Mr. W. P. Blake, Dr. Sturgis Bigelow, Rev. Father Bodfish, Mr. John D. Williams, Col. Livermore and daughter, Mr. Edmund Dwight, Mrs. Sewell Fessenden, Miss Georgiana Putnam, Mr. Heinricks and Mr. and Mrs. Eliot Hubbard were among the many familiar season ticket-holders in the audience.

—Madame Nordica, who was accompanied at the "Cavalleria Rusticana" performance Tuesday night by her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Baldwin, looked distinguished and exceedingly handsome as she entered the hall, in a long French pearl-gray wrap, with cape heavily embroidered in white, and a small white and gold lace bonnet with pink roses. Her gown was of a similar tint as the wrap and trimmed with white lace. Madame Nordica is the guest of Mrs. Baldwin at her home in Dorchester.

ures.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, will give a series of eight concerts in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21. Among the soloists are: Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julia M. Wyman, Mr. Eugene D'Albert and other prominent artists. The dates for the Providence engagement are: Oct. 21, Nov. 18, Dec. 16, Jan. 27, Feb. 29 and April 6.

Next Saturday evening Mr. William Winch, tenor, will be the soloist, and the programme will include Tschaikowsky's suite op. 55 (new to Boston) the "Cavalleria Rusticana" prelude; the minuetta and finale from Beethoven's string quartet, op. 59, No. 3, in C, songs by Schubert, Schumann and Jansen and the "Phedre" overture.

—The Kneisel quartet, under the management of Mr. C. A. Ellis, will give six subscription concerts at Union Hall, beginning Monday evening, Oct. 19. Mrs. Nikisch will be, as last year, one of the leading soloists.

—Mr. and Mrs. Nikisch are at home Mondays at their house in High st., Brookline.

Star Course Concert.

Mme. Lillian Nordica is to sing in the Star Course concert tomorrow in three noteworthy selections, Gounod's "La Reine de Saba, Chopin's "Notturno," and a selection from "Mignon." She will be assisted by an excellent orchestra, who will play the overture to "Jubel," by Weber; the Notturno from the "Midsummer Night's

---

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 11, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY.

THE OPENING CONCERT OF THE SEASON LAST NIGHT.

The eleventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was begun last evening in Music Hall. As has usually been the case of late years, nearly every seat was occupied by subscribers, and the occasion of the first night, together with the appearance of one of America's most gifted vocalists, combined to draw an additional number of people, who filled all the available standing room.

Generally speaking, the orchestra presented its well-known familiar aspect. Nearly all the leading players were to be seen, including Mr. Loeffler, who looked the picture of health in spite of his serious illness of last spring. Some important changes, nevertheless, have been made. Mr. Schroeder, late violoncellist of the noted Brodsky string quartette of Leipsic, takes the place of Mr. Hekking, who has gone over to Mr. Damrosch, in New York. He bears a high reputation, and will doubtless soon be heard as a soloist. Mr. Novacek, also of Leipsig, now leads the violas, and Mr. Guetter is the new first bassoon player. The third horn player is also new to the organization which this year will possess an extra performer on that instrument, as well as a third trumpeter. There would seem to be no question as to the strength of the orchestra.

Mr. Nikisch was heartily greeted as he appeared on the platform. The opening number was that exceedingly useful composition as far as name is concerned, but somewhat musty one, regarded from a musical point of view, Beethoven's overture, "Dedication of the House," opus 124. It certainly seems unfortunate that the great composer ever bestowed on this work the title it bears, since it is far better calculated to depress an audience into a state of gloomy silence than to create feelings of contagious liveliness. As an interesting example of how Beethoven could write in the so-called Handelian style, it may well find an occasional place on a symphony programme. But take away its name, and one might quite safely venture the assertion that it would never be heard at the dedication of any hall or theatre (it was written for the latter purpose), or as the first number of the first programme of a series of symphony concerts. And what an injustice, too, to Beethoven, to dig up this uninspired work for so important an occasion, when one of the "Leonore" overtures would have thrilled the very souls of the people present, and, without doubt, led them to the verge at least of enthusiasm.

As it was, the applause inspired by that feeling was reserved for Mrs. Lillian Nordica, the soloist of the evening, who was first heard in Beethoven's concert aria, "Ah Perfido." Mrs Nordica possessed so many of the elements of popularity that it is small wonder she is the favorite that she is. Aside from her magnetic personality and the truly American spirit that she invariably displays in everything she attempts, her earnest and artistic endeavors command respect. She forces the careful listener to conclude that she has studied hard and patiently, that she is thoroughly interested in her work; and these qualities together with her musical, resonant voice, and her dramatic manner of delivery must of necessity, seldom fail to hold the attention, and to win the applause of her audiences.

In the aria just mentioned, it can hardly be said that she sounded any great depths of passion; but her singing was artistic, intelligent as to phrasing, and brilliant and effective as to execution. In this, as well as in her second number, the aria, "Oh Hall of Song," from "Tannhauser," she frequently gave evidence of the strong dramatic ability she is known to possess; and at the conclusion of both she was recalled several times.

The remaining numbers were the music from the third act of "Parsifal," called "Good Friday Spell," and Schumann's third symphony in E flat. The first is a concert piece made up of the music which accompanies "the anointing of Parsifal; his baptism by Kundry; and his reflections upon his position as King of the Grail," naturally, an arrangement interesting to hear. But why it should have been injected into the programme of this concert is one of the mysteries that are past finding out. The symphony is too well known to require extended comment. As a whole, the programme must be considered altogether too sombre in character for one of the principal events of Boston's musical season; and hard to be accounted for, unless perhaps on the ground that Mr. Nikisch wished to impress strongly upon the minds of the subscribers to these concerts the seriousness of their undertaking.

Of the playing by the orchestra, it must be said that, although it would be impossible for so splendid a body of men to fail to play splendidly, to a greater or less degree, it was not by any means a fair example of what they are capable of. One could but involuntarily recall to mind the beautiful technical finish of the band at the commencement of its first season under Mr. Nikisch, and contrast it with the frequently harsh and ragged playing of last evening. But perhaps this disappointing condition of things was due to the enforced separation of the men during the summer months.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the assistance of eminent soloists, will give a series of eight concerts in Sanders Theatre on Thursday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 3 and 31, 1891; Jan. 21, Feb. 25, March 24 and April 21, 1892. Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series, at $6, are on sale at the University Bookstore, Cambridge.

The Kneisel Quartet, (Frank Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; L. Svecenski, viola; Alwin Schroeder, violoncello;) will give six subscription concerts in Union Hall, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891; Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The assisting artists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fannie Bloomfield Zeilger, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni and Mr. Samuel Sanford. Season tickets, with reserved seats at $6 at Music Hall.

—Mr. Charles A. Ellis, manager of Music Hall, has taken apartments at the Ludlow, Copley Square, for the winter.

[24]

BOSTON, SUNDAY, OCT. 11, 1891

THE SYMPHONY LAST NIGHT.

At the first Symphony concert of the eleventh season at Music hall last evening, this was the programme:

Overture, "Dedication of the House," Beethoven; aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; symphony in E-flat, No. 3 (Rheinish), Schumann. Mme. Lillian Nordica was the singer.

There was a large attendance and much enthusiasm, particularly over Mme. Nordica's singing.

The programme will be criticised fully next week.

THE CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The first of the Cambridge concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra will take place at Sanders theatre, Thursday evening. There are to be eight of these concerts, to take place October 15, November 12, December 3 and 31, January 21, February 25, March 24, and April 21. Among the soloists announced to appear are Mme. Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, and Mr. Eugen D'Albert. The season tickets with reserved seats for the series are now on sale at the University Book store, Cambridge.

THE KNEISEL CONCERTS.

The Kneisel quartette as organized for the coming season consists of Frank Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violinist; L. Svedenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder, violoncello. They will give a series of six subscription concerts at Union hall, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15, and March 7, and the following artists have been engaged to assist them: Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni, and Mr. Samuel Sanford. The programmes will include, among other compositions, quintette, new, Brahms; grand quartette in B major, Beethoven; quartette, Paganini; quintette, Sinding; suite, F. Ries; quartette, A. Borodin; quartette, Bazzini; sonata, Teufels Triller, Tartini; quartette, A major, Schumann. This will be one of the finest series of concerts to be given in Boston during the present season.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1891.

It is next week, Wednesday, the 21st, that occurs the first of the series of six grand concerts to be given in Infantry Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This organization is conducted by Mr. Arthur Nikisch, and contains such soloists as Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mlle. Clementine De Vere, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mrs. Arthur Nickisch, Mr. Alvin Schroder, Mons. Ch. Mole and Herr Eugen D'Albert.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

(70 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

ELEVENTH SEASON. 1891-92.

"As fine a band of players as is ever grouped on any concert stage."—New York World.

"New Yorkers have learned to expect delights which their own organizations cannot provide."—New York Tribune.

"Last night's concert again demonstrated very plainly that in some respects the Boston Symphony Orchestra has attained a perfection beyond that of our best organizations."—New York Herald.

"It would be a needless consumption of space and the reader's time to multiply praiseful terms over the superb effectiveness of the Band."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"Peerless as ever in all the details which combine to make perfect the interpretation of orchestral music."—Washington Post.

"Not since the days of Parepa has Concordia Hall contained such an elegant and fashionable audience."—Baltimore American.

"No more perfect organization of players can be found anywhere."—Chicago Journal.

"Unrivalled, in this country, at least, for the breadth, delicacy, brilliancy and musical intelligence and finish of its interpretations of the best orchestral works.—Chicago Times.

SIX GRAND CONCERTS
IN INFANTRY HALL ON WEDNESDAY EVENINGS,

OCT. 21, NOV. 18, DEC. 16, JAN. 27,
MONDAY, FEB. 29, AND WEDNESDAY, APRIL 6.

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.
MLLE. CLEMENTINE DEVERE,
MME. FANNY BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER,
MRS. ARTHUR NIKISCH,
MR. ALWIN SCHROEDER,
MONS. CH. MOLE
—AND—
HERR EUGEN D'ALBERT

Will appear as solists. SEASON TICKETS with best reserved seats for the six concerts $5.

To add to the enjoyment of patrons analytical programmes in book form will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

The sale of season tickets opens to-morrow (Monday) morning at 9 o'clock at 93 Westminster Street, [Store formerly occupied by B. H. Gladding & Co.]

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

10 J&B1t

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 11.

The Symphony Concert.

The first concert of the eleventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Music Hall, last night, was listened to by a large audience. Mr. Nikisch was cordially welcomed when he came forward to take his place at the conductor's stand. The orchestral part of the programme consisted of Beethoven's "Dedication of the House" overture, the "Good Friday Spell" from Wagner's "Parsifal," and Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony. The work of the orchestra was not up to its best standard, and was ragged and undecided here and there; the result doubtless, of its six months freedom from discipline, and shortcomings that will, of course, disappear presently. The Wagner selection was given with much warmth of tone color, and impressiveness in vigorous contrast of effects. The Beethoven overture was read somewhat affectedly, but without rendering its monotonous tonality any more interesting. The soloist was Mme. Lillian Nordica, who sang Beethoven's "Ah, Perfido" the "O Hall of Song" from Wagner's "Tannhauser" The artist was overweighted by the Beethoven aria, which needs a larger, broader, and warmer style than she possesses. It is a work wholly unfavorable to a voice cold and metallic in quality, and she sang it in a manner both unsympathetic and unimpressive. In the Wagner song she was scarcely more successful. There was a recall after the first selection, and two recalls after the second. The programme was not especially brilliant, in fact was somewhat dull, and there was less of enthusiasm on the part of the audience than has been customary at the opening concerts of the orchestra. The selections for the next concert are: Suite, op. 55, Tschaikowsky, (first time); Prelude from "Rustic Chivalry," Mascagni (first time); Minuet and Finale, from string quartet, op. 59, No. 3, played by all the strings (first time), and Massenet's overture to "Phedre." The soloist is to be Mr. W. J. Wison, who will sing the solo in the Mascagni prelude, and a group of songs with piano.

The first of this seasons concerts in Sanders Theatre, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place on Thursday evening. The soloists at these concerts are to be Madam Nordica, Mrs. Wyman, Mr. Eliot Hubbard Mr. Eugen d'Albert, and others yet to be announced.

The Kneisel Quartet will give six subscription concerts in Union Hall, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The quartet will be assisted by Mrs. Joachim, Mrs. Nikish Mrs. Zeisler and Messrs. Busoni, Sanford and Scharawenka. The programmes will include the following compositions: Quintet (new), Brahms; grand quartet in B major, Beethoven; quartet, Paganini; quintet, Sinding; suite, F. Ries; quartet, A. Borodin; quartet, Bazzini; sonata, (Teufels Triller) Tartini; quartet, A major, Schumann. Tickets for the season may now be obtained by subscribers at the box office of Music Hall.

— After the rehearsal: "How did you like Nordica, Mollie?" "Very much; didn't you? Her dress bothered me at first. It was ever so long before I made out that her gloves were drawn up over her sleeves, and that ruching put on afterward. But I liked it, though, and am going to try it with that red silk waist of mine. Good concert all the way through, didn't you think? I saw ever so many of the girls."

The Adamowski Quartet will give three concerts in Union Hall, on Monday evenings, Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. Among the selections performed will be a horn trio, by Brahms, a piano quartet, by Dvorak, and quartets by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. The subscription list is now open at Music Hall. Reserved seats will be on sale Saturday, Oct. 17.

[25]

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 12, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The programme of the first Symphony concert of this season, given Saturday evening, was as follows:

Overture, "Dedication of the House" ...... Beethoven
Aria, "Ah Perfido" ...... Beethoven
Good Friday Spell, from "Parsifal" ...... Wagner
Aria, "O Hall of Song," from "Tannhauser" ... Wagner
Symphony No. 3, in E flat ...... Schumann

This programme was made up of familiar numbers which do not call for extended comment, nor would it be just to criticise in detail the performance. It may be said in general, that there was often a lack of precision, and in the overture and symphony the work of the wind instruments, both wood and brass, was at times unworthy of the reputation of the orchestra. Of the three selections, the Wagner excerpt was by far the most satisfactory. The symphony was played roughly from the beginning to the end. To be sure, it was the first concert, and therefore absolute precision might not, perhaps, have been expected, but the ommissions and commissions exceeded the excuse. Perhaps also the changes in the personnel of the orchestra were unavoidable, but such changes are to be deplored. For no matter how experienced individually a new man may be, it will necessarily be some time before the orchestra as a whole will show improvement or even maintain the standing of the past. In orchestra as in chorus the touching of familiar elbows inspires confidence, and this confidence, the result of familiarity, is a plant of slow growth. Assurance that the men who sit in the chairs are able to do their duty is more to be desired than curiosity concerning the abilities of the unknown.

When Mrs. Nordica sang a year ago last spring in "Trovatore" in Mechanics' Building, her singing was worthy of high praise. When she sang bravura arias last month at the Worcester festival, what she could do was swallowed up in the endeavor to accomplish that which is forbidden her by nature. Saturday evening she was at her best in the Wagner aria, which she delivered with breadth and dignity. The Beethoven aria was outside of her limited temperament. There are many admirable qualities in her singing. Her tones are firm; her intonation is, as a rule beyond reproach; she seldom screams: and her delivery is a delight. For she sings spontaneously, as though she could not check her song. It is singing, and not a singular phenomenon of jugulation, in which the neck is swollen and the face is red. On the other hand, the voice is hard and unsympathetic; and when she feigns emotion, the deception is apparent. Her coldness is not the coldness of indifference; it is rather the absence of temperament. When she essays bravura the result is disappointing, for her voice lends itself ungraciously to brilliant passages. Yet in measures of majestic declamation there is a brilliancy, but it is the briliancy of ice. A superb woman, who in purely heroic roles can command respect and admiration; a woman who is limited in her art not by lack of advantages or opportunities, but by the confines of her own nature. As though she blew sonorous tones through an impassive, unresponsive instrument.

Mrs. Nordica was recalled after the first aria and very heartily applauded after the air of Elizabeth, when she was twice recalled. Mr. Nikisch was also warmly welcomed when he appeared upon the stage.

The programme of the concert to be given Saturday evening, Oct. 18, is as follows: Tschaikowsky's Suite, op. 55; Mascagni's Prelude and Sicilienne from "Cavalleria Rusticana;" Beethoven's Minuetto and Finale, from String Quartette, op. 59, No. 3 in C (played by all the strings), and Massenet's Overture "Phedre." Mr. William J. Winch will sing the Sicilienne in the Mascagni Prelude and songs by Schubert, Schumann and Jensen.

PHILIP HALE.

The Telegram.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE WEEK BY
THE PROVIDENCE TELEGRAM PUBLISH

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1891.

We All Attend Them.

The detailed announcement of the series of concerts to be given in Providence by the Boston Symphony orchestra has been inserted in the columns of the TELEGRAM, and to it all lovers of superior instrumental music should turn for information. Six concerts are to constitute the course, and beside the selections to be rendered by the orchestra, the following soloists will be heard: Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mlle. Clementine De Vere, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mr. Alvin Schroeder, Mons. Ch. Mole and Herr Eugene D'Albert. All who purchase season tickets will receive by mail a descriptive pamphlet, fully explaining all the orchestral works. A sale has been opened at No. 93 Westminister street, in the store recently vacated by B. H. Gladding & Co.

JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.

Date 10/10

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Music lovers will be glad to be reminded of the sale of season tickets for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be held next Monday. For the convenience of patrons, a ticket office will be opened at 93 Westminster street, the store formerly occupied by Messrs. B. H. Gladding & Co. To ensure a fair distribution, not more than 10 tickets will be sold to one person. The sale will open at 9 o'clock.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 11.

— The first representative audience of the season gathered on Tuesday at Music Hall to hear "Cavelleria Rusticana." Mrs. William F. Apthorp, in the front balcony, attracted much attention, and her friends found her looking scarcely more matronly than when she went abroad. Mad. Nordica, in a lovely light silk gown and a pansy bonnet, was the most brilliant-looking woman in the hall, and she held quite a little court before the opera began. Mr. and Mrs. Fred R. Sears, Jr., were with a party of friends. Near them were Mr. and Mrs. Rotoli and Mr. and Mrs. Max Bachert. Mr. Arthur Foote and Mr. Arthur Pickering were together. Mr. Edward Gray, Mr. Frank Jackson, Mr. George Coale, Mr. Johnston Morton, and Mr. W. L. Crosby were scattered through the house. Mrs. R. M. Field brought Miss Mills with her. Mrs. John Stetson, in a stunnng gray silk, elaborately embroidered, and a big hat, was one of the most striking women present.

The Telegram.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE WEEK BY THE PROVIDENCE TELEGRAM PUBLISHING COMPANY.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1891.

Another matter that has attracted some attention and caused some comment is the course of concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra this season. It has been charged that this magnificent organization has not treated Providence quite fairly in the past because it has not given as good programs here as it has favored Boston and other cities with. It will not do for Mr. Nikisch to fall into the error that he is not catering to as cultivated musical taste here as anywhere he goes. Providence people know that he spends the summer in Europe getting acquainted with the newest music, and they allege that last year he gave this newest music to other cities and obliged Providence to content itself with productions which while they were acknowledged classics were nevertheless not among the choice pieces the orchestra served to other cities. It is also noted that the symphony soloists have not been, as a rule, up to the high standard of the orchestra.

Probably Mr. Nikisch and Manager Ellis need but a hint in advance of their season here to induce them to arrange programs that will make criticism impossible. And probably the logic of ticket-sales will be all our local managers need to convince them of the unwisdom of crowding the local concert platform with mediocre talent.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, OCT. 11, 1891

THE SYMPHONY LAST NIGHT.

At the first Symphony concert of the eleventh season at Music hall last evening, this was the programme:

Overture, "Dedication of the House," Beethoven; aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhäuser," Wagner; symphony in E-flat, No. 3 (Rheinish), Schumann. Mme. Lillian Nordica was the singer.

There was a large attendance and much enthusiasm, particularly over Mme. Nordica's singing.

The programme will be criticised fully next week.

THE CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The first of the Cambridge concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra will take place at Sanders theatre, Thursday evening. There are to be eight of these concerts, to take place October 15, November 12, December 3 and 31, January 21, February 25, March 24, and April 21. Among the soloists announced to appear are Mme. Nordica, Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, and Mr. Eugen D'Albert. The season tickets with reserved seats for the series are now on sale at the University Book store, Cambridge.

THE KNEISEL CONCERTS.

The Kneisel quartette as organized for the coming season consists of Frank Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violinist; L. Svecenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder, violoncello. They will give a series of six subscription concerts at Union hall, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Jan. 25, Feb. 15, and March 7, and the following artists have been engaged to assist them: Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, Mr. F. Busoni, and Mr. Samuel Sanford. The programmes will include, among other compositions, quintette, new, Brahms; grand quartette in B major, Beethoven; quartette, Paganini; quintette, Sinding; suite, F. Ries; quartette, A. Borodin; quartette, Bazzini; sonata, Teufels Triller, Tartini; quartette, A major, Schumann. This will be one of the finest series of concerts to be given in Boston during the present season.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

(70 PERFORNERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

ELEVENTH SEASON. 1891-92.

"As fine a band of players as is ever grouped on any concert stage."—New York World.

"New Yorkers have learned to expect delights which their own organizations cannot provide."—New York Tribune.

"Last night's concert again demonstrated very plainly that in some respects the Boston Symphony Orchestra has attained a perfection beyond that of our best organizations."—New York Herald.

"It would be a needless consumption of space and the reader's time to multiply praiseful terms over the superb effectiveness of the Band." Philadelphia Ledger.

"Peerless as ever in all the details which combine to make perfect the interpretation of orchestral music."—Washington Post.

"Not since the days of Parepa has Concordia Hall contained such an elegant and fashionable audience."—Baltimore American.

"No more perfect organization of players can be found anywhere."—Chicago Journal.

"Unrivalled, in this country, at least, for the breadth, delicacy, brilliancy and musical intelligence and finish of its interpretations of the best orchestral works.—Chicago Times.

SIX GRAND CONCERTS

IN INFANTRY HALL ON WEDNESDAY EVENINGS,

OCT. 21, NOV. 18, DEC. 16, JAN. 27,
MONDAY, FEB. 29, AND WEDNESDAY, APRIL 6.

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.
MLLE. CLEMENTINE DEVERE,
MME. FANNY BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER,
MRS. ARTHUR NIKISCH,
MR. ALWIN SCHROEDER,
MONS. CH. MOLE

—AND—

HERR EUGEN D'ALBERT

Will appear as solists. SEASON TICKETS with best reserved seats for the six concerts $5.

To add to the enjoyment of patrons analytical programmes in book form will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

The sale of season tickets opens to-morrow (Monday) morniug at 9 o'clock at 93 Westminster Street, [Store formerly occupied by B. H. Gladding & Co.]

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

10 J&B1t

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1891.

It is next week, Wednesday, the 21st, that occurs the first of the series of six grand concerts to be given in Infantry Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This organization is conducted by Mr. Arthur Nikisch, and contains such soloists as Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mlle. Clementine De Vere, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mrs. Arthur Nickisch, Mr. Alvin Schroder, Mons. Ch. Mole and Herr Eugen D'Albert.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 11.

The Symphony Concert.

The first concert of the eleventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Music Hall, last night, was listened to by a large audience. Mr. Nikisch was cordially welcomed when he came forward to take his place at the conductor's stand. The orchestral part of the programme consisted of Beethoven's "Dedication of the House" overture, the "Good Friday Spell" from Wagner's "Parsifal," and Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony. The work of the orchestra was not up to its best standard, and was ragged and undecided here and there; the result doubtless, of its six months freedom from discipline, and shortcomings that will, of course, disappear presently. The Wagner selection was given with much warmth of tone color, and impressiveness in vigorous contrast of effects. The Beethoven overture was read somewhat affectedly, but without rendering its monotonous tonality any more interesting. The soloist was Mme. Lillian Nordica, who sang Beethoven's "Ah, Perfido" the "O Hall of Song" from Wagner's "Tannhäuser" The artist was overweighted by the Beethoven aria, which needs a larger, broader, and warmer style than she possesses. It is a work wholly unfavorable to a voice cold and metallic in quality, and she sang it in a manner both unsympathetic and unimpressive. In the Wagner song she was scarcely more successful. There was a recall after the first selection, and two recalls after the second. The programme was not especially brilliant, in fact was somewhat dull, and there was less of enthusiasm on the part of the audience than has been customary at the opening concerts of the orchestra. The selections for the next concert are: Suite, op. 55, Tschaikowsky, (first time); Prelude from "Rustic Chivalry," Mascagni (first time); Minuet and Finale, from string quartet, op. 59, No. 3, played by all the strings (first time), and Massenet's overture to "Phedre." The soloist is to be Mr. W. J. Winch, who will sing the solo in the Mascagni prelude, and a group of songs with piano.

The first of this seasons concerts in Sanders Theatre, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place on Thursday evening. The soloists at these concerts are to be Madam Nordica, Mrs. Wyman, Mr. Eliot Hubbard Mr. Eugen d'Albert, and others yet to be announced.

The Kneisel Quartet will give six subscription concerts in Union Hall, Monday evenings, Oct. 19, Nov. 23, Dec. 28, 1891, Jan. 25, Feb. 15 and March 7, 1892. The quartet will be assisted by Mrs. Joachim, Mrs. Nikish Mrs. Zeisler and Messrs. Busoni, Sanford and Scharawenka. The programmes will include the following compositions: Quintet (new), Brahms; grand quartet in B major, Beethoven; quartet, Paganini; quintet, Sinding; suite, F. Ries; quartet, A. Borodin; quartet, Bazzini; sonata, (Teufels Triller) Tartini; quartet, A major, Schumann. Tickets for the season may now be obtained by subscribers at the box office of Music Hall.

— After the rehearsal: "How did you like Nordica, Mollie?" "Very much; didn't you? Her dress bothered me at first. It was ever so long before I made out that her gloves were drawn up over her sleeves, and that ruching put on afterward. But I liked it, though, and am going to try it with that red silk waist of mine. Good concert all the way through, didn't you think? I saw ever so many of the girls."

The Adamowski Quartet will give three concerts in Union Hall, on Monday evenings, Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. Among the selections performed will be a horn trio, by Brahms, a piano quartet, by Dvorak, and quartets by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. The subscription list is now open at Music Hall. Reserved seats will be on sale Saturday, Oct. 17.

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 12, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The programme of the first Symphony concert of this season, given Saturday evening, was as follows:

Overture, "Dedication of the House"	Beethoven
Aria, "Ah Perfido"	Beethoven
Good Friday Spell, from "Parsifal"	Wagner
Aria, "O Hall of Song," [illegible] "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Symphony No. 3, in E flat	Schumann

This programme was made up of familiar numbers which do not call for extended comment, nor would it be just to criticise in detail the performance. It may be said in general, that there was often a lack of precision, and in the overture and symphony the work of the wind instruments, both wood and brass, was at times unworthy of the reputation of the orchestra. Of the three selections, the Wagner excerpt was by far the most satisfactory. The symphony was played roughly from the beginning to the end. To be sure, it was the first concert, and therefore absolute precision might not, perhaps, have been expected, but the ommissions and commissions exceeded the excuse. Perhaps also the changes in the personnel of the orchestra were unavoidable, but such changes are to be deplored. For no matter how experienced individually a new man may be, it will necessarily be some time before the orchestra as a whole will show improvement or even maintain the standing of the past. In orchestra as in chorus the touching of familiar elbows inspires confidence, and this confidence, the result of familiarity, is a plant of slow growth. Assurance that the men who sit in the chairs are able to do their duty is more to be desired than curiosity concerning the abilities of the unknown.

When Mrs. Nordica sang a year ago last spring in "Trovatore" in Mechanics' Building, her singing was worthy of high praise. When she sang bravura arias last month at the Worcester festival, what she could do was swallowed up in the endeavor to accomplish that which is forbidden her by nature. Saturday evening she was at her best in the Wagner aria, which she delivered with breadth and dignity. The Beethoven aria was outside of her limited temperament. There are many admirable qualities in her singing. Her tones are firm, her intonation is, as a rule beyond reproach; she seldom screams; and her delivery is a delight. For she sings spontaneously, as though she could not check her song. It is singing, and not a singular phenomenon of jugulation, in which the neck is swollen and the face is red. On the other hand, the voice is hard and unsympathetic; and when she feigns emotion, the deception is apparent. Her coldness is not the coldness of indifference; it is rather the absence of temperament. When she essays bravura the result is disappointing, for her voice lends itself ungraciously to brilliant passages. Yet in measures of majestic declamation there is a brilliancy, but it is the briliancy of ice. A superb woman, who in purely heroic roles can command respect and admiration; a woman who is limited in her art not by lack of advantages or opportunities, but by the confines of her own nature. As though she blew sonorous tones through an impassive, unresponsive instrument.

Mrs. Nordica was recalled after the first aria and very heartily applauded after the air of Elizabeth, when she was twice recalled. Mr. Nikisch was also warmly welcomed when he appeared upon the stage.

The programme of the concert to be given Saturday evening, Oct. 18, is as follows: Tschaikowsky's Suite, op. 55; Mascagni's Prelude and Sicilienne from "Cavalleria Rusticana;" Beethoven's Minuetto and Finale, from String Quartette, op 59, No. 3 in C (played by all the strings), and Massenet's Overture "Phedre." Mr. William J. Winch will sing the Sicilienne in the Mascagni Prelude and songs by Schubert, Schumann and Jensen.

PHILIP HALE.

The Telegram.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE WEEK BY
THE PROVIDENCE TELEGRAM PUBLISH

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1891.

We All Attend Them.

The detailed announcement of the series of concerts to be given in Providence by the Boston Symphony orchestra has been inserted in the columns of the TELEGRAM, and to it all lovers of superior instrumental music should turn for information. Six concerts are to constitute the course, and beside the selections to be rendered by the orchestra, the following soloists will be heard: Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mlle. Clementine De Vere, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mr. Alvin Schroeder, Mons. Ch. Mole and Herr Eugene D'Albert. All who purchase season tickets will receive by mail a descriptive pamphlet, fully explaining all the orchestral works. A sale has been opened at No. 93 Westminister street, in the store recently vacated by B. H. Gladding & Co.

JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.

Date

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Music lovers will be glad to be reminded of the sale of season tickets for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be held next Monday. For the convenience of patrons, a ticket office will be opened at 93 Westminster street, the store formerly occupied by Messrs. B. H. Gladding & Co. To ensure a fair distribution, not more than 10 tickets will be sold to one person. The sale will open at 9 o'clock.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 11.

— The first representative audience of the season gathered on Tuesday at Music Hall to hear "Cavelleria Rusticana." Mrs. William F. Apthorp, in the front balcony, attracted much attention, and her friends found her looking scarcely more matronly than when she went abroad. Mad. Nordica, in a lovely light silk gown and a pansy bonnet, was the most brilliant-looking woman in the hall, and she held quite a little court before the opera began. Mr. and Mrs. Fred R. Sears, Jr., were with a party of friends. Near them were Mr. and Mrs. Rotoli and Mr. and Mrs. Max Bachert. Mr. Arthur Foote and Mr. Arthur Pickering were together. Mr. Edward Gray, Mr. Frank Jackson, Mr. George Coale, Mr. Johnston Morton, and Mr. W. L. Crosby were scattered through the house. Mrs. R. M. Field brought Miss Mills with her. Mrs. John Stetson, in a stunning gray silk, elaborately embroidered, and a big hat, was one of the most striking women present.

The Telegram.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE WEEK BY THE PROVIDENCE TELEGRAM PUBLISHING COMPANY.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1891.

Another matter that has attracted some attention and caused some comment is the course of concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra this season. It has been charged that this magnificent organization has not treated Providence quite fairly in the past because it has not given as good programs here as it has favored Boston and other cities with. It will not do for Mr. Nikisch to fall into the error that he is not catering to as cultivated musical taste here as anywhere he goes. Providence people know that he spends the summer in Europe getting acquainted with the newest music, and they allege that last year he gave this newest music to other cities and obliged Providence to content itself with productions which while they were acknowledged classics were nevertheless not among the choice pieces the orchestra served to other cities. It is also noted that the symphony soloists have not been, as a rule, up to the high standard of the orchestra.

Probably Mr. Nikisch and Manager Ellis need but a hint in advance of their season here to induce them to arrange programs that will make criticism impossible. And probably the logic of ticket-sales will be all our local managers need to convince them of the unwisdom of crowding the local concert platform with mediocre talent.

[25]

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 12, 1891.

SYMPHONIES BEGIN.

A NOBLE PROGRAMME FOR THE FIRST.

Beethoven's "Dedication of the House" the First Number Performed—Mme. Nordica, the Soloist, in Good Voice—"Good Friday's Spell" One of the Most Beautiful Numbers

A crowd of musical and fashionable life, a long line of standing auditors fringing the edges of the hall, and a cordial welcome to Mr. Nikisch, were foregone conclusions at the first symphony concert of the season, on Saturday night. During Mr. Henschel's regime it was customary to begin each season with Beethoven's "Dedication of the House" overture, and now Mr. Nikisch has piously returned to this custom as a musical means of saying grace. I suppose that every musical auditor said "amen" to it for, with all the defects inseparable from the first concert, the programme of noble music was as refreshing as rain upon a thirsty land. The Beethoven overture received a broad reading, just a trifle exaggerated in its slow passages, but the contrapuntal finale went right merrily, and with a virility that would have excused much greater shortcomings than there were to condone. Mr. Nikisch must, however, carefully guard the line which lies between breadth and bombast, for with Beethoven and Wagner it is only too easy to pass the frontier without knowing it. A word of praise must be given to the bassoonist for the execution of the florid work in this overture.

One can learn in Italy how to sing the music of Germany. Mme. Albani once told me that she attributed her successes in Wagnerian roles to her Milanese studies, and at this concert Mme. Nordica proved that her studies in the Italian school had not unfitted her for the massive German style. In the dramatic aria, "Ah Perfido," her intonation was always pure and the ensemble throughout undisturbed, while the richness of her tones in lower register was such as few sopranos possess. Yet the higher and intensely vehement passages left something to be desired, and they did not sit quite easily upon the singer; it seemed rather a task well accomplished than a spontaneous outpouring of emotion. In the "Greeting to the Hall," from "Tannhauser," there was more success, the voice being pure at all times and the climax of great power. This number evoked considerable enthusiasm, the singer being twice recalled.

"Good Friday's Spell," from "Parsifal," was as beautiful as any number on the programme. This scarcely loses by disassociation from its stage accessories; in fact, to some there is a distinct gain in obliterating the view of Kundry as Mary Magdalen wiping the feet of Parsifal (who is palpably intended to represent the Saviour) with her hair, and the baptism of Kundry by Parsifal (not "Parsifal's baptism by Kundry," as the programme book had it), since these scenes are scarcely fitted for representation at the hands of any actors, unless, possibly, those at Ober-Ammergau. In the performance the brasses were at least once a little too blatant. It is a popular idea that Wagner cannot be played too loudly, but as an actual fact one will find a full volume of tone a hundred times, in a Bayreuth performance, where one finds mere loudness a single time. It is about time that the vulgar idea of Wagner as a tonal ogre, an idea fostered by the lower order of witlings most assiduously, should be corrected. The culprit's name is Berlioz, not Wagner. When Berlioz received a government contract in the musical line, (it was for a "Te Deum,") he called for a whole regiment of noise-producers, scarcely stopping short of a Gilmorean park of artillery; when Wagner had all Germany, from a king to thousands of musicians, at his feet, when he might have had an orchestra of 1000 at a word, he chose only 116 men as a maximum, and often dropped much below this number.

But the blatancy of the brasses alluded to, was only temporary, and the good shading of the latter part of the number calls for recognition. Mr. Nikisch was especially successful in his accentuation of the figures with which this portion of the opera teems, so that the leitmotiven could be followed by all who knew of their existence. With Schumann's Cologne symphony the concert closed. Just as the B-flat symphony gave expression to the first great joy in Schumann's career, so this E-flat symphony tells of the last; they are the sunrise and sunset of his life, for while the former speaks of spring and love, of the happy consummation of his courtship of Clara Wieck, so this symphony tells of the happy change from Leipsic to the Rhine country, and the brightness of his hopes there. It would be presumption to trace such close connection between the works and the lives of other composers, but with Schumann it may be done without sentimentalizing, for he confessedly wrote his own career with much detail into his music.

But if one finds joy in the work, one will never find jollity, for Schumann never gave vent to animal spirits as did Beethoven, whose whole eighth symphony is a brusque scherzo. Even in the scherzo of this Rhenish symphony, there is a little of Eusebius (as Schumann called the dreamy side of the nature) present, and, the last movement, where the glorious outdoor life of the Rhine valley is depicted, is full of bustle rather than of hilarity; it is the subjective Schumann bending even an objective tone-picture to his own character. The work was well read and reasonably well played; somehow Mr. Nikisch seems to enter with keener appreciation into the dual character of Schumann's works than any of our other conductors have done. No wonder then that the interest was sustained to the end, and that very few left before the last movement, although there is a contingent which would leave before the last movement, even if the programme consisted only of a Corelli two-movement sonata.

Next week we are to have "Hamlet," with the part of Hamlet omitted! The symphonic programme is to consist of a string quartette magnified into orchestral proportions, a little of the new Mascagni opera, a few songs with piano accompaniment and a French overture. But a Tschaikowsky suite may be sufficient sop to the classicists to allow the symphonic title still to cover it.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1891.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first symphony concert of the season was given in the Music Hall last Saturday evening the programme being:

Beethoven: Overture, "Zur Weihe des Hauses," Op. 124.
Beethoven: Scena and Aria, "Ah! perfido," Op. 65.
Wagner: Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal."
Wagner: "Sei mir gegrüsst, du liebe Halle," from "Tannhäuser."
Schumann: Symphony No. 3, in E-flat (Rhenish), Op. 97.

Mme. Lillian Nordica was the singer.

Since 1822 Beethoven's "Weihe des Hauses" overture has served to open a good many things besides the Josephstädt'sches Theater, for which it was written; it has ushered in not a few musical seasons, as it did on Saturday evening. Now and then some people complain a little of this time-honored custom—for to begin a course of concerts with the "Weihe des Hauses" may almost be called a custom—but it is hard to see any reasonable ground for complaint. It is a noble overture, one that does not pall upon the musical palate by repeated hearing every twelvemonth or so. The stately opening, Maestoso e sostenuto, has all the solemn pomp of an "inaugural address" (and a good deal more stuff in it than most addresses of the sort), while the contrapuntal style of the Allegro con brio, with its quasi Handelian theme, makes the movement a sort of musical expression of that "Res severa est verum gaudium" which stands written on the walls of the Gewandhaus concert room in Leipzig—a most excellent motto for symphony concert-goers to bear in mind. But it seems as if some people kicked against a custom simply because of its being a custom. Few listeners last Saturday evening, however, can have got anything but pleasure from the really superb performance of this overture. Our orchestra has seldom done a finer piece of playing.

After hearing Wagner's "Good Friday Spell" in its proper place in "Parsifal"—whether at the Bayreuth theatre or in concert rooms elsewhere matters little—one likes less and less to hear it given separately, as a "number" on a symphony programme. We can hardly recall anything else in music the true character of which is so totally changed by being given out of its natural surroundings. Berlioz used to say that, whenever he gave the whole of his own "Harold" symphony, the Pilgrims' March was pretty sure of an encore; but that when he gave the March alone, it hardly ever got a hand. The "Good Friday Spell" is even a stronger example of the same principle; for some reason not easily to be explained, it loses all its calm, pastoral character when given separately. The performance, too, on Saturday evening, although good in the main, still left something to be desired in point of delicacy and repose, especially in the wind instruments.

The noble Schumann Symphony, on the other hand, went grandly. The "Cathedral" movement was even more than commonly impressive. We own to liking the first movement to go a little slower than Mr. Nikisch takes it; in taking 3-4 time too fast one runs the risk of effacing its true triple character; the listener no longer finds himself impelled to count, "one, two, three," but his ear instinctively tends to accept the dotted half-note as the rhythmic unit, instead of the quarter-note. No one inclines to count "one, two, three" in his head in listening to a Strauss waltz or a Beethoven scherzo; but he distinctly does so incline while hearing a Haydn minuet. Of course, in the case of this Vivace movement of Schumann's, it may be an open question which rhythmic unit is really the true one; whether the listener should be impelled to count one beat to a measure, or three. It should be remembered, however, that Schumann's indication "Vivace" does not, of itself, furnish any solution of the question; for, by taking the tempo just slow enough to admit of the ear's accepting the quarter-note as the unit, you would give the impression of a quicker beat, and hence of greater vivacity of movement, than if you played it so that the ear instinctively counted only one to every dotted half-note. Be the true solution what it may in this particular case, Mr. Nikisch's tempo is by no means indefensible; he certainly knows how to make it effective.

Mme. Nordica sang the "Ah! perfido" in superb voice, and with no little artistic savoir faire. In sentiment her singing seemed rather superficial, as lacking the true Beethoven earnestness and warmth of passion—we liked her best in the more brilliant parts of the quick movement—but the skilled singer was manifest in almost all she did. In the "Tannhäuser" selection she seemed more in symathy with the music, and sang very effectively. But it is hard to see how anyone can choose this short and little-developed apostrophe of Elisabeth's for concert performance. In the opera it is a brilliant and inspiring opening to a long scene; but, taken by itself, it is rather insignificant. The audience did not seem to think so, however, for Mme. Nordica was twice recalled after it.

Mr. Nikisch was greeted with enthusiastic applause as he stepped up to the conductor's desk at the beginning of the concert.

The next programme is: Tschaikowski, suite, Op. 55; Mascagni, prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana;" Beethoven, minuet and finale from string quartet in C, Op. 59, No. 3; Songs with pianoforte; Massenet, overture to "Phèdre." Mr. William J. Winch will be the singer.

The Adamowski Quartet will give three concerts in Union Hall on Monday evenings, Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. The programme includes a horn trio by Brahms, a piano quartet by Dvorak, and quartets by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. Subscription list at Music Hall. Season tickets will be on sale next Saturday.

The first concert in the Sanders Theatre course by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given next Thursday night.

Boston Journal.

TEN PAGES.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1891.

FIRST SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Conductor Arthur Nikisch made a most appropriate selection for the inauguration of the Symphony season of 1891-92, making the eleventh in the series in Beethoven's overture, "Dedication of the House." The very opening strain showed the command of this skillful conductor over his intelligent corps of musicians, and their prompt and delicate response to his every movement affirmed their artistic feeling and fine appreciation of the requirements of the overture, to the great delight of the large audience who will listen with increasing interest during the coming season.

One might be pardoned the thought of the wish for a "House" to dedicate—not such an one, perhaps, as this overture was composed of, the Josephstadt at Vienna—but we do hope that some day Boston may be able to speak with pride of her Academy of Music. The applause of welcome with which Mr. Nikisch was greeted was also extended to the familiar faces in the orchestra and the new ones, who gave promise by their careful work of fitting into their places and maintaining the perfect whole that this orchestra has so well established.

The special features of the programme were Wagner's Good Friday Spell, from Parsifal, and Schumann's symphony in E flat (Rhenish); the former expressing beauty in imaginative musical description, a "tone-picture," as it is sometimes called, of Good Friday morn, and the return of Parsifal after many years' absence.

This selection was rendered with fine effect and finish, showing the complete control of the master over his performers and the uniform expression of intelligent conception of the composer's varied ideas on the part of the players.

Perhaps the Schumann symphony, the last on the programme, created the most enthusiasm of the orchestral numbers, as the applause that followed was both hearty and long. The beauties of the different movements were brought out with clearness of expression, breadth of interpretation, delicacy of skill and careful, thoughtful attention to detail and excellence.

Mr. Nikisch may be heartily congratulated on the results of this season's initial programme, the uniform excellence of his strong organization and the expressed approval of his cultivated audience.

The appearance of Mme. Lillian Nordica, fresh with pronounced success at the Worcester festival, brought out a hearty ovation and most cordial welcome from the audience who were waiting with anticipation to hear her again. Her graceful and dignified presence demanded attention. She rendered two selections, the first the Beethoven aria "Ah Perfido," which gave fine opportunities of showing her breadth of style, clearness of recitative, perfection of intonation and purity of tone; the second, the aria from Tannhauser, was even better and elicited most generous applause. She was repeatedly recalled to bow her acknowledgments, and retired with another triumph added to her list.

The programme for this week includes Suite, op. 55, by Tschaikowsky (first time in Boston,) Prelude from the opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana," by Mascagni. Beethoven's minuetto and finale from string quartette, Massenet's overture "Phedre," and songs with piano from Schubert, Schumann and Jensen, with Mr. Wm. J. Winch soloist.

CHARLESTOWN ENTERPRISE

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1891.

The Kneisel Quartet is to give six subscription concerts on Monday evenings at Union Hall, Boylston street. The soloists will be Mme. Joachim, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, and Messrs. Xaver Scharwenka, F. Busoni and S. Sanford. The first concert will be given Monday evening, October 19, and season tickets will be sold to subscribers only at the box office of Music Hall. The subscription list is now open.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 13, 1891.

Nordica in the Star Course Opening.

The Boston Star Course of entertainments was inaugurated last evening at Tremont Temple. All the available space was filled with an audience which had evidently come for the express purpose of hearing Mme. Nordica on her reappearance before her Boston admirers. Mme. Nordica sang three time with incores after each number. In the aria, "La Reine de Saba," she displayed her voice to advantage, and as Gounod evidently wrote the aria for that purpose alone she can be said to have met its requirements. In the notturno by Chopin, where something else than display is required, she was somewhat less sure. Chopin asks for delicacy of rendering and certain refinements which are hard to acquire at the best, and it may be no great discredit to Nordica to say that this number was sung with less effect than the first or the last—a polacca "Mignon" by Thomas.

Mme. Nordica was received warmly by the audience, even rapturously it may, without exaggeration, be said. In response to these expressions she sang some ballads and a French chanson very prettily. The "Grand" orchestra under the direction of Herr Ed. Gruenberg played unevenly but the audience was not particular as was demonstrated when it received the "Loin du Bal" with extraordinary expressions of approval—a bit which is not intended to be at all extraordinary—while "Traumerei," which is in Schumann's most delicate vein, was hardly noticed in comparison, although it was done in a finished way. The piano which Mme. Nordica wos compelled to be accompanied by was most disagreeable of tone, and it is to be wondered at that she could sing at all with its false notes clanging out resonant discords.

Boston Post.

TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 13, 1891.

BOSTON STAR COURSE.

The Grand Opening Concert Given in Tremont Temple.

The grand opening concert, the first of the Boston Star Course of entertainments, was given in Tremont Temple last night. The hall was well filled previous to the hour named for the opening. The programme follows:

Organ, Improvisation	Mr. Ryder.
Overture, "Jubel"	Orchestra	Weber
Notturno, from the "Midsummer Nights Dream."	Orchestra	Mendelssohn
Aria, "La Reine de Saba"	Mme. Nordica	Gounod
a. Traumerei		Schumann
b. Loin du Bal	Orchestra	Gillet
Notturno	Mme. Nordica (Accompaniment for piano and 'cello by Mr. Zach and Mr. Schulz.)	Chopin
Entr' Acte, "Mignon"	Orchestra	Thomas
Menuet	Orchestra	Boccherini
Polacca, "Mignon"	Mme. Nordica	Thomas
Waltz, "Blue Danube"	Orchestra	Strauss
March, "Furs Vaterland"	Orchestra	Millocker

Mr. Ryder's improvisation, which opened the programme, was hardly what one has heard Mr. Ryder play much might expect; it was grand and beautiful enough, but had a dull sameness in it totally unlike Mr. Ryder.

The Jubel went finely; the bases had a terribly stiff part, but Herr Gruenberg had men who could handle it. Madame Nordica sang with her usual brilliancy and was enthusiastically applauded every time she appeared. A large basket of flowers was brought to her at the end of her first number, and she was compelled to sing an encore.

The Mendelssohn nocturne was the best played piece of the evening, though of course Schumann's Traümerei and the Boccherini Menuet are too well known to need any further comment than saying that the orchestra was as fine as any in Boston (except, of course, the Symphony), and they were ably led.

Next Monday night the second entertainment of the course will be given. Ex-Senator John J. Ingalls of Kansas will lecture on "Problems of our Second Century."

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 105.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1891.

THE STAR COURSE.

The opening concert of the 12th season of the Star Course entertainments at Tremont Temple, given last evening, consisted of a concert in which the programme included selections by Mme. Lillian Nordica and an orchestra of excellent musicians, under the direction of Herr Ed. Gruenberg. The numbers contributed by Mme. Nordica included the grand aria from Gounod's "La Reine de Saba," a notturno by Chopin, with piano and 'cello accompaniment by Messrs. Zach and Schulz and the famous polacca from "Mignon." The singer was very gracious in according encore numbers and fully merited the enthusiastic applause which her numbers called out. She was in grand voice and gave delight to the eye as well as to the ear in her appearances during the evening. Herr Gruenberg entertained the audience with some capital orchestral music of the popular order, and made an emphatic success in dance music compositions included in the evening's list. Next Monday evening Hon. John J. Ingalls is to lecture on "The Problems of Our Second Century."

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1891.

Opening of the Star Course.

The twelfth season of the Star Course of entertainments was opened at Tremont Temple on Monday evening before a throng that filled and overflowed the hall. The occasion was a concert, the excellent programme of which was as follows:

Organ—Improvisation.	Mr. George H. Ryder.
Overture—"Jubal"		Weber
Notturno—From "A Midsummer Night's Dream"		Mendelssohn
Aria—From "La Reine de Saba"	Mme. Lillian Nordica.	Gounod
Traumerei		Schumann
Loin du Bal		Gillet
Notturno—(Accompaniment for pianoforte and violoncello)	Mme. Nordica.	Chopin
Entr' Acte—"Mignon"		Thomas
Menuet		Boccherini
Polacca—From "Mignon"	Mme. Nordica.	Thomas
Waltz—"The Blue Danube"		Strauss
March—"Furs Vaterland"		Millöcker

Madame Nordica was of course the bright particular star of the evening, greeted with rapturous enthusiasm and applauded to the echo, and so to speak, beyond it, since in the case of all three of her selections a second song was imperatively demanded, and, with exceeding generosity, accorded. Gounod's arie was sung with great brilliancy, the high tones at its close coming with electric clearness and effect. Chopin's nocturne was perhaps the least satisfactory of the three numbers, warmth of expression being somewhat lacking. The Polacca was given with charming lightness and sweetness. The supplementary songs were, in the first instance, a gay French ballard; in the second, "Loving Heart, Trust On," which chiefly served to exhibit to what base uses an artist may come, when beset by the encore malady; and in the third instance, "If Love be Fond," sung with delightfully demure archness and suaviness. The orchestral works were admirably selected, for the place and time; the conductor, Mr. Edward Gruenberg, safely steering between the Scytha of the over-classic and the Charybdis of the commonplace, and their execution was also very creditable, all things considered, though in Strauss's waltz the melody broke away from its leading strings in more senses than one, and not all the taps of the baton could recall it. Repetitions were demanded in the case of the entr' acte, and of Gillet's "Lion du Bal"; the latter a queer, compelling bit of a thing, full of moonlight and wet springs, and old, foolish, youthful gladness, all foregone and half forgot.

Cleveland
Plain Dealer
Oct 11/91.

It may not be generally known that after the Boston symphony orchestra had been undergoing a process of pruning and training for several years with the disciplinarian Gericke and had reached such a stage of excellence as warranted a series of concerts in New York, which were a veritable triumph and were quoted by the New York critics as "better than anything ever heard in New York," that a movement was set on foot to organize a New York orchestra which in due time should outstrip its Boston competitor. The protracted effort has resulted in the present symphony orchestra of New York, Walter Damrosch conductor, and it now presents itself to the world as a successful rival. Those who have heard it are very loud in its praise, and it is somewhat of a coincidence that Claveland is to be the first city in the union where the great rivals are brought together under the same management. Whether such a concurrence was premeditated on the part of the Star course managers or not, it certainly gives warrant of wonderful performances and the great Star course audience will be the first to judge in the contest and have the first honor of deciding the relative worth of the renowned organizations.

JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.

Date 10/3

The Symphony Ticket Sales.

The sale of season tickets for the six concerts at Infantry Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened yesterday at 93 Westminster street. Something over 100 persons were waiting at 9 o'clock when the sale began, and the line remained unbroken until noon. Yesterday's sale is far in advance of those of past seasons, and desirable seats are likely to be at a premium before many days. The first concert is appointed for Wednesday evening, Oct. 21. Mme. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist on that occasion.

Clipping from [illegible] Attleboro Ma.

Date 10/10

The Boston Symphony orchestra opens its season Friday afternoon and Saturday evering of this week. Mdme. Nordica is the soloist. The programme is to consist mostly of new musical arrangements interspersed with Wagner and Beetho[illegible]

Clipping from News
Bridgton Me

Date 10/9

Now that the Stockbridge Course has become an annual entertainment for the people of Portland and vicinity it is with expectant eyes that the list of attractions is watched for. This year Mr. Stockbridge has secured a superior array of talent as will be seen by reading a partial list which we give. Among others we notice, in the Orchestra Division, the New York Symphony, the Boston Symphony and the Austrian Juvenile Band; of Vocalists, Mme. Nordica, Sig. Galassi, Mlle. Clementine De Vere, Sig. Italo Campanini, Mary Howe, Whitney Mockridge, Arthur Beresford, and the Lotus Glee Club; among the Lectures will be one by Sir Edwin Arnold, and John L. Stoddard will be heard twice. There will also be an opera by the Bostonians.

There will also be a "Popular Course" comprising operas, comedies etc. Half fare will be given on the railroads to all holding course tickets.

Mr. Stockbridge deserves great praise for his efforts to give Portland people a course like this and it is to be hoped it will be a success in all respects.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

ELEVENTH SEASON — 1891-92.

Six Grand Concerts

ON WEDNESDAY EVENINGS, OCTOBER 21, NOVEMBER 18, DECEMBER 16, 1891, JANUARY 27, MONDAY, FEBRUARY 29, and WEDNESDAY, APRIL 6, 1892.

FIRST NIGHT.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 21, 8 P. M.

SOLOIST:

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

Programme.

SUITE, op. 55. (new) . . . . . Tschaikowsky
- I. Elegie.
- II. Valse melancolique.
- III. Scherzo.
- IV. Tema con Variazioni.
- V. Finale.—Polacca.

(First time.)

ARIA. "La Reine de Saba." . . . . . Gounod
MME. NORDICA.

GOOD FRIDAY SPELL from "Parsifal." . . . . . Wagner

POLACCA. "Mignon." . . . . . Thomas
MME. NORDICA.

OVERTURE. "Benvenuto Cellini." . . . . . Berlioz

(The doors will be closed during the performance of the opening number.)

MLLE. CLEMENTINE DE VERE, MME. FANNY BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER, MRS. ARTHUR NIKISCH, MR. ALWIN SCHROEDER, MONS. CH. MOLÉ and HERR EUGEN D' ALBERT will appear as Soloists at later Concerts.

Season Tickets, including reserved seats, for the series of six Concerts, Five Dollars, now on sale. Single Tickets with reserved seats, for the First Concert $1.25, will be sold on and after Monday, October 19th.

Box Office, 93 Westminster Street.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.

Times, Gloucester, Mass.

Date 10-15

Lost a Diamond Brooch.

Mme. Lilian Nordica, who appeared in the Star Course at Tremont Temple, Boston, Monday evening, lost a valuable crescent-shaped diamond brooch either at the hall or on her way home. Search of the hall and anterooms and the carriage failed to discover any traces of the missing jewel. It is not believed the brooch was stolen.

Cleveland
Plain-Dealer
Oct 11/91.

It may not be generally known that after the Boston symphony orchestra had been undergoing a process of pruning and training for several years with the disciplinarian Gericki and had reached such a stage of excellence as warranted a series of concerts in New York, which were a veritable triumph and were quoted by the New York critics as "better than anything ever heard in New York," that a movement was set on foot to organize a New York orchestra which in due time should outstrip its Boston competitor. The protracted effort has resulted in the present symphony orchestra of New York, Walter Damrosch conductor, and it now presents itself to the world as a successful rival. Those who have heard it are very loud in its praise, and it is somewhat of a coincidence that Cleveland is to be the first city in the union where the great rivals are brought together under the same management. Whether such a concurrence was premeditated on the part of the Star course managers or not, it certainly gives warrant of wonderful performances and the great Star course audience will be the first to judge in the contest and have the first honor of deciding the relative worth of the renowned organizations.

JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.

Date 10/3

The Symphony Ticket Sales.

The sale of season tickets for the six concerts at Infantry Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened yesterday at 93 Westminster street. Something over 100 persons were waiting at 9 o'clock when the sale began, and the line remained unbroken until noon. Yesterday's sale is far in advance of those of past seasons, and desirable seats are likely to be at a premium before many days. The first concert is appointed for Wednesday evening, Oct. 21. Mme. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist on that occasion.

---

lipping from [illegible]

ate 10/

The Boston Symphony orchestra opens its season Friday afternoon and Saturday evering of this week. Mdme. Nordica is the soloist. The programme is to consist mostly of new musical arrangements interspersed with Wagner and Beethoven.

Clipping from News
Bridgton Me
(613)
Date 109

9743

Now that the Stockbridge Course has become an annual entertainment for the people of Portland and vicinity it is with expectant eyes that the list of attractions watched for. This year Mr. Stock-ridge has secured a superior array of lent as will be seen by reading a par-al list which we give. Among others e notice, in the Orchestra Division, the ew York Symphony, the Boston Symhony and the Austrian Juvenile Band;
r Vocalists, Mme. Nordica, Sig. Galas-
, Mlle. Clementine De Vere, Sig. Italo ampanini, Mary Howe, Whitney Mock-ridge, Arthur Beresford, and the Lotus lee Glub; among the Lectures will be e by Sir Edwin Arnold, and John L. oddard will be heard twice. There ill also be an opera by the Bostonians.
There will also be a "Popular Course" mprising operas, comedies etc. Half re will be given on the railroads to all olding course tickets.
Mr. Stockbridge deserves great praise n his efforts to give Portland people a ourse like this and it is to be hoped it a success in all respects.

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

ELEVENTH SEASON — 1891-92.

Six Grand Concerts

ON WEDNESDAY EVENINGS, OCTOBER 21, NOVEMBER 18, DECEMBER 16, 1891, JANUARY 27, MONDAY, FEBRUARY 29, and WEDNESDAY, APRIL 6, 1892.

FIRST NIGHT.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 21, 8 P. M.

SOLOIST:

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

Programme.

SUITE, op. 55. (new) I. Elegie. II. Valse melancolique. III. Scherzo. IV. Tema con Variazioni. V. Finale.—Polacca. (First time.)	Tschaikowsky
ARIA. "La Reine de Saba." MME. NORDICA.	Gounod
GOOD FRIDAY SPELL from "Parsifal."	Wagner
POLACCA. "Mignon." MME. NORDICA.	Thomas
OVERTURE. "Benvenuto Cellini."	Berlioz

(The doors will be closed during the performance of the opening number.)

MLLE. CLEMENTINE DE VERE, MME. FANNY BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER, MRS. ARTHUR NIKISCH, MR. ALWIN SCHROEDER, MONS. CH. MOLE and HERR EUGEN D'ALBERT will appear as Soloists at later Concerts.

Season Tickets, including reserved seats, for the series of six Concerts, Five Dollars, now on sale. Single Tickets with reserved seats, for the First Concert $1.25, will be sold on and after Monday, October 19th.

Box Office, 93 Westminster Street.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.

---

imes, Gloucester, Mass.

Date 10-15

Lost a Diamond Brooch.

Mme. Lilian Nordica, who appeared in the Star Course at Tremont Temple, Boston, Monday evening, lost a valuable crescent-shaped diamond brooch either at the hall or on her way home. Search of the hall and anterooms and the carriage failed to discover any traces of the missing jewel. It is not believed the brooch was stolen.

Date 10/12

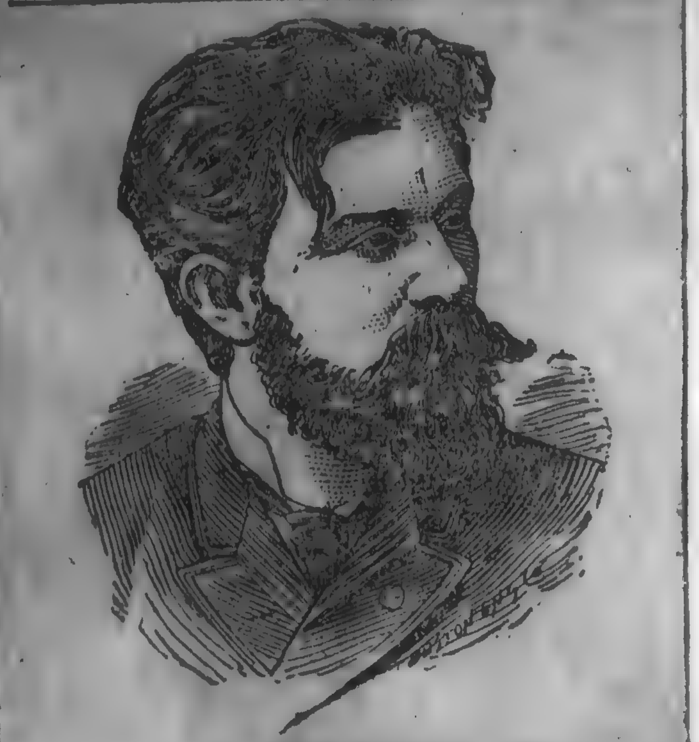
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Interesting Particulars About the Course and About the Musicians.

(Special Correspondence of The Standard-Union.)

Boston, Oct. 8.—The season which the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society offers to the public promises to be full of good things in the musical line. Following the Boston plan of afternoon rehearsals on Friday, succeeded by concerts on the next Saturday evening, the arrangements for Brooklyn will include six rehearsals and six concerts on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings respectively on these dates: Nov. 6 and 7, Dec. 11 and 12, Jan. 15 and 16, Feb. 12 and 13, March 18 and 19, and April 29 and 30. The details of the concerts are not yet ready for publication, but will be very soon.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has never before, given the Brooklyn concerts in this winter season, and some mention of it will refresh the memories even of those who have read more or less about the men, but who will like to have the matter before them as the season is about to open. This orchestra was the first permanent orchestra to be founded in this country. It was established eleven years ago by Henry L. Higginson, a leading financier of Boston, whose aim has been to reach the highest artistic standard, regardless of all other considerations. The three conductors whom he has engaged have each in turn given a high class of performances to the public—Messrs. Georg Henschel, Wilhelm Gericke, and, last of all, Arthur Nikisch.

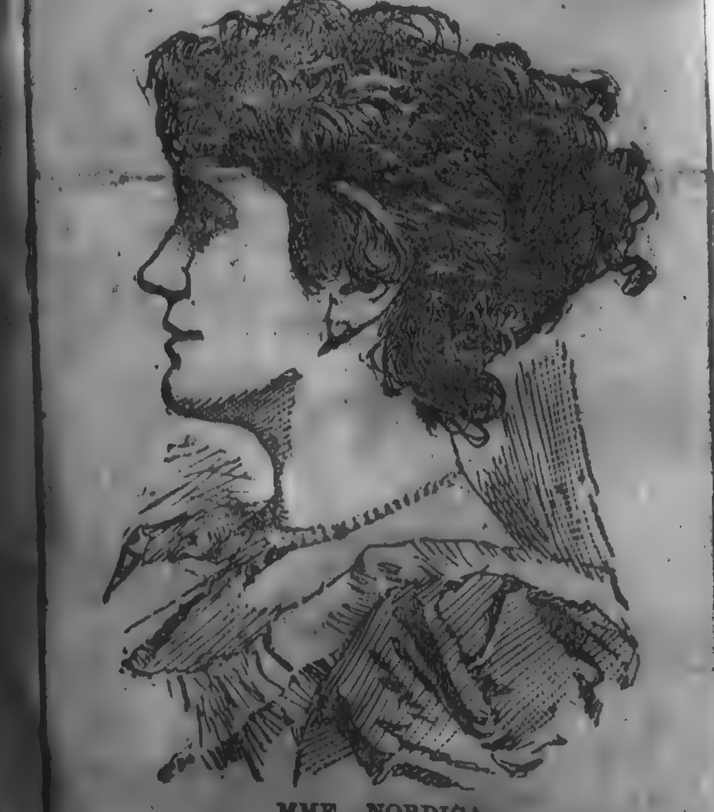


ARTHUR NIKISCH.

It is said to be the honest judgment of competent musicians that no finer orchestra exists in this country, if indeed there does in the world. There are in the orchestra eighty-five performers, all permanent members, each of whom is obliged by contract to attend every rehearsal and concert performance. The present conductor, Arthur Nikisch, is a Hungarian, and has had a remarkable musical career.

The leading soloist of the Brooklyn concert season will be Mme. Lillian Nordica. She is too well known to need an introduction to the musical world. She will appear in this country in concerts up to Feb. 1, 1892, and she is engaged with the leading concert organizations of the country. Among her engagements may be mentioned that with the New York Philharmonic Society, with Anton Seidl as conductor, for a concert in the Metropolitan Opera House. That appearance is wholly independent of her appearance in Brooklyn.

The head of the violins as concertmeister is Franz Kneisel, and every member of his corps is a solo performer. Among them are C. M. Loeffler and T. Adamowski, both of whom have most enviable reputations as violinists of the first class. The leader upon the cello is Alwin Schroeder. He is new with the orchestra this season, and great expectations are entertained for him. Among other brilliant performers are Messrs. Mole and Sautet, of the flute and oboe respectively, who came to the Symphony Orchestra three years ago from the Opera Comique of Paris. Among other excellent players on wind instruments are A. Hackebarth, first horn; Pierre Muller, first trumpet, late of the Lamoureux orchestra of Paris, and Mr. Goldschmidt, first clarionet.



MME. NORDICA.

The pianists will be Messrs. Paderewski and Eugene D'Albert. The latter was well known in this country two years ago as connected with the Sarasate-D'Albert company, which achieved a high reputation. He needs no further mention. Great expectations are entertained of Mr. Paderewski. Frederick F. Buffen, of London, writing of his performances there last July, said: "In purely mechanical skill it seems impossible to exceed the limits of his amazing achievements. He has his light and delicate moods as well as his dreamy and romantic humors, which find expression in the performance of the beautiful pianoforte works of his fellow countryman, Frederic Chopin, interest in whose works increases year by year. For fire and fineness nothing can surpass his playing of this master's scherzos and fantasies. For breadth of style and forcible delivery, his performance of his own concerto in A minor, together with the concertos of [illegible] and Beethoven, is superb, while for [illegible] hand, [illegible]

[illegible] the performances which were given under the direction of Theodore Thomas. Mr. Nikisch has been in Europe during the past summer, and has brought home with him many new orchestral pieces which were shown to him there by the leading music houses. The trip was made in the interest of the patrons of his concerts, and he has spared no pains in his selections. Some of his purchases he considers great acquisitions. The best scores which the Leipsic publishers could produce were examined by him, and some of them will be produced in Brooklyn. Mr. Higginson gives his conductor carte blanche to purchase whatever is necessary for the good of the orchestra, and proof of his wisdom is found in the fact that the orchestra is now self-supporting, which is a remarkable achievement in musical history in this country. Remarkable success attended the courses of the orchestra the last four weeks in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and it is regarded as an assurance that the high character of the concerts will be fully sustained in Brooklyn the coming season. Everything in way of seats which can be sold for the Boston season of twenty-four rehearsals and twenty-four concerts has been sold, and popular faith in the excellence of the orchestra is at high water mark.

Boston Post

FRIDAY MORNING, OCT. 16, 1891.

THE CAMBRIDGE CONCERT.

The first of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts of this season at the Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, was given last evening. The symphony, Beethoven's in F No. 8, was the first number, and it is to be wished that Mr. Nikisch would arrange his programme in Music Hall in a similar manner. The most important number should come first or second before the ear is tired and the mind begins to wander. The performance of the symphony last evening was characterized by swing and vehemence rather than by precision and delicacy; but it was evidently enjoyed by the large audience. The playing of the Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte for strings, arranged from Bach by Bachrich, was more heartily to be praised, however, from the standpoint of the musician. The final orchestral number was Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture.

Mr. Eliot Hubbard, who was the soloist, is well-known and a favorite in our concert halls. His selections last night showed both the strength and the weakness of his art. The aria "An jenem Tag" from "Hans Heiling" demands a baritone of full, rich voice with a firm control of the resources of dramatic expression. Now Mr. Hubbard is an agreeable parlor singer with a voice of limited range and of more than ordinary taste. The aria was beyond his grasp, and when he tried to treat his theme dramatically, the voice was not equal to the task, and spasmodic sforzatos took the place of passion hinted or plainly shown. But in the three songs by Brahms, Franz and Schumann, to which Mr. Nikisch played very pleasing accompaniments, he was more successful and he deserved the sincere re-call. For these songs, "Minnelied," "Sommer Morgen" and "Fruehlingsnacth," are intended to suggest a mood rather than to affect the hearer objectively. All the songs were sung in German. Perhaps this is an unnecessary statement, for German dominates our concert stage. It is to be hoped that there will some day be a revolt and a return to English, which is after all our national language.

The next concert will be given Thursday, Nov. 12. Mrs. Nordica will sing.

PHILIP HALE.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1891.

For the second concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the Music Hall, tomorrow night, the following is the programme: Tschaikowski, suite, Op. 55; Mascagni, prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana;" Beethoven, minuet and finale from string quartet, Op. 59, No. 3; songs with pianoforte; Massenet, overture to "Phèdre." William J. Winch will be the singer.

The Adamowski Quartette will give three concerts in Union Hall on Monday evenings—Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. The programme includes a horn trio by Brahms, a piano quartet by Dvorak, and quartettes by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. Season tickets will be ready at the Music Hall tomorrow morning.

Boston Post

SATURDAY MORNING, OCT. 17, 1891.

The programme of the Symphony Concert of this evening is as follows: Tschaikowsky's Suite op. 55; Prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana:" Beethoven's Minuetto and Finale from string quartette op. 59 No. 3 in C (played by all the strings); and Massenet's Overture "Phèdre." Mr. William J. Winch will sing the serenade in the Mascagni "Prelude" and Schubert's "Oer Neugierige," Schumann's "Mondnacht" and Iensen's "Murmelnde Lueftchen."

......

The first concert of the Kneisel Quartette will be given in Union Hall, Monday evening, Oct. 19 at 8 o'clock. The programme is as follows: Mozart's Quartette in C major; Schumann's Pianoforte Quartette: and Brahm's Quintette in G major. The Brahm's Quintette, in which Mr. Novacek will play the second viola, will be given for the first time in America.

......

The first concert of the Adamowski Quartette will be given in Union Hall, Monday evening, Oct. 26, at 8 o'clock. The quartette will be assisted by Mrs. Julie M. Wyman. Among the numbers of the programme will be a sonata for pianoforte and violin by Padarewski.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

ELEVENTH SEASON,—1891-92.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

I. CONCERT.

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 15, AT 7.45.

PROGRAMME.

BEETHOVEN.	SYMPHONY in F, No. 8. Allegro vivace e con brio.—Allegretto scherzando.—Tempo di menuetto.—Allegro vivace.
MARSCHNER.	ARIA. "Hans Heiling,"
J. S. BACH.	PRELUDE, ADAGIO AND GAVOTTE for Strings (arranged by Bachrich.)
	SONGS with PIANO.
a) BRAHMS.	MINNELIED.
b) FRANZ.	AM LEUCHTENDEN SOMMERMORGEN.
c) SCHUMANN.	FRÜHLINGSNACHT.
SCHUMANN.	OVERTURE. "Genoveva."

SOLOIST:

MR. ELIOT HUBBARD.

The Piano used is a Steinway.

SECOND CONCERT, Thursday, Nov. 12. Soloist: MME. NORDICA.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCT. 17, 1891.

It seems to be time for the Boston Symphony management to bring Mr. Max Bachert to book. He has been using the name "Boston Symphony" for his little group of players, and now has obtained an injunction in New York against some men there who wanted to use the same title, claiming that the words were his trade-mark. As he appropriated them from Mr. Higginson's orchestra, it seems as if an injunction, issuing on his own grounds, should now cut him off from his misleading use of them.

Mr. Nikisch began his new symphony season with a pretty heavy programme which, but for its bits of Wagner, might have been played any time this thirty-five or forty years. But as it was, he did not keep the orchestra well in hand, for in the fourth movement of the symphony (Schumann's "Rhenish") the players took things pretty much as they pleased, and the big brass phrases especially lagged constantly half a beat behind him and were roared out as if staves in a circus parade. Tonight one novelty for Boston is promised in the Tschaikowsky suite, opus 55. The "Cavalleria Rusticana" prelude will also be performed, and time will be wasted by setting all the strings to play a couple of movements from a Beethoven quintette. Nordica sang well but coldly last week, and Mr. W. J. Winch is down for three chamber songs tonight.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1891.

The Kneisel Quartet will begin its series of chamber concerts in Union Hall on Monday night. This is the programme: Quartet in C major, Mozart; quartet with pianoforte, Schumann; quintet in G major, Brahms, first time.

The Adamowski Quartet will give three concerts in Union Hall on Monday evenings, Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. The programme includes a horn trio by Brahms, piano quartet by Dvorak, sonata for pianoforte and violin by Paderewski, and quartets by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. Season tickets at Music Hall. Mrs. Julie M. Wyman will sing at the first concert.

The Adamowski Quartet will give concerts in Union Hall on Monday nights, Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. The programme includes a horn trio by Brahms, a piano quartet by Dvorak, and quartets by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. Season tickets for sale at the Music Hall.

STANDARD-UNION, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date 10-12

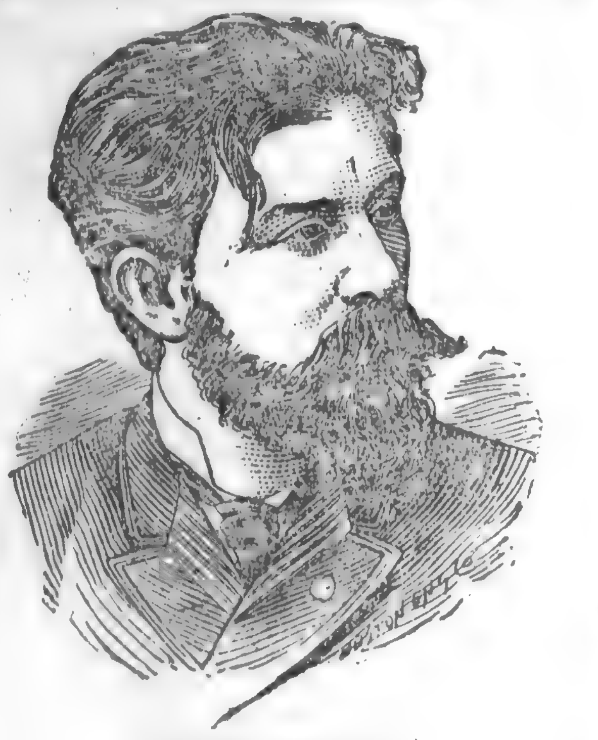
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Interesting Particulars About the Course and About the Musicians.

(Special Correspondence of The Standard-Union.)

Boston, Oct. 8.—The season which the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society offers to the public promises to be full of good things in the musical line. Following the Boston plan of afternoon rehearsals on Friday, succeeded by concerts on the next Saturday evening, the arrangements for Brooklyn will include six rehearsals and six concerts on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings respectively on these dates: Nov. 6 and 7, Dec. 11 and 12, Jan. 15 and 16, Feb. 12 and 13, March 18 and 19, and April 29 and 30. The details of the concerts are not yet ready for publication, but will be very soon.

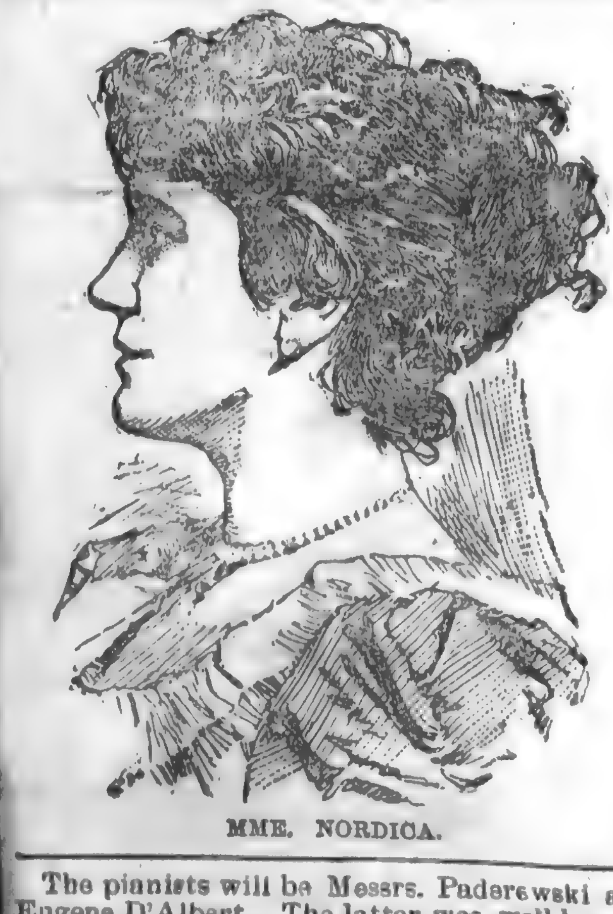
The Boston Symphony Orchestra has never before given the Brooklyn concerts in this winter season, and some mention of it will refresh the memories even of those who have read more or less about the men, but who will like to have the matter before them as the season is about to open. This orchestra was the first permanent orchestra to be founded in this country. It was established eleven years ago by Henry L. Higginson, a leading financier of Boston, whose aim has been to reach the highest artistic standard, regardless of all other considerations. The three conductors whom he has engaged have each in turn given a high class of performances to the public—Messrs. Georg Henschel, Wilhelm Gericke, and, last of all, Arthur Nikisch. It is said to be the honest judgement of competent musicians that no finer orchestra exists in this country, if indeed there does in the world. There are in the orchestra eighty-five performers, all permanent members, each of whom is obliged by contract to attend every rehearsal and concert performance. The present conductor, Arthur Nikisch, is a Hungarian, and has had a remarkable musical career.



ARTHUR NIKISCH.

The leading soloist of the Brooklyn concert season will be Mme. Lillian Nordica. She is too well known to need an introduction to the musical world. She will appear in this country in concerts up to Feb. 1, 1892, and she is engaged with the leading concert organizations of the country. Among her engagements may be mentioned that with the New York Philharmonic Society, with Anton Seidl as conductor, for a concert in the Metropolitan Opera House. That appearance is wholly independent of her appearance in Brooklyn.

The head of the violins as concertmeister is Franz Kneisel, and every member of his corps is a solo performer. Among them are C. M. Loeffler and T. Adamowski, both of whom have most enviable reputations as violinists of the first class. The leader upon the cello is Alwin Schroeder. He is new with the orchestra this season, and great expectations are entertained for him. Among other brilliant performers are Messrs. Mole and Sautet, of the flute and oboe respectively, who came to the Symphony Orchestra three years ago from the Opera Comique of Paris. Among other excellent players on wind instruments are A. Hackebarth, first horn; Pierre Muller, first trumpet, late of the Lamoureux orchestra of Paris, and Mr. Goldschmidt, first clarionet.



MME. NORDICA.

The pianists will be Messrs. Paderewski and Eugene D'Albert. The latter was well known in this country two years ago as connected with the Sarasate-D'Albert company, which achieved a high reputation. He needs no further mention. Great expectations are entertained of Mr. Paderewski. Frederick F. Buffen, of London, writing of his performances there last July, said: "In purely mechanical skill it seems impossible to exceed the limits of his amazing achievements. He has his light and delicate moods as well as his dreamy and romantic humors, which find expression in the performance of the beautiful pianoforte works of his fellow countryman, Frederic Chopin, interest in whose works increases year by year. For fire and fineness nothing can surpass his playing of this master's scherzos and fantasies. For breadth of style and forcible delivery, his performance of his own concerto in A minor, together with the concertos of Rubinstein and Beethoven, is superb, while for sweep of hand, extraordinary rapidity of finger and mastery over Liszt's rhapsodies and fantasies he is practically unrivalled in the world."

phony [illegible] which is to be given in Brooklyn there will be many musical novelties, besides the usual proportion of standard works. Every effort will be made to reach and surpass the excellence of the performances which were given under the direction of Theodore Thomas. Mr. Nikisch has been in Europe during the past summer, and has brought home with him many new orchestral pieces which were shown to him there by the leading music houses. The trip was made in the interest of the patrons of his concerts, and he has spared no pains in his selections. Some of his purchases he considers great acquisitions. The best scores which the Leipsic publishers could produce were examined by him, and some of them will be produced in Brooklyn. Mr. Higginson gives his conductor carte blanche to purchase whatever is necessary for the good of the orchestra, and proof of his wisdom is found in the fact that the orchestra is now self-supporting, which is a remarkable achievement in musical history in this country. Remarkable success attended the courses of the orchestra the last four weeks in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and it is regarded as an assurance that the high character of the concerts will be fully sustained in Brooklyn the coming season. Everything in way of seats which can be sold for the Boston season of twenty-four rehearsals and twenty-four concerts has been sold, and popular faith in the excellence of the orchestra is at high water mark.

Boston Post

FRIDAY MORNING, OCT. 16, 1891.

THE CAMBRIDGE CONCERT.

The first of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts of this season at the Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, was given last evening. The symphony, Beethoven's in F No. 8, was the first number, and it is to be wished that Mr. Nikisch would arrange his programme in Music Hall in a similar manner. The most important number should come first or second before the ear is tired and the mind begins to wander. The performance of the symphony last evening was characterized by swing and vehemence rather than by precision and delicacy; but it was evidently enjoyed by the large audience. The playing of the Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte for strings, arranged from Bach by Bachrich, was more heartily to be praised, however, from the standpoint of the musician. The final orchestral number was Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture.

Mr. Eliot Hubbard, who was the soloist, is well-known and a favorite in our concert halls. His selections last night showed both the strength and the weakness of his art. The aria "An jenem Tag" from "Hans Heiling" demands a baritone of full, rich voice with a firm control of the resources of dramatic expression. Now Mr. Hubbard is an agreeable parlor singer with a voice of limited range and of more than ordinary taste. The aria was beyond his grasp, and when he tried to treat his theme dramatically, the voice was not equal to the task, and spasmodic sforzatos took the place of passion hinted or plainly shown. But in the three songs by Brahms, Franz and Schumann, to which Mr. Nikisch played very pleasing accompaniments, he was more successful and he deserved the sincere re-call. For these songs, "Minnelied," "Sommer Morgen" and "Fruehlingsnacth," are intended to suggest a mood rather than to affect the hearer objectively. All the songs were sung in German. Perhaps this is an unnecessary statement, for German dominates our concert stage. It is to be hoped that there will some day be a revolt and a return to English, which is after all our national language.

The next concert will be given Thursday, Nov. 12. Mrs. Nordica will sing.

PHILIP HALE.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1891.

For the second concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the Music Hall, tomorrow night, the following is the programme: Tschaikowski, suite, Op. 55; Mascagni, prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana;" Beethoven, minuet and finale from string quartet, Op. 59, No. 3; songs with pianoforte; Massenet, overture to "Phèdre." William J. Winch will be the singer.

The Adamowski Quartette will give three concerts in Union Hall on Monday evenings—Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. The programme includes a horn trio by Brahms, a piano quartet by Dvorak, and quartettes by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. Season tickets will be ready at the Music Hall tomorrow morning.

Boston Post

SATURDAY MORNING, OCT. 17, 1891.

The programme of the Symphony Concert of this evening is as follows: Tschaikowsky's Suite op. 55; Prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana:" Beethoven's Minuetto and Finale from string quartette op. 59 No.3 in C (played by all the strings): and Massenet's Overture "Phèdre." Mr. William J. Winch will sing the serenade in the Mascagni "Prelude" and Schubert's "Der Neugierige," Schumann's "Mondnacht" and Jensen's "Murmelnde Lueftchen."

......

The first concert of the Kneisel Quartette will be given in Union Hall, Monday evening, Oct. 19 at 8 o'clock. The programme is as follows: Mozart's Quartette in C major; Schumann's Pianoforte Quartette: and Brahm's Quintette in G major. The Brahm's Quintette, in which Mr. Novacek will play the second viola, will be given for the first time in America.

......

The first concert of the Adamowski Quartette will be given in Union Hall, Monday evening, Oct. 26, at 8 o'clock. The quartette will be assisted by Mrs. Julie M. Wyman. Among the numbers of the programme will be a sonata for pianoforte and violin by Padarewski.

......

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

ELEVENTH SEASON,—1891--92.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

I. CONCERT.

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 15, AT 7.45.

PROGRAMME.

BEETHOVEN.	SYMPHONY in F, No. 8. Allegro vivace e con brio.—Allegretto scherzando.—Tempo di menuetto.—Allegro vivace.
MARSCHNER.	ARIA. "Hans Heiling,"
J. S. BACH.	PRELUDE, ADAGIO AND GAVOTTE for Strings (arranged by Bachrich.)
	SONGS with PIANO.
a) BRAHMS.	MINNELIED.
b) FRANZ.	AM LEUCHTENDEN SOMMERMORGEN.
c) SCHUMANN.	FRUHLINGSNACHT.
SCHUMANN.	OVERTURE. "Genoveva."

SOLOIST:

MR. ELIOT HUBBARD.

The Piano used is a Steinway.

SECOND CONCERT, Thursday, Nov. 12. Soloist: MME. NORDICA.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCT. 17, 1891.

It seems to be time for the Boston Symphony management to bring Mr. Max Bachert to book. He has been using the name "Boston Symphony" for his little group of players, and now has obtained an injunction in New York against some men there who wanted to use the same title, claiming that the words were his trade-mark. As he appropriated them from Mr. Higginson's orchestra, it seems as if an injunction, issuing on his own grounds, should now cut him off from his misleading use of them.

Mr. Nikisch began his new symphony season with a pretty heavy programme which, but for its bits of Wagner, might have been played any time this thirty-five or forty years. But as it was, he did not keep the orchestra well in hand, for in the fourth movement of the symphony (Schumann's "Rhenish") the players took things pretty much as they pleased, and the big brass phrases especially lagged constantly half a beat behind him and were roared out as if staves in a circus parade. Tonight one novelty for Boston is promised in the Tschaikowsky suite, opus 55. The "Cavalleria Rusticana" prelude will also be performed, and time will be wasted by setting all the strings to play a couple of movements from a Beethoven quintette. Nordica sang well but coldly last week, and Mr. W. J. Winch is down for three chamber songs tonight.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1891

The Kneisel Quartet will begin its series of chamber concerts in Union Hall on Monday night. This is the programme: Quartet in C major, Mozart; quartet with pianoforte, Schumann; quintet in G major, Brahms, first time.

The Adamowski Quartet will give three concerts in Union Hall on Monday evenings, Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. The programme includes a horn trio by Brahms, piano quartet by Dvorak, sonata for pianoforte and violin by Paderewski, and quartets by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. Season tickets at Music Hall. Mrs. Julie M. Wyman will sing at the first concert.

The Adamowski Quartet will give concerts in Union Hall on Monday nights, Oct. 26, Nov. 16 and Dec. 21. The programme includes a horn trio by Brahms, a piano quartet by Dvorak, and quartets by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. Season tickets for sale at the Music Hall.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1891

SYMPHONY CONCERT.—The first of the Symphony concerts of the season of '91, '92 was given last Saturday evening in Music Hall. When The trombones and the third and the fourth horns Mr. Nikisch stepped upon the stage he was greeted heartily by the audience. Changes have been made in the personnel of the orchestra. are in the hands of new members. Mr. Heindl, the excellent viola player, is now in the second rank, and Mr. Hekking's place is filled by Mr. Alwin Schroeder. The program was made up of familiar numbers: Beethoven's Overture, "Dedication of the House"; Wagner's "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal," and Schumann's Symphony No. 3 in E flat. As a whole it was not an attractive program, and the performance by the orchestra was coarse and ragged in both the overture and the symphony. The fact that it was the first concert after the vacation, together with the changes made in the orchestra, may account in a measure for the slips in intonation and precision; but it does not account for the repeated indifference of Mr. Nikisch to the intentions of the composers. The audience applauded in a perfunctory manner.

Mrs. Lillian Nordica sang Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," which was beyond her abilities, and "O Hall of Song," from Tannhaeuser. This latter aria she sang with much dignity. She was happier in passages of a declamatory quasi heroic nature than in the portrayal of the purely emotional. She was recalled twice after the Wagner selection.

The program of this evening includes Teschaikowsky's Suite op. 55; the Prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana;" Massenet's overture, "Phèdre," and Beethoven's Minuetto and Finale from the string quartet op. 59, No. 3 (played by all the strings). Mr. Wm. J. Winch will sing the Serenade in the Mascagni Prelude, Schubert's "Der Neugierige," Schumann's "Mondnacht," and Jensen's "Murmelude Lüftchen."

Last Saturday night brought back society, en masse, to attend the first Symphony concert. Music Hall was full to overflowing. The first balcony was, as has been the recent fashion, the musical center; there were to be seen Mr. B. J. Lang and wife, Mr. Wm. F. Apthorp and wife, Miss Lang, Mr. Arthur Foote, Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mr. W. J. Winch and wife, and Mr. Hiram G. Tucker. The left balcony contained Mr. Harry Fay and wife, Mr. J. S. Dwight, Mr. G. L. Osgood and wife, Mr. Bernard Listemann, Mrs. C. L. Thayer, Mr. J. E. Priest, and Miss Richardson. On the floor were to be seen the Misses Riddle, Mrs. Arthur Nickish, Mr. H. M. Rogers and wife, Mrs. Julius Eichburg, Mrs. T. B. King, Mrs. Mark Hollingsworth, Mr. Hecht and wife, Mr. Eliot Hubbard and wife, Dr. Roland Whitridge, Mr. William Peters, Miss Winslow, Mr. Arthur Pickering, Mr. Arthur Austin, Mr. Donald White, Miss Mary Russell, Mrs. Phœbe Jenks, Mr. Barton Jenks, Dr. Fred Cheney, Mr. I. M. Gaugengigl, Mr. Edward Codman and wife, Dr. F. D. Stackpole, Mrs. Boardman, Miss Abbot, Miss Stackpole, Miss Heloise Hersey, Miss Gilman, and Mr. Frank Jackson. The chief changes to be seen were that Mr. Kneisel had gained flesh and Mr. Loeffler had grown a beard and had curly hair. Mr. Adamowski and Mr. Arkroyd seem to have drunk of the fountain of perpetual youth, and Mr. Nickish's hands were whiter than ever and his hair more volatile. Mrs. Apthorp, with her bonnet on one side and a veil across her forehead, seemed to have less chic than ever, and more flesh. Mrs. Gardner's seats were vacant, excepting when Mr. H. L. Harding took possession of them late in the evening. Mrs. Fiske Warren looked as beautiful as ever, and Mrs. Frank Watson was looking her best, after a summer in Europe.

Mrs. Lillian Nordica sang in the first concert of the Star course at Tremont Temple Monday evening and with great success. Her numbers were an air from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba," a nocturne from Chopin, "Trust On," and the polonaise from "Mignon." She was attired in blue satin, trimmed with brown silk cord. Innumerable diamond ornaments sparkled on her corsage, and a string of the white gems graced her neck. Mr. Gruenberg directed the orchestra.

The first of the Kneisel quartets will be given Monday evening, October 19, in Union Hall. Mr. Xaver Scharwenka will assist. The program includes Mozart's Quartet in C; Schumann's Pianoforte Quartet; and Brahms' Quintet, op. 111, (new).

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET.

SEVENTH SEASON—1891-92.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

Mr. FRANZ KNEISEL, 1st Violin. Mr. LOUIS SVECENSKI, Viola.
Mr. OTTO ROTH, 2d Violin. Mr. ALWIN SCHROEDER, Violoncello

WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF

Mr. XAVER SCHARWENKA.

I. CONCERT.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 19, AT 8 P. M.

PROGRAMME.

MOZART.	QUARTET for STRINGS, in C major. (Kockel.465). (Peters, No. 17.) Adagio: Allegro.—Andante cantibile.—Menuetto (Allegretto).—Allegro molto.
SCHUMANN.	PIANO QUARTET, E flat. op. 47. Sostenuto assai.—Allegro ma non troppo.—Scherzo.—Andante cantabile.—Finale, vivace.
BRAHMS.	QUINTET, op. 111, in G. Allegro con brio.—Adagio.—Allegretto.—Finale. Second Viola: Mr. O. NOVACEK. (First time in Boston.)

The date of the Second Concert is November 23.

The Piano used is a Behr Bros.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

OCTOBER 17, 1891.

NORDICA'S A SWELL.

She Will Return to London to Live, You Know.

There She is Chummy with the Duchess of Teck.

Nordica wore that morning a wonderful gown of lemon-yellow crêpe with yards of billowy train, and with bands of white guipure insertion from throat to hem in the front. The full sleeves were gathered into deep cuffs striped with the guipure. From the shoulders fell "angel" sleeves, edged with the insertion, which imparted an oddly classical air to this most Parisian of gowns. Innumerable knots of pale blue ribbon with tassels of gold intertwined, decorated the front breadth.

"You like it? Oh, I don't know whether I do or not. Mr. Worth said I must have it, and here it is! I care very little about clothes. I only want to have them pretty and becoming," said this indifferent young woman with the most magnificent wardrobe that Worth could create. I confess that the naïve little speech struck me as hugely funny.

"Do you sing in opera this season, Madam Nordica?"

"I am very sorry to say no. My engagement with Mr. Ellis was made before Mr. Abbey decided what he wanted. By the way, I think somewhat of bringing an opera company of my own over in a year or two, and see if America will not support a first class presentation of opera. I wish that Sir Augustus Harris would bring his Covent Garden company here. Then Boston would learn what opera might be."

"How long since you returned to the stage?"

Wales Shivered.

"In '87. I went to London and made my début there with my first opera, 'La Traviata.' I shall never forget that night. It was icy cold in the theatre, and the people in the boxes were all wrapped in furs. The Prince of Wales was there, and began the evening without wrapping up, but he shivered until he was compelled to put on his fur overcoat. I wore a low-neck gown! To add to the terrors of the situation, when my Alfred came on in the middle of the first act, I discovered that I had never seen him before, and before he had uttered a dozen sounds I knew that he could not sing the part. I had been rehearsing with an excellent tenor who had dropped out at the last moment, as I afterwards learned, because his salary was not paid.

"However, the performance went on quietly until my grand aria was reached, and then I nerved myself to the ordeal. I suppose I succeeded as I was recalled half a dozen times and the evening ended quite brilliantly, notwithstanding the cold weather.

"After that I sang in the 'Golden Legend.' Sir Arthur was so afraid of the result that he did not come to the performance, but the next day sent a note expressing his pleasure in my success. Then they began to talk of oratorio, but they hesitated. I certainly did well in opera—I was successful in the 'Golden Legend'—but oratorio—ah, that was a different thing! However, in fear and trembling, they engaged me to sing in Elijah. I sang and they re-engaged me to sing it on Good Friday, and since then I have been constantly in oratorio work."

Here came an interruption in the pleasing form of a pretty little creature with brown curls, who was introduced as "my niece and namesake, Lillian Morton Baldwin." The child was evidently in tribulation and finally was induced to confide her trouble to "Aunt Lillie". She produced a photograph of her class in school in which she appeared seated on the edge of the card in a rather precarious manner and with the face badly blurred. "Just look at it, Aunt Lillie. You can hardly see me!" said she, with much and pardonable disgust. Aunt Lillie consoled her and sent her away happy.

She Will Live in London.

"Shall you ever return to Boston to live," I asked, although I guessed the answer. "No, I think not," she answered thoughtfully. "I have a delightful circle of friends in London, the social atmosphere is far more artistic than in our younger national life we can even expect, and I like it." To my jesting: "Then you do not scorn the aristocracy?" Nordica replied with a laugh that flashed from lips and eyes, "Oh dear, no; I like fine manners and cultivated minds. When I found myself one of the 25 invited to remain to the garden party at the Duchess of Teck's silver wedding, I did not mind it in the least, I assure you. I have not the slightest objection to sitting down with a party of royalties. On the contrary, I am quite willing to confess to a little feeling of self-gratulation that the girl from Maine, born on the Norton farm, should be thought and acknowledged the peer, by right of American birth and artistic merit, of the loftiest in England."

Here again I admired Nordica's pluck. It is a tremendous triumph to have won such a position, but how many have the courage to avow that they consider such triumphs worth having? And yet we all know that the women would be less than human who did not value them, and the chances are that they would enjoy them in a more ignoble way.

"Did you meet Mary Anderson in England?"

"Only once or twice. How beautiful she is! What a loss to the stage! There never was anything seen like the 'Winter's Tale,' there never can be again! And her countrymen have driven her away. Their newspapers have broken her heart!" She spoke with intense feeling and a sympathy not often given by one great artist to another.

I looked at my watch and was horrified to find how long I had been there, but Madame Nordica is so intensely interesting that, when with her, one "takes no note of time, save by its loss." When I took my leave, I took also from Nordica's fair hands a beautiful bunch of pink carnations—her favorite flower—and "Perle" rosebuds, gathered from the great baskets of flowers with which the room was half filled, the souvenirs of Monday night.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1891

SYMPHONY CONCERT.—The first of the Symphony concerts of the season of '91, '92 was given last Saturday evening in Music Hall. When The trombones and the third and the fourth horns Mr. Nikisch stepped upon the stage he was greeted heartily by the audience. Changes have been made in the personnel of the orchestra. are in the hands of new members. Mr. Heindl, the excellent viola player, is now in the second rank, and Mr. Hekking's place is filled by Mr. Alwin Schroeder. The program was made up of familiar numbers: Beethoven's Overture, "Dedication of the House"; Wagner's "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal," and Schumann's Symphony No. 3 in E flat. As a whole it was not an attractive program, and the performance by the orchestra was coarse and ragged in both the overture and the symphony. The fact that it was the first concert after the vacation, together with the changes made in the orchestra, may account in a measure for the slips in intonation and precision; but it does not account for the repeated indifference of Mr. Nikisch to the intentions of the composers. The audience applauded in a perfunctory manner.

Mrs. Lillian Nordica sang Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," which was beyond her abilities, and "O Hall of Song," from Tannhaeuser. This latter aria she sang with much dignity. She was happier in passages of a declamatory quasi heroic nature than in the portrayal of the purely emotional. She was recalled twice after the Wagner selection.

The program of this evening includes Teschaikowsky's Suite op. 55; the Prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana;" Massenet's overture, "Phèdre," and Beethoven's Minuetto and Finale from the string quartet op. 59, No. 3 (played by all the strings). Mr. Wm. J. Winch will sing the Serenade in the Mascagni Prelude, Schubert's "Der Neugierige," Schumann's "Mondnacht," and Jensen's "Murmelude Lüftchen."

Last Saturday night brought back society, en masse, to attend the first Symphony concert. Music Hall was full to overflowing. The first balcony was, as has been the recent fashion, the musical center; there were to be seen Mr. B. J. Lang and wife, Mr. Wm. F. Apthorp and wife, Miss Lang, Mr. Arthur Foote, Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mr. W. J. Winch and wife, and Mr. Hiram G. Tucker. The left balcony contained Mr. Harry Fay and wife, Mr. J. S. Dwight, Mr. G. L. Osgood and wife, Mr. Bernard Listemann, Mrs. C. L. Thayer, Mr. J. E. Priest, and Miss Richardson. On the floor were to be seen the Misses Riddle, Mrs. Arthur Nickish, Mr. H. M. Rogers and wife, Mrs. Julius Eichberg, Mrs. T. B. King, Mrs. Mark Hollingsworth, Mr. Hecht and wife, Mr. Eliot Hubbard and wife, Dr. Roland Whitridge, Mr. William Peters, Miss Winslow, Mr. Arthur Pickering, Mr. Arthur Austin, Mr. Donald White, Miss Mary Russell, Mrs. Phœbe Jenks, Mr. Barton Jenks, Dr. Fred Cheney, Mr. I. M. Gaugengigl, Mr. Edward Codman and wife, Dr. F. D. Stackpole, Mrs. Boardman, Miss Abbot, Miss Stackpole, Miss Heloise Hersey, Miss Gilman, and Mr. Frank Jackson. The chief changes to be seen were that Mr. Kneisel had gained flesh and Mr. Loeffler had grown a beard and had curly hair. Mr. Adamowski and Mr. Arkroyd seem to have drunk of the fountain of perpetual youth, and Mr. Nickish's hands were whiter than ever and his hair more volatile. Mrs. Apthorp, with her bonnet on one side and a veil across her forehead, seemed to have less chic than ever, and more flesh. Mrs. Gardner's seats were vacant, excepting when Mr. H. L. Harding took possession of them late in the evening. Mrs. Fiske Warren looked as beautiful as ever, and Mrs. Frank Watson was looking her best, after a summer in Europe.

Mrs. Lillian Nordica sang in the first concert of the Star course at Tremont Temple Monday evening and with great success. Her numbers were an air from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba," a nocturne from Chopin, "Trust On," and the polonaise from "Mignon." She was attired in blue satin, trimmed with brown silk cord. Innumerable diamond ornaments sparkled on her corsage, and a string of the white gems graced her neck. Mr. Gruenberg directed the orchestra.

The first of the Kneisel quartets will be given Monday evening, October 19, in Union Hall. Mr. Xaver Scharwenka will assist. The program includes Mozart's Quartet in C; Schumann's Pianoforte Quartet; and Brahms' Quintet, op. 111, (new).

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET.

SEVENTH SEASON—1891-92.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

Mr. FRANZ KNEISEL, 1st Violin. Mr. LOUIS SVECENSKI, Viola.
Mr. OTTO ROTH, 2d Violin. Mr. ALWIN SCHROEDER. Violoncello

WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF

Mr. XAVER SCHARWENKA.

I. CONCERT.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 19, AT 8 P. M.

PROGRAMME.

MOZART.	QUARTET for STRINGS, in C major. (Kockel.465). (Peters, No. 17.) Adagio: Allegro.—Andante cantibile.— Menuetto (Allegretto).—Allegro molto
SCHUMANN.	PIANO QUARTET, E flat. op. 47. Sostenuto assai.—Allegro ma non troppo.— Scherzo.—Andante cantabile.—Finale, vivace
BRAHMS.	QUINTET, op. 111, in G. Allegro con brio.—Adagio.—Allegretto.—Finale. Second Viola: Mr. O. NOVACEK. (First time in Boston.)

The date of the Second Concert is November 23.

The Piano used is a Behr Bros.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

OCTOBER 17, 1891.

NORDICA'S A SWELL.

She Will Return to London to Live, You Know.

There She is Chummy with the Duchess of Teck.

Nordica wore that morning a wonderful gown of lemon-yellow crêpe with yards of billowy train, and with bands of white guipure insertion from throat to hem in the front. The full sleeves were gathered into deep cuffs striped with the guipure. From the shoulders fell "angel" sleeves, edged with the insertion, which imparted an oddly classical air to this most Parisian of gowns. Innumerable knots of pale blue ribbon with tassels of gold intertwined, decorated the front breadth.

"You like it? Oh, I don't know whether I do or not. Mr. Worth said I must have it, and here it is! I care very little about clothes. I only want to have them pretty and becoming," said this indifferent young woman with the most magnificent wardrobe that Worth could create. I confess that the naïve little speech struck me as hugely funny.

"Do you sing in opera this season, Madam Nordica?"

"I am very sorry to say no. My engagement with Mr. Ellis was made before Mr. Abbey decided what he wanted. By the way, I think somewhat of bringing an opera company of my own over in a year or two, and see if America will not support a first class presentation of opera. I wish that Sir Augustus Harris would bring his Covent Garden company here. Then Boston would learn what opera might be."

"How long since you returned to the stage?"

Wales Shivered.

"In '87. I went to London and made my début there with my first opera, 'La Traviata.' I shall never forget that night. It was icy cold in the theatre, and the people in the boxes were all wrapped in furs. The Prince of Wales was there, and began the evening without wrapping up, but he shivered until he was compelled to put on his fur overcoat. I wore a low-neck gown! To add to the terrors of the situation, when my Alfred came on in the middle of the first act, I discovered that I had never seen him before, and before he had uttered a dozen sounds I knew that he could not sing the part. I had been rehearsing with an excellent tenor who had dropped out at the last moment, as I afterwards learned, because his salary was not paid.

"However, the performance went on quietly until my grand aria was reached, and then I nerved myself to the ordeal. I suppose I succeeded as I was recalled half a dozen times and the evening ended quite brilliantly, notwithstanding the cold weather.

"After that I sang in the 'Golden Legend.' Sir Arthur was so afraid of the result that he did not come to the performance, but the next day sent a note expressing his pleasure in my success. Then they began to talk of oratorio, but they hesitated. I certainly did well in opera—I was successful in the 'Golden Legend'—but oratorio—ah, that was a different thing! However, in fear and trembling, they engaged me to sing in Elijah. I sang and they re-engaged me to sing it on Good Friday, and since then I have been constantly in oratorio work."

Here came an interruption in the pleasing form of a pretty little creature with brown curls, who was introduced as "my niece and namesake, Lillian Morton Baldwin." The child was evidently in tribulation and finally was induced to confide her trouble to "Aunt Lillie". She produced a photograph of her class in school in which she appeared seated on the edge of the card in a rather precarious manner and with the face badly blurred. "Just look at it, Aunt Lillie. You can hardly see me!" said she, with much and pardonable disgust. Aunt Lillie consoled her and sent her away happy.

She Will Live in London.

"Shall you ever return to Boston to live," I asked, although I guessed the answer. "No, I think not," she answered thoughtfully. "I have a delightful circle of friends in London, the social atmosphere is far more artistic than in our younger national life we can even expect, and I like it." To my jesting: "Then you do not scorn the aristocracy?" Nordica replied with a laugh that flashed from lips and eyes, "Oh dear, no; I like fine manners and cultivated minds. When I found myself one of the 25 invited to remain to the garden party at the Duchess of Teck's silver wedding, I did not mind it in the least, I assure you. I have not the slightest objection to sitting down with a party of royalties. On the contrary, I am quite willing to confess to a little feeling of self-gratulation that the girl from Maine, born on the Norton farm, should be thought and acknowledged the peer, by right of American birth and artistic merit, of the loftiest in England."

Here again I admired Nordica's pluck. It is a tremendous triumph to have won such a position, but how many have the courage to avow that they consider such triumphs worth having? And yet we all know that the women would be less than human who did not value them, and the chances are that they would enjoy them in a more ignoble way.

"Did you meet Mary Anderson in England?"

"Only once or twice. How beautiful she is! What a loss to the stage! There never was anything seen like the 'Winter's Tale,' there never can be again! And her countrymen have driven her away. Their newspapers have broken her heart!" She spoke with intense feeling and a sympathy not often given by one great artist to another.

I looked at my watch and was horrified to find how long I had been there, but Madame Nordica is so intensely interesting that, when with her, one "takes no note of time, save by its loss." When I took my leave, I took also from Nordica's fair hands a beautiful bunch of pink carnations—her favorite flower—and "Perle" rosebuds, gathered from the great baskets of flowers with which the room was half filled, the souvenirs of Monday night.

[29]

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1891

Symphony Concert.—The first of the Symphony concerts of the season of '91, '92 was given last Saturday evening in Music Hall. When The trombones and the third and the fourth horns Mr. Nikisch stepped upon the stage he was greeted heartily by the audience. Changes have been made in the personnel of the orchestra. are in the hands of new members. Mr. Heindl, the excellent viola player, is now in the second rank, and Mr. Hekking's place is filled by Mr. Alwin Schroeder. The program was made up of familiar numbers: Beethoven's Overture, "Dedication of the House"; Wagner's "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal," and Schumann's Symphony No. 3 in E flat. As a whole it was not an attractive program, and the performance by the orchestra was coarse and ragged in both the overture and the symphony. The fact that it was the first concert after the vacation, together with the changes made in the orchestra, may account in a measure for the slips in intonation and precision; but it does not account for the repeated indifference of Mr. Nikisch to the intentions of the composers. The audience applauded in a perfunctory manner.

Mrs. Lillian Nordica sang Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," which was beyond her abilities, and "O Hall of Song," from Tannhaeuser. This latter aria she sang with much dignity. She was happier in passages of a declamatory quasi heroic nature than in the portrayal of the purely emotional. She was recalled twice after the Wagner selection.

The program of this evening includes Teschaikowsky's Suite op. 55; the Prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana;" Massenet's overture, "Phèdre," and Beethoven's Minuetto and Finale from the string quartet op. 59, No. 3 (played by all the strings). Mr. Wm. J. Winch will sing the Serenade in the Mascagni Prelude, Schubert's "Der Neugierige," Schumann's "Mondnacht," and Jensen's "Murmelnde Lüftchen."

Last Saturday night brought back society, en masse, to attend the first Symphony concert. Music Hall was full to overflowing. The first balcony was, as has been the recent fashion, the musical center; there were to be seen Mr. B. J. Lang and wife, Mr. Wm. F. Apthorp and wife, Miss Lang, Mr. Arthur Foote, Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mr. W. J. Winch and wife, and Mr. Hiram G. Tucker. The left balcony contained Mr. Harry Fay and wife, Mr. J. S. Dwight, Mr. G. L. Osgood and wife, Mr. Bernard Listemann, Mrs. C. L. Thayer, Mr. J. E. Priest, and Miss Richardson. On the floor were to be seen the Misses Riddle, Mrs. Arthur Nickish, Mr. H. M. Rogers and wife, Mrs. Julius Eichburg, Mrs. T. B. King, Mrs. Mark Hollingsworth, Mr. Hecht and wife, Mr. Eliot Hubbard and wife, Dr. Roland Whitridge, Mr. William Peters, Miss Winslow, Mr. Arthur Pickering, Mr. Arthur Austin, Mr. Donald White, Miss Mary Russell, Mrs. Phœbe Jenks, Mr. Barton Jenks, Dr. Fred Cheney. Mr. I. M. Gaugengigl, Mr. Edward Codman and wife, Dr. F. D. Stackpole, Mrs. Boardman, Miss Abbot, Miss Stackpole, Miss Heloise Hersey, Miss Gilman, and Mr. Frank Jackson. The chief changes to be seen were that Mr. Kneisel had gained flesh and Mr. Loeffler had grown a beard and had curly hair. Mr. Adamowski and Mr. Arkroyd seem to have drunk of the fountain of perpetual youth, and Mr. Nickish's hands were whiter than ever and his hair more volatile. Mrs. Apthorp, with her bonnet on one side and a veil across her forehead, seemed to have less chic than ever, and more flesh. Mrs. Gardner's seats were vacant, excepting when Mr. H. L. Harding took possession of them late in the evening. Mrs. Fiske Warren looked as beautiful as ever, and Mrs. Frank Watson was looking her best, after a summer in Europe.

[illegible]

OCTOBER 17, 1891.

NORDICA'S A SWELL.

She Will Return to London to Live, You Know.

There She is Chummy with the Duchess of Teck.

Nordica wore that morning a wonderful gown of lemon-yellow crêpe with yards of billowy train, and with bands of white guipure insertion from throat to hem in the front. The full sleeves were gathered into deep cuffs striped with the guipure. From the shoulders fell "angel" sleeves, edged with the insertion, which imparted an oddly classical air to this most Parisian of gowns. Innumerable knots of pale blue ribbon with tassels of gold intertwined, decorated the front breadth.

"You like it? Oh, I don't know whether I do or not. Mr. Worth said I must have it, and here it is! I care very little about clothes. I only want to have them pretty and becoming," said this indifferent young woman with the most magnificent wardrobe that Worth could create. I confess that the naive little speech struck me as hugely funny.

"Do you sing in opera this season, Madam Nordica?"

"I am very sorry to say no. My engagement with Mr. Ellis was made before Mr. Abbey decided what he wanted. By the way, I think somewhat of bringing an opera company of my own over in a year or two, and see if America will not support a first class presentation of opera. I wish that Sir Augustus Harris would bring his Covent Garden company here. Then Boston would learn what opera might be."

"How long since you returned to the stage?"

Wales Shivered.

"In '87. I went to London and made my début there with my first opera, 'La Traviata.' I shall never forget that night. It was icy cold in the theatre, and the people in the boxes were all wrapped in furs. The Prince of Wales was there, and began the evening without wrapping up, but he shivered until he was compelled to put on his fur overcoat. I wore a low-neck gown! To add to the terrors of the situation, when my Alfred came on in the middle of the first act, I discovered that I had never seen him before, and before he had uttered a dozen sounds I knew that he could not sing the part. I had been rehearsing with an excellent tenor who had dropped out at the last moment, as I afterwards learned, because his salary was not paid.

"However, the performance went on quietly until my grand aria was reached, and then I nerved myself to the ordeal. I suppose I succeeded as I was recalled half a dozen times and the evening ended quite brilliantly, notwithstanding the cold weather.

"After that I sang in the 'Golden Legend.' Sir Arthur was so afraid of the result that he did not come to the performance, but the next day sent a note expressing his pleasure in my success. Then they began to talk of oratorio, but they hesitated. I certainly did well in opera—I was successful in the 'Golden Legend'—but oratorio—ah, that was a different thing! However, in fear and trembling, they engaged me to sing in Elijah. I sang and they re-engaged me to sing it on Good Friday, and since then I have been constantly in oratorio work."

Here came an interruption in the pleasing form of a pretty little creature with brown curls, who was introduced as "my niece and namesake, Lillian Morton Baldwin." The child was evidently in tribulation and finally was induced to confide her trouble to "Aunt Lillie". She produced a photograph of her class in school in which she appeared seated on the edge of the card in a rather precarious manner and with the face badly blurred. "Just look at it, Aunt Lillie. You can hardly see me!" said she, with much and pardonable disgust. Aunt Lillie consoled her and sent her away happy.

She Will Live in London.

"Shall you ever return to Boston to live," I asked, although I guessed the answer. "No, I think not," she answered thoughtfully. "I have a delightful circle of friends in London, the social atmosphere is far more artistic than in our younger national life we can even expect, and I like it." To my jesting: "Then you do not scorn the aristocracy?" Nordica replied with a laugh that flashed from lips and eyes, "Oh dear, no; I like fine manners and cultivated minds. When I found myself one of the 25 invited to remain to the garden party at the Duchess of Teck's silver wedding, I did not mind it in the least, I assure you. I have not the slightest objection to sitting down with a party of royalties. On the contrary, I am quite willing to confess to a little feeling of self-gratulation that the girl from Maine, born on the Norton farm, should be thought and acknowledged the peer, by right of American birth and artistic merit, of the loftiest in England."

Here again I admired Nordica's pluck. It is a tremendous triumph to have won such a position, but how many have the courage to avow that they consider such triumphs worth having? And yet we all know that the women would be less than human who did not value them, and the chances are that they would enjoy them in a more ignoble way.

"Did you meet Mary Anderson in England?"

"Only once or twice. How beautiful she is! What a loss to the stage! There never was anything seen like the 'Winter's Tale,' there never can be again! And her countrymen have driven her away. Their newspapers have broken her heart!" She spoke with intense feeling and a sympathy not often given by one great artist to another.

I looked at my watch and was horrified to find how long I had been there, but Madame Nordica is so intensely interesting that, when with her, one "takes no note of time, save by its loss." When I took my leave, I took also from Nordica's fair hands a beautiful bunch of pink carnations—her favorite flower—and "Perle" rosebuds, gathered from the great baskets of flowers with which the room was half filled, the souvenirs of Monday night.

Six quartets, composed in Vienna during the years 1782-85, and dedicated to his master, Josef Haydn, are the highest expressions of Mozart's genius in this form. The quartet in C major (465 K) was the last one of these written. In number, Mozart's quartets are fewer than Haydn's, though Mozart was the more rapid writer, and both lived in Vienna at a time when chamber music was earnestly followed. As Haydn (who gave the quartet characteristic form) was at first met with suspicion, so likewise Mozart—his follower and contemporary, who with settled purpose, renounced the genial master's fanciful style (notably in the quartets 1782-85) for one more broad—found himself misunderstood. A kind critic (Vienna 1787) said: "It is a pity that in his truly artistic and beautiful compositions, Mozart should carry his effort after originality so far, to the detriment of the sentiment and heart of his works. His new quartets, dedicated to Haydn, are much too highly spiced to be palatable for any length of time." These are strange words to the generation who listen to Schubert, Schumann and Brahms. Among musicians and connoisseurs the new quartets were at first rejected. Inaccurate, some said, contrary to all rule and euphony, while the introduction to the one in C major produced a veritable riot among the critics, Haydn merely saying that, "if Mozart wrote it, he must have had his reasons."

In his great work on Mozart, Otto Jahn treats of the quartets with singular clearness, and the exhaustive character of his research is everywhere shown. To quote him will be profitable. Of the six quartets, he says; "An equal wealth of characterization and technical elaboration meets us in the comparison of the separate movements. The ground-plan of the first movement is the usual one, and the centre of gravity is always the working out at the beginning of the second part, which is therefore distinguished by its length as a principal portion of the movement. The working out of each quartet is peculiar to itself .... in the C major quartet the treatment of the principal subject is indicated at once, but the importance of the modest theme is only made apparent by the harmonic and contrapuntal art of its working out, leading to the expressive climax of the coda and conclusion. The slow movements of the quartets are the mature fruit of deep feeling and masterly skill....The crown of them all in delicacy of form and depth of expression is the andante of the last quartet, in C major; it belongs to those wonderful manifestations of genius which are only of the earth in so far as they take effect upon human minds.... The minuets are characteristic of Mozart's tendencies as opposed to Haydn's....Haydn's are the product of a laughter-loving national life, Mozart's give the tone of good society. ....The finales have more meaning and emphasis than has hitherto been the case in Mozart's instrumental compositions. Three of them are in rondo form—the C major being one— quick easy-flowing movements, rich in graceful motifs and interesting features in the working out." Referring in particular to the C major quartet, Jahn says: "The frame of mind expressed in it is a noble manly cheerfulness, rising in the andante to an almost supernatural serenity. The sharp accents of the first and second movements, the struggling agony of the trio in the minuet the wonderful depth of beauty in the subject of the finale, startling us by its entry, first in E flat and then in A flat major, are perhaps the most striking illustrations of this; but the introduction stands forth as an element which gives birth to all the happy serenity of the work. The contrast between the troubled depressed phrase, and the shrill agitated one, has a direct effect upon the hearer; both phrases have one solution. The manner in which they are opposed to each other and the devices by which their opposition is thrown into strong relief, are of unusual, but by no means unjustifiable harshness. But the goal is not reached by one bound; no sooner does serenity seem to be attained than the recurrence of the b draws the clouds together again and peace and the power of breathing and moving freely are only won by slow and painful degrees."

Of the last six quartets, Leopold Mozart writes:—"They are a little easier than the others, but always perfectly composed." The "little easier," nevertheless, hardly seems to apply to the No. 6, in C major, about the opening largo of which there has been so much controversy. The celebrated Italian musician, Sarti, the master of Cherubini, in some critical remarks on the quartets observed: —"Si piu far di piu per stonare gli professori?"—("can more be done to put the players out of tune?")! And so all original musical inventors have been judged by pedants.

It is noteworthy that Schumann composed but one pianoforte quartet, and but one pianoforte quintet; that both are in the same key (E flat major), and both were written in the same year (1842). The period just named is not less remarkable in the master's history than that (1840) which has been called his "year of song," when no less than one hundred and thirty-eight lieder flowed from his impassioned pen, under the inspiration of a happy love. After that great outburst, and following his marriage in September of the same year, Schumann rose to higher artistic things than ever before. Turning from the piano, which had become, as he himself said, "too narrow for his thoughts," he composed (1841) the Symphony in B flat (No.1,) the Overture, Scherzo and Finale in E (of which the Finale was remodelled in 1845, and the whole published as op. 52), and the Symphony in D minor (No. 4), which did not receive its final touches till 1851, being then produced as op. 120. But while thus characteristically limiting himself to one class of composition, it was only for a time. In 1842, the master just as eagerly turned to chamber music; writing not only the two great works named at the outset of these remarks, but also the three string quartets (op. 41), and the four "Fantasiestücke" (op. 88) for piano, violin and violoncello. It is strikingly indicative of the zest with which Schumann turned into new artistic paths, that the year 1842 witnessed the production of so many masterpieces, destined to have no successors from the same pen.

The following humorous estimate of the Schumann piano quartet (though conceived in absolute seriousness) originated in England: "The first part of the concert had produced no work for the violoncello, whose entry was now at once felt. The quartet opens with a slow procession of minims, with a halt and call of invitation, after which it dashes off into a free wild movement, with romantic leads for the several instruments; again it quiets down, and finishes with a burst as of compressed fire fortissimo. The violoncello and pianoforte start the dancing Scherzo, in the course of which is introduced a chromatic meditation by the tenor and a most difficult bit of trio, with discords and sparks of pizzicato notes; the slow movement which follows is thoroughly characteristic of Schumann, most beautiful and glowing, but full of syncopation and change of time—violin and tenor at the close ascending and descending together; the tenor, after leading to the great Finale, starts off with a spirited theme, in which the others join. This dies down, and again passes through movements as of a troubled sea, from which it bursts forth with struggles and arpeggios, and ends in its complete triumphant re-assertion."

On the occasion of its production in Vienna about one year ago, Edward Hanslick wrote the following estimate of the new Brahms quintet:

The Rosé quartet-party brought forward at their first performance a new and as yet unpublished string quintet (with two violas) by Johannes Brahms. A better beginning could not have been made. The new work is of that sweet clear ripeness which only the union of complete mastery and undiminished invention with a harmoniously perfect insight into life can produce. In sentiment and material it resembles Brahms' latest works of chamber-music, in which we so gladly praise the beautiful warm-hearted solidity of the subject-matter,

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1891

SYMPHONY CONCERT.—The first of the Symphony concerts of the season of '91, '92 was given last Saturday evening in Music Hall. When The trombones and the third and the fourth horns Mr. Nikisch stepped upon the stage he was greeted heartily by the audience. Changes have been made in the personnel of the orchestra. are in the hands of new members. Mr. Heindl, the excellent viola player, is now in the second rank, and Mr. Hekking's place is filled by Mr. Alwin Schroeder. The program was made up of familiar numbers: Beethoven's Overture, "Dedication of the House"; Wagner's "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal," and Schumann's Symphony No. 3 in E flat. As a whole it was not an attractive program, and the performance by the orchestra was coarse and ragged in both the overture and the symphony. The fact that it was the first concert after the vacation, together with the changes made in the orchestra, may account in a measure for the slips in intonation and precision; but it does not account for the repeated indifference of Mr. Nikisch to the intentions of the composers. The audience applauded in a perfunctory manner.

Mrs. Lillian Nordica sang Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," which was beyond her abilities, and "O Hall of Song," from Tannhaeuser. This latter aria she sang with much dignity. She was happier in passages of a declamatory quasi heroic nature than in the portrayal of the purely emotional. She was recalled twice after the Wagner selection.

The program of this evening includes Teschaikowsky's Suite op. 55; the Prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana;" Massenet's overture, "Phèdre," and Beethoven's Minuetto and Finale from the string quartet op. 59, No. 3 (played by all the strings). Mr. Wm. J. Winch will sing the Serenade in the Mascagni Prelude, Schubert's "Der Neugierige," Schumann's "Mondnacht," and Jensen's "Murmelude Lüftchen."

Last Saturday night brought back society, en masse, to attend the first Symphony concert. Music Hall was full to overflowing. The first balcony was, as has been the recent fashion, the musical center; there were to be seen Mr. B. J. Lang and wife, Mr. Wm. F. Apthorp and wife, Miss Lang, Mr. Arthur Foote, Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mr. W. J. Winch and wife, and Mr. Hiram G. Tucker. The left balcony contained Mr. Harry Fay and wife, Mr. J. S. Dwight, Mr. G. L. Osgood and wife, Mr. Bernard Listemann, Mrs. C. L. Thayer, Mr. J. E. Priest, and Miss Richardson. On the floor were to be seen the Misses Riddle, Mrs. Arthur Nickish, Mr. H. M. Rogers and wife, Mrs. Julius Eichburg, Mrs. T. B. King, Mrs. Mark Hollingsworth, Mr. Hecht and wife, Mr. Eliot Hubbard and wife, Dr. Roland Whitridge, Mr. William Peters, Miss Winslow, Mr. Arthur Pickering, Mr. Arthur Austin, Mr. Donald White, Miss Mary Russell, Mrs. Phœbe Jenks, Mr. Barton Jenks, Dr. Fred Cheney. Mr. I. M. Gaugengigl, Mr. Edward Codman and wife, Dr. F. D. Stackpole, Mrs. Boardman, Miss Abbot, Miss Stackpole, Miss Heloise Hersey, Miss Gilman, and Mr. Frank Jackson. The chief changes to be seen were that Mr. Kneisel had gained flesh and Mr. Loeffler had grown a beard and had curly hair. Mr. Adamowski and Mr. Arkroyd seem to have drunk of the fountain of perpetual youth, and Mr. Nickish's hands were whiter than ever and his hair more volatile. Mrs. Apthorp, with her bonnet on one side and a veil across her forehead, seemed to have less chic than ever, and more flesh. Mrs. Gardner's seats were vacant, excepting when Mr. H. L. Harding took possession of them late in the evening. Mrs. Fiske Warren looked as beautiful as ever, and Mrs. Frank Watson was looking her best, after a summer in Europe.

---

the continuity of the sentiment, and the admirable conciseness of the form. More and more Brahms seems to concentrate himself; more and more consciously does he find his strength in the expression of healthy, proportionately simple feelings. A full emotional life works in them, without strain, without exaggeration. There is nothing of that self-conscious rending to pieces, that mysterious tone-painting, and "dramatic" representation with which ambitious semi-geniuses of the present day furnish us even in the domain of pure instrumental music. The beauty which is compatible even with the harsh as well as with the passionate is, with Brahms, coming more and more consciously and purely to the front. Herein he forms just the contrast to the Liszt-Wagner and to the Young-Russian and Norwegian schools, to whom a striking expression used with reference to the "Impressionists" in painting may be applied—they are perpetually afraid of producing something beautiful. Brahms' chamber-music of the last ten to fifteen years reminds me in its effect very much of the Beethoven of the second period: the resemblance does not lie in single features, but in the general character, in the whole atmosphere, which breathes upon us from them with such beneficently gentle force. In this temper too, in all probability, Brahms seems likely to continue. He has performed just the opposite journey to Beethoven—from storm to peace, from darkness to light. When Beethoven wrote his last quartets, those grand dramas of pessimism and irreconcilable humor, he was just the age of the Brahms of to-day. What a contrast, with such indisputably inner resemblance! Perhaps it is only individual taste, making no claim to universal acceptance, which makes me think that Brahms always appears most perfect in his chamber music. Always apart from the German Requiem which stands quite alone and above everything else, I find Brahms, as an inventive and executive force; as the most intimate blending of individual and yet universally human subject-matter with beautiful form, most successful in the B flat Sextett, the string and piano quartets, the F major Quintet, the violin sonatas. Among the works in which I find Brahms, not his boldest or most original, but nevertheless at his best, I count the new quintet.

The first movement, an Allegro con brio in G major 9-8 tempo, is thoroughly splendid. With what victorious joy the theme bursts forth in the violoncello amid the rustling tremolo of the violins; and hereupon the gentle melody of the counter subject sung by the two violas, and the reply of the violins in a charming yielding descent on the major seventh. How artistically, and yet without any torturing, are the principal and subordinate themes varied in the working out: almost always in surprising fashion, and yet again as though they could not come in any other way. The Adagio, a melancholy song in D minor, with a somewhat Slavonic flavor, is a gentle and heartfelt complaint. It is followed by an exceedingly charming Allegretto in G minor, with a lovely rocking Trio in G major, after the fashion of most of Brahms' Scherzos, not strictly playful or joyous, but lounging in a comfortable fashion, as though singing on its way. The finale, which from a slightly veiled key of B minor quickly finds its way to the tonic G major, is a sharply rhythmical phrase in 2-4 time of slightly Hungarian color. It makes its effect less by the importance of its themes than by its general character, which with its cheerful and at last quite popular joyousness carries everything away with it.

Notes by G. H. Wilson.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

OCTOBER 17, 1891.

NORDICA'S A SWELL.

She Will Return to London to Live, You Know.

There She is Chummy with the Duchess of Teck.

Nordica wore that morning a wonderful gown of lemon-yellow crêpe with yards of billowy train, and with bands of white guipure insertion from throat to hem in the front. The full sleeves were gathered into deep cuffs striped with the guipure. From the shoulders fell "angel" sleeves, edged with the insertion, which imparted an oddly classical air to this most Parisian of gowns. Innumerable knots of pale blue ribbon with tassels of gold intertwined, decorated the front breadth.

"You like it? Oh, I don't know whether I do or not. Mr. Worth said I must have it, and here it is! I care very little about clothes. I only want to have them pretty and becoming," said this indifferent young woman with the most magnificent wardrobe that Worth could create. I confess that the naïve little speech struck me as hugely funny.

"Do you sing in opera this season, Madam Nordica?"

"I am very sorry to say no. My engagement with Mr. Ellis was made before Mr. Abbey decided what he wanted. By the way, I think somewhat of bringing an opera company of my own over in a year or two, and see if America will not support a first class presentation of opera. I wish that Sir Augustus Harris would bring his Covent Garden company here. Then Boston would learn what opera might be."

"How long since you returned to the stage?"

Wales Shivered.

"In '87. I went to London and made my début there with my first opera, 'La Traviata.' I shall never forget that night. It was icy cold in the theatre, and the people in the boxes were all wrapped in furs. The Prince of Wales was there, and began the evening without wrapping up, but he shivered until he was compelled to put on his fur overcoat. I wore a low-neck gown! To add to the terrors of the situation, when my Alfred came on in the middle of the first act, I discovered that I had never seen him before, and before he had uttered a dozen sounds I knew that he could not sing the part. I had been rehearsing with an excellent tenor who had dropped out at the last moment, as I afterwards learned, because his salary was not paid.

"However, the performance went on quietly until my grand aria was reached, and then I nerved myself to the ordeal. I suppose I succeeded as I was recalled half a dozen times and the evening ended quite brilliantly, notwithstanding the cold weather.

"After that I sang in the 'Golden Legend.' Sir Arthur was so afraid of the result that he did not come to the performance, but the next day sent a note expressing his pleasure in my success. Then they began to talk of oratorio, but they hesitated. I certainly did well in opera—I was successful in the 'Golden Legend'—but oratorio—ah, that was a different thing! However, in fear and trembling, they engaged me to sing in Elijah. I sang and they re-engaged me to sing it on Good Friday, and since then I have been constantly in oratorio work."

Here came an interruption in the pleasing form of a pretty little creature with brown curls, who was introduced as "my niece and namesake, Lillian Morton Baldwin." The child was evidently in tribulation and finally was induced to confide her trouble to "Aunt Lillie". She produced a photograph of her class in school in which she appeared seated on the edge of the card in a rather precarious manner and with the face badly blurred. "Just look at it, Aunt Lillie. You can hardly see me!" said she, with much and pardonable disgust. Aunt Lillie consoled her and sent her away happy.

She Will Live in London.

"Shall you ever return to Boston to live," I asked, although I guessed the answer. "No, I think not," she answered thoughtfully. "I have a delightful circle of friends in London, the social atmosphere is far more artistic than in our younger national life we can even expect, and I like it." To my jesting: "Then you do not scorn the aristocracy?" Nordica replied with a laugh that flashed from lips and eyes, "Oh dear, no; I like fine manners and cultivated minds. When I found myself one of the 25 invited to remain to the garden party at the Duchess of Teck's silver wedding, I did not mind it in the least, I assure you. I have not the slightest objection to sitting down with a party of royalties. On the contrary, I am quite willing to confess to a little feeling of self-gratulation that the girl from Maine, born on the Norton farm, should be thought and acknowledged the peer, by right of American birth and artistic merit, of the loftiest in England."

Here again I admired Nordica's pluck. It is a tremendous triumph to have won such a position, but how many have the courage to avow that they consider such triumphs worth having? And yet we all know that the women would be less than human who did not value them, and the chances are that they would enjoy them in a more ignoble way.

"Did you meet Mary Anderson in England?"

"Only once or twice. How beautiful she is! What a loss to the stage! There never was anything seen like the 'Winter's Tale,' there never can be again! And her countrymen have driven her away. Their newspapers have broken her heart!" She spoke with intense feeling and a sympathy not often given by one great artist to another.

I looked at my watch and was horrified to find how long I had been there, but Madame Nordica is so intensely interesting that, when with her, one "takes no note of time, save by its loss." When I took my leave, I took also from Nordica's fair hands a beautiful bunch of pink carnations—her favorite flower—and "Perle" rosebuds, gathered from the great baskets of flowers with which the room was half filled, the souvenirs of Monday night.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, OCT. 18, 1891

THE SYMPHONIES.

FIRST CONCERT.

The present season of Symphony concerts (the eleventh season) was inaugurated at Music hall Saturday evening, October 10, by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch. It is superfluous to say the hall was completely filled with the fashion, wealth, culture and music-loving common folk. The wealth and fashion occupied most of the floor and front tiers of the first balcony, while the real appreciators and common folk were less prominent in the back tiers. The orchestra has undergone but few changes in its general make-up, and with one exception the changes are no doubt for the better, although just yet, not quite apparent.

The entrée of Conductor Nikisch was signalled by the usual generous applause, though it did not reach an ovation. Mr. Nikisch looked hearty and well. He received the applause with that becoming dignity and posing stiffness for which he is somewhat noted, although there was noticeably more flexibility about his "entrée movements" than formerly. From an elevated and lofty position we commanded an excellent view of the entire house, seeing every thing worth seeing, and hearing considerably more than we wished to. Here is the programme:

Overture, "Dedication of the House," Beethoven; aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhäuser," Wagner; Symphony in E flat, No. 3 (Rheinish), Schumann. Mme. Lillian Nordica was the singer.

The very first beat showed lack of confidence and decision on the part of the orchestra in their leader, for they came in behind it, after it had passed. It was the same with several succeeding measures. Why was this and what the cause? There certainly are not new men enough to result in such a state of affairs. There have been ample rehearsals to overcome all the difficulties contained in the overture, and yet it was coarsely done, almost from beginning to end. In the fugue movement the brass was decidedly brassy, the men apparently blowing till they were purple outside and in. It was terrific to the hearing and nerves. If the instruments had been in better tune, matters would have been bettered somewhat. To make the din still more unbearable the contra basses sawed away for dear life, as if their very existence depended on the amount of noise they could produce. All in all, the overture fared worse than we ever remember to have heard it.

Madame Nordica was greeted with genuine applause, for she is a favorite here, having received much of her early education in Boston, though she is a Farmington, Maine, girl. The madame has the wonderful advantage of possessing a fine stage presence. This, with her elegant gown and outside paraphernalia, created as much enthusiasm as her singing, though she really sings well. She possesses a clear, ringing voice, possibly somewhat devoid of real sweetness. It is well cultivated, and this, with other brilliant qualities, go to make her a pronounced success. Her singing evidently pleased the large audience, for they called her out again and again. But she only bowed her acknowledgements.

The Parsifal music was quite satisfactorily performed, though it might be improved; no doubt after the orchestra have been together a little longer they will play better. They are not yet settled down to real hard, earnest work. It is too soon after vacation.

Madame Nordica's second selection was even more successful than the first. She really sang it better. She was called out three times at its conclusion, and was, as a matter of course, presented with choice flowers.

The Schumann E flat symphony was much overstrained from the brass. But this we hope, will be remedied in time.

JAMES M. TRACY.

The Adamowski quartette will give three concerts in Union hall on Monday evenings, Oct. 26, Nov. 16, and Dec. 21. Among the selections performed will be a horn trio, by Brahms, a piano quartet, by Dvorak, and quartets by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. Subscription list now open at Music hall.

OPENING OF THE STAR COURSE.

The popular Star course of entertainments at Tremont Temple opened last Monday evening in admirable form. The house was as usual filled throughout and the audiences gave enthusiastic welcome to the star attraction—Mme. Nordica. She was supported by an orchestra under the able direction of Herr Ed. Gruenberg. The programme opened with an excellently rendered organ solo by Mr. T. P. Ryder, and the remainder of the selections were so well chosen and interpreted as to hold continuous interest. The orchestra was an excellent one, and all of its numbers were adequately rendered. Schumann's "Traumerei," Strauss's "Blue Danube" waltzes, Gillet's "Loin du Bal" and the entr'acte music from "Mignon" were especially attractive, and the two latter were repeated in response to urgent applause.

Mme. Nordica was in splendid voice and delighted her audience. So continued was the appreciation given to each number that she sang three encores. An aria from Gounod's "La Reine de Saba" was her first selection, a "Notturno" by Chopin the second, and the polacca from "Mignon" the third. The "Notturno" was accompanied by Mr. Zach and Mr. Schulz on the piano and 'cello, and it was beautifully done. The deliciously sweet, clear tones of her splendidly handled voice mingled with the notes from the 'cello and piano with the charm of true music. As an encore she sang "O, loving heart, trust on," rendering it with admirable sincerity and expression. The [illegible] was most brilliant and effective; her [illegible] is a pleasant little song which she [illegible] with exquisite taste and [illegible]

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 18, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY.

The programme of the second rehearsal and concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra contained a fair share of novelties.

Tschaikowsky's Suite opus 55 for full orchestra was the opening number, and was performed for the first time in Boston. It is divided into four movements. The first an "Elegie," has for its theme a fresh, charming melody quietly given out by the strings, with which the wood-wind and horns are soon combined. After extended treatment of the melody, some slight contrapuntal development occurs which leads through a fine crescendo to a return of the theme, now played by the full orchestra fortissimo. Then the close draws near, a short solo on the English horn is heard, and the movement, in effect a song, ends as tranquilly as it began. Next comes a "Valse Melancholique," which begins with weird, sombre minor harmonies, rendered more striking by combinations of the low wood-wind, 'celli and double-basses. After a few measures the first theme is given out by three flutes, and mostly upon this material an extended period is built. No decided waltz rhythm is noticeable until the appearance of the middle part, which is strong in accent, and brusque in character.

The first part then returns, bringing the movement to a melancholy close. No thoughts of the waltz, as most people of Western civilization regard that diversion, are aroused by Tschaikowsky's gloomy strains; but it may be that among the oppressed natives of his own mysterious country, there are to be discovered those who find rhythmic inspiration in such mournful measures.

The scherzo brings relief with its nervous, animated rhythm in dotted notes and triplets, and its fascinating orchestration. Effective tone coloring is produced by the skilful and fanciful use of various instruments, including the trumpets, triangle, snare drum and cymbels; and though its humor is not of the lightest, the movement is in a degree enlivening, and serves to prepare the mind for the brilliant, imposing finale. This consists of a theme and twelve variations, which it is unnecessary to refer to in detail. The theme is a simple, pleasant melody; and in the variations are displayed much ingenuity of construction, effectiveness of contrast, and gorgeousness of orchestration. The flute, English horn and violin appear as solo instruments; and the final variation in polacca form, in which the full strength of the orchestra is used with splendid effect, brings the work to a stirring end. Although in the suite form, Tschaikowsky is necessarily prevented from giving full rein to the strong imagination and passionate feeling with which other works of his are deeply imbued, this opus 55 is a characteristic and worthy product of his pen; of a kind that might be expected to come from the hand of the original yet not eccentric, bold yet not reckless genius who stands today first among Russian composers. It was finely played, the work of the orchestra being far in advance of that of last week.

The remaining novelty was the prelude to Mascagni's opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana," of which it can be said that it has at last received an adequate performance in this city. Mr. Nikisch's reading was simply a stroke of genius, his tempi and nuances, and the breadth and dignity of his conception of the music leaving nothing to be desired. The orchestra also played with real enthusiasm, the quality of tone produced by the strings being positively thrilling. "Turridu's" serenade, which is a part of the prelude, and at the theatre is sung behind the curtain, was here sung in the ante-room by Mr. W. J. Winch, to the harp accompaniment of Mr. Schnecker, his place in the orchestra being taken by a lady. Mr. Winch rendered the passionate love song very expressively and dramatically, though the natural musical quality of his voice was somewhat impaired through the necessity of making himself heard at such a distance. The whole performance thoroughly aroused the audience and Mr. Winch was heartily recalled. Later in the evening he sang three songs, "The Inquirer," Schubert; "Moonlight," Schumann, and "Whispering Breezes," Jensen, to Mr. Nikisch's accompaniment, in a manner instinct with taste, musical feeling and artistic simplicity of style.

Following the prelude came the menuetto and fugue from Beethoven's string quartette, opus 59, in C, played by all the strings including the double basses. This number served well the apparent purpose of its introduction—to give the string players some solid practice—and the fugue was certainly very effective. The concert closed with Massenet's overture to "Phedre," a brilliant work, written in the conventional concert overture form, but on the whole rather noisy and theatrical.

CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

At the Sanders Theatre, in Cambridge, the first of the regular series of eight concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last Thursday evening. The programme, well arranged, though containing no novelties, had for its first number Beethoven's Symphony, in F, No. 8. Throughout its performance the orchestra displayed the same lack of finish technically that characterized its work last week in Boston. The first and last movements were roughly played. The popular allegretto scherzando, however, was tastefully and smoothly given, and the menuetto was the best played of all. In the arrangement by Bachrich, of a Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte of Bach's, for string orchestra, the men retrieved themselves. The first movement was broadly played, and the Adagio was so expressively rendered as to call forth much applause. The gavotte also was made rhythmically effective. Altogether, this was the most satisfactorily performed orchestral number of the programme, which closed with a dramatic reading of Schumann's overture to "Genoveva." Mr. Elliot Hubbard, the soloist of the evening, was first heard in an aria from Marschner's "Hans Heiling." The music proved too exacting for his rather light baritone voice, and as a whole his efforts were unsatisfactory; still it may be said that he attained perhaps a larger degree of success than he has hitherto in music so dramatic in character. In three songs by Brahms, Franz and Schumann, which he sang to Mr. Nikisch's accompaniment, he gave much pleasure to the audience, who heartily recalled him.

T. P. CURRIER.

BOSTON, OCTOBER [illegible]

The Symphony Concert--Soloist, William J. Winch.

"Wang" Makes a Great Success at the Globe The "Cavalleria Rusticana" Enjoyed at the Tremont -The Kneisel Quartet Concerts—Mr. Petersilea's Analytical Recitals--Notes.

Mascagni and Tschaikowsky divided the honors at last evening's symphony concert, the programme including the "Cavalleria Rusticana" prelude and Tschaikowsky's suite op. 55, both novelties to the patrons of these concerts. These numbers and the "Phedre" overture as an ending made the programme approach very nearly the popular order, but the Beethoven "Minuetta and Finale" from the string quartet op. 53, No. 3 in C, saved such a catastrophe.

Mr. William J. Winch was the soloist, and his singing of the serenade in the Mascagni prelude gained him a great ovation. He sang the number in the ante-room with Mr. Schuecker, the harpist, as accompanist, the harp part in the orchestra for this number being played by Miss Shaw. The interest awakened in the music of Mascagni in this work has become so general that the selection made a most important feature of the programme, and the orchestral score had an interpretation that revealed its beauties in the most satisfactory way. It was a source of keen delight to listen to such a performance of the now familiar prelude, and the pleasure it gave the audience found quick and enthusiastic expression.

An equal interest was aroused by the playing of the new Tschaikowsky suite, which had its first hearing here on this occasion. The "Elegie," which makes its first movement, does not appear to be the result of the spontaneous outpourings of the composer's mind, and the "Waltz Melancholique," which follows, is aptly named. The third movement is a "scherzo," and in this the bright, jolly, fascinating work of the composer creates the greatest enjoyment, all the claptrap materials of the band being used to increase the effect of this portion of the suite. The theme, and 12 variations on the same, making the final movement, however, gives an ending to the suite which puts the unmistakable stamp of genius upon it. The possibilities of the tone colorings of the modern orchestra appear to have been well nigh exhausted in the ingenious combinations used in these variations, and the tuneful theme assumes characteristics of the most widely varied forms. In the performance of this number the excellence of the leading members of the orchestra were prominently displayed, and the solo violin playing of Mr. Kneisel, the trio for flutes and the work done by the English horn player were especially enjoyable.

Mr. Winch's songs, with the piano accompaniments of Mr. Nikisch, Schubert's "Der Neugierige," Schumann's "Moudnacht" and Jensen's "Murmelndes Luftchhen were highly artistic vocal efforts, and gained this most satisfying singer a well merited recall after he had concluded the group.

The work done by the string players in the Beethoven selection might have been better, but the ill success attending this number was well nigh forgotten in the splendid performance of the "Phedre" overture.

Next Saturday evening the soloist will be Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the new 'cello player, and the programme will be E. A. McDowell's suite, op. 42, Volkmann's 'cello concerto in A minor and Brahms' fourth symphony.

The first of the Kneisel quartet concerts is to be given at Union Hall tomorrow evening, with the assistance of Xaver Scharwenka, pianist. The quartet includes Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; L. Svecenski, viola; Alwin Schroeder, violoncello. The programme will be: Mozart, quartet in C major. Schumann, piano quartet. Brahms, quintet in G major. First performance in America.

The musical season which is now opening in New York is going to be one of the most prolific ever known in that city. There will be about 100 orchestral concerts, provided mostly by four orchestras—the New York Philharmonic Society, conducted by Anton Seidl; the Metropolitan orchestra, conducted by the same artist; the New York Symphony orchestra, conducted by Walter Damrosch, and the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Arthur Nikisch.

Among the audience at the symphony rehearsals I saw Mrs. Royal E. Robbins, Dr. O. W. Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Curtis, Mrs. Agassiz, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Higginson, Mr. Francis Bartlett and his daughter, Mrs. Herbert Sears, Mr. W. F. Weld, Mrs. Weld, Mr. C. F. Sprague and Miss May Pratt, Mrs. George B. Shattuck, Miss Elsie Perkins, Mrs. Charles Fairchild and her two daughters, Miss Susie Lyman, Mr. Harry Wainwright, Mr. W. P. Blake, Dr. Sturgis Bigelow, Rev. Fr. Bodfish, Mr. John D. Williams, Col. Livermore and daughter, and Mr. Edmund Dwight.

SUNDAY, OC

SYMPHONY AND SONG.

Tschaikowski Harmonies and Mascagni Melodies.

Another Week of Light Opera at the Globe and Tremont Theatres.

Coming Treats for Music Lovers—Gossip About Players and Singers.

The second of the Symphony concerts, given in Music Hall last evening, was enjoyed by an assemblage no less notable than the gathering which welcomed the beginning of the series a week previous.

Conductor Nikisch's programme included the first performances by his band of a suite by Tschaikowsky, selections from a Beethoven string quartet and the prelude from "Cavalleria Rusticana."

Portions of the suite and the prelude in its entirety proved delicious treats to the audience, and won at both afternoon rehearsal and evening concert uncommon demonstrations of approval.

Tschaikowsky's name has frequently occupied a place of prominence on symphony programmes, and the hearing of his suite, op. 55, certainly strengthened the regard and admiration already felt for this master's spirited style of scoring and grand command of harmonic effects.

The suite consists of four movements, elegie, valse melancholique, scherzo and finale, the latter 12 variations on an exquisite theme.

The first two movements, although marked by strength and originality, are not particularly noteworthy, as compared with the striking beauties of the scherzo and the variations. The scherzo is brilliant and dashing in style, and is scored for full orchestra, with triangle, drum and tambourine added.

The theme is introduced by the first violins and is then successively treated by nearly all the instruments with astonishing variety and brilliancy of effect.

Perhaps the most pleasing of all was the trio for flutes, violins and strings.

It was with genuine delight that the audience listened to the "Cavalleria" prelude.

Although previous performances by other orchestras had won admiration for the work, not before had opportunities been afforded for full appreciation of its beauties.

Mascagni's opera has already been considered at such length that it is unnecessary to now comment upon its wealth of melodic effects originality and grandeur of orchestration.

The prelude includes many of the principal themes of the opera and the tenor's serenade, sung with harp accompaniment, before the curtain raises. Mr. William J. Winch was the soloist, and he was twice recalled to share honors with the orchestra.

Mr. Winch also contributed three songs, with piano accompaniment by Mr. Nikisch. "Der Neugeierige," by Schubert, "Mondnacht," by Schumann, and "Murmeludes Luftchen," by Jensen, were his selections, and each was sung with the refined taste, purity of tone and correctness of technique always prominent in this admirable artist's vocal work. The sweet and delicate melody of the Jensen number was especially enjoyable.

The minuetto and finale from Beethoven's string quartet, op. 59, no. 3, in C made a very good impression for a first hearing, but it belongs to a class of music which gains appreciation from the student rather than the average auditor, at least when presented as a novelty. It was splendidly played by the orchestra.

Massenet's familiar "Phedre" overture brought the enjoyable concert to an end.

Announcements for the next concert are as follows:

E. A. MacDowell.......................Suite, op. 42
(First time in Boston.)
Volkmann....Concerto for violoncello, in A minor
Brahms...............Symphony No. 4, in E minor
Mr. Alwin Schroeder will be the soloist.

——The opening Symphony concert of the winter at Music Hall last week Saturday night, brought out the regular patrons in goodly numbers, who, most of them, occupied seats in the same old locality which they have favored since the first season. The little musical group, smaller, in numbers, however, owing to the absence of several of that set in Europe, occupied seats in the right-hand balcony, near the stage, Mr. and Mrs. Lang, Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Tucker, Mrs. Gardner and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Foote being of the number, while in the opposite balcony the corresponding seats were filled by Mr. S. B. Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. George L. Osgood, Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Allen, Miss Gertrude Edmunds, Mr. Bernard Listemann, Mr. Percival Gassett and other equally well-known musical people On the floor of the hall, in their accustomed seats, were Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Higginson, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Codman, Mme. Agassiz, Dr. and Mrs. F. S. Watson, Mr. and Mrs. Barthold Schlesinger and daughters, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Morse, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Parker, Mrs. Templeman Coolidge, with her uncle, Dr. Sturgis Bigelow; Miss Lowell, Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Andrews, Mr. Frank Jackson, Mr. Gaugengigl, Mr. A. H. Pickering, Mr and Mrs. Henry M. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Cummings, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hecht, Mr. Arthur Austin, Miss Austin and Mr. Jules Jordan, the tenor, who came up from Providence. Mme. Nordica looked every inch a queen in a heavy cream-white brocade, with an open-work Elizabethan collar sewn with pearls. Her fine diamonds glistened from hair, throat and corsage. Her reception was most flattering, as it was Monday night also at the Star course.

——The Adamowski quartet, assisted by Mr. Arthur Foote, will give their first concert a week from tomorrow night at Union Hall. Mr. Adamowski's friends are subscribing in goodly numbers, for this series will be one of the choicest of the winter. Mrs. H. Wyman will sing at Mr. Adamowski's second concert.

——The first Kneisel quartet concert is at Union Hall, tomorrow night, under the management of Mr. C. A. Ellis.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, OCT. 18, 1891

THE SYMPHONIES.

FIRST CONCERT.

The present season of Symphony concerts (the eleventh season) was inaugurated at Music hall Saturday evening, October 10, by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch. It is superfluous to say the hall was completely filled with the fashion, wealth, culture and music-loving common folk. The wealth and fashion occupied most of the floor and front tiers of the first balcony, while the real appreciators and common folk were less prominent in the back tiers. The orchestra has undergone but few changes in its general make-up, and with one exception the changes are no doubt for the better, although just yet, not quite apparent.

The entrée of Conductor Nikisch was signalled by the usual generous applause, though it did not reach an ovation. Mr. Nikisch looked hearty and well. He received the applause with that becoming dignity and posing stiffness for which he is somewhat noted, although there was noticeably more flexibility about his "entrée movements" than formerly. From an elevated and lofty position we commanded an excellent view of the entire house, seeing every thing worth seeing, and hearing considerably more than we wished to. Here is the programme:

Overture, "Dedication of the House," Beethoven; aria, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven; Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; aria from "Tannhäuser," Wagner; Symphony in E flat, No. 3 (Rheinish), Schumann. Mme. Lillian Nordica was the singer.

The very first beat showed lack of confidence and decision on the part of the orchestra in their leader, for they came in behind it, after it had passed. It was the same with several succeeding measures. Why was this and what the cause? There certainly are not new men enough to result in such a state of affairs. There have been ample rehearsals to overcome all the difficulties contained in the overture, and yet it was coarsely done, almost from beginning to end. In the fugue movement the brass was decidedly brassy, the men apparently blowing till they were purple outside and in. It was terrific to the hearing and nerves. If the instruments had been in better tune, matters would have been bettered somewhat. To make the din still more unbearable the contra basses sawed away for dear life, as if their very existence depended on the amount of noise they could produce. All in all, the overture fared worse than we ever remember to have heard it.

Madame Nordica was greeted with genuine applause, for she is a favorite here, having received much of her early education in Boston, though she is a Farmington, Maine, girl. The madame has the wonderful advantage of possessing a fine stage presence. This, with her elegant gown and outside paraphernalia, created as much enthusiasm as her singing, though she really sings well. She possesses a clear, ringing voice, possibly somewhat devoid of real sweetness. It is well cultivated, and this, with other brilliant qualities, go to make her a pronounced success. Her singing evidently pleased the large audience, for they called her out again and again. But she only bowed her acknowledgements.

The Parsifal music was quite satisfactorily performed, though it might be improved; no doubt after the orchestra have been together a little longer they will play better. They are not yet settled down to real hard, earnest work. It is too soon after vacation.

Madame Nordica's second selection was even more successful than the first. She really sang it better. She was called out three times at its conclusion, and was, as a matter of course, presented with choice flowers.

The Schumann E flat symphony was much overstrained from the brass. But this we hope, will be remedied in time.

JAMES M. TRACY.

The Adamowski quartette will give three concerts in Union hall on Monday evenings, Oct. 26, Nov. 16, and Dec. 21. Among the selections performed will be a horn trio, by Brahms, a piano quartet, by Dvorak, and quartets by Tschaikowsky and Novacek. Subscription list now open at Music hall.

OPENING OF THE STAR COURSE.

The popular Star course of entertainments at Tremont Temple opened last Monday evening in admirable form. The house was as usual filled throughout and the audiences gave enthusiastic welcome to the star attraction—Mme. Nordica. She was supported by an orchestra under the able direction of Herr Ed. Gruenberg. The programme opened with an excellently rendered organ solo by Mr. T. P. Ryder, and the remainder of the selections were so well chosen and interpreted as to hold continuous interest. The orchestra was an excellent one, and all of its numbers were adequately rendered. Schumann's "Traumerei," Strauss's "Blue Danube" waltzes, Gillet's "Loin du Bal" and the entr'acte music from "Mignon" were especially attractive, and the two latter were repeated in response to urgent applause.

Mme. Nordica was in splendid voice and delighted her audience. So continued was the appreciation given to each number that she sang three encores. An aria from Gounod's "La Reine de Saba" was her first selection, a "Notturno" by Chopin the second, and the polacca from "Mignon" the third. The "Notturno" was accompanied by Mr. Zach and Mr. Schulz on the piano and 'cello, and it was beautifully done. The deliciously sweet, clear tones of her splendidly handled voice mingled with the notes from the 'cello and piano with the charm of true music. As an encore she sang "O, loving heart, trust on," rendering it with admirable sincerity and expression. The polacca was most brilliant and effective; her encore was a piquant little song which she gave with exquisite taste and telling expressiveness. Mme. Lillian Nordica is a singer whom to hear is inevitably to enjoy. Her voice is so true, so clear, well rounded and perfectly poised.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 18, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY.

The programme of the second rehearsal and concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra contained a fair share of novelties.

Tschaikowsky's Suite opus 55 for full orchestra was the opening number, and was performed for the first time in Boston. It is divided into four movements. The first an "Elegie," has for its theme a fresh, charming melody quietly given out by the strings, with which the wood-wind and horns are soon combined. After extended treatment of the melody, some slight contrapuntal development occurs which leads through a fine crescendo to a return of the theme, now played by the full orchestra fortissimo. Then the close draws near, a short solo on the English horn is heard, and the movement, in effect a song, ends as tranquilly as it began. Next comes a "Valse Melancholique," which begins with weird, sombre minor harmonies, rendered more striking by combinations of the low wood-wind, 'celli and double-basses. After a few measures the first theme is given out by three flutes, and mostly upon this material an extended period is built. No decided waltz rhythm is noticeable until the appearance of the middle part, which is strong in accent, and brusque in character.

The first part then returns, bringing the movement to a melancholy close. No thoughts of the waltz, as most people of Western civilization regard that diversion, are aroused by Tschaikowsky's gloomy strains; but it may be that among the oppressed natives of his own mysterious country, there are to be discovered those who find rhythmic inspiration in such mournful measures.

The scherzo brings relief with its nervous, animated rhythm in dotted notes and triplets, and its fascinating orchestration. Effective tone coloring is produced by the skilful and fanciful use of various instruments, including the trumpets, triangle, snare drum and cymbels; and though its humor is not of the lightest, the movement is in a degree enlivening, and serves to prepare the mind for the brilliant, imposing finale. This consists of a theme and twelve variations, which it is unnecessary to refer to in detail. The theme is a simple, pleasant melody; and in the variations are displayed much ingenuity of construction, effectiveness of contrast, and gorgeousness of orchestration. The flute, English horn and violin appear as solo instruments; and the final variation in polacca form, in which the full strength of the orchestra is used with splendid effect, brings the work to a stirring end. Although in the suite form, Tschaikowsky is necessarily prevented from giving full rein to the strong imagination and passionate feeling with which other works of his are deeply imbued, this opus 55 is a characteristic and worthy product of his pen; of a kind that might be expected to come from the hand of the original yet not eccentric, bold yet not reckless genius who stands today first among Russian composers. It was finely played, the work of the orchestra being far in advance of that of last week.

The remaining novelty was the prelude to Mascagni's opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana," of which it can be said that it has at last received an adequate performance in this city. Mr. Nikisch's reading was simply a stroke of genius, his tempi and nuances, and the breadth and dignity of his conception of the music leaving nothing to be desired. The orchestra also played with real enthusiasm, the quality of tone produced by the strings being positively thrilling. "Turridu's" serenade, which is a part of the prelude, and at the theatre is sung behind the curtain, was here sung in the ante-room by Mr. W. J. Winch, to the harp accompaniment of Mr. Schnecker, his place in the orchestra being taken by a lady. Mr. Winch rendered the passionate love song very expressively and dramatically, though the natural musical quality of his voice was somewhat impaired through the necessity of making himself heard at such a distance. The whole performance thoroughly aroused the audience and Mr. Winch was heartily recalled, Later in the evening he sang three songs, "The Inquirer," Schubert; "Moonlight," Schumann, and "Whispering Breezes," Jensen, to Mr. Nikisch's accompaniment, in a manner instinct with taste, musical feeling and artistic simplicity of style.

Following the prelude came the menuetto and fugue from Beethoven's string quartette, opus 59, in C, played by all the strings including the double basses. This number served well the apparent purpose of its introduction—to give the string players some solid practice—and the fugue was certainly very effective. The concert closed with Massenet's overture to "Phedre," a brilliant work, written in the conventional concert overture form, but on the whole rather noisy and theatrical.

CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

At the Sanders Theatre, in Cambridge, the first of the regular series of eight concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last Thursday evening. The programme, well arranged, though containing no novelties, had for its first number Beethoven's Symphony, in F, No. 8. Throughout its performance the orchestra displayed the same lack of finish technically that characterized its work last week in Boston. The first and last movements were roughly played. The popular allegretto scherzando, however, was tastefully and smoothly given, and the menuetto was the best played of all. In the arrangement by Bachrich, of a Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte of Bach's, for string orchestra, the men retrieved themselves. The first movement was broadly played, and the Adagio was so expressively rendered as to call forth much applause. The gavotte also was made rhythmically effective. Altogether, this was the most satisfactorily performed orchestral number of the programme, which closed with a dramatic reading of Schumann's overture to "Genoveva." Mr. Elliot Hubbard, the soloist of the evening, was first heard in an aria from Marschner's "Hans Heiling." The music proved too exacting for his rather light baritone voice, and as a whole his efforts were unsatisfactory; still it may be said that he attained perhaps a larger degree of success than he has hitherto in music so dramatic in character. In three songs by Brahms, Franz and Schumann, which he sang to Mr. Nikisch's accompaniment, he gave much pleasure to the audience, who heartily recalled him.

T. P. CURRIER.

SUNDAY HE[illegible].

BOSTON, OCTOBER 18, 1891.

The Symphony Concert--Soloist, William J. Winch.

"Wang" Makes a Great Success at the Globe--The "Cavalleria Rusticana" Enjoyed at the Tremont--The Kneisel Quartet Concerts--Mr. Petersilea's Analytical Recitals--Notes.

Mascagni and Tschaikowsky divided the honors at last evening's symphony concert, the programme including the "Cavalleria Rusticana" prelude and Tschaikowsky's suite op. 55, both novelties to the patrons of these concerts. These numbers and the "Phedre" overture as an ending made the programme approach very nearly the popular order, but the Beethoven "Minuetta and Finale" from the string quartet op. 53, No. 3 in C, saved such a catastrophe.

Mr. William J. Winch was the soloist, and his singing of the serenade in the Mascagni prelude gained him a great ovation. He sang the number in the ante-room with Mr. Schuecker, the harpist, as accompanist, the harp part in the orchestra for this number being played by Miss Shaw. The interest awakened in the music of Mascagni in this work has become so general that the selection made a most important feature of the programme, and the orchestral score had an interpretation that revealed its beauties in the most satisfactory way. It was a source of keen delight to listen to such a performance of the now familiar prelude, and the pleasure it gave the audience found quick and enthusiastic expression.

An equal interest was aroused by the playing of the new Tschaikowsky suite, which had its first hearing here on this occasion.

The "Elegie," which makes its first movement, does not appear to be the result of the spontaneous outpourings of the composer's mind, and the "Waltz Melancholique," which follows, is aptly named. The third movement is a "scherzo," and in this the bright, jolly, fascinating work of the composer creates the greatest enjoyment, all the claptrap materials of the band being used to increase the effect of this portion of the suite. The theme, and 12 variations on the same, making the final movement, however, gives an ending to the suite which puts the unmistakable stamp of genius upon it. The possibilities of the tone colorings of the modern orchestra appear to have been well nigh exhausted in the ingenious combinations used in these variations, and the tuneful theme assumes characteristics of the most widely varied forms. In the performance of this number the excellence of the leading members of the orchestra were prominently displayed, and the solo violin playing of Mr. Kneisel, the trio for flutes and the work done by the English horn player were especially enjoyable.

Mr. Winch's songs, with the piano accompaniments of Mr. Nikisch, Schubert's "Der Neugierige," Schumann's "Mondnacht" and Jensen's "Murmelndes Luftchhen were highly artistic vocal efforts, and gained this most satisfying singer a well merited recall after he had concluded the group.

The work done by the string players in the Beethoven selection might have been better, but the ill success attending this number was well nigh forgotten in the splendid performance of the "Phedre" overture.

Next Saturday evening the soloist will be Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the new 'cello player, and the programme will be E. A. McDowell's suite, op. 42, Volkmann's 'cello concerto in A minor and Brahms' fourth symphony.

The first of the Kneisel quartet concerts is to be given at Union Hall tomorrow evening, with the assistance of Xaver Scharwenka, pianist. The quartet includes Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; L. Svecenski, viola; Alwin Schroeder, violoncello. The programme will be: Mozart, quartet in C major. Schumann, piano quartet. Brahms, quintet in G major. First performance in America.

The musical season which is now opening in New York is going to be one of the most prolific ever known in that city. There will be about 100 orchestral concerts, provided mostly by four orchestras—the New York Philharmonic Society, conducted by Anton Seidl; the Metropolitan orchestra, conducted by the same artist; the New York Symphony orchestra, conducted by Walter Damrosch, and the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Arthur Nikisch.

Among the audience at the symphony rehearsals I saw Mrs. Royal E. Robbins, Dr. O. W. Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Curtis, Mrs. Agassiz, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Higginson, Mr. Francis Bartlett and his daughter, Mrs. Herbert Sears, Mr. W. F. Weld, Mrs. Weld, Mr. C. F. Sprague and Miss May Pratt, Mrs. George B. Shattuck, Miss Elsie Perkins, Mrs. Charles Fairchild and her two daughters, Miss Susie Lyman, Mr. Harry Wainwright, Mr. W. P. Blake, Dr. Sturgis Bigelow, Rev. Fr. Bodfish, Mr. John D. Williams, Col. Livermore and daughter, and Mr. Edmund Dwight.

Boston [illegible] Globe.

SUNDAY, OCT[illegible] 18, 1891.

SYMPHONY AND SONG.

Tschaikowski Harmonies and Mascagni Melodies.

Another Week of Light Opera at the Globe and Tremont Theatres.

Coming Treats for Music Lovers—Gossip About Players and Singers.

The second of the Symphony concerts, given in Music Hall last evening, was enjoyed by an assemblage no less notable than the gathering which welcomed the beginning of the series a week previous.

Conductor Nikisch's programme included the first performances by his band of a suite by Tschaikowsky, selections from a Beethoven string quartet and the prelude from "Cavalleria Rusticana."

Portions of the suite and the prelude in its entirety proved delicious treats to the audience, and won at both afternoon rehearsal and evening concert uncommon demonstrations of approval.

Tschaikowsky's name has frequently occupied a place of prominence on symphony programmes, and the hearing of his suite, op. 55, certainly strengthened the regard and admiration already felt for this master's spirited style of scoring and grand command of harmonic effects.

The suite consists of four movements, elegie, valse melancholique, scherzo and finale, the latter 12 variations on an exquisite theme.

The first two movements, although marked by strength and originality, are not particularly noteworthy, as compared with the striking beauties of the scherzo and the variations. The scherzo is brilliant and dashing in style, and is scored for full orchestra, with triangle, drum and tambourine added.

The theme is introduced by the first violins and is then successively treated by nearly all the instruments with astonishing variety and brilliancy of effect.

Perhaps the most pleasing of all was the trio for flutes, violins and strings.

It was with genuine delight that the audience listened to the "Cavalleria" prelude.

Although previous performances by other orchestras had won admiration for the work, not before had opportunities been afforded for full appreciation of its beauties.

Mascagni's opera has already been considered at such length that it is unnecessary to now comment upon its wealth of melodic effects originality and grandeur of orchestration.

The prelude includes many of the principal themes of the opera and the tenor's serenade, sung with harp accompaniment, before the curtain raises. Mr. William J. Winch was the soloist, and he was twice recalled to share honors with the orchestra.

Mr. Winch also contributed three songs, with piano accompaniment by Mr. Nikisch. "Der Neugeierige," by Schubert, "Mondnacht," by Schumann, and "Murmeludes Luftchen," by Jensen, were his selections, and each was sung with the refined taste, purity of tone and correctness of technique always prominent in this admirable artist's vocal work. The sweet and delicate melody of the Jensen number was especially enjoyable.

The minuetto and finale from Beethoven's string quartet, op. 59, no. 3, in C made a very good impression for a first hearing, but it belongs to a class of music which gains appreciation from the student rather than the average auditor, at least when presented as a novelty. It was splendidly played by the orchestra.

Massenet's familiar "Phedre" overture brought the enjoyable concert to an end.

Announcements for the next concert are as follows:

E. A. MacDowell....................Suite, op. 42
(First time in Boston.)
Volkmann....Concerto for violoncello, in A minor
Brahms..............Symphony No. 4, in E minor
Mr. Alwin Schroeder will be the soloist.

—The opening Symphony concert of the winter at Music Hall last week Saturday night, brought out the regular patrons in goodly numbers, who, most of them, occupied seats in the same old locality which they have favored since the first season. The little musical group, smaller, in numbers, however, owing to the absence of several of that set in Europe, occupied seats in the right-hand balcony, near the stage, Mr. and Mrs. Lang, Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Tucker, Mrs. Gardner and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Foote being of the number, while in the opposite balcony the corresponding seats were filled by Mr. S. B. Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. George L. Osgood, Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Allen, Miss Gertrude Edmunds, Mr. Bernard Listemann, Mr. Percival Gassett and other equally well-known musical people. On the floor of the hall, in their accustomed seats, were Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Higginson, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Codman, Mme. Agassiz, Dr. and Mrs. F. S. Watson, Mr. and Mrs. Barthold Schlesinger and daughters, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Morse, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Parker, Mrs. Templeman Coolidge, with her uncle, Dr. Sturgis Bigelow; Miss Lowell, Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Andrews, Mr. Frank Jackson, Mr. Gaugengigl, Mr. A. H. Pickering, Mr and Mrs. Henry M. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Cummings, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hecht, Mr. Arthur Austin, Miss Austin and Mr. Jules Jordan, the tenor, who came up from Providence. Mme. Nordica looked every inch a queen in a heavy cream-white brocade, with an open-work Elizabethan collar sewn with pearls. Her fine diamonds glistened from hair, throat and corsage. Her reception was most flattering, as it was Monday night also at the Star course.

—The Adamowski quartet, assisted by Mr. Arthur Foote, will give their first concert a week from tomorrow night at Union Hall. Mr. Adamowski's friends are subscribing in goodly numbers, for this series will be one of the choicest of the winter. Mrs. H. Wyman will sing at Mr. Adamowski's second concert.

—The first Kneisel quartet concert is at Union Hall, tomorrow night, under the management of Mr. C. A. Ellis.

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 19, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The first number of the Symphony Concert of Saturday evening was the Third Suite (op. 55) of Tschaikowsky. The radical musicians of the modern Russian school reject the compositions of Tschaikowsky as being cosmopolitan rather than national. Without going into the vexed question of whether nationality in music is a mere illusion, it may be said that it is impossible for a composer of today to avoid the influence of great or favorite composers. It is true that the music of Tschaikowsky shows what is known as German thoughtfulness. On the other hand he has studied Italian melody and French instrumentation. But above all there is the man himself, and his music is Russian in that he often presents his thoughts in a peculiar harmonic manner found only among the Russian composers. Whether this peculiarity arises from a sense of tonality derived from the plain song of the Greco-Russian church, or from the Slavonic temperament, or from any other attributed cause, is now immaterial. The fact remains that his music stands apart from that of men of other nations; just as the novels of Dostoievsky could not have been written by a German or a Frenchman. And although he may not go as far as his nihilistic friends in despising the established scales and the systems of modulations, yet in spite of all his polish and his culture, he often appears shaggy, unkempt, barbaric, and terrible.

This Third Suite of Tschaikowsy, played for the first time in Boston, is long and of unequal worth. The themes of the "Elegie" are fresh and beautiful, and they are ingeniously treated. The two movements that follow show chiefly eccentricity. The "Valse Melancholique" it certainly doleful enough, and the "Scherzo" is bizarre. In these two movements everything seems forced and labored. The rhythm is tormented; the harmonies are sought for with pain; there is a heated hunt for new instrumental combinations. But the composer has nothing to say; and, perhaps knowing this, he strives to conceal the fact by unheard of and startling forms of expression. The result is weariness to the flesh. The final movement, "Tema con Variazoni," is the work of a master. A set of variations is too often a many-horned monster inspiring honest terror, but here the interest is always maintained, and the layman and the musician are alike delighted. The close with its dash of Meyerbeerish pomp is admirably put together and exceedingly effective. The Suite, as a whole, was well played, although the work of the wood-wind was occasionally faulty in intonation, and there was a lack of precision in many passages of the Scherzo.

The Prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana" was played superbly, and Mr. Winch sang the tenor solo with genuine passion; yet this serenade demands a full, free and hot Italian voice. It was a great pleasure to at last hear this epitome of Mascagni's melodrama played by a fit orchestra. The prelude itself needs no words of praise. In this connection it is interesting to note—and I have not seen the fact mentioned in foreign or American newspapers—that in 1888 Verga's story was made into a play of one act by Paul Solanges and put upon the stage of the Theatre Libre of Paris. It was called "Chevalerie Rustique," and it was a dismal failure.

Beethoven's "Minuetto and Finale," from the string quartette op. 59, No. 3 in C, was played on all the strings. In its original form it is noble music. Swollen out of all proportions, distorted for the purpose of exciting the wonder of the unthinking, it loses its meaning; and the performance, however skillful, is no better than a raree show.

The final orchestral number was Massenet's Overture "Phedre," a highly-flavored, intoxicating composition, with a melody of long breath, and many noisy measures. When Gluck treated a Grecian subject of passion, he wrote like a Greek. Massenet, perhaps inevitably, writes like a modern Frenchman, and Phedre exchanges her antique robes for a Parisian costume, and the odor of absinthe is upon her feverish lips. Never would this heroine of Massenet have confessed and hung herself in despair as long as there was morphine to be bought of a good-natured apothecary.

Mr. Winch sang, with pianoforte accompaniment, Schubert's "Der Neugierige," Schumann's "Mondnacht" and Jensen's "Murmelndes Lueftchen." He sang these songs very sweetly, and he was twice recalled.

The programme of the concert Oct. 24 will be as follows: MacDowell's Suite op. 42 (first time in Boston); Volkmann's 'Cello Concerto in A minor, Brahm's fourth Symphony. Mr. Alwin Schroeder will be the soloist.

PHILIP HALE.

The first of the Kneisel Quartette concerts will be given this evening in Union Hall at 8. Mr. Xaver Scharwenka will assist. The programme includes Mozart's Qartette in C; Schumann's Pianoforte Quartette, and Brahms's Quintette op. 111 (new).

Tribune Detroit.

The Philharmonics are very fortunate being able to secure Nikisch for one of their concerts this winter. The little-great conductor rarely gets away from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but relented in favor of Detroit in response to the solicitations of William Yunck, who played with him for seven of eight years in the grand Vienna Orchestra.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 19, 1891.

The Symphony Concert.

The programme of Saturday was not of symphonic dignity, and even if one concedes the necessity of an occasional lapse from a severe standard, the arrangement of the numbers, and their performance, too, left much to be desired. Summed up in a word, the concert consisted of sugar and sensation. The symphonic cloak was thrown over the proceedings by Tschaikowsky's Suite which has almost as good a claim to symphonic title as Goldmark's "Rustic Wedding Symphony," although the proper sonata form with development is lacking.

The work reminded of Goldmark in more ways than one, for it had often the sensuous languor which characterizes the works of the Viennese composer, and the same richness of orchestration that can be found in the "Queen of Sheba," a richness that is at times oppressive. The English horn is made much of in the first two movements, and this instrument, so well adapted to express a profound melancholy, certainly did it in the "Valse Melancholique" which was sad, even to the Mrs. Gummidge point of lachrymation, but the instrument was excellently played and certainly is not to be blamed for the dreariness of the tale of woe which the composer desired to ventilate. The scherzo is piquant enough to make amends, the combination of the woodwind instruments with the characteristic pizzicati of the contrabasses being good (although the syncopations were not very cleary caught up) and the pianissimo effects of trumpets and drum giving an unexpected contrast to the chief theme.

But the best part of the work, on a first hearing, seemed to be the variations of the close. Ever since Beethoven ended his heroic symphony in this form, the composers who sought a fitting climax to their large instrumental forms, have found it in "Theme and Variations," and next Saturday we shall find a great symphony (Brahms' E minor) reaching its close in the same manner. And Tschaikowsky is particularly successful in this form, for his themes are always interesting and melodious, and his modes of treatment, from the contrapuntal down to the simplest homophonic, are musicianly and effective. Such variations are interesting also, from the fact that they pass the different departments of the orchestra in review, so that one can judge of it in detail. The English horn and the solo violin (Mr. Kneisel) had fine opportunities in this part of the suite, and they made the most of them. The woodwind instruments were not above reproach, nor were the strings remarkable for good ensemble, although they played with abundant spirit. The same hearty energy was present in the entire orchestra in the highly-spiced ending, but one may whisper it, even in Gath, that there is sometimes more dash than elegance in the execution at present.

The prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana" has been sufficiently reviewed of recent days, and I may pass it by with the statement that, spite of the broad reading and fiery performance, the work smacks too much of the theatre to be admitted into the highest order of concert programmes. The singing of Mr. Winch in this deserves commendation, for the number is quite outside of his usual vein, yet he gave it a breadth and passion that proved him more versatile than he generally receives credit for being. As for his later solos, with piano accompaniment, they would have suited better to Chickering or Steinert Hall than to this place and programme. Schumann's "Mondnacht" went altogether too languishingly, as if the moonlight were mingled with syrup, but at least all this langour and sentimentality were thoroughly in place in that tenderest of musical sugar plums. Jensen's "Murmuring Breeze," which, along with Dvorak's "Als die alte Mutter," belongs to the singer by right, because of the excellence of his legato and falsetto.

To give part of a Beethoven string quartette (op. 59, No. 3) in a magnified state as work for string orchestra was not in good taste. If it was intended to show the perfection of the strings in difficult work, it failed of its purpose, for the deeper parts were out of all proportion to the violins, and the attacks and shading were not of highest excellence. Some of Beethoven's piano works might better be elaborated into orchestral compositions; to work the great sonata (the largest ever written, and absolutely a piano symphony), op. 106, into a full score, might more readily be condoned than this tampering with the composer's intention.

The concert ended with Massenet's "Phedre" overture, and here Mr. Nikisch was at his best, for he gave a most passionate reading which brought out the meaning of the work excellently. It is much to be able to read a Schumann symphony one week and follow it the next with a work of such totally different school, and do both so equally well. The orchestra, inspired by their conductor, gave the number with an abandon that was inspiriting.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.

Date 10-20

Symphony Concerts.

On next Wednesday evening, Oct. 21st, the Symphony Orchestra's Providence season will begin at Infantry Hall. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist, and this will be the programme of the concert: Suite, op. 55 (new), Tschaikowsky, I. "Elegie;" II. "Valse Melancolique;" III. "Scherzo;" IV. "Tema con Variazioni;" V. Finale. "Polacca;" aria, "La Reine de Saba," Gounod, Mme. Nordica; Good Friday spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; polacca, "Mignon," Thomas, Mme. Nordica; overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz. It will be the first performance of the new Tschaikowsky suite. Patronage for the Symphony concert has grown amazingly with each year, and although they were expected to attract an exceedingly large attendance this winter, the sale of tickets in advance was beyond anything that was anticipated. A special office for the sale of tickets is established at 93 Westminster street.

42

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 18.

— The first Symphony Concert drew an enormous audience to Music Hall last Saturday night. A warm greeting was awarded to both Mr. Nikisch and Mme. Nordica. Nordica looked like a picture in beautiful white brocaded satin, with an Elizabethan ruff, and magnificent diamonds. Among the audience were noticed Mr. and Mrs. Barthold Schlesinger, Miss Schlesinger, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Watson, Mr. Frank Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Lang, Miss Lang, Mr. J. S. Dwight, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Winch, Mr. Arthur Foote, Mrs. Mark Hollingsworth, Miss White, Mr. Hiram Tucker, Mr. J. Edward Priest, Mr. A. H. Pickering, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Rogers, Dr. George Monks, Mr. I. M. Gaugengigl, Mrs. W. F. Apthorp, Mrs. Phœbe Jenks, Mr. and Mrs. Eliot Hubbard, Miss Stackpole, Dr. Donald White, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Bradlee, Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mrs. Samuel D. Warren, Dr. and Mrs. Otis, and Mrs. Julius Eichberg.

The Symphony Concert.

The concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Music Hall, last evening, attracted a large audience, but not so large as that of the first concert. The programme covered a wide field, and it could not justly be complained that it lacked eclecticism in style. It opened with a new Suite, op. 55, by the Russian, Tschaikowsky, and was followed by the Prelude to the opera "Cavalleria Rusticana," by the Italian Mascagni. Just here German Beethoven dropped in rather incongruously, with the minuet and finale from the string quartet, op. 59, No. 3, played by all the strings; the whole ending with the overture to "Phedre," by the Frenchman, Massenet. The new suite is a strong and interesting work, composed of four movements—an Elegie, that is not by any means elegiac, but is full of grace and freshness in its themes, and rich beauty in its harmonies and instrumentation; a Valse Melancholique, that is exceedingly melancholy, but very uninteresting; a Scherzo, grotesque and weird, and abundant in queer rhythms and wild frolic, but labored and affected in style; and a Theme with variations, a noble bit of writing and by far the finest and most solid movement of the work. The instrumentation is of rare beauty through the suite, but it reaches its highest point in the finale, which, on the whole, seems to us the broadest, clearest and most masterly effort that we have yet heard by this composer. It was carefully and effectively played, as the rule, but now and then the wood wind were painfully out of tune, and in the brilliant and difficult scherzo there was much of raggedness in the playing of the orchestra generally. The suite is very long, taking three quarters of an hour in performance, a fact, perhaps, which accounted somewhat for the coldness of its reception up to the last movement, which, on the contrary, was heartily and deservedly applauded. The impressive and beautiful Mascagni Prelude was finely read and played, the performance increasing immeasurably the favor with which the composition has met here. For the first time it was heard with an adequate orchestra and efficient players, and the effect was strikingly impressive. Mr. Winch sang the tenor solo with admirable fire and sympathy. The warmest applause of the evening rewarded this work. The virtuosity of the string orchestra was interestingly illustrated by its playing of the Beethoven selection; but why turn a quartet into an orchestral work; why pervert the composer's intention and intensify the perversion by impertinently lugging in the contre basses, to the inevitable destruction of the original color and of the original effect generally? A quartet is one thing and a quarantetet is quite a different affair. Besides, there is not such a dearth of music written expressly for the orchestra as to necessitate "monkeying" with a well-proportioned masterpiece until it is bloated entirely out of shape. There is no more logical reason for swelling a Rasoumowski quartet into an orchestral work than there is for diminishing an Eroica symphony to a quartet. It is to be hoped that these concerts may not be prolific in such inartistic and useless misrepresentations of great works. Mr. Winch, in addition to his solo in the Prelude, contributed to the concert a group of songs, with piano accompaniments, which he sang at his very best, and at the end of which he received two hearty recalls. The programme for the next concert is: Suite, op. 42, E. A. Macdowell; Concerto for violincello, Volkmann; Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Brahms. The soloist is to be Mr. Alvin Schroeder.

The first of the Kneisel quartets will be given tomorrow evening, in Union Hall. Mr. Xaver Scharwenka will assist. The programme includes Mozart's Quartet in C; Schumann's Pianofore Quartet; and Brahms's Quintet, op. 111, (new).

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. NIKISCH.

Under the auspices of the

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF BROOKLYN,

Eagle THE 10/19

BOSTON
BOSTON
BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

85 PERFORMERS,

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,
Will give a series of
SIX PUBLIC REHEARSALS,
On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, November 6, December 11, January 15, February 12, March 18 and April 29,
AND
SIX CONCERTS,
On SATURDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13, March 19 and April 30.

Mme. LILLIAN NORDICA,
Mrs. ARTHUR NIKISCH,
Mr. IGNACE J. PADEREWSKI,
Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT

and other distinguished artists will appear as soloists.

Season tickets, including reserved seats for the series of six rehearsals, or for the series of six concerts, $4, $5 and $7.50, according to location.

The sale of season tickets for both series opens at the office of the Philharmonic Society, at CHANDLER'S music store, 300 Fulton st, Monday, October 26, at 8 A. M.

To insure a fair distribution of tickets, not more than ten will be sold to one person. C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

STANDARD-UNION, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date 10-19

Philharmonic Concerts.

Music lovers will read with interest the announcement of the concerts of the Philharmonic Society to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its famous Leipzig conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch. Six concerts will be given, on Saturday evenings Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, March 19 and April 30, each preceded by a public rehearsal on Friday afternoon of the same week. Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Eugen D'Albert and other famous soloists will appear. The sale of season tickets for both series opens at Chandler's, 300 Fulton street, next Monday morning.

Boston Journal.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT—SOLOIST, MR. WILLIAM J. WINCH.

A highly interesting and enjoyable programme was the one listened to at last Saturday night's Symphony concert. The works of the modern composers, Mascagni, Italian, and Tschaikowsky, Russian, claimed special attention and interest, the "Cavalleria Rusticana" taking the lead, perhaps. This opera gained such sudden success at its first performance in Rome a little over a year ago, and later among other cities of Europe, that America looked forward to it with much anticipation. Its popularity is still increasing in spite of the conflicting opinions in regard to its claim of ranking with the great works of Verdi, Donizetti, Bellini and those of other Italian composers. The unexpected introduction in the prelude of the voice in the distance, gave Mr. Winch a splendid opportunity of attesting again his ability as a tenor of cultivation and distinction. With the exception of a slight strain when the climax was reached the serenade was most satisfactorily rendered.

Mr. Schnecker played the accompaniment on the harp in the ante-room with Mr. Winch, while Miss Shaw acted as harpist in the orchestra. The audience expressed great pleasure and delight at the close of this number and enthusiastically called forth Mr. Winch from his seclusion.

The suite of Tschaikowsky coming first on the programe, and played for the first time in Boston, put the audience in an expectant attitude and prepared them somewhat for the novelty of the movements which followed. The development of the "Elegie" was peculiar, although not altogether satisfactory, the "Valse Melancholique," surely a dance weird enough for the uncanny phantoms that might arise from some enchanted spot in the "old countrie," while the "Scherzo" dispelled all gloom and depression and aroused such feelings of mirth and fun as to bring smiles and plaudits from the fascinated hearers.

The finale afforded a fine opportunity for the different parts of the orchestra to do some excellent work in elaborating the melodious theme in its ingenious variations. Mr. Kneisel was heard with great pleasure in his violin solo, with the soft, full orchestra accompaniment, as were also the trio for flutes and the English horn. Beethoven's Minuetto and Finale by the strings proved to be the least satisfactory work of the evening, although much enjoyment was looked for in this number.

The "Phedre" overture by Massenet dwelt upon the tragic side of the story almost wholly, and made a grand dramatic ending of the evening's performance. In the cluster of songs by Schubert, Schumann and Jensen, with Mr. Nikisch presiding at the piano, Mr. Winch was heard to the greatest satisfaction. His fine phrasing, the light and shade in facial expression, the clearness of enunciation and purity and sweetness of his tones were truly worthy of his best work.

The programme for next Saturday night promises to be more classical, although some doubt may arise as to its being more universally enjoyed. The new 'cello player, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, will be the soloist, and the suite op. 42, by E. A. McDowell, the 'cello concerto, in A minor, by Volkman, and Brahm's fourth symphony will complete the programme.

The Dispatch.

PITTSBURG, SUNDAY, OCT. 18, 1891.

READERS of this department may recall sundry pointed remarks upon the conduct of Mr. Max Bachert in touring around the country with a concert party of six players under the name of "The Boston Symphony Orchestral Club." It certainly was bad enough thus to appropriate the name of a sterling orchestra, and try to hoodwink the public into believing he had at least some connection with it. But the cool gall of Mr. Bachert has carried him further. He has actually brought suit in the New York Supreme Court against another and newer club of the same nature, calling itself the "Boston Symphony Club," to restrain it from making use of his (!) title. More than that, he has obtained the injunction he asked for! At this rate the original Boston Symphony Orchestra itself should be on the lookout for an attempt of the same kind on the part of Mr. Blackheart.

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 19, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The first number of the Symphony Concert of Saturday evening was the Third Suite (op. 55) of Tschaikowsky. The radical musicians of the modern Russian school reject the compositions of Tschaikowsky as being cosmopolitan rather than national. Without going into the vexed question of whether nationality in music is a mere illusion, it may be said that it is impossible for a composer of today to avoid the influence of great or favorite composers. It is true that the music of Tschaikowsky shows what is known as German thoughtfulness. On the other hand he has studied Italian melody and French instrumentation. But above all there is the man himself, and his music is Russian in that he often presents his thoughts in a peculiar harmonic manner found only among the Russian composers. Whether this peculiarity arises from a sense of tonality derived from the plain song of the Greco-Russian church, or from the Slavonic temperament, or from any other attributed cause, is now immaterial. The fact remains that his music stands apart from that of men of other nations; just as the novels of Dostoievsky could not have been written by a German or a Frenchman. And although he may not go as far as his nihilistic friends in despising the established scales and the systems of modulations, yet in spite of all his polish and his culture, he often appears shaggy, unkempt, barbaric, and terrible.

This Third Suite of Tschaikowsy, played for the first time in Boston, is long and of unequal worth. The themes of the "Elegie" are fresh and beautiful, and they are ingeniously treated. The two movements that follow show chiefly eccentricity. The "Valse Melancholique" it certainly doleful enough, and the "Scherzo" is bizarre. In these two movements everything seems forced and labored. The rhythm is tormented; the harmonies are sought for with pain; there is a heated hunt for new instrumental combinations. But the composer has nothing to say; and, perhaps knowing this, he strives to conceal the fact by unheard of and startling forms of expression. The result is weariness to the flesh. The final movement, "Tema con Variazoni," is the work of a master. A set of variations is too often a many-horned monster inspiring honest terror, but here the interest is always maintained, and the layman and the musician are alike delighted. The close with its dash of Meyerbeerish pomp is admirably put together and exceedingly effective. The Suite, as a whole, was well played, although the work of the wood-wind was occasionally faulty in intonation, and there was a lack of precision in many passages of the Scherzo.

The Prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana" was played superbly, and Mr. Winch sang the tenor solo with genuine passion; yet this serenade demands a full, free and hot Italian voice. It was a great pleasure to at last hear this epitome of Mascagni's melodrama played by a fit orchestra. The prelude itself needs no words of praise. In this connection it is interesting to note—and I have not seen the fact mentioned in foreign or American newspapers—that in 1888 Verga's story was made into a play of one act by Paul Solauges and put upon the stage of the Theatre Libre of Paris. It was called "Chevalerie Rustique," and it was a dismal failure.

Beethoven's "Minuetto and Finale," from the string quartette op. 59, No. 3 in C, was played on all the strings. In its original form it is noble music. Swollen out of all proportions, distorted for the purpose of exciting the wonder of the unthinking, it loses its meaning; and the performance, however skillful, is no better than a raree show.

The final orchestral number was Massenet's Overture "Phedre," a highly-flavored, intoxicating composition, with a melody of long breath, and many noisy measures. When Gluck treated a Grecian subject of passion, he wrote like a Greek. Massenet, perhaps inevitably, writes like a modern Frenchman, and Phèdre exchanges her antique robes for a Parisian costume, and the odor of absinthe is upon her feverish lips. Never would this heroine of Massenet have confessed and hung herself in despair as long as there was morphine to be bought of a good-natured apothecary.

Mr. Winch sang, with pianoforte accompaniment, Schubert's "Der Neugierige," Schumann's "Mondnacht" and Jensen's "Murmeludes Lueftchen." He sang these songs very sweetly, and he was twice recalled.

The programme of the concert Oct. 24 will be as follows: MacDowell's Suite op. 42 (first ~~time in Boston~~); Volkmann's 'Cello Concerto in A minor, Brahm's fourth Symphony. Mr. Alwin Schroeder will be the soloist.

PHILIP HALE.

The first of the Kneisel Quartette concerts will be given this evening in Union Hall at 8. Mr Xaver Scharwenka will assist. The programme includes Mozart's Qartette in C; Schumann's Pianoforte Quartette, and Brahms' Quintette op. III (new).

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 19, 1891.

The Symphony Concert.

The programme of Saturday was not of symphonic dignity, and even if one concedes the necessity of an occasional lapse from a severe standard, the arrangement of the numbers, and their performance, too, left much to be desired. Summed up in a word, the concert consisted of sugar and sensation. The symphonic cloak was thrown over the proceedings by Tschaikowsky's Suite which has almost as good a claim to symphonic title as Goldmark's "Rustic Wedding Symphony," although the proper sonata form with development is lacking.

The work reminded of Goldmark in more ways than one, for it had often the sensuous languor which characterizes the works of the Viennese composer, and the same richness of orchestration that can be found in the "Queen of Sheba," a richness that is at times oppressive. The English horn is made much of in the first two movements, and this instrument, so well adapted to express a profound melancholy, certainly did it in the "Valse Melancholique" which was sad, even to the Mrs. Gummidge point of lachrymation, but the instrument was excellently played and certainly is not to be blamed for the dreariness of the tale of woe which the composer desired to ventilate. The scherzo is piquant enough to make amends, the combination of the wood-wind instruments with the characteristic pizzicati of the contrabasses being good (although the syncopations were not very cleary caught up) and the pianissimo effects of trumpots and drum giving an unexpected contrast to the chief theme.

But the best part of the work, on a first hearing, seemed to be the variations of the close. Ever since Beethoven ended his heroic symphony in this form, the composers who sought a fitting climax to their large instrumental forms, have found it in "Theme and Variations," and next Saturday we shall find a great symphony (Brahms' E minor) reaching its close in the same manner. And Tschaikowsky is particularly successful in this form, for his themes are always interesting and melodit thous, and his modes of treatment, from the contrapuntal down to the simplese homophonic, are musicianly and effective. Such variations are interesting also, from the fact that they pass the different departments of the orchestra in review, so that one can judge of it in detail. The English horn and the solo violin (Mr. Kneisel) had fine opportunities in this part of the suite, and they made the most of them. The woodwind instruments were not above reproach, nor were the strings remarkable for good ensemble, although they played with abundant spirit. The same hearty energy was present in the entire orchestra in the highly-spiced ending, but one may whisper it, even in Gath, that there is sometimes more dash than elegance in the execution at present.

The prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana" has been sufficiently reviewed of recent days, and I may pass it by with the statement that, spite of the broad reading and fiery performance, the work smacks too much of the theatre to be admitted into the highest order of concert programmes. The singing of Mr. Winch in this deserves commendation, for the number is quite outside of his usual vein, yet he gave it a breadth and passion that proved him more versatile than he generally receives credit for being. As for his later solos, with piano accompaniment, they would have suited better to Chickering or Steinert Hall than to this place and programme. Schumann's "Mondnacht" went altogether too languishingly, as if the moonlight were mingled with syrup, but at least all this langour and sentimentality were thoroughly in place in that tenderest of musical sugar plums. Jensen's "Murmuring Breeze," which, along with Dvorak's "Als die alte Mutter," belongs to the singer by right, because of the excellence of his legato and falsetto.

To give part of a Beethoven string quartette (op. 59, No. 3) in a magnified state as work for string orchestra was not in good taste. If it was intended to show the perfection of the strings in difficult work, it failed of its purpose, for the deeper parts were out of all proportion to the violins, and the attacks and shading were not of highest excellence. Some of Beethoven's piano works might better be elaborated into orchestral compositions; to work the great sonata (the largest ever written, and absolutely a piano symphony), op. 106, into a full score, might more readily be condoned than this tampering with the composer's intention.

The concert ended with Massenet's "Phedre" overture, and here Mr. Nikisch was at his best, for he gave a most passionate reading which brought out the meaning of the work excellently. It is much to be able to read a Schumann symphony one week and follow it the next with a work of such totally different school, and do both so equally well. The orchestra, inspired by their conductor, gave the number with an abandon that was inspiriting.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 18.

— The first Symphony Concert drew an enormous audience to Music Hall last Saturday night. A warm greeting was awarded to both Mr. Nikisch and Mme. Nordica. Nordica looked like a picture in beautiful white brocaded satin, with an Elizabethan ruff, and magnificent diamonds. Among the audience were noticed Mr. and Mrs. Barthold Schlesinger, Miss Schlesinger, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Watson, Mr. Frank Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Lang, Miss Lang, Mr. J. S. Dwight, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Winch, Mr. Arthur Foote, Mrs. Mark Hollingsworth, Miss White, Mr. Hiram Tucker, Mr. J. Edward Priest, Mr. A. H. Pickering, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Rogers, Dr. George Monks, Mr. I. M. Gaugengigl, Mrs. W. F. Apthorp, Mrs. Phœbe Jenks, Mr. and Mrs. Eliot Hubbard, Miss Stackpole, Dr. Donald White, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Bradlee, Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mrs. Samuel D. Warren, Dr. and Mrs. Otis, and Mrs. Julius Eichberg.

The Symphony Concert.

The concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Music Hall, last evening, attracted a large audience, but not so large as that of the first concert. The programme covered a wide field, and it could not justly be complained that it lacked eclecticism in style. It opened with a new Suite, op. 55, by the Russian, Tschalkowsky, and was followed by the Prelude to the opera "Cavalleria Rusticana," by the Italian Mascagni. Just here German Beethoven dropped in rather incongruously, with the minuet and finale from the string quartet, op. 59, No. 3, played by all the strings; the whole ending with the overture to "Phedre," by the Frenchman, Massenet. The new suite is a strong and interesting work, composed of four movements—an Elegie, that is not by any means elegiac, but is full of grace and freshness in its themes, and rich beauty in its harmonies and instrumentation; a Valse Melancholique, that is exceedingly melancholy, but very uninteresting; a Scherzo, grotesque and weird, and abundant in queer rhythms and wild frolic, but labored and affected in style; and a Theme with variations, a noble bit of writing and by far the finest and most solid movement of the work. The instrumentation is of rare beauty through the suite, but it reaches its highest point in the finale, which, on the whole, seems to us the broadest, clearest and most masterly effort that we have yet heard by this composer. It was carefully and effectively played, as the rule, but now and then the wood wind were painfully out of tune, and in the brilliant and difficult scherzo there was much of raggedness in the playing of the orchestra generally. The suite is very long, taking three quarters of an hour in performance, a fact, perhaps, which accounted somewhat for the coldness of its reception up to the last movement, which, on the contrary, was heartily and deservedly applauded. The impressive and beautiful Mascagni Prelude was finely read and played, the performance increasing immeasurably the favor with which the composition has met here. For the first time it was heard with an adequate orchestra and efficient players, and the effect was strikingly impressive. Mr. Winch sang the tenor solo with admirable fire and sympathy. The warmest applause of the evening rewarded this work. The virtuosity of the string orchestra was interestingly illustrated by its playing of the Beethoven selection; but why turn a quartet into an orchestral work; why pervert the composer's intention and intensify the perversion by impertinently lugging in the contre basses, to the inevitable destruction of the original color and of the original effect generally? A quartet is one thing and a quarantetet is quite a different affair. Besides, there is not such a dearth of music written expressly for the orchestra as to necessitate "monkeying" with a well-proportioned masterpiece until it is bloated entirely out of shape. There is no more logical reason for swelling a Rasoumowski quartet into an orchestral work than there is for diminishing an Eroica symphony to a quartet. It is to be hoped that these concerts may not be prolific in such inartistic and useless misrepresentations of great works. Mr. Winch, in addition to his solo in the Prelude, contributed to the concert a group of songs, with piano accompaniments, which he sang at his very best, and at the end of which he received two hearty recalls. The programme for the next concert is: Suite, op. 42, E. A. Macdowell; Concerto for violincello, Volkmann; Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Brahms. The soloist is to be Mr. Alvin Schroeder.

The first of the Kneisel quartets will be given tomorrow evening, in Union Hall. Mr. Xaver Scharwenka will assist. The programme includes Mozart's Quartet in C; Schumann's Pianofore Quartet; and Brahms's Quintet, op. 111, (new).

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. NIKISCH.

Under the auspices of the

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF BROOKLYN,

Eagle THE 10/19

BOSTON
BOSTON
BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

85 PERFORMERS,

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,
Will give a series of
SIX PUBLIC REHEARSALS,
On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, November 6, December 11, January 15, February 12, March 18 and April 29,
AND
SIX CONCERTS,
On SATURDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13, March 19 and April 30.

Mme. LILLIAN NORDICA,
Mrs. ARTHUR NIKISCH,
Mr. IGNACE J. PADEREWSKI,
Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT

and other distinguished artists will appear as soloists.

Season tickets, including reserved seats for the series of six rehearsals, or for the series of six concerts, $4, $5 and $7.50, according to location.

The sale of season tickets for both series opens at the office of the Philharmonic Society, at CHANDLER'S music store, 300 Fulton st, Monday, October 26, at 8 A. M.

To insure a fair distribution of tickets, not more than ten will be sold to one person. C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

Boston Journal.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT—SOLOIST, MR. WILLIAM J. WINCH.

A highly interesting and enjoyable programme was the one listened to at last Saturday night's Symphony concert. The works of the modern composers, Mascagni, Italian, and Tschaikowsky Russian, claimed special attention and interest, the "Cavalleria Rusticana" taking the lead, perhaps. This opera gained such sudden success at its first performance in Rome a little over a year ago, and later among other cities of Europe, that America looked forward to it with much anticipation. Its popularity is still increasing in spite of the conflicting opinions in regard to its claim of ranking with the great works of Verdi, Donizetti, Bellini and those of other Italian composers. The unexpected introduction in the prelude of the voice in the distance, gave Mr. Winch a splendid opportunity of attesting again his ability as a tenor of cultivation and distinction. With the exception of a slight strain when the climax was reached the serenade was most satisfactorily rendered.

Mr. Schnecker played the accompaniment on the harp in the ante-room with Mr. Winch, while Miss Shaw acted as harpist in the orchestra. The audience expressed great pleasure and delight at the close of this number and enthusiastically called forth Mr. Winch from his seclusion.

The suite of Tschaikowsky coming first on the programe, and played for the first time in Boston, put the audience in an expectant attitude and prepared them somewhat for the novelty of the movements which followed. The development of the "Elegie" was peculiar, although not altogether satisfactory, the "Valse Melancholique," surely a dance weird enough for the uncanny phantoms that might arise from some enchanted spot in the "old countrie," while the "Scherzo" dispelled all gloom and depression and aroused such feelings of mirth and fun as to bring smiles and plaudits from the fascinated hearers.

The finale afforded a fine opportunity for the different parts of the orchestra to do some excellent work in elaborating the melodious theme in its ingenious variations. Mr. Kneisel was heard with great pleasure in his violin solo, with the soft, full orchestra accompaniment, as were also the trio for flutes and the English horn. Beethoven's Minuetto and Finale by the strings proved to be the least satisfactory work of the evening, although much enjoyment was looked for in this number.

The "Phedre" overture by Massenet dwelt upon the tragic side of the story almost wholly, and made a grand dramatic ending of the evening's performance. In the cluster of songs by Schubert, Schumann and Jensen, with Mr. Nikisch presiding at the piano, Mr. Winch was heard to the greatest satisfaction. His fine phrasing, the light and shade in facial expression, the clearness of enunciation and purity and sweetness of his tones were truly worthy of his best work.

The programme for next Saturday night promises to be more classical, although some doubt may arise as to its being more universally enjoyed. The new 'cello player, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, will be the soloist, and the suite op. 42, by E. A. McDowell, the 'cello concerto, in A minor, by Volkman, and Brahm's fourth symphony will complete the programme.

The Dispatch.

PITTSBURG, SUNDAY, OCT. 18, 1891.

READERS of this department may recall sundry pointed remarks upon the conduct of Mr. Max Bachert in touring around the country with a concert party of six players under the name of "The Boston Symphony Orchestral Club." It certainly was bad enough thus to appropriate the name of a sterling orchestra, and try to hoodwink the public into believing he had at least some connection with it. But the cool gall of Mr. Bachert has carried him further. He has actually brought suit in the New York Supreme Court against another and newer club of the same nature, calling its it the "Boston Symphony Club," to restrain it from making use of his (!) title. More than that, he has obtained the injunction he asked for! At this rate the original Boston Symphony Orchestra itself should be on the lookout for an attempt of the same kind on the part of Mr. Blackheart.

Tribune
Detroit

The Philharmonics are very fortunate in being able to secure Nikisch for one of their concerts this winter. The little-great conductor rarely gets away from his Boston Symphony Orchestra, but yielded in favor of Detroit in response to the solicitations of William Yunck, who played with him for seven of eight years in the grand Vienna Orchestra.

JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.

Date 10-20

Symphony Concerts.

On next Wednesday evening, Oct. 21st, the Symphony Orchestra's Providence season will begin at Infantry Hall. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist, and this will be the programme of the concert: Suite, op. 55 (new), Tschaikowsky, I. "Elegie;" II. "Valse Melancolique;" III. "Scherzo;" IV. "Tema con Variazioni;" V. Finale, "Polacca;" aria, "La Reine de Saba," Gounod, Mme. Nordica; Good Friday spell from "Parsifal," Wagner; polacca, "Mignon," Thomas, Mme. Nordica; overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz. It will be the first performance of the new Tschaikowsky suite. Patronage for the Symphony concert has grown amazingly with each year, and although they were expected to attract an exceedingly large attendance this winter, the sale of tickets in advance was beyond anything that was anticipated. A special office for the sale of tickets is established at 93 Westminster street.

42

STANDARD-UNION, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date 10-19

Philharmonic Concerts.

Music lovers will read with interest the announcement of the concerts of the Philharmonic Society to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its famous Leipzig conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch. Six concerts will be given, on Saturday evenings Nov. 7, Dec. 12, Jan. 16, Feb. 13, March 19 and April 30, each preceded by a public rehearsal on Friday afternoon of the same week. Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, Mr. Ignace J. Paderewski, Mr. Eugen D'Albert and other famous soloists will appear. The sale of season tickets for both series opens at Chandler's, 300 Fulton street, next Monday morning.

FADED TEXT

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1891.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The programme of the second concert was:

Tschaikowsky: Suite No. 3, op. 55.
Mascagni: Prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana."
Beethoven: Menuetto and Finale from quartet in C, op. 59, No. 3.
Songs with Pianoforte:
Schubert—"Der Neugierige."
Schumann—"Mondnacht."
Jensen—"Murmelndes Lüftchen."
Massenet: Overture to "Phedre."

Mr. William J. Winch was the singer.

The Tschaikowsky suite, which is one of the composer's prime favorites, shows him in a more genial mood than many of his compositions do that have been heard here before. It is a work which he has conducted in almost every city in Europe in which he has held a bâton, and one wonders rather that no one has ever played the trick on him that a wag once played on Goldmark, who was much surprised one evening to find himself registered at his hotel as "Carl Goldmark and suite." This work of Tschaikowsky's is not always of the deepest seriousness, for which one is not unthankful, for when Tschaikowsky takes it into his head to be very serious indeed, he often becomes terribly grim, and carries his theme through its development with an inexorableness of musical logic and a disregard for so trivial a thing as euphony that are really appalling. But here one finds little of this musical ferocity. To be sure, in the second movement, Valse mélancholique, he now and then has a moment of black gloom such as no one but a Russian can be afflicted with; but the suite is for the most part genially musical, often exceedingly brilliant, and only at rare intervals tainted with triviality. The last movement, alla Polacca, of the variations comes rather ticklishly near to the general spirit of a Meyerbeer Fackeltanz, but its brilliancy is unquestionable. The Scherzo is a gem in its way. The orchestration is masterly throughout. The orchestra played the work magnificently, the strings doing wonders of prowess in one of the variations—far better worth doing than a Paganini "Perpetuum mobile" for all the violins!

No one need have been surprised to find the Prelude to Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" on the programme; an epidemic is an epidemic, and may be caught by anyone. It is, upon the whole, just as well for our Symphony Orchestra to take its share of the "Rusticana" infection, in a benign form, before Mascagni's opera has had to stand as sponsor for a new brand of cigars, or a new make of paper collars. True, it does not necessarily follow that because a composition is a work of genius, it is in place on every possible musical occasion; and one may feel that this prelude of Mascagni's, work of genius though it may be, possesses few of those characteristics which are usually regarded as passports to a symphony concert programme. It is a brilliant, but wholly sketchy, exposition of certain themes which are developed later on in the opera, and is interrupted at one point by a charming serenade, sung behind the stage by a tenor voice; but of musical form and musical development, in any true sense of the term, it has little or none. Still there is something to be said on the other side of the case. The "Cavalleria Rusticana" is a work about which the musical world is all agog with interest just now, and, as operatic conditions go in this country, the only place in which the public can well hope to hear a really worthy performance of the Prelude is in the concert-room. Considering this, it is perhaps just as well to stretch a point in its favor as to do the same for the prelude to "Parsifal," the "Good Friday Spell," or any other unsymphonic tid-bit from the lyric stage of today. Perhaps Mr. Nikisch may yet give us a hearing of the "Hymen!" entr'acte movement from Massenet's "Esclarmonde," which, if not so regularly constructed as his overture to "Phedre," is far pleasanter to listen to. We, for one, shall not complain. Mascagni's prelude is certainly exciting enough and was capitally played, Mr. Winch singing Turiddu's little serenade (no light task, by the way) with admirable fire and effectiveness. In the three songs by Schubert, Schumann and Jensen he was fairly at his best; the accompaniments were beautifully played by Mr. Nikisch.

Massenet's "Phedre" overture was grandly played; but it is not music that wears well. It has passages of undeniable strength, but is, in general, coarse, and often trivial in conception, and by no means remarkable in point of workmanship; the instrumentation is of truly masterly vulgarity. It is no very thankful task showing hospitality to contemporary French works for orchestra; they behave themselves so like a bull in a China shop!

Of the two movements from Beethoven's third Rasoumoffsky quartet we must say that the presence in Boston of two such organizations as the Kneisel and Adamowski Quartets makes the doing of this sort of thing at an orchestral concert doubly reprehensible; there is enough legitimate orchestral music in the world to make it needless to poach on other manors. Of course, when music is so supremely good as this of Beethoven's, and so capitally played as it was last Saturday evening, it must sound well and be highly enjoyable. But there should be a fitness in all things.

The next programme is: MacDowell, suite, op. 42; Volkmann, concerto for violoncello, in A minor; Brahms, symphony No. 4, in E minor. Mr. Alwin Schroeder will be the 'cellist.

Boston Post

TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 20, 1891.

MUSIC.

THE KNEISEL QUARTETTE.

The first concert of the Kneisel Quartette (seventh season) was given last evening in Union Hall. The programme is as follows:

Quartette in C major	Mozart
Piano Quartette in E flat	Schumann
Quintette in G op. 111	Brahms

Mr. Alvin Schroeder, the 'cello player, is the successor to Mr. Hekking. Judged by his work of last evening, he would seem to be admirable in ensemble. His tone is pure and full, his technique sufficient, his phrasing artistic. Above all, he has the sense of subordination, the feeling of the proper values. Nor when the burden falls upon him, does he force himself forward and greedily monopolize the attention. His worth was fully shown in the Mozart quartette which was exceedingly well played; and seldom are four players so evenly balanced, so respectful of the claims of each other and the wishes of the composer as the four who played last evening the immortal composition of Mozart.

When Mozart, properly played, comes first, they that follow generally suffer. And in the present instance it must be said that the feature of the evening was the first number. Yet the piano quartet of Schumann, in which Mr. Xaver Scharwenka played the piano part, was very delightful. The piece itself has been pushed to the wall by the famous quintet of the same year, but it certainly bears repeated hearing. When it was first given in public, two years after it was written, David was the first violin and Niels Gade, who was then directing the Gewandhaus concerts, was the viola. Last evening Mr. Scharwenka bore away the honors from the very fact that he, though a solo player of renown, did not obtrude his personality; but this personality was the leaven of the performance. There was nothing to be desired in the sense of rhythm and in the musical conception; and the carrying out of the conception was eminently Schumanesque. Take, for example, his remarkable playing in the Scherzo with its distinct and yet subordinated staccato; or the poetic feeling revealed in the Andante. Nor were brilliancy and force lacking when necessary, nor were they ever out of place.

The Quintette of Brahms was played for the first time in Boston. It is upon the whole a pleasing work, though it hardly answers the glowing description of Hanslick that was printed in the programme. It is concise—that is for Brahms—and it is comparatively free from brush wood. The first movement is perhaps the strongest; the second is more labored and not so striking; while the third with its mixture of Grieg and folk-melodies, is the weakest. Mr. Novacek was the second viola.

The players were loudly applauded throughout the evening. The second concert will be given Nov. 23.

PHILIP HALE.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 20, 1891.

The Kneisel Quartette Concert.

The first concert of the season by the Kneisel Quartette was given in Union Hall last evening, to a representative musical and social audience. The quartette is the same as last year, excepting the cellist. Mr. Alwin Schrœder takes the place of Heking, and judging from his excellent work last evening, the quartette is no loser by the change.

The opening number of the concert was the quartette in C major by Mozart. Four movements constitute the quartette. To speak of each separate movement would be simply to repeat the praise that the players deserve for the perfect manner in which they played. The most delicate work was done in the Mennett (allegretto), which was rendered with a daintiness and grace that was most delightful. Xavier Scharwenka, the composer-pianist, appeared with Messrs. Kneisel, Roth and Schrœder to play Schumann's piano quartette in E flat, op. 47. Mr. Scharwenka's brilliant technique was pre-eminent in the work, although his playing was sometimes indistinct. The musicians seemed to be in entire sympathy with each other, and a more conscientious and evenly balanced rendition of the quartette could not be desired.

A new quintette by Brahms, op. 111, in G, closed the concert. This work was given its first hearing in Boston at this concert. The first movement, an allegro con brio, is a most splendid piece of music. The violoncello has the theme, accompanied by tremolo of the violins and a counter melody by the violas; principal and subordinate themes are interwoven with a delightful charm. The adagio smacks of the Slavonic style, and is a somewhat melancholy song. An allegretto in G, dainty and graceful, is followed by a trio that tends towards the style of Brahms' scherzos, not very joyous but heavy. The finale is in the Hungarian style and is very effective. The quartette, reinforced by another viola, gave the first rendition in as artistically perfect a way as one would care to hear.

Boston Journal.

TEN PAGES.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1891.

KNEISEL QUARTETTE CHAMBER CONCERT.

A select audience, nearly filling Union Hall, greeted the Kneisel Quartette on their first appearance in the series of six chamber concerts to be given, one a month, during the winter. Mr. Xaver Scharwenka ably assisted as pianist. The programme included three numbers, especially well chosen for chamber concert work. They were Mozart's quartette for strings in C major, the "andante cantibile" being particularly enjoyed. The unity and sympathy with which these artists play together show the high standard which inspires them to do only the best work.

The second number was Schumann's piano quartette, E flat, op. 47, rendered by Mr. Scharwenka at the piano, Mr. Kneisel, first violin, Mr. Roth, second violin, and Mr. Schroder, 'cello. Mr. Scharwenka shows not only the touch and expression of the true artist, but plays with an ease and grace that can be acquired only by the patient work of a lifetime. His performance gave great satisfaction and merited the approval with which his hearers responded to his efforts. The different movements of this selection gave a fine opportunity of showing his varied styles of playing, from the sweetness of the andante to the vigor and fire of the vivace.

Brahm's quintet in G, op. 111, including Mr. O. Novacek, second viola, played for the first time in Boston, furnished the evening's finale. The use of the second viola in the Brahm selection proved a subtle addition and rounded out the sweet, dreamy, peculiar harmony of the famous composer's works, to the gratification of his musical admirers. It was an ideal performance [illegible] praise [illegible].

[illegible] second concert [illegible] Monday, Nov. 23.

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, OCT. 20.

KNEISEL CONCERT.

Brahms' Quintet in G Given Its First Production in Boston.

The Kneisel quartet gave the first of its series of concerts at Union Hall last evening. The programme was an attractive one, presenting Mozart's quartet for strings in C major, Schumann's piano quartet in E flat and the new quintet in G by Brahms. Precision and delicacy marked the work of the quartet, which is composed of Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Louis Svecenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder, violoncello. The adagio of the first number was played with a graceful smoothness which showed the skill of the musicians, and was typical of all their later works. Their interpretation of the piano quartet, in which they had the assistance of the eminent pianist Xaver Scharwencka, was satisfying throughout, and their efforts were rewarded by warm applause. The beauties of the number were admirably brought out, the exquisite music of the andante cantabile especially being delightfully rendered. The interest of the evening centred in the Brahms quintet, which was first produced in Vienna a year ago, when it was still unpublished, and which was given last evening for the first time in Boston. It its rendition the quartet was assisted by O. Novacek, second viola. The music of the quintet is characteristic of Brahms in his first method, and was thoroughly enjoyed. It is graceful, strong and passionate througout, and in the adagio and the allegretto there are passages of wonderful charm and beauty. The quintet excited, as it deserved, the heartiest applause of the evening, and made a fitting close to a concert which throughout was of the highest excellence, and which was keenly enjoyed by an audience that was typical of Boston musical culture.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 112.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

The first of the season's concerts by the Kneisel quartet was given at Union Hall last evening, with Xaver Scharwenka's assistance as the piano. The works selected for the evening were Mozart's quartet in C major, Schumann's piano quartet and Brahm's quintet in G major, the last named having its first performance in America on this occasion.

The quartet is fortunate in securing so good a new 'cello player as Mr. Schroeder, whose qualifications are equal in every way to those of his associates who have gained so much favor in former seasons.

The playing of the quartet in all the works of the evening was up to the high standard of former seasons, and in the new quartet by Brahms the organization surpassed even its own record for satisfactory interpretations of such compositions.

The Brahms quintet proved a most valuable addition to the repertoire of Mr. Kneisel's quartet, showing the genius of the composer distinctly in each and all of its movements, and illustrating in a marked fashion the rapid development of Brahms as a melodious musician.

Mr. Scharwenka did splendid work in the quartet for piano and strings, showing himself to be as excellent in ensemble playing as he is as a soloist. The audience was most enthusiastic.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1891.

The Kneisel Quartet.

The Kneisel Quartet gave its first concert of the season in Union Hall last evening, the programme being—

Mozart: Quartet in C, (Peters, No. 6).
Schumann: Pianoforte quartet in E-flat, op. 47.
Brahms: Quintet in G, op. 3.

Mr. Xaver Scharwenka was the pianist.

Mozart's well-known (but never too well known) quartet was superbly given. Times have changed since this work was currently known as the "quartet with the false relation," and Giuseppe Sarti wrote his famous "Examination," pointing out "nineteen mortal errors in thirty-six measures." That wonderful Adagio introduction sounds now as beautiful as anything in music. The performance of the whole quartet last evening was a noteworthy example of playing a classic composition with unexaggerated rhythmic freedom, with an elasticity in the matter of tempo that showed the composition in the strongest light, without destroying the unity of character in each movement. There was just a little hurrying here, a little slackening there, as the specific character of particular passage prompted. This is a very different thing from taking the second theme in a movement at a different tempo throughout from that of the first theme. The one is a wanton violence done to the unity of tempo in a movement; the other, an artistic protest against the unmusical tyranny of the metronome.

The ever beautiful Schumann quartet was admirably played by all concerned, saving the over-rapid pace to which the Finale was pushed. We should have more to say of Mr. Scharwenka if we had heard more of his playing, but—well, here we are again at our eternal stumbling block! "Delenda est Carthago," a shut-up pianoforte is no pianoforte at all! The pianist who plays on one might as well play under a blanket; the strings will cover up and drown out his playing every time. All we can say is that Mr. Scharwenka seemed to us to play excellently well.

The new Brahms quintet is one of the sunniest, most genial works by the composer that we know. No extended composition by Brahms can be fully appreciated at a simple hearing but this one can at least be thoroughly enjoyed, so enchanting and tuneful is in style, so elevated in sentiment. Even the Adagio, which, for paucity of thematic material, vies with the first movement of the composer's C minor symphony, carries the listener up to such heights of musical ecstasy that he cares little what the music is made of, so wondrously well is it made. The performance was worthy of the work. Mr. Schroeder, the new 'cellist of the Quartet, proved himself a valuable acquisition indeed. His phrasing is especially masterly, a not very common merit with 'cellists. The second concert fall on Nov. 23.

Clipping from Cambridge Ch
Date 10-17

First Symphony Concert.

With the first Symphony concert the social ason in Cambridge may be said to have airly opened. The greetings in the hall at Sanders theatre on Thursday evening, between riends who had been separated for the ummer, while extremely agreeable, no doubt o the parties directly interested, was somehat embarrassing to those who were anxious o pass the gatekeepers and obtain access to heir places.

Nearly every seat in the beautiful house vas filled before Mr. Nikisch made his bow nd received his greeting, but, as usual, a score r two of the constitutionally tardy were arred out at the commencement of the symhony and came clattering in at the close of he allegro, disturbing those already seated nd causing Mr. Nikisch to turn to the audince and pause, with a look of hopeless disust, for several minutes before he could give he signal for commencing the second movenent.

If these ill-bred people will come late, why ot bar them out until the end of the symhony; that might, perhaps, have the desired ffect and bring them to a realizing sense of heir selfishness and rudeness.

Beethoven's symphony in F No. 8, selected or the opening of the season, was given with reat heartiness and was very warmly reeived by the audience, as might have been xpected, for it has brilliant qualities that nvariably commend it to the popular taste. But it is only fair to say, in this connection, hat Bach's delightful and delicate Prelude Adagio and Gavotte for strings, arranged by Bachrich, met with equal appreciation. This number was charmingly rendered and with great delicacy and precision.

Exactly why Mr. Nikisch, who certainly must thoroughly understand the limitations of Mr. Eliot Hubbard's voice and method, should have consented to that gentleman's selection of Marschner's "An jenem Tag" for his first aria, passes our comprehension. This baritone air was entirely beyond the singer's reach, and he naturally failed to do himself justice. Mr. Hubbard is preëminently a parlor singer with a sweet voice which he uses with skill and, when not handicapped, always sings with good taste. It is but simple truth to say that the first aria fell very flat indeed, but in the lighter songs of Brahms, Franz and Schumann, the soloist displayed his powers to much better advantage, and honestly earned the applause of the orchestra and the recall from the audience.

It would, perhaps, be expecting too much, of an American trained in Germany, to ask him to sing in his native language—even though all the songs he sung were translated to his hand.

The concert was a delightful one and a very fitting opening for the season. The next concert will be on November 12 with Madame Nordica as the soloist.

NEW HAVEN NEWS.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, OCT. 21.

HYPERION THEATER.

NIKISCH --- NORDICA.

Monday Evening, November 9.

At 8 O'CLOCK.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Arthur Nikisch Conductor, assisted by the distinguished Prima Donna Soprano,

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

Her only appearance in this city.

A Brilliant Program.

Tickets with reserved seats 75c, $1.00 and $1.50. The sale of seats opens at the Box Office, Hyperion Theater, Wednesday, October 28.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

A delightful musical treat is in store for the New Haven public in the concert to be given at the Hyperion theater on Monday evening, November 9, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The distinguished prima donna soprano, Mme. Lillian Nordica, will render some choice vocal selections, and Arthur Nikisch will be the conductor. This will be the only appearance in New Haven this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mme. Nordica, and a brilliant program has been arranged for the occasion. Seats will go on sale at the box office of the Hyperion theater next Wednesday.

FADED TEXT

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1891.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The programme of the second concert was:

Tschaikowsky: Suite No. 3, op. 55.
Mascagni: Prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana."
Beethoven: Menuetto and Finale from quartet in C, op. 59, No. 3.
Songs with Pianoforte:
Schubert "Der Neugierige."
Schumann "Mondnacht."
Jensen—"Murmelndes Lüftchen."
Massenet: Overture to "Phèdre."
Mr. William J. Winch was the singer.

The Tschaikowsky suite, which is one of the composer's prime favorites, shows him in a more genial mood than many of his compositions do that have been heard here before. It is a work which he has conducted in almost every city in Europe in which he has held a bâton, and one wonders rather that no one has ever played the trick on him that a wag once played on Goldmark, who was much surprised one evening to find himself registered at his hotel as "Carl Goldmark and suite." This work of Tschaikowsky's is not always of the deepest seriousness, for which one is not unthankful, for when Tschaikowsky takes it into his head to be very serious indeed, he often becomes terribly grim, and carries his theme through its development with an inexorableness of musical logic and a disregard for so trivial a thing as euphony that are really appalling. But here one finds little of this musical ferocity. To be sure, in the second movement, Valse mélancholique, he now and then has a moment of black gloom such as no one but a Russian can be afflicted with; but the suite is for the most part genially musical, often exceedingly brilliant, and only at rare intervals tainted with triviality. The last movement, alla Polacca, of the variations comes rather ticklishly near to the general spirit of a Meyerbeer Fackeltanz, but its brilliancy is unquestionable. The Scherzo is a gem in its way. The orchestration is masterly throughout. The orchestra played the work magnificently, the strings doing wonders of prowess in one of the variations —far better worth doing than a Paganini "Perpetuum mobile" for all the violins!

No one need have been surprised to find the Prelude to Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" on the programme; an epidemic is an epidemic, and may be caught by anyone. It is, upon the whole, just as well for our Symphony Orchestra to take its share of the "Rusticana" infection, in a benign form, before Mascagni's opera has had to stand as sponsor for a new brand of cigars, or a new make of paper collars. True, it does not necessarily follow that because a composition is a work of genius, it is in place on every possible musical occasion; and one may feel that this prelude of Mascagni's, work of genius though it may be, possesses few of those characteristics which are usually regarded as passports to a symphony concert programme. It is a brilliant, but wholly sketchy, exposition of certain themes which are developed later on in the opera, and is interrupted at one point by a charming serenade, sung behind the stage by a tenor voice; but of musical form and musical development, in any true sense of the term, it has little or none. Still there is something to be said on the other side of the case. The "Cavalleria Rusticana" is a work about which the musical world is all agog with interest just now, and, as operatic conditions go in this country, the only place in which the public can well hope to hear a really worthy performance of the Prelude is in the concert-room. Considering this, it is perhaps just as well to stretch a point in its favor as to do the same for the prelude to "Parsifal," the "Good Friday Spell," or any other unsymphonic tid-bit from the lyric stage of today. Perhaps Mr. Nikisch may yet give us a hearing of the "Hymen!" entr'acte movement from Massenet's "Esclarmonde," which, if not so regularly constructed as his overture to "Phèdre," is far pleasanter to listen to. We, for one, shall not complain. Mascagni's prelude is certainly exciting enough and was capitally played, Mr. Winch singing Turiddu's little serenade (no light task, by the way) with admirable fire and effectiveness. In the three songs by Schubert, Schumann and Jensen he was fairly at his best; the accompaniments were beautifully played by Mr. Nikisch.

Massenet's "Phèdre" overture was grandly played; but it is not music that wears well. It has passages of undeniable strength, but is, in general, coarse and often trivial in conception, and by no means remarkable in point of workmanship; the instrumentation is of truly masterly vulgarity. It is no very thankful task showing hospitality to contemporary French works for orchestra; they behave themselves so like a bull in a China shop!

Of the two movements from Beethoven's third Rasoumoffsky quartet we must say that the presence in Boston of two such organizations as the Kneisel and Adamowski Quartets makes the doing of this sort of thing at an orchestral concert doubly reprehensible; there is enough legitimate orchestral music in the world to make it needless to poach on other manors. Of course, when music is so supremely good as this of Beethoven's, and so capitally played as it was last Saturday evening, it must sound well and be highly enjoyable. But there should be a fitness in all things.

The next programme is: MacDowell, suite, Op. 42; Volkmann, concerto for violoncello, in A minor; Brahms, symphony No. 4, in E minor. Mr. Alwin Schroeder will be the 'cellist.

Boston Post

TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 20, 1891.

MUSIC.

THE KNEISEL QUARTETTE.

The first concert of the Kneisel Quartette (seventh season) was given last evening in Union Hall. The programme is as follows:

Quartette in C major	Mozart
Piano Quartette in E flat	Schumann
Quintette in G op. 111	Brahms

Mr. Alvin Schroeder, the 'cello player, is the successor to Mr. Hekking. Judged by his work of last evening, he would seem to be admirable in ensemble. His tone is pure and full, his technique sufficient, his phrasing artistic. Above all, he has the sense of subordination, the feeling of the proper values. Nor when the burden falls upon him, does he force himself forward and greedily monopolize the attention. His worth was fully shown in the Mozart quartette which was exceedingly well played; and seldom are four players so evenly balanced, so respectful of the claims of each other and the wishes of the composer as the four who played last evening the immortal composition of Mozart.

When Mozart, properly played, comes first, they that follow generally suffer. And in the present instance it must be said that the feature of the evening was the first number. Yet the piano quartet of Schumann, in which Mr. Xaver Scharwenka played the piano part, was very delightful. The piece itself has been pushed to the wall by the famous quintet of the same year, but it certainly bears repeated hearing. When it was first given in public, two years after it was written, David was the first violin and Niels Gade, who was then directing the Gewandhaus concerts, was the viola. Last evening Mr. Scharwenka bore away the honors from the very fact that he, though a solo player of renown, did not obtrude his personality; but this personality was the leaven of the performance. There was nothing to be desired in the sense of rhythm and in the musical conception; and the carrying out of the conception was eminently Schumanesque. Take, for example, his remarkable playing in the Scherzo with its distinct and yet subordinated staccato; or the poetic feeling revealed in the Andante. Nor were brilliancy and force lacking when necessary, nor were they ever out of place.

The Quintette of Brahms was played for the first time in Boston. It is upon the whole a pleasing work, though it hardly answers the glowing description of Hanslick that was printed in the programme. It is concise—that is for Brahms—and it is comparatively free from brush wood. The first movement is perhaps the strongest; the second is more labored and not so striking; while the third with its mixture of Grieg and folk-melodies, is the weakest. Mr. Novacek was the second viola.

The players were loudly applauded throughout the evening. The second concert will be given Nov. 23.

PHILIP HALE.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 20, 1891.

The Kneisel Quartette Concert.

The first concert of the season by the Kneisel Quartette was given in Union Hall last evening, to a representative musical and social audience. The quartette is the same as last year, excepting the cellist. Mr. Alwin Schrœder takes the place of Heking, and judging from his excellent work last evening, the quartette is no loser by the change.

The opening number of the concert was the quartette in C major by Mozart. Four movements constitute the quartette. To speak of each separate movement would be simply to repeat the praise that the players deserve for the perfect manner in which they played. The most delicate work was done in the Mennett (allegretto), which was rendered with a daintiness and grace that was most delightful. Xavier Scharwenka, the composer-pianist, appeared with Messrs. Kneisel, Roth and Schrœder to play Schumann's piano quartette in E flat, op. 47. Mr. Scharwenka's brilliant technique was pre-eminent in the work, although his playing was sometimes indistinct. The musicians seemed to be in entire sympathy with each other, and a more conscientious and evenly balanced rendition of the quartette could not be desired.

A new quintette by Brahms, op. 111, in G, closed the concert. This work was given its first hearing in Boston at this concert. The first movement, an allegro con brio, is a most splendid piece of music. The violoncello has the theme, accompanied by tremolo of the violins and a counter melody by the violas; principal and subordinate themes are interwoven with a delightful charm. The adagio smacks of the Slavonic style, and is a somewhat melancholy song. An allegretto in G, dainty and graceful, is followed by a trio that tends towards the style of Brahms' scherzos, not very joyous but heavy. The finale is in the Hungarian style and is very effective. The quartette, reinforced by another viola, gave the first rendition in as artistically perfect a way as one would care to hear.

Boston Journal.

TEN PAGES.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1891.

KNEISEL QUARTETTE CHAMBER CONCERT.

A select audience, nearly filling Union Hall, greeted the Kneisel Quartette on their first appearance in the series of six chamber concerts to be given, one a month, during the winter. Mr. Xaver Scharwenka ably assisted as pianist. The programme included three numbers, especially well chosen for chamber concert work. They were Mozart's quartette for strings in C major, the "andante cantibile" being particularly enjoyed. The unity and sympathy with which these artists play together show the high standard which inspires them to do only the best work.

The second number was Schumann's piano quartette, E flat, op. 47, rendered by Mr. Scharwenka at the piano, Mr. Kneisel, first violin, Mr. Roth, second violin, and Mr. Schroder, 'cello. Mr. Scharwenka shows not only the touch and expression of the true artist, but plays with an ease and grace that can be acquired only by the patient work of a lifetime. His performance gave great satisfaction and merited the approval with which his hearers responded to his efforts. The different movements of this selection gave a fine opportunity of showing his varied styles of playing, from the sweetness of the andante to the vigor and fire of the vivace.

Brahm's quintet in G, op. 111, including Mr. O. Novacek, second viola, played for the first time in Boston, furnished the evening's finale. The use of the second viola in the Brahm selection proved a subtle addition and rounded out the sweet, dreamy, peculiar harmony of the famous composer's works, to the gratification of his musical admirers. It was an ideal performance of a very high order, and much praise is due to these competent artists.

The second concert occurs on Monday, Nov. 23.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, OCT. 20.

KNEISEL CONCERT.

Brahms' Quintet in G Given Its First Production in Boston.

The Kneisel quartet gave the first of its series of concerts at Union Hall last evening. The programme was an attractive one, presenting Mozart's quartet for strings in C major, Schumann's piano quartet in E flat and the new quintet in G by Brahms. Precision and delicacy marked the work of the quartet, which is composed of Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Louis Svecenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder, violoncello. The adagio of the first number was played with a graceful smoothness which showed the skill of the musicians, and was typical of all their later works. Their interpretation of the piano quartet, in which they had the assistance of the eminent pianist Xaver Scharwencka, was satisfying throughout, and their efforts were rewarded by warm applause. The beauties of the number were admirably brought out, the exquisite music of the andante cantabile especially being delightfully rendered. The interest of the evening centred in the Brahms quintet, which was first produced in Vienna a year ago, when it was still unpublished, and which was given last evening for the first time in Boston. It its rendition the quartet was assisted by O. Novacek, second viola. The music of the quintet is characteristic of Brahms in his first method, and was thoroughly enjoyed. It is graceful, strong and passionate througout, and in the adagio and the allegretto there are passages of wonderful charm and beauty. The quintet excited, as it deserved, the heartiest applause of the evening, and made a fitting close to a concert which throughout was of the highest excellence, and which was keenly enjoyed by an audience that was typical of Boston musical culture.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 112.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

The first of the season's concerts by the Kneisel quartet was given at Union Hall last evening, with Xaver Scharwenka's assistance at the piano. The works selected for the evening were Mozart's quartet in C major, Schumann's piano quartet and Brahm's quintet in G major, the last named having its first performance in America on this occasion.

The quartet is fortunate in securing so good a new 'cello player as Mr. Schroeder, whose qualifications are equal in every way to those of his associates who have gained so much favor in former seasons.

The playing of the quartet in all the works of the evening was up to the high standard of former seasons, and in the new quartet by Brahms the organization surpassed even its own record for satisfactory interpretations of such compositions.

The Brahms quintet proved a most valuable addition to the repertoire of Mr. Kneisel's quartet, showing the genius of the composer distinctly in each and all of its movements, and illustrating in a marked fashion the rapid development of Brahms as a melodious musician.

Mr. Scharwenka did splendid work in the quartet for piano and strings, showing himself to be as excellent in ensemble playing as he is as a soloist. The audience was most enthusiastic.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1891.

The Kneisel Quartet.

The Kneisel Quartet gave its first concert of the season in Union Hall last evening, the programme being—

Mozart: Quartet in C, (Peters, No. 6).
Schumann: Pianoforte quartet in E-flat, op. 47.
Brahms: Quintet in G, op. 3.
Mr. Xaver Scharwenka was the pianist.

Mozart's well-known (but never too well known) quartet was superbly given. Times have changed since this work was currently known as the "quartet with the false relation," and Giuseppe Sarti wrote his famous "Examination," pointing out "nineteen mortal errors in thirty-six measures." That wonderful Adagio introduction sounds now as beautiful as anything in music. The performance of the whole quartet last evening was a noteworthy example of playing a classic composition with unexaggerated rhythmic freedom, with an elasticity in the matter of tempo that showed the composition in the strongest light, without destroying the unity of character in each movement. There was just a little hurrying here, a little slackening there, as the specific character of particular passage prompted. This is a very different thing from taking the second theme in a movement at a different tempo throughout from that of the first theme. The one is a wanton violence done to the unity of tempo in a movement; the other, an artistic protest against the unmusical tyranny of the metronome.

The ever beautiful Schumann quartet was admirably played by all concerned, saving the over-rapid pace to which the Finale was pushed. We should have more to say of Mr. Scharwenka if we had heard more of his playing, but—well, here we are again at our eternal stumbling block! "Delenda est Carthago," a shut-up pianoforte is no pianoforte at all! The pianist who plays on one might as well play under a blanket; the strings will cover up and drown out his playing every time. All we can say is that Mr. Scharwenka seemed to us to play excellently well.

The new Brahms quintet is one of the sunniest, most genial works by the composer that we know. No extended composition by Brahms can be fully appreciated at a simple hearing but this one can at least be thoroughly enjoyed, so enchanting and tuneful is in style, so elevated in sentiment. Even the Adagio, which, for paucity of thematic material, vies with the first movement of the composer.s C minor symphony, carries the listener up to such heights of musical ecstasy that he cares little what the music is made of, so wondrously well is it made. The performance was worthy of the work. Mr. Schroeder, the new 'cellist of the Quartet, proved himself a valuable acquisition indeed. His phrasing is especially masterly, a not very common merit with 'cellists. The second concert fall on Nov. 23.

Clipping from Tribune
Cambridge Ch
Date 10 - 17

First Symphony Concert.

With the first Symphony concert the social season in Cambridge may be said to have fairly opened. The greetings in the hall at Sanders theatre on Thursday evening, between friends who had been separated for the summer, while extremely agreeable, no doubt to the parties directly interested, was somewhat embarrassing to those who were anxious to pass the gatekeepers and obtain access to their places.

Nearly every seat in the beautiful house was filled before Mr. Nikisch made his bow and received his greeting, but, as usual, a score or two of the constitutionally tardy were barred out at the commencement of the symphony and came clattering in at the close of the allegro, disturbing those already seated and causing Mr. Nikisch to turn to the audience and pause, with a look of hopeless disgust, for several minutes before he could give the signal for commencing the second movement.

If these ill-bred people will come late, why not bar them out until the end of the symphony; that might, perhaps, have the desired effect and bring them to a realizing sense of their selfishness and rudeness.

Beethoven's symphony in F No. 8, selected for the opening of the season, was given with great heartiness and was very warmly received by the audience, as might have been expected, for it has brilliant qualities that invariably commend it to the popular taste. But it is only fair to say, in this connection, that Bach's delightful and delicate Prelude Adagio and Gavotte for strings, arranged by Bachrich, met with equal appreciation. This number was charmingly rendered and with great delicacy and precision.

Exactly why Mr. Nikisch, who certainly must thoroughly understand the limitations of Mr. Eliot Hubbard's voice and method, should have consented to that gentleman's selection of Marschner's "An jenem Tag" for his first aria, passes our comprehension. This baritone air was entirely beyond the singer's reach, and he naturally failed to do himself justice. Mr. Hubbard is preëminently a parlor singer with a sweet voice which he uses with skill and, when not handicapped, always sings with good taste. It is but simple truth to say that the first aria fell very flat indeed, but in the lighter songs of Brahms, Franz and Schumann, the soloist displayed his powers to much better advantage, and honestly earned the applause of the orchestra and the recall from the audience.

It would, perhaps, be expecting too much, of an American trained in Germany, to ask him to sing in his native language—even though all the songs he sung were translated to his hand.

The concert was a delightful one and a very fitting opening for the season. The next concert will be on November 12 with Madame Nordica as the soloist.

NEW HAVEN NEWS.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, OCT. 21.

HYPERION THEATER.

NIKISCH --- NORDICA.

Monday Evening, November 9.

At 8 O'CLOCK.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Arthur Nikisch Conductor, assisted by the distinguished Prima Donna Soprano,

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

Her only appearance in this city.

A Brilliant Program.

Tickets with reserved seats 75c, $1.00 and $1.50. The sale of seats opens at the Box Office, Hyperion Theater, Wednesday, October 28.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

A delightful musical treat is in store for the New Haven public in the concert to be given at the Hyperion theater on Monday evening, November 9, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The distinguished prima donna soprano, Mme. Lillian Nordica, will render some choice vocal selections, and Arthur Nikisch will be the conductor. This will be the only appearance in New Haven this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mme. Nordica, and a brilliant program has been arranged for the occasion. Seats will go on sale at the box office of the Hyperion theater next Wednesday.

[illegible] OCTOBER 21

[illegible]ISCH - - NORDICA

[illegible] EVENING, Nov. 2, at 8 o'clk

ONLY CONCERT THIS SEASON BY THE

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra!

[illegible] ARTHUR NIKISCH......CONDUCTOR.
ASSISTED BY THE
Distinguished Prima Donna Soprano,

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

Her only appearance in this city.

A BRILLIANT PROGRAMME

Tickets with reserved seats 75c, $1, $1.50. The sale of seats opens at the Box Office, [illegible] Theater, Wednesday, Oct. 28.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

The Boston Symphony company will appear at the Hyperion theater November 2, and in the company will be several of those famous artists who have given such a wide reputation to this fine musical organization. Arthur Nikisch will be the conductor and Mme. Lillian Nordica the sprano at this concert.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, OCT. 22.

IN INFANTRY HALL.

Mme. Nordica Sings at the First of a Series of Six Concerts.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 21.—The Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, gave the first of a series of six concerts in Infantry Hall tonight.

There were fully 1500 present when Conductor Nickish waved his baton for the opening movement in the Tschaikowsky suite, op. 55, and before the close of the concert there were fully 2000 people in the audience.

It was a representative and a most appreciative one. The orchestra never showed to better advantage, and especially was this noticeable in the "Good Friday Spell," from Wagner's "Parsifal."

The soloist of the evening was Mme. Lillian Nordica. She sang tonight Gounod's aria from the "Queen of Sheba" and the polacca from "Mignon." She held her audience spellbound from the first, and when she had concluded the applause was deafening, and she was recalled again and again. The programme was as follows:

Suite ....Tschaikowsky
[illegible] Melancholique.
[illegible] Variazioni.
[illegible] of Sheba..................Gounod
[illegible] from Parsifal..........Wagner
[illegible] Mignon..................A. Thomas
[illegible] Cellini..................Berlios

The second concert occurs Nov. 18, when the soloists will be Mrs. Arthur Nikisch and Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

NEW HAVEN DAILY PALLADIUM.

OCTOBER 21, 1891.

Only one concert will be given here this season by the Boston Symphony orchestra. The date is November 2 and the soloist will be Mme. Lillian Nordica. The sale of seats will open Wednesday of next week.

Hyperion Theater} NIKISCH NORDICA

Monday Evening, Nov. 2d, at 8.

Only Concert this Season by the

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,
Assisted by the distinguished Prima Donna Soprano,

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA

Her only appearance in this city.

A BRILLIANT PROGRAMME.

Tickets, with Reserved Seats, 75c, $1.00 and [illegible]. The sale of seats opens at the Box Office, Hyperion Theater,

Wednesday, October 28th.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

TIMES, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10-21

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

[illegible] announcement by the Boston Symphony [illegible] its annual series of concerts [illegible] Academy of Music will be read [illegible] the musical public. Con[illegible] and his musicians hold a [illegible] the esteem of concert-goers of [illegible] who are familiar with their splen[illegible]. As usual six concerts will be [illegible] dates being as follows: Wednes[illegible] November 4, and Mondays, December [illegible], February 8, March 14 and [illegible] Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mr. Alfred [illegible], Mr. Eugen D. Albert and other [illegible] soloists will appear in the [33]

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1891.

THREE GREAT COMPOSERS.

Opening Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.—Soloist, Mme. Nordica.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is recognized as the most deservedly famous organization known to music-loving New England, and Mme. Lillian Nordica is regarded as the foremost American vocalist within certain temperamental limits. Naturally much interest was developed by the musically inclined of the city at this first concert of the series to note whatever variation of excellence in the Symphony Orchestra existed since last season and to hear the unfamiliar voice of a renowned vocal artist. Curiosity and art-love were commingled on this occasion. Whatever was to be heard must be considered the standard and the hope endured that so far as the orchestra was concerned the standard would be advanced. Because of unavoidable and deplorable changes in its personnel many, perhaps, were inclined to the belief that the much admired unity and work of the orchestra might be marred by players unused to Conductor Nikisch. Like everything else the touching of familiar elbows inspired confidence and confidence is not often of rapid growth. Assurances that every man in the chairs is able to do all and a little more than is required of him is of almost inestimable value in orchestras, and assemblages of instrumentalists and vocalists. Perhaps the best informed might have noticed a slight lack of precision, and might also have made a mental protest against the wood and brass instruments in certain passages. Absolute precision will come ere the Orchestra as it now stands becomes many weeks older. When it can be said that the grand organization eclipses its proud record of the past dozen years. At first, last evening, something akin to hesitancy manifested itself, but as the concert progressed conductor Nikisch's coterie of artists responded to the sway of his magic wand as one man dominated by a ruling spirit. That figure in the central foreground reading the symbols of the best thing vouchsafed to mortals with the precision and scope of a master and spreading his influence upon everyone was one of the delights of the hours. The programme presented was of especial interest because masterpieces of three schools. Tschaikowsky's—the foremost Russian composer of to-day—Suite, op. 55, Elegie Valse Melancholique, Scherzo, Tema con Variaziani; Wagner's Good Friday Spell, from "Parsifal," and Berlioz's overture. "Benvenuto Cellini," constituted the work of the orchestra, Russian, German and Italian creations. Mme. Nordica sang Gounod's aria from "Queen of Sheba," and A. Thomas's polacca from "Mignon." The greatest interest centred, naturally, in Tschaikowsky's work, tinctured as it is with his early experiences in the Italian and German schools. His subsequent development gave to the world something new and distinctly original. His greatest success is symphonic composition. Herein lies his strength. Plaintiveness, tenderness, effeminateness, melancholiness, and weirdness in varying moods touched the listeners as the orchestra gave the 12 variations. The melody skillfully imparted by the violins was followed by the theme with the whole of the string instruments and the wind instruments in counterpoint above it. The Elegie had an insinuating tenderness, the Valse an impressive sadness, the Scherzo a witching, peculiar effect that was charming, and the final Tewa con Variazioni with its wealth of sweet and majestic tones left the audience in love with the Russian, and in admiration of the players who had interpreted his work so skillfully and beautifully. The Good Friday spell from the third act of "Parsifal" is more or less familiar. Its solemn suggestion was exquisitely unfolded, and perhaps it was the most satisfactory number of the programme. Certainly it was played superbly. Berlioz's overture from the opera of "Benvenuto Cellini" was less familiar. Its base of themes represents a bold and daring spirit. Its melody, sustained by the violoncellos and clarinets, is richly elaborated by the violins and flute and oboe alternately. In its working out it is subjected to extended treatment and development, and ends with the spirit of the opera triumphantly. It was a noble closing selection nobly played.

Mme. Nordica looked superbly and sang spontaneously. The aria from "Queen of Sheba" illustrated the admirable qualities in her singing. Her firm, strong tone filled the great hall with melody. She did not scream in the upper register, and her intonation was reproachless. She sang as though singing was a delight and not a form of vocal gymnastics. Perhaps her voice was somewhat unsympathetic and cold, but it was due entirely to her tempteramert. She was not indifferent, because she sang as though she could not help it. Her majestic tones were brilliant, and commanded the admiration of every person in the large and appreciative audience, representing the culture of the city. The polacca from "Mignon" afforded her an opportunity to show flexibility and voice control, but the selection was unworthy the heroic capacity of her sonorous tones. Mme. Nordica was recalled after both selections, vigorously, but she would not respond to the general desire for more because time was precious, and the 10 o'clock train for Boston would not wait even for the Symphony Orchestra.

JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.

Date 10-2[illegible]

To-night's Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate a series of entertainments at Infantry Hall this evening under the direction of Arthur Nikisch. The soloist is Mme. Lillian Nordica, the celebrated prima donna soprano, who will sing with orchestra aria "La Reine de Saba," Gounod, and polacca, "Mignon," Thomas. A brilliant orchestral programme will be given.

The new Tschaikowsky suite for orchestra, which will be heard for the first time in Providence at the Symphony concert to-night, has been well received in Boston, and will form a part of the programme of the first New York concert. Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini," if not entirely new to Providence, is certainly unfamiliar.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTET,

T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st VIOLIN.
MAX ZACH, VIOLA.
A. MOLDAUER, 2d VIOLIN.
J. ADAMOWSKI, VIOLONCELLO.

ASSISTED BY

MRS. JULIE M. WYMAN,
MR. ARTHUR FOOTE,
MR. CLAYTON JOHNS,

WILL GIVE

THREE SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS

IN

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET,

ON MONDAY EVENINGS, OCTOBER 26TH, NOVEMBER 16TH AND DECEMBER 21ST, 1891.

FOURTH SEASON--1891-92.

SEASON TICKETS, WITH RESERVED SEATS FOR THE SERIES, THREE DOLLARS, NOW ON SALE AT BOX OFFICE, MUSIC HALL.

The Register.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22.

HYPERION THEATER

NICKISCH - - NORDICA

MONDAY EVENING, Nov. 2, at 8 o'clk

ONLY CONCERT THIS SEASON BY THE

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra!

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH......CONDUCTOR.
ASSISTED BY THE
Distinguished Prima Donna Soprano,

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

Her only appearance in this city.

A BRILLIANT PROGRAMME

Tickets with reserved seats 75c, $1, $1.50. The sale of seats opens at the Box Office, Hyperion Theater, Wednesday, Oct. 28.
o21 7d C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Arthur Nikisch conductor, will give a concert at the Hyperion on Monday evening, November 2. This organization attained great popularity in this city on its previous appearances, and the lovers of fine music consider themselves fortunate that the concert is assured here this season. The soloist of the evening will be Mme. Lillian Nordica, whose soprano voice held Paris enraptured for years.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1891.

Subscriptions are being solicited for three concerts by Damrosch's New York Symphony Orchestra, to take place in December, January and February. We shall be glad of an opportunity to compare their work with that of Mr. Nikisch's players.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1891.

Programme of the third concert of the season in the Music Hall by the Symphony Orchestra, tomorrow night: Suite, Op. 42, E. A. MacDowell, first time here; concerto for violoncello in A minor, Volkmann, to be played by Mr. Schroeder; fourth symphony, Brahms

---

TRIBUNE. New York, N. Y.

Date 10-22

The coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give concerts in Brooklyn in place of the Phil[illegible]ic Society does not seem to have discouraged the energetic Seidl Society, which announces a series of entertainments and couples with the announcement promises of a kind calculated to excite the liveliest interest. The first of these concerts will take place on November 10, when there will be what theatrical people call a double bill in the solo department. Madame Fursch-Madi will sing, and Mr. Friedheim will play the pianoforte. Among the other artists with whom contracts have been made are Lilli Lehmann, Madame Ritter-Goetze, Emil Fischer and Paul Kalisch. At the first concert, on the date already mentioned, the programme will consist of these compositions: Overture, "Leonore," No. 3; scene and air, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven (Mme. Fursch-Madi); "L'Inferno," from the Dante symphony, Liszt; pianoforte concerto in E-flat Liszt (Mr. Friedheim); Siegfried's Rhine journey from "Die Goetterdaemmerung," Wagner; prelude, "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; song, "Dreams," Wagner (Mme. Fursch-Madi); finale, "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner (Isolde, Mme. Fursch-Madi).

Clipping from Telegram, Providence, R. I.

Date 10-21

TREATS FOR EVERYBODY.

Concerts This Evening in the Symphony and People's Courses.

The first of the six standard concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra will take place to[illegible] Infantry hall. The program has already been published. Mme. Lillian Nordica (Mrs. Fred Gower) will sing one of Gounod's arias, "La Reine de Saba" and the polacca "Mignon," by Thomas.

NORTH AMERICAN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/22

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The prospectus of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the season [illegible]91-92 has just been made public. There are t[illegible] six concerts, to take place at the Academy of Music on the evenings of November 4, December 7, January 11, February 8, March 14 and April 25. The first concert occurs on a Wednesday, and all the others on Monday evening. The sale of seats will open at 1119 Chestnut street on Monday morning, Oct. 26.

The Register.

NEW HAVEN

WEDNESDAY. OCTOBER 21.

NICKISCH - - NORDICA

MONDAY EVENING, Nov. 2, at 8 o'clk

ONLY CONCERT THIS SEASON BY THE

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra!

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH......CONDUCTOR.

ASSISTED BY THE

Distinguished Prima Donna Soprano,

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

Her only appearance in this city.

A BRILLIANT PROGRAMME

Tickets with reserved seats 75c, $1, $1.50. The sale of seats opens at the Box Office, Hyperion Theater, Wednesday, Oct. 28.

o21 7d C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

The Boston Symphony company will appear at the Hyperion theater November 2, and in the company will be several of those famous artists who have given such a wide reputation to this fine musical organization. Arthur Nikisch will be the conductor and Mme. Lillian Nordica the sprano at this concert.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, OCT. 22.

IN INFANTRY HALL.

Mme. Nordica Sings at the First of a Series of Six Concerts.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 21.—The Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, gave the first of a series of six concerts in Infantry Hall tonight.

There were fully 1500 present when Conductor Nickish waved his baton for the opening movement in the Tschaikowsky suite, op. 55, and before the close of the concert there were fully 2000 people in the audience.

It was a representative and a most appreciative one. The orchestra never showed to better advantage, and especially was this noticeable in the "Good Friday Spell," from Wagner's "Parsifal."

The soloist of the evening was Mme. Lillian Nordica. She sang tonight Gounod's aria from the "Queen of Sheba" and the polacca from "Mignon." She held her audience spellbound from the first, and when she had concluded the applause was deafening, and she was recalled again and again.

The programme was as follows:

Suite, op. 55......Tschaikowsky
  Elegie.
  Valse melancholique.
  Scherzo.
  Tema con Variazioni.
Aria from Queen of Sheba......Gounod
Good Friday Spell, from Parsifal......Wagner
Polacca from Mignon......A. Thomas
Overture, Benvenuto Cellini......Berlios

The second concert occurs Nov. 18, when the soloists will be Mrs. Arthur Nikisch and Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

NEW HAVEN DAILY PALLADIUM.

OCTOBER 21, 1891.

Only one concert will be given here this season by the Boston Symphony orchestra. The date is November 2 and the soloist will be Mme. Lillian Nordica. The sale of seats will open Wednesday of next week.

Hyperion Theater } NIKISCH NORDICA

Monday Evening, Nov. 2d, at 8.

Only Concert this Season by the

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,

Assisted by the distinguished Prima Donna Soprano,

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA

Her only appearance in this city.

A BRILLIANT PROGRAMME.

Tickets, with Reserved Seats, 75c, $1.00 and $1 50. The sale of seats opens at the Box Office, Hyperion Theater,

Wednesday, October 28th.

o21 4t C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

TIMES, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10-20

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The announcement by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of its annual series of concerts at the Academy of Music will be read with interest by the musical public. Conductor Nikisch and his musicians hold a high place in the esteem of concert-goers of this city, who are familiar with their splendid work. As usual six concerts will be given, the dates being as follows: Wednesday, November 4, and Mondays, December 7, January 11, February 8, March 14 and April 25. Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mr. Alfred Grünfeld, Mr. Eugen D. Albert and other distinguished soloists will appear in the series.

[33]

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1891.

THREE GREAT COMPOSERS.

Opening Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.—Soloist, Mme. Nordica.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is recognized as the most deservedly famous organization known to music-loving New England, and Mme. Lillian Nordica is regarded as the foremost American vocalist within certain temperamental limits. Naturally much interest was developed by the musically inclined of the city at this first concert of the series to note whatever variation of excellence in the Symphony Orchestra existed since last season and to hear the unfamiliar voice of a renowned vocal artist. Curiosity and art-love were commingled on this occasion. Whatever was to be heard must be considered the standard and the hope endured that so far as the orchestra was concerned the standard would be advanced. Because of unavoidable and deplorable changes in its personnel many, perhaps, were inclined to the belief that the much admired unity and work of the orchestra might be marred by players unused to Conductor Nikisch. Like everything else the touching of familiar elbows inspired confidence and confidence is not often of rapid growth. Assurances that every man in the chairs is able to do all and a little more than is required of him is of almost inestimable value in orchestras, and assemblages of instrumentalists and vocalists. Perhaps the best informed might have noticed a slight lack of precision, and might also have made a mental protest against the wood and brass instruments in certain passages. Absolute precision will come ere the Orchestra as it now stands becomes many weeks older. When it can be said that the grand organization eclipses its proud record of the past dozen years. At first, last evening, something akin to hesitancy manifested itself, but as the concert progressed conductor Nikisch's coterie of artists responded to the sway of his magic wand as one man dominated by a ruling spirit. That figure in the central foreground reading the symbols of the best thing vouchsafed to mortals with the precision and scope of a master and spreading his influence upon everyone was one of the delights of the hours. The programme presented was of especial interest because masterpieces of three schools. Tschaikowsky's—the foremost Russian composer of to-day—Suite, op. 55, Elegie, Valse Melancholique, Scherzo, Tema con Variaziani; Wagner's Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," and Berlioz's overture "Benvenuto Cellini," constituted the work of the orchestra, Russian, German and Italian creations. Mme. Nordica sang Gounod's aria from "Queen of Sheba," and A. Thomas's polacca from "Mignon." The greatest interest centred, naturally, in Tschaikowsky's work, tinctured as it is with his early experiences in the Italian and German schools. His subsequent development gave to the world something new and distinctly original. His greatest success is symphonic composition wherein lies his strength. Plaintiveness tenderness, effeminateness, melancholiness, and weirdness in varying moods touched the listeners as the orchestra gave the 12 variations. The melody skillfully imparted by the violins was followed by the theme with the whole of the string instruments and the wind instruments in counterpoint above it. The Elegie had an insinuating tenderness, the Valse an impressive sadness, the Scherzo a witching, peculiar effect that was charming, and the final Tewa con Variazioni with its wealth of sweet and majestic tones left the audience in love with the Russian, and in admiration of the players who had interpreted his work so skillfully and beautifully. The Good Friday spell from the third act of "Parsifal" is more or less familiar. Its solemn suggestion was exquisitely unfolded, and perhaps it was the most satisfactory number of the programme. Certainly it was played superbly. Berlioz's overture from the opera of "Benvenuto Cellini" was less familiar. Its base of themes represents a bold and daring spirit. Its melody, sustained by the violoncellos and clarinets, is richly elaborated by the violins and flute and oboe alternately. In its working out it is subjected to extended treatment and development, and ends with the spirit of the opera triumphantly. It was a noble closing selection nobly played.

Mme. Nordica looked superbly and sang spontaneously. The aria from "Queen of Sheba" illustrated the admirable qualities in her singing. Her firm, strong tone filled the great hall with melody. She did not scream in the upper register, and her intonation was reproachless. She sang as though singing was a delight and not a form of vocal gymnastics. Perhaps her voice was somewhat unsympathetic and cold, but it was due entirely to her temperament. She was not indifferent, because she sang as though she could not help it. Her majestic tones were brilliant, and commanded the admiration of every person in the large and appreciative audience, representing the culture of the city. The polacca from "Mignon" afforded her an opportunity to show flexibility and voice control, but the selection was unworthy the heroic capacity of her sonorous tones. Mme. Nordica was recalled after both selections, vigorously, but she would not respond to the general desire for more because time was precious, and the 10 o'clock train for Boston would not wait even for the Symphony Orchestra.

JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.

Date 10-2

To-night's Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate a series of entertainments at Infantry Hall this evening under the direction of Arthur Nikisch. The soloist is Mme. Lillian Nordica, the celebrated prima donna soprano, who will sing with orchestra aria "La Reine de Saba," Gounod, and polacca, "Mignon," Thomas. A brilliant orchestral programme will be given.

The new Tschaikowsky suite for orchestra, which will be heard for the first time in Providence at the Symphony concert to-night, has been well received in Boston, and will form a part of the programme of the first New York concert. Berlioz's "Benbenuto Cellini," if not entirely new to Providence, is certainly unfamiliar.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTET,

T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin. MAX ZACH, Viola

A. MOLDAUER, 2d Violin. J. ADAMOWSKI, Violoncello.

ASSISTED BY

MRS. JULIE M. WYMAN,

MR. ARTHUR FOOTE

MR. CLAYTON JOHNS,

WILL GIVE

THREE SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS

IN

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET,

On MONDAY EVENINGS, October 26th, November 16th and December 21st, 1891.

FOURTH SEASON--1891-92.

Season Tickets, with reserved seats for the series, Three Dollars, now on sale at Box Office, Music Hall.

The Register.

THURSDAY. OCTOBER 22.

HYPERION THEATER

NICKISCH - - NORDICA

MONDAY EVENING, Nov. 2, at 8 o'clk

ONLY CONCERT THIS SEASON BY THE

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra!

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH......CONDUCTOR.

ASSISTED BY THE

Distinguished Prima Donna Soprano,

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

Her only appearance in this city.

A BRILLIANT PROGRAMME

Tickets with reserved seats 75c, $1, $1.50. The sale of seats opens at the Box Office, Hyperion Theater, Wednesday, Oct. 28.

o21 7d C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Arthur Nikisch conductor, will give a concert at the Hyperion on Monday evening, November 2. This organization attained great popularity in this city on its previous appearances, and the lovers of fine music consider themselves fortunate that the concert is assured here this season. The soloist of the evening will be Mme. Lillian Nordica, whose soprano voice held Paris enraptured for years.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1891.

Subscriptions are being solicited for three concerts by Damrosch's New York Symphony Orchestra, to take place in December, January and February. We shall be glad of an opportunity to compare their work with that of Mr. Nikisch's players.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1891.

Programme of the third concert of the season in the Music Hall by the Symphony Orchestra, tomorrow night: Suite, Op. 42, E. A. MacDowell, first time here; concerto for violoncello in A minor, Volkmann, to be played by Mr. Schroeder; fourth symphony, Brahms

---

TRIBUNE. New York, N. Y.

Date 10 22

The coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give concerts in Brooklyn in place of the Philharmonic Society does not seem to have discouraged the energetic Seidl Society, which announces a series of entertainments and couples with the announcement promises of a kind calculated to excite the liveliest interest. The first of these concerts will take place on November 10, when there will be what theatrical people call a double bill in the solo department. Madame Fursch-Madi will sing, and Mr. Friedheim will play the pianoforte. Among the other artists with whom contracts have been made are Lilli Lehmann, Madame Ritter-Goetze, Emil Fischer and Paul Kalisch. At the first concert, on the date already mentioned, the programme will consist of these compositions: Overture, "Leonore," No. 3; scene and air, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven (Mme. Fursch-Madi); "L'Inferno," from the Dante symphony, Liszt; pianoforte concerto in E-flat Liszt (Mr. Friedheim); Siegfried's Rhine journey from "Die Goetterdaemmerung," Wagner; prelude, "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; song, "Dreams," Wagner (Mme. Fursch-Madi); finale, "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner (Isolde, Mme. Fursch-Madi).

Clipping from

Date 10-21

TREATS FOR EVERYBODY.

Concerts This Evening in the Symphony and People's Courses.

The first of the six standard concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra will take place ton[illegible] Infantry hall. The program has already been published. Mme. Lillian Nordica (Mrs. Fred Gower) will sing one of Gounod's arias, "La Reine de Saba" and the polacca "Mignon," by Thomas.

NORTH AMERICAN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/22

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The prospectus of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the season o[illegible]91-92 has just been made public. There are to [illegible] six concerts, to take place at the Academy of Music on the evenings of November 4, December 7, January 11, February 8, March 14 and April 25. The first concert occurs on a Wednesday, and all the others on Monday evening. The sale of seats will open at 1119 Chestnut street on Monday morning, Oct. 26.

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET.

FIRST CONCERT.

MONDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 26, AT 8.

PROGRAMME.

QUARTET IN E FLAT MAJOR, (No. 14 PETERS.)	MOZART
SONATA FOR VIOLIN AND PIANO IN A MINOR, OP. 13. (FIRST TIME.)	PADEREWSKI
QUARTET IN F MAJOR, OP. 22. (FIRST TIME.)	TSCHAIKOWSKY

SOLOIST:

MR. ARTHUR FOOTE.

SECOND CONCERT, NOVEMBER 16TH. SOLOIST: MRS. JULIE M. WYMAN.

[illegible] Variazioni.
[illegible] Queen of Sheba..........Gounod
[illegible] Spell, from Parsifal..........Wagner
[illegible] Mignon..........A. Thomas
[illegible] Benvenuto Cellini..........Berlioz

The second concert occurs Nov. 18, when the soloists will be Mrs. Arthur Nikisch and Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

NEW HAVEN DAILY PALLADIUM.
OCTOBER 21, 1891.

Only one concert will be given here this season by the Boston Symphony orchestra. The date is November 2 and the soloist will be Mme. Lillian Nordica. The sale of seats will open Wednesday of next week.

Hyperion Theater} NIKISCH NORDICA

Monday Evening, Nov. 2d, at 8.

Only Concert this Season by the

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,

Assisted by the distinguished Prima Donna Soprano,

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA

Her only appearance in this city.

A BRILLIANT PROGRAMME.

[illegible] Tickets, with Reserved Seats, 75c, $1.00 and [illegible]. The sale of seats opens at the Box Office, Hyperion Theater,

Wednesday, October 28th.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

TIMES, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10-20

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

[illegible] announcement by the Boston Sym[illegible] annual series of con[illegible] Academy of Music will be read [illegible] by the musical public. Con[illegible] and his musicians hold a [illegible] in the esteem of concert-goers of [illegible] who are familiar with their splen[illegible]. As usual six concerts will be [illegible] dates being as follows: Wednes[illegible] and Mondays, December [illegible] 11, February 8, March 14 and [illegible] Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mr. Alfred [illegible] Mr. Eugen D. Albert and other [illegible] soloists will appear in the instruments and the wind instruments in counterpoint above it. The Elegie had an insinuating tenderness, the Valse an impressive sadness, the Scherz a witching, peculiar effect that was charming, and the final Tema con Variazioni with its wealth of sweet and majestic tones left the audience in love with the Russian, and in admiration of the players who had interpreted his work so skillfully and beautifully. The Good Friday spell from the third act of "Parsifal" is more or less familiar. Its solemn suggestion was exquisitely unfolded, and perhaps it was the most satisfactory number of the programme. Certainly it was played superbly. Berlioz's overture from the opera of "Benvenuto Cellini" was less familiar. Its base of themes represents a bold and daring spirit. Its melody, sustained by the violoncellos and clarinets, is richly elaborated by the violins and flute and oboe alternately. In its working out it is subjected to extended treatment and development, and ends with the spirit of the opera triumphantly. It was a noble closing selection nobly played.

---

Mme. Nordica looked superbly and sang spontaneously. The aria from "Queen of Sheba" illustrated the admirable qualities in her singing. Her firm, strong tone filled the great hall with melody. She did not scream in the upper register, and her intonation was reproachless. She sang as though singing was a delight and not a form of vocal gymnastics. Perhaps her voice was somewhat unsympathetic and cold, but it was due entirely to her temperament. She was not indifferent, because she sang as though she could not help it. Her majestic tones were brilliant, and commanded the admiration of every person in the large and appreciative audience, representing the culture of the city. The polacca from "Mignon" afforded her an opportunity to show flexibility and voice control, but the selection was unworthy the heroic capacity of her sonorous tones. Mme. Nordica was recalled after both selections, vigorously, but she would not respond to the general desire for more because time was precious, and the 10 o'clock train for Boston would not wait even for the Symphony Orchestra.

JOURNAL, Providence, R. I.

Date 10-2

To-night's Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate a series of entertainments at Infantry Hall this evening under the direction of Arthur Nikisch. The soloist is Mme. Lillian Nordica, the celebrated prima donna soprano, who will sing with orchestra aria "La Reine de Saba," Gounod, and polacca, "Mignon," Thomas. A brilliant orchestral programme will be given.

The new Tschaikowsky suite for orchestra, which will be heard for the first time in Providence at the Symphony concert to-night, has been well received in Boston, and will form a part of the programme of the first New York concert. Berlioz's "Benbenuto Cellini," if not entirely new to Providence, is certainly unfamiliar.

The Register.
THURSDAY. OCTOBER 22.

HYPERION THEATER

NICKISCH -- NORDICA

MONDAY EVENING, Nov. 2, at 8 o'clk

ONLY CONCERT THIS SEASON BY THE

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra!

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH......CONDUCTOR.
ASSISTED BY THE
Distinguished Prima Donna Soprano,

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

Her only appearance in this city.

A BRILLIANT PROGRAMME

Tickets with reserved seats 75c, $1, $1.50.
The sale of seats opens at the Box Office, Hyperion Theater, Wednesday, Oct. 28.
o21 7d C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Arthur Nikisch conductor, will give a concert at the Hyperion on Monday evening, November 2. This organization attained great popularity in this city on its previous appearances, and the lovers of fine music consider themselves fortunate that the concert is assured here this season. The soloist of the evening will be Mme. Lillian Nordica, whose soprano voice held Paris enraptured for years.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1891.

Subscriptions are being solicited for three concerts by Damrosch's New York Symphony Orchestra, to take place in December, January and February. We shall be glad of an opportunity to compare their work with that of Mr. Nikisch's players.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1891.

Programme of the third concert of the season in the Music Hall by the Symphony Orchestra, tomorrow night: Suite, Op. 42, E. A. MacDowell, first time here; concerto for violoncello in A minor, Volkmann, to be played by Mr. Schroeder; fourth symphony, Brahms

---

TRIBUNE. New York, N. Y.

Date 10-22

The coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give concerts in Brooklyn in place of the Philharmonic Society does not seem to have discouraged the energetic Seidl Society, which announces a series of entertainments and couples with the announcement promises of a kind calculated to excite the liveliest interest. The first of these concerts will take place on November 10, when there will be what theatrical people call a double bill in the solo department. Madame Fursch-Madi will sing, and Mr. Friedheim will play the pianoforte. Among the other artists with whom contracts have been made are Lilli Lehmann, Madame Ritter-Goetze, Emil Fischer and Paul Kalisch. At the first concert, on the date already mentioned, the programme will consist of these compositions: Overture, "Leonore," No. 3; scene and air, "Ah, Perfido," Beethoven (Mme. Fursch-Madi); "L'Inferno," from the Dante symphony, Liszt; pianoforte concerto in E-flat Liszt (Mr. Friedheim); Siegfried's Rhine journey from "Die Goetterdaemmerung," Wagner; prelude, "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; song, "Dreams," Wagner (Mme. Fursch-Madi); finale, "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner (Isolde, Mme. Fursch-Madi).

Clipping from Telegram, Providence, R. I.

Date 10-21

TREATS FOR EVERYBODY.

Concerts This Evening in the Symphony and People's Courses.

The first of the six standard concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra will take place [illegible] Infantry hall. The program has already been published. Mme. Lillian Nordica (Mrs. Fred Gower) will sing one of Gounod's arias, "La Reine de Saba" and the polacca "Mignon," by Thomas.

NORTH AMERICAN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/22

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The prospectus of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the season [illegible]-92 has just been made public. There are to be six concerts, to take place at the Academy of Music on the evenings of November 4, December 7, January 11, February 8, March 14 and April 25. The first concert occurs on a Wednesday, and all the others on Monday evening. The sale of seats will open at 1119 Chestnut street on Monday morning, Oct. 26.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Hyperion Theatre, - New Haven,

Monday Evening, November 2, at 8.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Season 1891-92

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Tickets, with reserved seats, 75 cents, $1.00, and $1.50. On sale at the Hyperion Theatre on and after Tuesday, October 27.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCT. 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTETTE.

The concerts of the Kneisel Quartette have come to be recognized as unsurpassed in their kind by any in the country, and it is gratifying to feel that the new series begins with greater promise than any which has preceded it. We mean no disparagement of the violoncellists whom Mr. Alwin Schroeder succeeds; but, if this first evening be the criterion, the ideal fourth part in the group is nearer to us than ever before. In tone and phrasing, and above all in the exact proportioning of his instrument to its intended place in each page, this new artist is the best 'cellist whom Mr. Kneisel has had. The programme included but three works—the Mozart Quartette in C-major, ever fresh and fair; an interesting Brahms quintette, new to Boston, which has good material and some sentiment, and is reasonably brief, but which seems to decline after the first movement in spirit and style; and Schumann's piano quartette in E-flat, the leading part in which, as presented by Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, was all that could be desired as an example of fine chamber playing, distinct, strong and marked, but modest and considerate. The second violin part in the Brahms was well put in by Mr. Novacek, and the old members of the Quartette were at their best.

Boston Post

SATURDAY MORNING, OCT. 24, 1891.

The programme of this evening's Symphony concert in Music Hall will be as follows: Mac Dowell's Suite op. 42 (first time in Boston); Volkmann's concerto for violoncello in A minor; and Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E minor. Mr. Alwin Schroeder will play the solo part of the concerto.

The first of the three concerts of the Adamowski Quartette will be given Monday evening, Oct. 26, in Music Hall. The Quartette will be assisted by Mr. Arthur Foote, and the programme will include Mozart's Quartette No. 14; Sonata for pianoforte and violin by Paderewski (first time in Boston); and Tschaikowsky's 2nd Quartette (first time in Boston). Mrs. Julie Wyman will sing at the second concert Nov. 16. Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld will play the solo part of Rubinstein's D minor Concerto at the Symphony Rehearsal and Concert, Oct. 30-31.

Mr. Carl Stasny, a concert pianist of European reputation, will give a recital in Bumstead Hall Tuesday evening, Nov. 3. His programme will include the Bach-[illegible]

Clipping from ADVERTISER, Portland, Me.

Date 10-22

With the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mrs. Nikisch will be the vocalist and one of the members of the orchestra will play a solo.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 116.

SATURDAY, OCT. 24, 1891.

The third of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra will be given at Music Hall this evening, the soloist being Mr. Alwin Schroeder, and the fourth of the Brahms symphonies being on the programme.

The Telegram.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1891.

NORDICA AND NIKISCH.

First of the Series of Symphony Concerts Last Night.

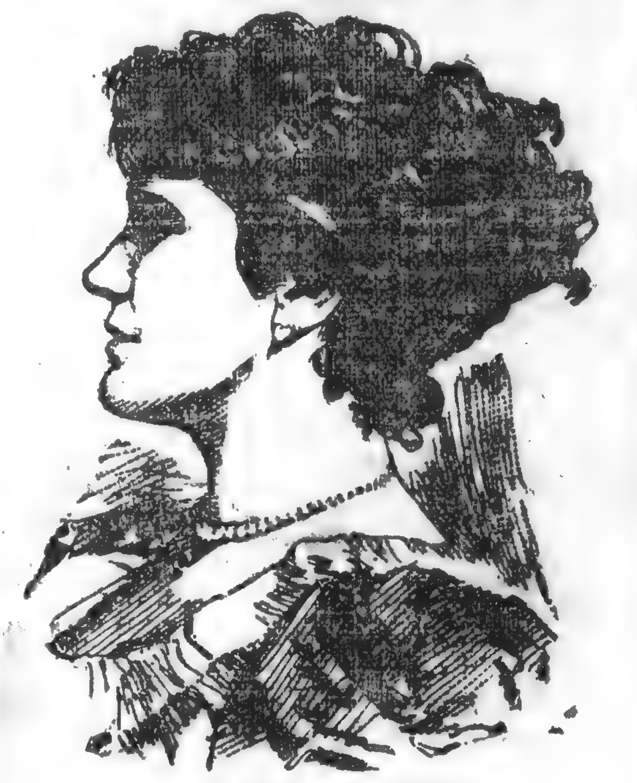
Infantry Hall Crowded With a Very Representative Audience.

Very auspiciously was the concert series of the Boston symphony orchestra opened at Infantry hall last night, both in regard to the size and quality of the assemblage and the success with which the musical features were carried out. The floor was black from wall to wall with people, while in the balcony all but the seats flanking the stage were occupied. The gathering was largely representative of the city's aristocracy, and also of the musical circles of the city.

The program was surprisingly modern for Nikisch, the selection from Wagner's "Parsifal" being the only number of a severely classical character. The selections were as follows:

Suite, op. 55.....................Tschaikowsky
  Elegie.
  Vulse Melancholique.
  Scherzo.
  Toma con Variazioni.
Aria from "Queen of Sheba"..........Gounod
"Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal"..
..................................Wagner
Polacca from "Mignon"............A. Thomas
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini"..........Berlioz

Analytical comment on anything the musicians directed by Nikisch do is about as superfluous as it usually is in the case of the Kneisel quartet. Either performs its work so entertainingly and so intelligently that it is much pleasanter and far more sensible to characterize the music as admirable, as a whole, than to pick out and critically descant on a possible flaw here and there. The selections made by Conductor Nikisch for last night were not, altogether, what the fastidious would have preferred, perhaps, though they were excellent, of course.



MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

Tschaikowsky's suite was finely played all the way through, some charming effects being brought out in shading and accentuation. A great many of the Russian composer's creations are pervaded by a tone of grave and melancholy suggestiveness, a species of plaintiveness and yet more than that, in which a listener discovers gems of melodic richness and ingenuity. Tschaikowsky's general style is peculiarly his own, as was pointedly illustrated in the ostentatious movement with which the suite was concluded, though just the slightest tinge of probably unconscious Wagnerism was noticeable at moments.

The extract from "Parsifal" was not so particularly well received, not because the orchestra did not play it skillfully, but because of its uninspiring arrangement of harmony and combinations. The Berlioz overture performance, which Mr. Nikisch conducted at Leipzig in 1883, was more to the taste of the audience than the preceding work. In it the full strength of the orchestra and its wonderful ability were shown to marked advantage.

Mme. Lillian Nordica was greeted very cordially, and her singing of the aria and polacca was keenly relished. Her voice is pure and pleasing, but far from brilliant in quality, and it has the demerit of being unemotional. She renders florid passages with all the integrity and carefulness of detail that a highly trained vocalist would be expected to do, and in such a song as the polacca, where the notes are written with a view to giving a voice plenty of artistic exercise, she excelled and rose to her largest power. She was recalled three times after each number, but owing to Mr. Nikisch's objections to encores was not permitted to respond except by a series of graceful bows.

The next concert, which will be given Nov. 18, will have for the soloists Mrs. Arthur Nikisch and Mr. Alvin Schroeder, 'cellist.

Mr. Nikisch was much pleased with the tasteful decorations that Manager Martin placed about the stage and the conductor's stand. While they were simple, they gave an air of freshness and variety to the scene that was striking. Mme. Nordica expressed entire satisfaction with the hall, so far as temperature and acoustics were concerned.

[illegible]

The Symphony Concert, Soloist, Alwyn Schroeder.

E. A. MacDowell's New Suite Played—The Adamowski Quartet Concerts.

The third of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Music Hall last evening, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, was enjoyed by the usual large audience. The soloist of the occasion was Mr. Alwyn Schroeder, the new 'cello player, who was heard in Volkmann's concerto in A minor, and the programme also included a first hearing here of Mr. E. A. MacDowell's orchestral suite, op. 42, and the symphony No. 4, in E minor, by Brahms.

The 'cello player, Mr. Schroeder, is a distinct acquisition to the orchestra, and his future appearances as soloist will be anticipated with pleasure by all who heard him play last evening. He has a fine 'cello, and under his bow it gives out a big, rich, pure tone, which affords keen satisfaction in the strongest, and it responds as well to the daintiest touch. The new player is a master of the technique of the 'cello, and the fanciful embellishments of the theme in the second and last movements of the concerto were very skilfully handled. No artist could ask for a quicker or more enthusiastic recognition of merit than that which rewarded Mr. Schroeder's efforts at the conclusion of the concerto. He is a charming player, and will, without question, quickly take his place with the best 'cello soloists in America.

Mr. MacDowell's suite had its first public performance at the Worcester festival in September, and the pleasant impressions gained of the work at that time were fully confirmed in last evening's performance. The more extended study made possible for last evening's performance, by the fortunate conditions attending the Boston orchestra at home, resulted in a great gain in the interpretation of the suite, and Mr. MacDowell could hardly ask for a better hearing of his most admirable composition.

The first movement "In a Haunted Forest" has some delightfully "shivery" music that fairly recall childhood's memories of hobgoblins and such like beings that were conjured up by the enemies of youth, and the ghostly effects are splendidly worked up. The "Summer Idyl" which follows is in strong contrast and makes a tone picture suggesting a season of calm laziness so seldom realized in these days of life at high pressure. The andantina movement, styled "The Shepherdess Song," may be in keeping with the characteristics of this class of vocal efforts, but imagination fails to realize the accuracy of the idea in the mind of the composer. In the final movement, "Forest Spirits," Mr. MacDowell has caught the fashion of the "Danse Macabre," by Saint-Saens, and, without imitating that composition, has produced a very fascinating tone picture, which suggests the midnight revels of imps and skeletons, which concludes with a suggestion of a devil-may-care jig by an inexperienced spirit unaccustomed to heeding the midnight summons.

The fourth of Mr. Brahms' symphonies was played to the taste of his admirers.

Next Saturday evening Mr. Alfred Grunfeld, the pianist, is to play the D-minor concerto by Rubinstein, and the programme will also include the "Don Juan" symphonic poem by Richard Strauss, and the "Pastorale" symphony by Beethoven.

The Boston Symphony orchestra concerts are to be among the musical and social events of Brooklyn and Philadelphia this season. The sale of seats in both cities begins tomorrow morning.

The first of the three concerts of the Adamowski quartette will be given tomorrow (Monday) evening in Union Hall. The quartet will be assisted by Mr. Arthur Foote, and the programme will include Mozart's quartet No. 14; sonata for pianoforte and violin by Paderewski (first time in Boston); and Tschaikowsky's 2d quartet (first time in Boston). Mrs. Julie Wyman will sing at the second concert Nov. 16.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Hyperion Theatre, - New Haven,

Monday Evening, November 2, at 8.

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
SEASON 1891-92
PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Tickets, with reserved seats, 75 cents, $1.00, and $1.50. On sale at the Hyperion Theatre on and after Tuesday, October 27.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCT. 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTETTE.

The concerts of the Kneisel Quartette have come to be recognized as unsurpassed in their kind by any in the country, and it is gratifying to feel that the new series begins with greater promise than any which has preceded it. We mean no disparagement of the violoncellists whom Mr. Alwin Schroeder succeeds; but, if this first evening be the criterion, the ideal fourth part in the group is nearer to us than ever before. In tone and phrasing, and above all in the exact proportioning of his instrument to its intended place in each page, this new artist is the best 'cellist whom Mr. Kneisel has had. The programme included but three works—the Mozart Quartette in C-major, ever fresh and fair; an interesting Brahms quintette, new to Boston, which has good material and some sentiment, and is reasonably brief, but which seems to decline after the first movement in spirit and style; and Schumann's piano quartette in E-flat, the leading part in which, as presented by Mr. Xaver Scharwenka, was all that could be desired as an example of fine chamber playing, distinct, strong and marked, but modest and considerate. The second violin part in the Brahms was well put in by Mr. Novacek, and the old members of the Quartette were at their best.

Boston Post

SATURDAY MORNING, OCT. 24, 1891.

The programme of this evening's Symphony concert in Music Hall will be as follows: Mac Dowell's Suite op. 42 (first time in Boston); Volkmann's concerto for violoncello in A minor; and Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E minor. Mr. Alwin Schroeder will play the solo part of the concerto.

The first of the three concerts of the Adamowski Quartette will be given Monday evening, Oct. 26, in Music Hall. The Quartette will be assisted by Mr. Arthur Foote, and the programme will include Mozart's Quartette No. 14; Sonata for pianoforte and violin by Paderewski (first time in Boston); and Tschaikowsky's 2nd Quartette (first time in Boston). Mrs. Julie Wyman will sing at the second concert Nov. 16. Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld will play the solo part of Rubinstein's D minor Concerto at the Symphony Rehearsal and Concert, Oct. 30-31.

Mr. Carl Stasny, a concert pianist of European reputation, will give a recital in Bumstead Hall Tuesday evening, Nov. 3. His programme will include the Bach-Tausig Toccata and

---

ADVERTISER, Portland, Me.

Date 10-22

With the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mrs. Nikisch will be the vocalist and one of the members of the orchestra will play a solo.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 116.

SATURDAY, OCT. 24, 1891.

The third of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra will be given at Music Hall this evening, the soloist being Mr. Alwin Schroeder, and the fourth of the Brahms symphonies being on the programme.

The Telegram.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1891.

NORDICA AND NIKISCH.

First of the Series of Symphony Concerts Last Night.

Infantry Hall Crowded With a Very Representative Audience.

Very auspiciously was the concert series of the Boston symphony orchestra opened at Infantry hall last night, both in regard to the size and quality of the assemblage and the success with which the musical features were carried out. The floor was black from wall to wall with people, while in the balcony all but the seats flanking the stage were occupied. The gathering was largely representative of the city's aristocracy, and also of the musical circles of the city.

The program was surprisingly modern for Nikisch, the selection from Wagner's "Parsifal" being the only number of a severely classical character. The selections were as follows:

Suite, op. 55....................Tschaikowsky
  Elegie.
  Vulse Melancholique.
  Scherzo.
  Toma con Variazioni.
Aria from "Queen of Sheba"..........Gounod
"Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal"..
..................................Wagner
Polacca from "Mignon"............A. Thomas
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini..... ...Berlioz

Analytical comment on anything the musicians directed by Nikisch do is about as superfluous as it usually is in the case of the Kneisel quartet. Either performs its work so entertainingly and so intelligently that it is much pleasanter and far more sensible to characterize the music as admirable, as a whole, than to pick out and critically descant on a possible flaw here and there. The selections made by Conductor Nikisch for last night were not, altogether, what the fastidious would have preferred, perhaps, though they were excellent, of course.

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

Tschaikowsky's suite was finely played all the way through, some charming effects being brought out in shading and accentuation. A great many of the Russian composer's creations are pervaded by a tone of grave and melancholy suggestiveness, a species of plaintiveness and yet more than that, in which a listener discovers gems of melodic richness and ingenuity. Tschaikowsky's general style is peculiarly his own, as was pointedly illustrated in the ostentatious movement with which the suite was concluded, though just the slightest tinge of probably unconscious Wagnerism was noticeable at moments.

The extract from "Parsifal" was not so particularly well received, not because the orchestra did not play it skillfully, but because of its uninspiring arrangement of harmony and combinations. The Berlioz overture performance, which Mr. Nikisch conducted at Leipzig in 1883, was more to the taste of the audience than the preceding work. In it the full strength of the orchestra and its wonderful ability were shown to marked advantage.

Mme. Lillian Nordica was greeted very cordially, and her singing of the aria and polacca was keenly relished. Her voice is pure and pleasing, but far from brilliant in quality, and it has the demerit of being unemotional. She renders florid passages with all the integrity and carefulness of detail that a highly trained vocalist would be expected to do, and in such a song as the polacca, where the notes are written with a view to giving a voice plenty of artistic exercise, she excelled and rose to her largest power. She was recalled three times after each number, but owing to Mr. Nikisch's objections to encores was not permitted to respond except by a series of graceful bows.

The next concert, which will be given Nov. 18, will have for the soloists Mrs. Arthur Nikisch and Mr. Alvin Schroeder, 'cellist.

Mr. Nikisch was much pleased with the tasteful decorations that Manager Martin placed about the stage and the conductor's stand. While they were simple, they gave an air of freshness and variety to the scene that was striking. Mme. Nordica expressed entire satisfaction with the hall, so far as temperature and acoustics were concerned.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 25, 1891.

The Symphony Concert, Soloist, Alwyn Schroeder.

E. A. MacDowell's New Suite Played—The Adamowski Quartet Concerts.

The third of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Music Hall last evening, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, was enjoyed by the usual large audience. The soloist of the occasion was Mr. Alwyn Schroeder, the new 'cello player, who was heard in Volkmann's concerto in A minor, and the programme also included a first hearing here of Mr. E. A. MacDowell's orchestral suite, op. 42, and the symphony No. 4, in E minor, by Brahms.

The 'cello player, Mr. Schroeder, is a distinct acquisition to the orchestra, and his future appearances as soloist will be anticipated with pleasure by all who heard him play last evening. He has a fine 'cello, and under this bow it gives out a big, rich, pure tone, which affords keen satisfaction in the strongest, and it responds as well to the daintiest touch. The new player is a master of the technique of the 'cello, and the fanciful embellishments of the theme in the second and last movements of the concerto were very skilfully handled. No artist could ask for a quicker or more enthusiastic recognition of merit than that which rewarded Mr. Schroeder's efforts at the conclusion of the concerto. He is a charming player, and will, without question, quickly take his place with the best 'cello soloists in America.

Mr. MacDowell's suite had its first public performance at the Worcester festival in September, and the pleasant impressions gained of the work at that time were fully confirmed in last evening's performance. The more extended study made possible for last evening's performance, by the fortunate conditions attending the Boston orchestra at home, resulted in a great gain in the interpretation of the suite, and Mr. MacDowell could hardly ask for a better hearing of his most admirable composition.

The first movement "In a Haunted Forest" has some delightfully "shivery" music that fairly recall childhood's memories of hobgoblins and such like beings that were conjured up by the enemies of youth, and the ghostly effects are splendidly worked up. The "Summer Idyl" which follows is in strong contrast and makes a tone picture suggesting a season of calm laziness so seldom realized in these days of life at high pressure. The andantina movement, styled "The Shepherdess Song," may be in keeping with the characteristics of this class of vocal efforts, but imagination fails to realize the accuracy of the idea in the mind of the composer. In the final movement, "Forest Spirits," Mr. MacDowell has caught the fashion of the "Danse Macabre," by Saint-Saens, and, without imitating that composition, has produced a very fascinating tone picture, which suggests the midnight revels of imps and skeletons, which concludes with a suggestion of a devil-may-care jig by an inexperienced spirit unaccustomed to heeding the midnight summons.

The fourth of Mr. Brahms' symphonies was played to the taste of his admirers.

Next Saturday evening Mr. Alfred Grunfeld, the pianist, is to play the D-minor concerto by Rubinstein, and the programme will also include the "Don Juan" symphonic poem by Richard Strauss, and the "Pastorale" symphony by Beethoven.

The Boston Symphony orchestra concerts are to be among the musical and social events of Brooklyn and Philadelphia this season. The sale of seats in both cities begins tomorrow morning.

The first of the three concerts of the Adamowski quartette will be given tomorrow (Monday) evening in Union Hall. The quartet will be assisted by Mr. Arthur Foote, and the programme will include Mozart's quartet No. 14; sonata for pianoforte and violin by Paderewski (first time in Boston), and Tschaikowsky's 2d quartet (first time in Boston). Mrs. Julie Wyman will sing at the second concert Nov. 16.

[34]

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 26, 1891.

The Symphony Concert.

It is no longer a matter of doubt; our orchestra has sunk below the standard of past years. The roughness that was apparent in the first concert might be condoned as almost inseparable from the beginning of a season; the same plea might be extended to cover the faults of the second, although the sensational features could scarcely be extenuated on such a ground; but the performance of the Brahms Symphony on Saturday was worse than anything that had preceded it, and I am reluctantly forced to the conclusion that our orchestral music is retrograding. Not only was everything done with a coarse and heavy hand, but the work was read as if it were a Liszt Rhapsody rather than an example of the purest vein of logical development and classical form. This is the more to be regretted, because our public have imbibed the notion that Brahms is fearfully dull, and undoubtedly many of the blurs of the orchestra were set down to the account of the innocent composer.

It may be granted that the first and last movements are music for musicians rather than for what Bulwer-Lytton called "the common herd," but certainly the second movement has sufficient of folksong flavor (although development is not lacking either) and the third movement is exciting enough. This last named movement may be set down as the poorest of the work, but the great beauty of the preceding movement and the extreme ingenuity of the variations of the finale make fullest amends for the temporary nodding of the musical Homer. It was in these variations that the greatest faults were committed, a blatant mock-heroic style adopted, and some of the ingenious treatments of the theme distorted to the point of obscurity. It is difficult enough for the amateur to follow these symphonic variations when they are clearly rendered, therefore last night the end of the work must have seemed a tonal labyrinth. The final measures of the movement degenerated into "sound and fury, signifying nothing."

Without going so far as to regard the four symphonies by Brahms as a continuation of the Beethoven series, one may state with absolute certainty that, considered from the intellectual side, Brahms has no living equal in homophonic, instrumental music. The truest music, however, is where intellect and emotion are in perfect equipoise. Brahms is as far on one side of the line as Chopin is on the other, and Beethoven comes nearest to being a wonderful combination of both qualities. Perhaps Brahms suffers under the same artistic disadvantage that hampered Mendelssohn, the misfortune of being too prosperous. As well expect an artist who has never been near the coast to paint the sea, as to hope for the expression of great emotion in the works of a composer who has suffered little. The sorrows and poverty of a Mozart or a Schubert seem to have constituted a part of their musical equipment, and were transmuted into tones. Brahms' one great sorrow, the loss of his mother, produced his greatest musical work, the "German Requiem." Since that time there has been something phlegmatic in his work. But let not any art lover despise the products of pure intellectuality; it is only the boarding-school miss who craves to be fed on purely emotional music and who may think that Brahms and dulness are synonyms.

The new violoncellist, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, made his first appearance at these concerts in this programme. He chose a rather prolix work for his debut, the A minor concerto by Volkmann. If the cadenza of the last movement of this could be attached to the first movement as a brilliant ending, the work would still be of ample length for what it has to say. The new artist made a favorable impression, and his technique is certainly marvellous. The chief fault to be noted was a lightness of tone, but this lack of breadth may be attributed to the instrument, which, however, was sweet in quality. The intonation was always pure, although a few of the harmonies were of doubtful quality. The end of the first movement, on the deepest tones of the C string, was strong and powerful enough. The march-like theme of the second part of the work was well played, but the finest display of virtuosity was reserved, of course, for the cadenza of the last movement. Here Mr. Schroeder displayed the utmost flexibility, and the runs, even in highest positions, were excellent, while the passages in double-stopping were clear, and the combination of bowing and pizzicato was also conquered without apparent effort. With a little broader tone Mr. Schroeder would take rank with the very best cello players heard here in recent years.

It remains only to speak of the Suite which began the concert, and this was not only the best played number of the programme, but was of most especial interest as being the composition of an American composer, and a resident of Boston. Mr. MacDowell is not one of those native composers who write correct contrapuntal exercises and consider that they are enriching the native repertoire thereby; when he writes a wrok he has something to say, and while he says it according to the canons of art, one loses sight of the correctness in the wealth of ideas. His scoring is very effective, and in this work, is exciting, if not new. The suite begins with a scene in a "Haunted Forest." Raff has already given us a set of sylvan spectres in the final of his "Im Walde" symphony, and it is impossible to avoid comparing the two movements, particularly as there is a recurrent figure in this which reminds of the Raff style of development.

It is, however, a proof of the vague character of programme music, that the picture represents a storm at sea quite as accurately as a haunted forest, indeed, the monotonous organ-point of the beginning, the rhythmic figure and the chromatic runs, suit better the marine than to the woodland idea. The ghosts are not quite as unruly as Frau Holle and her suite in the Raff smyphony, but they run, and pipe, and shiver, the piccolo shrieks, the violins tremble, and the contrabasses give a pizzicato as impressive as the famous ones in the "Freischutz" overture, and the effect is sufficiently spectral. The two interior movements of the suite are very short, and the second, "A Summer Idyl," has not very much to say (though it was well played), but the third movement, "The Shepherdess Song," was thoroughly romantic, and allowed the clarinet good opportunities, which were taken ad-

The finale was weird and uncanny enough to inspire the entire audience to appreciation, and its sudden, tricksy changes from pp. to ff., its wild explosions, its bass clarinet tones (reminiscent of Weber and Berlioz) and its sudden pull-up, were not only spicy, but suited Mr. Nikisch's vein entirely, and nothing in the concert was so well played. Mr. MacDowell is decidedly influenced by the French school of orchestration, which may account for the fact that Massenet eulogized his works enthusiastically to me two years ago, and his compositions played at the Paris exposition evoked the heartiest response. The audience at this concert displayed an enthusiasm beyond anything I have ever seen aroused by a native work, and it was delightful to feel that it was deserved, for Mr. MacDowell is at once the most genial and the most spontaneous of our American composers.

The applause would not be stayed, but it was so significantly intended for the composer, that Mr. Nikisch did not accept it as a tribute to the orchestral playing (generally excellent in this work) or to his own fiery reading, but bowed with a gesture that spoke volumes for his pantomimic powers, and intimated in dumb show that he did not know where the composer was hidden, but almost simultaneously with this, there appeared the handsome head in which the ghosts had originated, at the rail of the upper balcony, and Mr. Nikisch pointed out the star, high up in the firmament, all of which was charmingly informal, and only added to the good humor which prevailed after the composer had made the public's flesh creep with his eerie tone-picture.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

Gazette
BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 25.

The Symphony Concert.

Last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened with Mr. E. A. Macdowell's Suite for Orchestra in A-minor, op. 42; a work delightful throughout in the refined grace of its themes, and the delicacy, and the beauty of its tone color. If the suite have a fault, it is on the side of the brevity of its movements, which are dealt with so concisely that their subjects are scarcely set forth before the end comes as a surprise and disappointment. What there is however, is very dainty and full of charm. The musicianship of the composer is manifested with unmistakable clearness, not only in the easy flow of his harmonies and their treatment, but in the richness and brilliancy of his instrumentation, which is masterly alike in its discretion and in the thorough knowledge it shows of the resources of the modern orchestra. The work was wholly gratifying in the hearing, was listened to with great interest, and at its close, met with hearty applause that was equally appreciative and deserved, and that was prolonged until the composer modestly bowed his acknowledgments from the upper balcony. It was carefully and sympathetically played, though the wind instruments were not beyond reproach in respect to intonation. The soloist was Mr. Alwin Schroeder, who played Volkmann's concerto, in A-minor, op. 33, for violincello. It had been heard here before, and it did not improve on a second hearing. It is somewhat tedious and uninteresting and is much in the Kapellmeister vein. Mr. Shroeder is unquestionably an artist of excellent skill and taste. His tone is not large, but it is round and pure; his technique is able and ample. He was at his best, however, in his cantabile playing, which is delightfully broad, refined and artistic. He made a very favorable impression, was vigorously applauded and twice recalled. The concert ended with Brahms's labored and on the whole, noisy fourth symphony, and of which the third and last movements are the most interesting. We were less impressed by it on a second hearing than we were when it was given before at these concerts. It was spiritedly but somewhat coarsely and monotonously played, and apparently gave much pleasure to half the audience, while it unmistakably bored the other half. The programme for the next concert is: Symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss (first time); Concerto for piano, D minor, Rubinstein; and Symphony No. 6 (Pastorale), Beethoven. The soloist is to be Mr. Alfred Grunfield.

—There was a decided falling off in numbers at the second concert of the Symphony Orchestra, although Mr. W. F. Winch is a great favorite in Boston. Mrs. John L. Gardner's seats were occupied by Mrs. Greland and Miss Aurora Greland. Among others not noticed the week before were: Mr. Thomas F. Cushing, Mr. and Mrs. Jere Abbott, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sturgis, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Whiting, Mrs. Joseph Bradlee, Mr. and Mrs. Gardiner Lamson, Mr. W. P. Blake, Miss Blake, Mr. Eliot Hubbard, Dr. Roland Whittredge, Dr Richard Sprague, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Walker, Miss Codman, Mrs. Thomas Mack, Miss Stearns, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Haserick, Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan Sargent, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Macdowell, Miss Isa Coolidge, Miss Winslow, Mr. Lyman, and Mr. Charles Hayward.

The first in the series of this year's Chamber Concerts by the Kneisel Quartet was given in Union Hall on Monday evening before a fine audience. Mr. Xaver Scharwenka and Mr. O. Novacek assisted. The opening selection was Mozart's Quartet in C (Peters No. 17), perhaps, on the whole, the noblest and most beautiful of its composer's works in this class. Here and there a quaint cadence betrays the era in which the quartet first saw the light; but for the rest, it is wonderfully fresh, and might have been written yesterday if there were any composer living capable of writing it. Here are the perfect form, the clearness and the beauty that alone give lasting value to the art which they characterize. It was beautifully and sympathetically played from beginning to end. Then came the fine Schumann piano quartet in E flat, which was also thoughtfully interpreted, with Mr. Scharwenka at the piano. We cannot say that we greatly enjoyed his playing. It seemed to us too persistently loud and too barren of legato, every note coming out with a sort of tack hammer dryness. And yet, other critical listeners found it very delicate, and still others complained of the difficulty of hearing it at all. It is indisputable that the hall is not well fitted for chamber concerts, especially for those in which the piano takes part. It depends on the place in which the listener sits whether the playing sounds well or ill. In certain seats the ear is dinned with noise as if the loud pedal were pressed constantly down; in other seats the sounds seem to come muffled from the piano. But these evils in the acoustics of the hall scarcely account for the persistent absence of legato from Mr. Scharwenka's otherwise admirable playing. The concert ended with a new quartet by Brahms, certainly more genial and flowing in style than is his chamber music generally, and also more affluent in melody; but there is much obscurity in it, much frenzied grasping after originality at the cost of clearness and beauty; much that is wild and ear-torturing and brain-confusing in effect. Brahms, however, is not to be grasped on a single hearing in a work of such dimensions as is this. When it was all over, we remembered the Mozart quartet that opened the concert, and we felt that there was something there for which we looked in vain in the Brahms quintet; and this something was absolute clearness, freedom from labored pedagogy, and grace and beauty. In other words, the one is music that is born and the other is music that is made. The work was played with great enthusiasm by the artists. The new 'cellist, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, may be warmly praised for the finish and elegance of his playing and for the admirable taste and discretion he showed in keeping his instrument in due relation with the rest of the quartet, an exceptional virtue with 'cello players. The next concert will take place Nov. 23.

The first of the Adamowski Quartet concerts will take place in Union Hall tomorrow evening, Mr. Arthur Foote assisting. The programme is Mozart's Quartet No. 14; Sonata for pianoforte and violin by Paderewski (first time in Boston); and Tschaikowsky's 2nd Quartet (first time in Boston).

Boston Courier.
SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 25, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

The seventh season of the Kneisel Quartet was begun in Music Hall last Monday evening. One change has been made in its membership; Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the new first 'cellist of the Symphony Orchestra takes Mr. Hekking's place.

The programme was one of much interest, including as it did Brahm's new quintet for strings, in G, opus 111, in which Mr. Novacek, the new viola player, took part. The first number was Mozart's string quartet in C major, the last of the six dedicated to Haydn. The admirable ensemble, and the almost perfect technical finish displayed in the four movements of this delightful work told plainly the tale of thorough preparation. The exquisite phrasing too, and the warmth and sincerity that were evident in the playing of these artists were wholly worthy of their established reputations. The quartet was greatly enjoyed by the fine audience which filled the hall, and the performance was heartily applauded. Schumann's piano quartet, in E flat, opus 47, came next, with Mr. Xaver Scharwenka at the piano. It is seldom that that instrument is made to blend more perfectly with the strings in the works of this nature. While the tone produced by Mr. Scharwenka would have been rendered brighter in quality if the piano-lid had been raised a trifle, it is doubtful if the ensemble effect would have been improved, considering the pianist's style of touch. This with him is very incisive, full of nerve and concentration. He wastes no time in getting far away from the keys, and every tone is round and free; his passage work is elegant, his staccato from finger and wrist is a marvel of clearness, and his chord-playing is broad, full and musical. His musical conception, tempi and accent too, are those of the genuine musician, while the steadiness with which he holds himself in hand, the effectiveness with which he properly subordinates the accompaniments and brings to light the solo portions of a concerted work testify to his large experience as an ensemble player.

All these qualities were easily to be discovered in Mr. Scharwenka's playing Tuesday evening; and the result was a very unusual and a very exhilarating performance of the quartet. The first movement was played with great spirit and breadth, the thematic development being defined with especial clearness. The scherzo, too, was rendered in a truly vivacious manner, though here a brighter quality of tone from the piano would have increased its effectiveness. In the andante Mr. Schroeder had a fine opportunity to exhibit the qualities of his playing and those of his instrument, and very satisfactory they proved to be in both instances, the former alive with virility and expressiveness, the latter full, large and rich. The violin and viola also came in for their due share of prominence, Mr. Kneisel's tone being unusually warm and strong. The last movement was notable for its clear performance and exceedingly rapid tempo. In fact, Mr. Scharwenka led his companions a pretty lively race throughout without showing the first sign of fatigue. At its conclusion the artists were enthusiastically applauded and recalled.

The Brahm's quintet seems at first hearing to be a noble work, and destined to live. The four movements are not long, and are comparatively clear, and easy to comprehend. More than this they appeal at once to one's musical nature, if occasional passages of strangely harmonized "development" portions of the work are excepted. The opening of the first movement is vigorous and characteristic, its second theme being beautiful in its serenity and melodiousness; and the working out is generally free from abstruseness, and is musically satisfying. The adagio, in D minor is a beautiful song, sombre enough to make the bright allegretto in G minor, with its delightful swing-song—like trio in G major, seem doubly attractive. The finale at the opening slightly eludes the musical grasp, but soons grows rhythmically clearer, inspiriting, and unaffected, which characteristics it preserves to the end. It was splendidly performed, and was received with great enthusiasm; the tremendous applause and cries of "bravo" at the close of the first movement testifying particularly to the musical acumen of the audience. The quintet was begun at half-past nine, and lasted till ten. Too long a concert, as more than one drooping eye-lid testified. Moreover, this important work should have been first on the programme, when both players and listeners were free from fatigue.

THE SYMPHONY.

The programme of the third Symphony rehearsal and concert, like that of the preceding one, had a suite for its opening number, E. A. MacDowell's opus 42, in A minor, which was performed for the first time in public at the Worcester festival in September. This highly gifted young musician, who was the intimate friend of Raff, and of Heymann, the marvelous German pianist, and who was favored as few were by Liszt, has in all his published works shown himself a devoted adherent of that form of composition called programme music. Nearly all of his large number of pianoforte pieces are headed with mottoes or expressive titles suggesting the thoughts that inspired their writing. These pieces, as well as his orchestral works, the symphonic poems, "Lancelot and Elaine," "Hamlet," and "Ophelia," the concertos, and the suite just performed, clearly indicate this decided trend of his nature. In his earliest pieces may be discerned the love of romance, the vivid imagination, the refined poetical taste with which his latest works are instinct; while strong indications of his now well developed constructive and contrapuntal skill, his artistic independence of conventional forms, and his remarkable talent for tone-painting are by no means lacking. Although his music shows no dearth of original melody pure and simple, its strength lies more in its novel and expressive harmonies, and its picturesque orchestration; which is true also of most of the music of contemporary composers.

The suite has five movements, the first bearing the title, "In a haunted forest." The first notes of the slow and short introduction come from the horns, which, with a pianissimo roll on the tympani and a still softer tap at intervals on the great drum, form a long-sustained accompaniment to a short theme given out by the fagotti, 'celli and double basses in unison. Brief development of this theme leads to a fortissimo climax, which, quickly falling off again to pianissimo, leads to an allegro furioso. The treatment of this movement, built upon several short figures, is largely chromatic in its nature, and contains many picturesque orchestral effects. Its climax is reached when the theme of the introduction reappears maestoso, scored for the full strength of the orchestra; after which the movement ends as quietly as it began. The second movement, "A Summer Idyl," in F sharp minor, is a short, dainty bit of writing. The orchestration of its extended melody is mostly confined to the strings and wood-wind, with which the horns are occasionally combined, and is charmingly descriptive of its subject. "The Shepherdess Song" (the third movement) is also short, and has two quaint, characteristic themes, the first lying principally with the clarinet and oboe, the second with the horns. The principal figures of both are prettily alternated, and there is much graceful moddulation and delicate instrumental treatment. The finale, "Forest Spirits," has two well-defined themes, and is molto allegro, presto, and prestissimo in tempo. Near its close, the theme of the introduction is effectively brought in pianissimo, in the original tempo, with wood-wind and muted strings, only for a few measures, however. The presto quickly returns, and with a whirling, tarantella-like figure the movement ends brilliantly.

The work is an excellent example of what may be done with the modern orchestra without recourse to the straining for effect that is apt to prevail in many orchestral compositions of today. Although the scoring of the extreme movements includes trombones, tuba, great drum and cymbals, these instruments are discreetly used, leaving no trace of coarseness or cheapness. It is, in a word, programme music of a delightful kind; of a kind that stands securely on its own feet, without requiring any catalogue of the emotions or scenes it is intended to express or picture. It has moreover, the merit of not being unduly long, the performance lasting less than half an hour. It was in the main, excellently read and played. There was a tendency to too rapid tempi throughout, except at the close of the last movement, which seemed slow. The second was played decidedly too fast, its sentiment and the delicacy of its technical treatment being materially changed in consequence. It was heartily received, and long continued applause followed its close.

The new violoncellist, Mr. Alwin Schroeder was next heard, for the first time as a soloist in Boston, in Volkman's concerto in A minor, opus 33. With his artistic playing at the Kneisel Quartet concert of Monday evening in mind, that at this concert was disappointing. His middle and lower tones were warm and full, but those in the upper register were somewhat thin in quality. His slow, sustained playing was more satisfying than was his execution of the bravura passages, his technical work in this respect being hardly in the style of a virtuoso. It is possible, however, that Mr. Schroeder was not wholly at his ease; and it would not be at all surprising if the uninteresting concerto acted as an effectual damper on his spirits. But the symphony audiences are proverbially courteous to soloists, and he was warmly applauded and recalled.

The concert closed with an uneven performance of Brahms's marvelous fourth symphony—marvelous in its abstruseness and ugliness. It may be that this composer's blind adherents find comfort and inspiration even from this opus 98. But even its analyst in the programme book confesses that the first movement is a "hard nut to crack," although he thinks that "the listener who has thoroughly digested what has gone before will have little difficulty in following it to the end." Just what he means by this last expression of forced hopefulness is hard to make out. But one thing is certain; the blind adherents just mentioned, after having struggled heroically to digest this and a few other dishes of a granite-like nature that their master has at times past set before them, must experience involuntary feelings of disgust at discovering through the comparatively enchanting string quintet, opus 111, that he to all appearances likes his cakes and wine as well as most people do. It is safe to say that the symphony contains little that appeals to the sympathies of even the cultivated listener, if the last part of the andante and certain effects in the third movement be excepted.

T. P. CURRIER.

Boston Journal.
MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The third of the Symphony concerts for this season was held at Music Hall last Saturday night before the usual large and appreciative audience.

Conductor Nikisch, as he stood on his high platform with baton in hand, reminded one of an artist with his paint brush, the orchestra forming the responsive canvas and bringing out the artist's ideals as the master willed.

A light touch of the brush produced the delicate tints and tones of color, while a deep dip brought out the shades and strong coloring in æsthetic contrast. Specially beautiful were the pictures painted through the vivid imagination of Mr. E. A. McDowell in his suite in A minor. The first movement, "In a Haunted Forest." What an opportunity for the fanciful play of the imaginative, and how it brought up all the stories of ghosts, gnomes, brownies and other freaks of one's early, fable-loving days!

The second movement, "Summer Idyl," was like a beautiful poem, written in the peaceful summer warmth of a "rare day in June."

In "The Shepherdess Song" one could see the hills of Scotland and the "bonnie lassie" in her Highland garb, with her crook in her right hand and her left shading her eyes in search of a lost lamb or maybe the "laddie" approaching in the distance. The picture seemed very clear, but one listened in vain for the sound of her voice, which made one wish for the introduction of a solo from the violin, and, perhaps, the lover's response from the flute coming from "across the hills and far away."

Then in strong contrast to all the preceding movements came the "Forest Spirit." Enjoying a revel in the depths of their seclusion, "far from the busy haunts of men," the dainty sprites and fairies tripped over the velvety green moss of some beautiful dell, while others pirrouetted on a harebell or floated away among the whispering leaves of the friendly trees, and when the final notes died away the awakening plaudits revealed the fact that sitting in the balcony was the author of this delightful musical fantasy. The applause increased to such an extent that the diffident composer was obliged to acknowledge his identity, which he did with a modest bow.

Admirers of the violoncello must have been greatly pleased with the playing of the soloist of the evening, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, who proved himself an artist of the first degree. The choice of Volkmann's concerto afforded him the best of opportunities for giving a broad and masterly conception of the wide range of musical ideas that can be expressed with a 'cello. His tones were clear, pure and sweet, and his execution artistic and skillful. He plays with a great deal of warmth and fine feeling, and his instrument responds like a living thing.

Those who heard Brahms's string quartette at the Kneisel chamber concert would scarcely recognize the same composer in the closing Symphony No. 4, in E minor. With the exception of the first movement there seemed to be such an overflow of musical ideas tumbling over each other, that only those of thorough musical training could be able to digest the rapid changes. Brahms is to music what Browning is to poetry, and the taste for each must be an acquired one.

An excellent programme is announced for next week, with Mr. Alfred Greenfield as piano soloist. Beethoven's beautiful Pastoral Symphony [illegible] and Strauss's symphonic poem, "Don Juan," with [illegible] for those who attend [illegible] concert.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 26, 1891.

The Symphony Concert.

It is no longer a matter of doubt; our orchestra has sunk below the standard of past years. The roughness that was apparent in the first concert might be condoned as almost inseparable from the beginning of a season; the same plea might be extended to cover the faults of the second, although the sensational features could scarcely be extenuated on such a ground; but the performance of the Brahms Symphony on Saturday was worse than anything that had preceded it, and I am reluctantly forced to the conclusion that our orchestral music is retrograding. Not only was everything done with a coarse and heavy hand, but the work was read as if it were a Liszt Rhapsody rather than an example of the purest vein of logical development and classical form. This is the more to be regretted, because our public have imbibed the notion that Brahms is fearfully dull, and undoubtedly many of the blurs of the orchestra were set down to the account of the innocent composer.

It may be granted that the first and last movements are music for musicians rather than for what Bulwer-Lytton called "the common herd," but certainly the second movement has sufficient of folksong flavor (although development is not lacking either) and the third movement is exciting enough. This last named movement may be set down as the poorest of the work, but the great beauty of the preceding movement and the extreme ingenuity of the variations of the finale make fullest amends for the temporary nodding of the musical Homer. It was in these variations that the greatest faults were committed, a blatant mock-heroic style adopted, and some of the ingenious treatments of the theme distorted to the point of obscurity. It is difficult enough for the amateur to follow these symphonic variations when they are clearly rendered, therefore last night the end of the work must have seemed a tonal labyrinth. The final measures of the movement degenerated into "sound and fury, signifying nothing."

Without going so far as to regard the four symphonies by Brahms as a continuation of the Beethoven series, one may state with absolute certainty that, considered from the intellectual side, Brahms has no living equal in homophonic, instrumental music. The truest music, however, is where intellect and emotion are in perfect equipoise. Brahms is as far on one side of the line as Chopin is on the other, and Beethoven comes nearest to being a wonderful combination of both qualities. Perhaps Brahms suffers under the same artistic disadvantage that hampered Mendelssohn, the misfortune of being too prosperous. As well expect an artist who has never been near the coast to paint the sea, as to hope for the expression of great emotion in the works of a composer who has suffered little. The sorrows and poverty of a Mozart or a Schubert seem to have constituted a part of their musical equipment, and were transmuted into tones. Brahms' one great sorrow, the loss of his mother, produced his greatest musical work, the "German Requiem." Since that time there has been something phlegmatic in his work. But let not any art lover despise the products of pure intellectuality; it is only the boarding-school miss who craves to be fed on purely emotional music and who may think that Brahms and dulness are synonyms.

The new violoncellist, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, made his first appearance at these concerts in this programme. He chose a rather prolix work for his debut, the A minor concerto by Volkmann. If the cadenza of the last movement of this could be attached to the first movement as a brilliant ending, the work would still be of ample length for what it has to say. The new artist made a favorable impression, and his technique is certainly marvellous. The chief fault to be noted was a lightness of tone, but this lack of breadth may be attributed to the instrument, which, however, was sweet in quality. The intonation was always pure, although a few of the harmonies were of doubtful quality. The end of the first movement, on the deepest tones of the C string, was strong and powerful enough. The march-like theme of the second part of the work was well played, but the finest display of virtuosity was reserved, of course, for the cadenza of the last movement. Here Mr. Schroeder displayed the utmost flexibility, and the runs, even in highest positions, were excellent, while the passages in double-stopping were clear, and the combination of bowing and pizzicato was also conquered without apparent effort. With a little broader tone Mr. Schroeder would take rank with the very best cello players heard here in recent years.

It remains only to speak of the Suite which began the concert, and this was not only the best played number of the programme, but was of most especial interest as being the composition of an American composer, and a resident of Boston. Mr. MacDowell is not one of those native composers who write correct contrapuntal exercises and consider that they are enriching the native repertoire thereby; when he writes a wrok he has something to say, and while he says it according to the canons of art, one loses sight of the correctness in the wealth of ideas. His scoring is very effective, and in this work, is exciting, if not new. The suite begins with a scene in a "Haunted Forest." Raff has already given us a set of sylvan spectres in the final of his "Im Walde" symphony, and it is impossible to avoid comparing the two movements, particularly as there is a recurrent figure in this which reminds of the Raff style of development.

It is, nowever, a proof of the vague character of programme music, that the picture represents a storm at sea quite as accurately as a haunted forest, indeed, the monotonous organ-point of the beginning, the rhythmic figure and the chromatic runs, suit better to a marine than to the woodland idea. The ghosts are not quite as unruly as Frau Holle and her suite in the Raff smyphony, but they run, and pipe, and shiver, the piccolo shrieks, the violins tremble, and the contrabasses give a pizzicato as impressive as the famous ones in the "Freischutz" overture, and the effect is sufficiently spectral. The two interior movements of the suite are very short, and the second, "A Summer Idyl," has not very much to say (nor was it well played), but the third movement, "The Shepherdess Song," was tenderly romantic, and allowed the clarinet good opportunities, which were taken advantage of.

The finale was weird and uncanny enough to inspire the entire audience to appreciation, and its sudden, tricksy changes from pp. to ff., its wild explosions, its bass clarinet tones (reminiscent of Weber and Berlioz) and its sudden pull-up, were not only spicy, but suited Mr. Nikisch's vein entirely, and nothing in the concert was so well played. Mr. MacDowell is decidedly influenced by the French school of orchestration, which may account for the fact that Massenet eulogized his works enthusiastically to me two years ago, and his compositions played at the Paris exposition evoked the heartiest response. The audience at this concert displayed an enthusiasm beyond anything I have ever seen aroused by a native work, and it was delightful to feel that it was deserved, for Mr. MacDowell is at once the most genial and the most spontaneous of our American composers.

The applause would not be stayed, but it was so significantly intended for the composer, that Mr. Nikisch did not accept it as a tribute to the orchestral playing (generally excellent in this work) or to his own fiery reading, but bowed with a gesture that spoke volumes for his pantomimic powers, and intimated in dumb show that he did not know where the composer was hidden, but almost simultaneously with this, there appeared the handsome head in which the ghosts had originated, at the rail of the upper balcony, and Mr. Nikisch pointed out the star, high up in the firmament, all of which was charmingly informal, and only added to the good humor which prevailed after the composer had made the public's flesh creep with his eerie tone-picture.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

Gazette
BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 25.

The Symphony Concert.

Last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened with Mr. E. A. Macdowell's Suite for Orchestra in A-minor, op. 42; a work delightful throughout in the refined grace of its themes, and the delicacy, and the beauty of its tone color. If the suite have a fault, it is on the side of the brevity of its movements, which are dealt with so concisely that their subjects are scarcely set forth before the end comes as a surprise and disappointment. What there is however, is very dainty and full of charm. The musicianship of the composer is manifested with unmistakable clearness, not only in the easy flow of his harmonies and their treatment, but in the richness and brilliancy of his instrumentation, which is masterly alike in its discretion and in the thorough knowledge it shows of the resources of the modern orchestra. The work was wholly gratifying in the hearing, was listened to with great interest, and at its close, met with hearty applause that was equally appreciative and deserved, and that was prolonged until the composer modestly bowed his acknowledgments from the upper balcony. It was carefully and sympathetically played, though the wind instruments were not beyond reproach in respect to intonation. The soloist was Mr. Alwin Schroeder, who played Volkmann's concerto, in A-minor, op. 33, for violincello. It had been heard here before, and it did not improve on a second hearing. It is somewhat tedious and uninteresting and is much in the Kapellmeister vein. Mr. Shroeder is unquestionably an artist of excellent skill and taste. His tone is not large, but it is round and pure; his technique is able and ample. He was at his best, however, in his cantabile playing, which is delightfully broad, refined and artistic. He made a very favorable impression, was vigorously applauded and twice recalled. The concert ended with Brahms's labored and on the whole, noisy fourth symphony, and of which the third and last movements are the most interesting. We were less impressed by it on a second hearing than we were when it was given before at these concerts. It was spiritedly but somewhat coarsely and monotonously played, and apparently gave much pleasure to half the audience, while it unmistakably bored the other half. The programme for the next concert is: Symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss (first time); Concerto for piano, D minor, Rubinstein; and Symphony No. 6 (Pastorale), Beethoven. The soloist is to be Mr. Alfred Grunfeld.

—— There was a decided falling off in numbers at the second concert of the Symphony Orchestra, although Mr. W. F. Winch is a great favorite in Boston. Mrs. John L. Gardner's seats were occupied by Mrs. Grelaud and Miss Aurora Grelaud. Among others not noticed the week before were: Mr. Thomas F. Cushing, Mr. and Mrs. Jere Abbott, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sturgis, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Whiting, Mrs. Joseph Bradlee, Mr. and Mrs. Gardiner Lamson, Mr. W. P Blake, Miss Blake, Mr. Eliot Hubbard, Dr. Roland Whittredge, Dr Richard Sprague, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Walker, Miss Codman, Mrs. Thomas Mack, Miss Stearns, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Haserick, Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan Sargent, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Macdowell, Miss Isa Coolidge, Miss Winslow, Mr. Lyman, and Mr. Charles Hayward.

The first in the series of this year's Chamber Concerts by the Kneisel Quartet was given in Union Hall on Monday evening before a fine audience. Mr. Xaver Scharwenka and Mr. O. Novacek assisted. The opening selection was Mozart's Quartet in C (Peters No. 17), perhaps, on the whole, the noblest and most beautiful of its composer's works in this class. Here and there a quaint cadence betrays the era in which the quartet first saw the light; but for the rest, it is wonderfully fresh, and might have been written yesterday if there were any composer living capable of writing it. Here are the perfect form, the clearness and the beauty that alone give lasting value to the art which they characterize. It was beautifully and sympathetically played from beginning to end. Then came the fine Schumann piano quartet in E flat, which was also thoughtfully interpreted, with Mr. Scharwenka at the piano. We cannot say that we greatly enjoyed his playing. It seemed to us too persistently loud and too barren of legato, every note coming out with a sort of tack hammer dryness. And yet, other critical listeners found it very delicate, and still others complained of the difficulty of hearing it at all. It is indisputable that the hall is not well fitted for chamber concerts, especially for those in which the piano takes part. It depends on the place in which the listener sits whether the playing sounds well or ill. In certain seats the ear is dinned with noise as if the loud pedal were pressed constantly down; in other seats the sounds seem to come muffled from the piano. But these evils in the acoustics of the hall scarcely account for the persistent absence of legato from Mr. Scharwenska's otherwise admirable playing. The concert ended with a new quartet by Brahms, certainly more genial and flowing in style than is his chamber music generally, and also more affluent in melody; but there is much obscurity in it, much frenzied grasping after originality at the cost of clearness and beauty; much that is wild and ear-torturing and brain-confusing in effect. Brahms, however, is not to be grasped on a single hearing in a work of such dimensions as is this. When it was all over, we remembered the Mozart quartet that opened the concert, and we felt that there was something there for which we looked in vain in the Brahms quintet; and this something was absolute clearness, freedom from labored pedagogy, and grace and beauty. In other words, the one is music that is born and the other is music that is made. The work was played with great enthusiasm by the artists. The new 'cellist, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, may be warmly praised for the finish and elegance of his playing and for the admirable taste and discretion he showed in keeping his instrument in due relation with the rest of the quartet, an exceptional virtue with 'cello players. The next concert will take place Nov. 28.

The first of the Adamowski Quartet concerts will take place in Union Hall tomorrow evening, Mr. Arthur Foote assisting. The programme is Mozart's Quartet No. 14; Sonata for pianoforte and violin by Paderewski (first time in Boston); and Tschaikowsky's 2nd Quartet (first time in Boston).

Boston Courier.
SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 25, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

The seventh season of the Kneisel Quartet was begun in Music Hall last Monday evening. One change has been made in its membership; Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the new first 'cellist of the Symphony Orchestra takes Mr. Hekking's place.

The programme was one of much interest, including as it did Brahm's new quintet for strings, in G, opus 111, in which Mr. Novacek, the new viola player, took part. The first number was Mozart's string quartet in C major, the last of the six dedicated to Haydn. The admirable ensemble, and the almost perfect technical finish displayed in the four movements of this delightful work told plainly the tale of thorough preparation. The exquisite phrasing too, and the warmth and sincerity that were evident in the playing of these artists were wholly worthy of their established reputations. The quartet was greatly enjoyed by the fine audience which filled the hall, and the performance was heartily applauded. Schumann's piano quartet, in E flat, opus 47, came next, with Mr. Xaver Scharwenka at the piano. It is seldom that that instrument is made to blend more perfectly with the strings in the works of this nature. While the tone produced by Mr. Scharwenka would have been rendered brighter in quality if the piano-lid had been raised a trifle, it is doubtful if the ensemble effect would have been improved, considering the pianist's style of touch. This with him is very incisive, full of nerve and concentration. He wastes no time in getting far away from the keys, and every tone is round and free; his passage work is elegant, his staccato from finger and wrist is a marvel of clearness, and his chord-playing is broad, full and musical. His musical conception, tempi and accent too, are those of the genuine musician, while the steadiness with which he holds himself in hand, the effectiveness with which he properly subordinates the accompaniments and brings to light the solo portions of a concerted work testify to his large experience as an ensemble player.

All these qualities were easily to be discovered in Mr. Scharwenka's playing Tuesday evening; and the result was a very unusual and a very exhilarating performance of the quartet. The first movement was played with great spirit and breadth, the thematic development being defined with especial clearness. The scherzo, too, was rendered in a truly vivacious manner, though here a brighter quality of tone from the piano would have increased its effectiveness. In the andante Mr. Schroeder had a fine opportunity to exhibit the qualities of his playing and those of his instrument, and very satisfactory they proved to be in both instances, the former alive with virility and expressiveness, the latter full, large and rich. The violin and viola also came in for their due share of prominence, Mr. Kneisel's tone being unusually warm and strong. The last movement was notable for its clear performance and exceedingly rapid tempo. In fact, Mr. Scharwenka led his companions a pretty lively race throughout without showing the first sign of fatigue. At its conclusion the artists were enthusiastically applauded and recalled.

The Brahm's quintet seems at first hearing to be a noble work, and destined to live. The four movements are not long, and are comparatively clear, and easy to comprehend. More than this they appeal at once to one's musical nature, if occasional passages of strangely harmonized "development" portions of the work are excepted. The opening of the first movement is vigorous and characteristic, its second theme being beautiful in its serenity and melodiousness; and the working out is generally free from abstruseness, and is musically satisfying. The adagio, in D minor is a beautiful song, sombre enough to make the bright allegretto in G minor, with its delightful swing-song—like trio in G major, seem doubly attractive. The finale at the opening slightly eludes the musical grasp, but soons grows rhythmically clearer, inspiriting, and unaffected, which characteristics it preserves to the end. It was splendidly performed, and was received with great enthusiasm; the tremendous applause and cries of "bravo" at the close of the first movement testifying particularly to the musical acumen of the audience. The quintet was begun at half-past nine, and lasted till ten. Too long a concert, as more than one drooping eye-lid testified. Moreover, this important work should have been first on the programme, when both players and listeners were free from fatigue.

THE SYMPHONY.

The programme of the third Symphony rehearsal and concert, like that of the preceding one, had a suite for its opening number, E. A. MacDowell's opus 42, in A minor, which was performed for the first time in public at the Worcester festival in September. This highly gifted young musician, who was the intimate friend of Raff, and of Heymann, the marvelous German pianist, and who was favored as few were by Liszt, has in all his published works shown himself a devoted adherent of that form of composition called programme music. Nearly all of his large number of pianoforte pieces are headed with mottoes or expressive titles suggesting the thoughts that inspired their writing. These pieces, as well as his orchestral works, the symphonic poems, "Lancelot and Elaine," "Hamlet," and "Ophelia," the concertos, and the suite just performed, clearly indicate this decided trend of his nature. In his earliest pieces may be discerned the love of romance, the vivid imagination, the refined poetical taste with which his latest works are instinct; while strong indications of his now well developed constructive and contrapuntal skill, his artistic independence of conventional forms, and his remarkable talent for tone-painting are by no means lacking. Although his music shows no dearth of original melody pure and simple, its strength lies more in its novel and expressive harmonies, and its picturesque orchestration; which is true also of most of the music of contemporary composers.

The suite has five movements, the first bearing the title, "In a haunted forest." The first notes of the slow and short introduction come from the horns, which, with a pianissimo roll on the tympani and a still softer tap at intervals on the great drum, form a long-sustained accompaniment to a short theme given out by the fagotti, 'celli and double basses in unison. Brief development of this theme leads to a fortissimo climax, which, quickly falling off again to pianissimo, leads to an allegro furioso. The treatment of this movement, built upon several short figures, is largely chromatic in its nature, and contains many picturesque orchestral effects. Its climax is reached when the theme of the introduction reappears maestoso, scored for the full strength of the orchestra; after which the movement ends as quietly as it began. The second movement, "A Summer Idyl," in F sharp minor, is a short, dainty bit of writing. The orchestration of its extended melody is mostly confined to the strings and wood-wind, with which the horns are occasionally combined, and is charmingly descriptive of its subject. "The Shepherdess Song" (the third movement) is also short, and has two quaint, characteristic themes, the first lying principally with the clarinet and oboe, the second with the horns. The principal figures of both are prettily alternated, and there is much graceful moddulation and delicate instrumental treatment. The finale, "Forest Spirits," has two well-defined themes, and is molto allegro, presto, and prestissimo in tempo. Near its close, the theme of the introduction is effectively brought in pianissimo, in the original tempo, with wood-wind and muted strings, only for a few measures, however. The presto quickly returns, and with a whirling, tarantella-like figure the movement ends brilliantly.

The work is an excellent example of what may be done with the modern orchestra wiihout recourse to the straining for effect that is apt to prevail in many orchestral compositions of today. Although the scoring of the extreme movements includes trombones, tuba, great drum and cymbals, these instruments are discreetly used, leaving no trace of coarseness or cheapness. It is, in a word, programme music of a delightful kind; of a kind that stands securely on its own feet, without requiring any catalogue of the emotions or scenes it is intended to express or picture. It has moreover, the merit of not being unduly long, the performance lasting less than half an hour. It was in the main, excellently read and played. There was a tendency to too rapid tempi throughout, except at the close of the last movement. which seemed slow. The second was played decidedly too fast, its sentiment and the delicacy of its technical treatment being materially changed in consequence. It was heartily received, and long continued applause followed its close.

The new violoncellist, Mr. Alwin Schroeder was next heard, for the first time as a soloist in Boston, in Volkman's concerto in A minor, opus 33. With his artistic playing at the Kneisel Quartet concert of Monday evening in mind, that at this concert was disappointing. His middle and lower tones were warm and full, but those in the upper register were somewhat thin in quality. His slow, sustained playing was more satisfying than was his execution of the bravura passages, his technical work in this respect being hardly in the style of a virtuoso. It is possible, however, that Mr. Schroeder was not wholly at his ease; and it would not be at all surprising if the uninteresting concerto acted as an effectual damper on his spirits. But the symphony audiences are proverbially courteous to soloists, and he was warmly applauded and recalled.

The concert closed with an uneven performance of Brahms's marvelous fourth symphony—marvelous in its abstruseness and ugliness. It may be that this composer's blind adherents find comfort and inspiration even from this opus 98. But even its analyst in the programme book confesses that the first movement is a "hard nut to crack," although he thinks that "the listener who has thoroughly digested what has gone before will have little difficulty in following it to the end." Just what he means by this last expression of forced hopefulness is hard to make out. But one thing is certain; the blind adherents just mentioned, after having struggled heroically to digest this and a few other dishes of a granite-like nature that their master has at times past set before them, must experience involuntary feelings of disgust at discovering through the comparatively enchanting string quintet, opus 111, that he to all appearances likes his cakes and wine as well as most people do. It is safe to say that the symphony contains little that appeals to the sympathies of even the cultivated listener, if the last part of the andante and certain effects in the third movement be excepted.

T. P. CURRIER.

Boston Journal.
MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The third of the Symphony concerts for this season was held at Music Hall last Saturday night before the usual large and appreciative audience.

Conductor Nikisch, as he stood on his high platform with baton in hand, reminded one of an artist with his paint brush, the orchestra forming the responsive canvas and bringing out the artist's ideals as the master willed.

A light touch of the brush produced the delicate tints and tones of color, while a deep dip brought out the shades and strong coloring in æsthetic contrast. Specially beautiful were the pictures painted through the vivid imagination of Mr. E. A. McDowell in his suite in A minor. The first movement, "In a Haunted Forest." What an opportunity for the fanciful play of the imaginative, and how it brought up all the stories of ghosts, gnomes, brownies and other freaks of one's early, fable-loving days!

The second movement, "Summer Idyl," was like a beautiful poem, written in the peaceful summer warmth of a "rare day in June."

In "The Shepherdess Song" one could see the hills of Scotland and the "bonnie lassie" in her Highland garb, with her crook in her right hand and her left shading her eyes in search of a lost lamb or maybe the "laddie" approaching in the distance. The picture seemed very clear, but one listened in vain for the sound of her voice, which made one wish for the introduction of a solo from the violin, and, perhaps, the lover's response from the flute coming from "across the hills and far away."

Then in strong contrast to all the preceding movements came the "Forest Spirit." Enjoying a revel in the depths of their seclusion, "far from the busy haunts of men," the dainty sprites and fairies tripped over the velvety green moss of some beautiful dell, while others pirrouetted on a harebell or floated away among the whispering leaves of the friendly trees, and when the final notes died away the awakening plaudits revealed the fact that sitting in the balcony was the author of this delightful musical fantasy. The applause increased to such an extent that the diffident composer was obliged to acknowledge his identity, which he did with a modest bow.

Admirers of the violoncello must have been greatly pleased with the playing of the soloist of the evening, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, who proved himself an artist of the first degree. The choice of Volkmann's concerto afforded him the best of opportunities for giving a broad and masterly conception of the wide range of musical ideas that can be expressed with a 'cello. His tones were clear, pure and sweet, and his execution artistic and skillful. He plays with a great deal of warmth and fine feeling, and his instrument responds like a living thing.

Those who heard Brahms's string quartette at the Kneisel chamber concert would scarcely recognize the same composer in the closing Symphony No. 4, in E minor. With the exception of the first movement there seemed to be such an overflow of musical ideas tumbling over each other, that only those of thorough musical training could be able to digest the rapid changes. Brahms is to music what Browning is to poetry, and the taste for each must be an acquired one.

An excellent programme is announced for next week, with Mr. Alfred Greenfield as piano soloist. Beethoven's beautiful Pastoral Symphony No. 6 and Strauss's symphonic poem, "Don Juan," with the concerto for pianoforte in D minor, by Rubinstein, are the attractive numbers in store for those who attend the next concert.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

ESTABLISHED IN 1862.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1891.

THE OPENING OF THE SEASON.

Quite imperceptibly the best of Boston moved towards Music Hall on the evening of the first Symphony Concert, eager again to woo Euterpe. Mr. Nikisch met a very large audience, when he came upon the platform to conduct Beethoven's 'Dedication of the House' overture, which was to begin the eleventh series of Symphony Concerts and the third under his direction. In addition to Beethoven's overture, the first programme included for orchestra the 'Good Friday Spell' from 'Parsifal' and Schumann's 'Rhenish' symphony. Mr. Henschel accustomed us to the overture by religiously playing it to inaugurate each of the three Symphony series which he directed. It is just as well that his successors repudiated the practice; for the overture is not one of Beethoven's best.

The E-flat or 'Rhenish' symphony had not been heard here before under Mr. Nikisch. While it is, perhaps, less 'Schumannesque' than the G-major or D-minor, it is much more popular than either. The religious pomp of its fourth movement and the gaiety of the finale are intelligible and interesting, while the abstract character of the other two symphonies oftentimes depresses rather than cheers. The reading of the symphony was in accord with that of the other great Schumann pictures Mr. Nikisch has spread out before us. Our conductor seeks a meaning in the printed page; he is always an interpreter, never merely a performer. This characteristic was notably seen in the playing of the beautiful 'Parsifal' music.

The singer at this concert was Mme. Lillian Nordica who sang the familiar scena 'Ah Perfido'! and Elizabeth's aria from the second act of 'Tannhaüser.' In the first selection she was somewhat overweighted, though the effort was artistically made. The Wagner music, however, made a deeper appeal to her and was, therefore, more successful. Mme. Nordica is such a vital singer and enjoys her art so completely that it is always a pleasure to hear her. Her voice is brilliant, though somewhat cold, and her method good.

The programme of the second Symphony Concert began with an unfamiliar suite by Tschaikowsky, his third, opus 55. While not so pertinent an example of the emotional power of the 'rough Russian'—personally Tschaikowsky is a charming man—the suite is an interesting piece of music, showing great technical prowess in the last movement, a theme and variations. The variations are marked by ingenuity and a splendid muscularity; the finale is quite 'Meyerbeerian' in its grandiose swing. The suite was well liked. Next on the programme was the prelude to Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana.' Following two butcheries, Mascagni really had a chance at this concert. The playing of the prelude was highly dramatic; the vital melodies made their effect; and for the first time here the serenade, which interrupts the progress of the overture, was sung by Mr. W. J. Winch with real fervor and passion. The singer's voice, however, was not freely emitted. The minuet and fugued finale from Beethoven's C-major quartette of opus 59, played by all the strings, followed the Italian. Mr. Nikisch and the town are justly fond of the strings of the orchestra; but it is not in quartette music that the town cares to hear them, however much Mr. Nikisch may. After some songs by Schubert, Schumann, and the favorite 'Murmelndes Lüftchen' by Jensen, sang sweetly by Mr. Winch to the exquisite piano accompaniment of Mr. Nikisch, Massenet's undramatic overture, 'Phèdre,' was played.

The playing of the orchestra at the two concerts was in the main admirable, though the first horn showed signs of not having ended his vacation early enough. The changes in the personnel of the orchestra include a new first 'cellist, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, who succeeds Mr. Hekking, and a new first trombone, a stout, fierce-looking player, replacing the blonde Mr. Stewart. The strings are as fine as ever. This week, Mr. MacDowell's new orchestral suite will have a first hearing in Boston; Mr. Schroeder will play Volkmann's concerto for 'cello; and the symphony will be the fourth (E-minor) of Brahms, which is less well known here than the other three.

At the first Kneisel Quartette concert, Brahms's new string quintette was played for the first time in this country. It is a noble work, not too scholarly or diffuse for the comprehension of the minor elect who do not go beyond Schubert in naming the romanticists in chamber music whom they comprehend. Mozart's C-major quartette (K. 465) began the programme, the middle number of which was Schumann's piano quartette. Xaver Scharwenka was the pianist, and he is one of the best chamber players. Mr. Schroeder succeeds Mr. Hekking as 'cello player of the Kneisel group, and judged by his first appearance, he is an ensemble player par excellence. The quartette will not suffer by the change.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, OCT. 25, 1891

THE SYMPHONIES.

SECOND CONCERT.

The second Symphony concert (Saturday evening, Oct. 17) was quite an improvement on the first, in two respects. First, it contained some novelties which greatly pleased and interested its patrons. Second, the orchestra as a whole played better, though there is much room for further improvement. One point seems quite clear to the unprejudiced, and that is, Mr. Nikisch, so far, has not succeeded in producing a well defined, gradual crescendo or diminuendo. He jumps from fortissimo to pianissimo; there is no half way; no real, absolute, well defined gradation of tone-coloring. There is effect in sudden loud and sudden soft which Mr. Nikisch seems to fully understand, for he deals in that art to perfection; but on the score of legitimate musical expression, it is somewhat questionable. All departments of the orchestra produce a much tougher quality of tone than formerly, a fact which is absolutely true. Yes, the string department which used to be so firm in finesse is now more or less disjointed—each player seems to act on his own impulses. The material of the orchestra is unquestionably superb, there is no better in the world; but—they require firmness in discipline, without which the best material avails nothing. With such an orchestra better results can be attained.

We did not hear the first number of the Tschaikowsky suite; we have no doubt it was interesting. "Waltz Melancholique" must have been written when the author was suffering with "Catzenyarmer," a German word, but we spell it after the American plan. The meaning of the word is, "seasickness," pain in the head, an unsteady locomotion, with a persistency of the sidewalk coming up to meet you face to face! The waltz time and accent is mostly missing, at least there is little reminder of either, while the music is doleful enough to carry one safely through purgatory. The Scherzo was considerably brighter, showing convalescence from a severe fit of the blues. The theme with variations showed the author's knowledge of orchestration in the highest possible light. Only a master and genius can write such a score, and whatever sensational there is about it there is the stamp of a master mind. The orchestra did their work very well, and the audience were carried away with delight.

Mascagni's Prelude was an opportune selection. It made us forget we were listening to the Boston Symphony. The rendition of the music was satisfying, while Mr. Winch's singing in the ante-room was really fine. To such selections, even the fashion does not object, but applaud.

Beethoven's quartette by all the strings was a poor selection. There is plenty of good music by this author to be found without resorting to such scraps. It is well enough for the strings to have practise together, but let it be when they are alone together.

The three German songs sung by Mr. Winch are all gems, and it is but just to him to say he did them in a very artistic manner. We do not remember to have heard him when he sang so well, particularly in the last selection. He was very heartily recalled several times. Mr. Nikisch is also deserving praise for the chaste and beautiful accompaniments he furnished on the pianoforte.

The Massanet overture made a fitting close to a very enjoyable concert, albeit it is a noisy and rather an uninteresting production.

JAMES M. TRACY.

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 26, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The programme of the third Symphony concert was as as follows:

Suite in A minor op. 42..................Mac Dowell
(First time in Boston.)
Concerto for Violoncello in A minor. .....Volkmann
Symphony No. 4, in E minor.................Brahms

Mr. MacDowell's Suite was played for the first time at the Worcester Festival Sept. 24, by an orchestra under the direction of Mr. Zerrahn. It then made a most pleasing impression upon musicians and laymen. Played last Saturday evening, it met with even a more flattering reception, and the long continued applause at the end of the work was not the mere formal and conventional expression of kindly feeling towards the composer who honors the town of his adoption; it was rather the open manifestation of delight at hearing a composition of such genuine beauty and skilful workmanship.

The composer has given fanciful names to the movements of his suite, as "In a Haunted Forest," "Summer Idyl," "The Shepherdess Song," and "Forest Spirits," but here he stops. He does not add to his music a printed programme as minute as an auctioneer's bill of sale. He suggests to the hearer a mood, and he allows the fancy of the hearer to roam at will. Even if he had not given his titles, if he had simply numbered the movements, the music would give just as much pleasure.

Here is an American composer, a young man, who is not an echo. He has a voice of his own. Although he has evidently studied all the means of expression, he conceals his studies in the apparent spontaniety and freedom of his art. His melodies are fresh; his harmonies are often exquisite, often striking; and his command of the resources of the orchestra is sure. Indeed the instrumentation is thoroughly delightful throughout. This suite is as noticeable from what Mr. Mac Dowell reserves and omits as from the actual evidence submitted by him. When he gains an effect, he is content with it, and he dismisses it from his mind, instead of caressing it and introducing it on all occasions until the hearer is vexed and begins to question its value. He is also content with a simple statement, and he realizes the danger of over-elaboration. He is able to stand apart from his work and look at it, judge it, condemn, reject. There is here no trace of worship of a self-carved idol. His good sense saves him from youthful extravagance; he is sane even when he is bizarre. And, O rarest of musical virtues!—he knows when he has finished his speech.

The symphony was the fourth of Brahms. It would be idle to deny the solidity of the materials, the cunning of the workmanship, or the fine proportions. But the building is simply the work of the builder. No inspiration vivifies the mass.

It is the prevailing custom when a stranger enters the orchestra and takes a commanding position, to give him his opportunity for display. This custom is a pleasure to the audience, for the personality of the player wins more attention, even in symphony concerts, than the impersonality of the orchestra. It was Mr. Alwin Schroeder's turn, and his choice was the Volkmann 'cello concerto in A minor, an unfortunate choice. The composition is respectably dull and might be signed by any Professor Schultz or Mueller. It served, however, to show many of the excellent qualities that were recognized in Mr. Schroeder's playing at the late Kneisel concert. He is a careful and conscientious player; a thoughtful musician without virtuoso blood in his veins. The audience was pleased with his scholarly performance, and he was twice recalled.

The orchestra played the symphony with more vigor than discretion, and the suite was given with an appreciation of its many beauties. The wind instruments were not entirely satisfactory. Such eminent players as Mr. Mole and certain of his brethren have fallen into careless ways, and the horns have apparently lost their characteristic quality. Too often they sound like a new and attempted compromise between noisy members of the brass. It should be remembered that the horn is a "noble and melancholy instrument" and does not brook angry attacks upon it.

The programme of the concert of Saturday evening, Oct. 31, is as follows: Symphonic poem "Don Juan," Richard Strauss (first time in Boston); Rubinstein's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor; and Beethoven's "Pastorale" Symphony. Mr. Alfred Grunfeld will be the soloist.

PHILIP HALE.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1891.

Echoes of the Symphony Orchestra.

First Hearing of McDowell's Suite—A New 'Cello Soloist.

Announcements of Welcome Events in the Local Music World.

The programme offered by Director Nikisch at the third of this season's symphony concerts can scarcely be numbered among his most pleasing contributions. It was rather too heavy to receive popular approval and greater variety would have been welcome.

The concert was especially interesting, however, from the fact that it gave the first Boston performance of a new suite by Mr. E. A. McDowell, and marked the first appearance here as a soloist of the orchestra's new 'celloist, Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

Mr. McDowell is recognized as among the most accomplished of American composers and several of his former works have received unqualified approval from symphony audiences. His writings have also received recognition abroad, possibly with greater favor than those of any other American.

The suite played yesterday is a decided departure from his former style of writing. It is in a freer and more fanciful vein than are any of his earlier orchestral works.

The characteristics of the composition are indicated by the titles given to each of the four movements, "In a Haunted Forest," "Summer Idyl," "The Shepherdess' Song" "Forest Spirits."

Although many of the passages are strikingly suggestive of other composers, the work is not devoid of originality, but on the contrary there is much that is delightfully novel in harmonic effects, and in the arrangement of fantastic forms, which while perhaps not strictly new themselves, are charmingly set forth in unique settings, richly colored and beautifully contrasted.

As a series of tone pictures the suite is certainly entitled to high rank. One need not be a musical scholar to readily imagine the composer's thoughts.

"The Shepherdess' Song" is an exceedingly sweet and tender bit of pastoral writing, and the brilliant fourth movement is most praiseworthy. The entire work is treated in a skilful and musicianly manner.

Volkmann's concerto for violoncello was the selection chosen by Mr. Schroeder for his introduction as a soloist to symphony audiences.

He received a very cordial greeting, and the hearty commendation accorded his playing promised much for his future popularity here.

The concerto offers excellent opportunity for a display of virtuosity, and it is for his technical skill that Mr. Schroeder merits most praise. His style is brilliant and finished, and he plays with much expression and with excellent taste. The tonal quality of his playing, however, is not equal to that of some other 'celloists who have been with this band.

Brahms' symphony No. 4, in E-minor, concluded the programme. Better performances of this brilliant work have been heard here in the past, especially that of the four movement, which was yesterday at times decidedly rough and noisy.

Next Friday and Saturday the following programme will be given: Richard Strauss, symphonic poem "Don Juan;" Rubinstein, concerto for pianoforte in D-minor; Beethoven's symphony No. 6, "Pastorale;" soloist, Mr. Alfred Grunfeld.

The Adamowski Quartet.

The Adamowski quartet will give the first in a series of three concerts at Music Hall tomorrow evening. Mr. Arthur Foote will assist the quartet, and the programme will include Mozart's quartet No. 14; sonata for pianoforte and violin by Paderewski (first time in Boston); and Tschaikowsky's second quartet (first time in Boston.) Mrs. Julie Wyman will sing at the second concert, Nov. 16.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1891.

THERE were three novelties at the second Symphony Concert, which was far more interesting than the first. P. Tschaikowsky's Suite, op. 52, is full of variety, especially the bell effects in the Valse Melancholique, and the dozen variations of the final theme. For the prelude of Cavalleria Rusticana, W. J. Winch sang the invisible solo, which was too much muffled by intervening walls. Mr. Winch also sang three German songs with fine phrasing. The third novelty was the Minuet and Fugue Finale, from Beethoven's String Quartet in C, No.3, op. 59, played by all the strings; and the concert closed with Massenet's overture to Phedre. Mr. George H. Wilson's explanatory programmes show a decided gain in interest. As yet Director Nikisch has not brought his big orchestra under quite the control of previous seasons.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

ESTABLISHED IN 1862.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER, 24, 1891.

THE OPENING OF THE SEASON.

Quite imperceptibly the best of Boston moved towards Music Hall on the evening of the first Symphony Concert, eager again to woo Euterpe. Mr. Nikisch met a very large audience, when he came upon the platform to conduct Beethoven's 'Dedication of the House' overture, which was to begin the eleventh series of Symphony Concerts and the third under his direction. In addition to Beethoven's overture, the first programme included for orchestra the 'Good Friday Spell' from 'Parsifal' and Schumann's 'Rhenish' symphony. Mr. Henschel accustomed us to the overture by religiously playing it to inaugurate each of the three Symphony series which he directed. It is just as well that his successors repudiated the practice; for the overture is not one of Beethoven's best.

The E-flat or 'Rhenish' symphony had not been heard here before under Mr. Nikisch. While it is, perhaps, less 'Schumannesque' than the G-major or D-minor, it is much more popular than either. The religious pomp of its fourth movement and the gaiety of the finale are intelligible and interesting, while the abstract character of the other two symphonies oftentimes depresses rather than cheers. The reading of the symphony was in accord with that of the other great Schumann pictures Mr. Nikisch has spread out before us. Our conductor seeks a meaning in the printed page; he is always an interpreter, never merely a performer. This characteristic was notably seen in the playing of the beautiful 'Parsifal' music.

The singer at this concert was Mme. Lillian Nordica who sang the familiar scena 'Ah Perfido' ! and Elizabeth's aria from the second act of 'Tannhaüser.' In the first selection she was somewhat overweighted, though the effort was artistically made. The Wagner music, however, made a deeper appeal to her and was, therefore, more successful. Mme. Nordica is such a vital singer and enjoys her art so completely that it is always a pleasure to hear her. Her voice is brilliant, though somewhat cold, and her method good.

The programme of the second Symphony Concert began with an unfamiliar suite by Tschaikowsky, his third, opus 55. While not so pertinent an example of the emotional power of the 'rough Russian'—personally Tschaikowsky is a charming man—the suite is an interesting piece of music, showing great technical prowess in the last movement, a theme and variations. The variations are marked by ingenuity and a splendid muscularity; the finale is quite 'Meyerbeerian' in its grandiose swing. The suite was well liked. Next on the programme was the prelude to Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana.' Following two butcheries, Mascagni really had a chance at this concert. The playing of the prelude was highly dramatic; the vital melodies made their effect; and for the first time here the serenade, which interrupts the progress of the overture, was sung by Mr. W. J. Winch with real fervor and passion. The singer's voice, however, was not freely emitted. The minuet and fugued finale from Beethoven's C-major quartette of opus 59, played by all the strings, followed the Italian. Mr. Nikisch and the town are justly fond of the strings of the orchestra; but it is not in quartette music that the town cares to hear them, however much Mr. Nikisch may. After some songs by Schubert, Schumann, and the favorite 'Murmelndes Lüftchen' by Jensen, sang sweetly by Mr. Winch to the exquisite piano accompaniment of Mr. Nikisch, Massenet's undramatic overture, 'Phèdre,' was played.

The playing of the orchestra at the two concerts was in the main admirable, though the first horn showed signs of not having ended his vacation early enough. The changes in the personnel of the orchestra include a new first 'cellist, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, who succeeds Mr. Hekking, and a new first trombone, a stout, fierce-looking player, replacing the blonde Mr. Stewart. The strings are as fine as ever. This week, Mr. MacDowell's new orchestral suite will have a first hearing in Boston; Mr. Schroeder will play Volkmann's concerto for 'cello; and the symphony will be the fourth (E-minor) of Brahms, which is less well known here than the other three.

At the first Kneisel Quartette concert, Brahms's new string quintette was played for the first time in this country. It is a noble work, not too scholarly or diffuse for the comprehension of the minor elect who do not go beyond Schubert in naming the romanticists in chamber music whom they comprehend. Mozart's C-major quartette (K. 465) began the programme, the middle number of which was Schumann's piano quartette. Xaver Scharwenka was the pianist, and he is one of the best chamber players. Mr. Schroeder succeeds Mr. Hekking as 'cello player of the Kneisel group, and judged by his first appearance, he is an ensemble player par excellence. The quartette will not suffer by the change.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, OCT. 25, 1891

THE SYMPHONIES.

SECOND CONCERT.

The second Symphony concert (Saturday evening, Oct. 17) was quite an improvement on the first, in two respects. First, it contained some novelties which greatly pleased and interested its patrons. Second, the orchestra as a whole played better, though there is much room for further improvement. One point seems quite clear to the unprejudiced, and that is, Mr. Nikisch, so far, has not succeeded in producing a well defined, gradual crescendo or diminuendo. He jumps from fortissimo to pianissimo; there is no half way; no real, absolute, well defined gradation of tone-coloring. There is effect in sudden loud and sudden soft which Mr. Nikisch seems to fully understand, for he deals in that art to perfection; but on the score of legitimate musical expression, it is somewhat questionable. All departments of the orchestra produce a much tougher quality of tone than formerly, a fact which is absolutely true. Yes, the string department which used to be so firm in finesse is now more or less disjointed—each player seems to act on his own impulses. The material of the orchestra is unquestionably superb, there is no better in the world; but—they require firmness in discipline, without which the best material avails nothing. With such an orchestra better results can be attained.

We did not hear the first number of the Tschaikowsky suite; we have no doubt it was interesting. "Waltz Melancholique" must have been written when the author was suffering with "Catzenyarmer," a German word, but we spell it after the American plan. The meaning of the word is, "seasickness," pain in the head, an unsteady locomotion, with a persistency of the sidewalk coming up to meet you face to face! The waltz time and accent is mostly missing, at least there is little reminder of either, while the music is doleful enough to carry one safely through purgatory. The Scherzo was considerably brighter, showing convalescence from a severe fit of the blues. The theme with variations showed the author's knowledge of orchestration in the highest possible light. Only a master and genius can write such a score, and whatever sensational there is about it there is the stamp of a master mind. The orchestra did their work very well, and the audience were carried away with delight.

Mascagni's Prelude was an opportune selection. It made us forget we were listening to the Boston Symphony. The rendition of the music was satisfying, while Mr. Winch's singing in the ante-room was really fine. To such selections, even the fashion does not object, but applaud.

Beethoven's quartette by all the strings was a poor selection. There is plenty of good music by this author to be found without resorting to such scraps. It is well enough for the strings to have practise together, but let it be when they are alone together.

The three German songs sung by Mr. Winch are all gems, and it is but just to him to say he did them in a very artistic manner. We do not remember to have heard him when he sang so well, particularly in the last selection. He was very heartily recalled several times. Mr. Nikisch is also deserving praise for the chaste and beautiful accompaniments he furnished on the pianoforte.

The Massanet overture made a fitting close to a very enjoyable concert, albeit it is a noisy and rather an uninteresting production.

JAMES M. TRACY.

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 24, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The programme of the third Symphony concert was as as follows;

Suite in A minor op. 42................Mac Dowell
(First time in Boston.)
Concerto for Violoncello in A minor. .....Volkmann
Symphony No. 4, in E minor.................Brahms

Mr. MacDowell's Suite was played for the first time at the Worcester Festival Sept. 24, by an orchestra under the direction of Mr. Zerrahn. It then made a most pleasing impression upon musicians and laymen. Played last Saturday evening, it met with even a more flattering reception, and the long continued applause at the end of the work was not the mere formal and conventional expression of kindly feeling towards the composer who honors the town of his adoption; it was rather the open manifestation of delight at hearing a composition of such genuine beauty and skilful workmanship.

The composer has given fanciful names to the movements of his suite, as "In a Haunted Forest," "Summer Idyl," "The Shepherdess Song," and "Forest Spirits," but here he stops. He does not add to his music a printed programme as minute as an auctioneer's bill of sale. He suggests to the hearer a mood, and he allows the fancy of the hearer to roam at will. Even if he had not given his titles, if he had simply numbered the movements, the music would give just as much pleasure.

Here is an American composer, a young man, who is not an echo. He has a voice of his own. Although he has evidently studied all the means of expression, he conceals his studies in the apparent spontaniety and freedom of his art. His melodies are fresh; his harmonies are often exquisite, often striking; and his command of the resources of the orchestra is sure. Indeed the instrumentation is thoroughly delightful throughout. This suite is as noticeable from what Mr. Mac Dowell reserves and omits as from the actual evidence submitted by him. When he gains an effect, he is content with it, and he dismisses it from his mind, instead of caressing it and introducing it on all occasions until the hearer is vexed and begins to question its value. He is also content with a simple statement, and he realizes the danger of over-elaboration. He is able to stand apart from his work and look at it, judge it, condemn, reject. There is here no trace of worship of a self-carved idol. His good sense saves him from youthful extravagance; he is sane even when he is bizarre. And, O rarest of musical virtues!—he knows when he has finished his speech.

The symphony was the fourth of Brahms. It would be idle to deny the solidity of the materials, the cunning of the workmanship, or the fine proportions. But the building is simply the work of the builder. No inspiration vivifies the mass.

It is the prevailing custom when a stranger enters the orchestra and takes a commanding position, to give him his opportunity for display. This custom is a pleasure to the audience, for the personality of the player wins more attention, even in symphony concerts, than the impersonality of the orchestra. It was Mr. Alwin Schroeder's turn, and his choice was the Volkmann 'cello concerto in A minor, an unfortunate choice. The composition is respectably dull and might be signed by any Professor Schultz or Mueller. It served, however, to show many of the excellent qualities that were recognized in Mr. Schroeder's playing at the late Kneisel concert. He is a careful and conscientious player; a thoughtful musician without virtuoso blood in his veins. The audience was pleased with his scholarly performance, and he was twice recalled.

The orchestra played the symphony with more vigor than discretion, and the suite was given with an appreciation of its many beauties. The wind instruments were not entirely satisfactory. Such eminent players as Mr. Mole and certain of his brethren have fallen into careless ways, and the horns have apparently lost their characteristic quality. Too often they sound like a new and attempted compromise between noisy members of the brass. It should be remembered that the horn is a "noble and melancholy instrument" and does not brook angry attacks upon it.

The programme of the concert of Saturday evening, Oct. 31, is as follows: Symphonic poem "Don Juan," Richard Strauss (first time in Boston); Rubinstein's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor; and Beethoven's "Pastorale" Symphony. Mr. Alfred Grunfeld will be the soloist.

PHILIP HALE.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1891.

Echoes of the Symphony Orchestra.

First Hearing of McDowell's Suite—A New 'Cello Soloist.

Announcements of Welcome Events in the Local Music World.

The programme offered by Director Nikisch at the third of this season's symphony concerts can scarcely be numbered among his most pleasing contributions. It was rather too heavy to receive popular approval and greater variety would have been welcome.

The concert was especially interesting, however, from the fact that it gave the first Boston performance of a new suite by Mr. E. A. McDowell, and marked the first appearance here as a soloist of the orchestra's new 'celloist, Mr. Alwin Schroeder.

Mr. McDowell is recognized as among the most accomplished of American composers and several of his former works have received unqualified approval from symphony audiences. His writings have also received recognition abroad, possibly with greater favor than those of any other American.

The suite played yesterday is a decided departure from his former style of writing. It is in a freer and more fanciful vein than are any of his earlier orchestral works.

The characteristics of the composition are indicated by the titles given to each of the four movements, "In a Haunted Forest," "Summer Idyl," "The Shepherdess' Song" "Forest Spirits."

Although many of the passages are strikingly suggestive of other composers, the work is not devoid of originality, but on the contrary there is much that is delightfully novel in harmonic effects, and in the arrangement of fantastic forms, which while perhaps not strictly new themselves, are charmingly set forth in unique settings, richly colored and beautifully contrasted.

As a series of tone pictures the suite is certainly entitled to high rank. One need not be a musical scholar to readily imagine the composer's thoughts.

"The Shepherdess' Song" is an exceedingly sweet and tender bit of pastoral writing, and the brilliant fourth movement is most praiseworthy. The entire work is treated in a skilful and musicianly manner.

Volkmann's concerto for violoncello was the selection chosen by Mr. Schroeder for his introduction as a soloist to symphony audiences.

He received a very cordial greeting, and the hearty commendation accorded his playing promised much for his future popularity here.

The concerto offers excellent opportunity for a display of virtuosity, and it is for his technical skill that Mr. Schroeder merits most praise. His style is brilliant and finished, and he plays with much expression and with excellent taste. The tonal quality of his playing, however, is not equal to that of some other 'celloists who have been with this band.

Brahms' symphony No. 4, in E-minor, concluded the programme. Better performances of this brilliant work have been heard here in the past, especially that of the four movement, which was yesterday at times decidedly rough and noisy.

Next Friday and Saturday the following programme will be given: Richard Strauss, symphonic poem "Don Juan;" Rubinstein, concerto for pianoforte in D-minor; Beethoven's symphony No. 6, "Pastorale;" soloist, Mr. Alfred Grunfeld.

The Adamowski Quartet.

The Adamowski quartet will give the first in a series of three concerts at Music Hall tomorrow evening. Mr. Arthur Foote will assist the quartet, and the programme will include Mozart's quartet No. 14; sonata for pianoforte and violin by Paderewski (first time in Boston); and Tschaikowsky's second quartet (first time in Boston.) Mrs. Julie Wyman will sing at the second concert, Nov. 16.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1891.

THERE were three novelties at the second Symphony Concert, which was far more interesting than the first. P. Tschaikowsky's Suite, op. 52, is full of variety, especially the bell effects in the Valse Melancholique, and the dozen variations of the final theme. For the prelude of Cavalleria Rusticana, W. J. Winch sang the invisible solo, which was too much muffled by intervening walls. Mr. Winch also sang three German songs with fine phrasing. The third novelty was the Minuet and Fugue Finale, from Beethoven's String Quartet in C, No. 3, op. 59, played by all the strings; and the concert closed with Massenet's overture to Phedre. Mr. George H. Wilson's explanatory programmes show a decided gain in interest. As yet Director Nikisch has not brought his big orchestra under quite the control of previous seasons.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1891.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The third concert, given in the Music Hall last Saturday evening, brought the following programme:

MacDowell: Suite in A minor, op. 42:
1. In a Haunted Forest.
2. Summer Idyl.
3. The Shepherdess's Song.
4. Forest Spirits.

Volkmann: Violoncello concerto in A minor, op. 33.
Brahms: Symphony No. 4, in E minor, op. 98.
Mr. Alwin Schroeder was the 'cellist.

Mr. MacDowell's new suite seems, at least as far as one can judge from a single hearing, the most important orchestral work he has yet brought out. Artistic importance is not to be measured either by the square or linear yard; neither does it, in music, always depend directly upon the magnitude or dignity of the musical form employed. This suite of Mr. MacDowell's acquires especial importance in our eyes from the fact that in it the composer follows what is evidently the natural, instinctive bent of his talent more unreservedly than heretofore, and also walks in his chosen domain of the poetic and the imaginative with far firmer step. One may differ with him diametrically in artistic point of view, one may even find faults enough in this his latest work: but one must none the less recognize with hardly diminished pleasure the conspicuous power he exhibits of doing what he tries to do.

Take, to begin with, the way he handles the orchestra; it is really masterly, and, little as one would expect anything like originality in a field that has been so well explored as this of orchestration has of late years, one finds no little originality in Mr. MacDowell's scoring, and originality of a very delightful sort, at that. His treatment of the orchestra seems, in general, to be a further and more modern development of Raff's—in a pupil of Raff's this might almost go without saying—but one finds in it also pretty plain signs of contemporary French influence. Still, in his study of German and French models, Mr. MacDowell has shown the fine artistic instinct to appropriate to himself only what is best in either school; he has fallen into the mere routine mannerisms of neither. His scoring is free from that rather monotonous richness and volume of tone which is to be deplored in writers like Goldmark and Dvorák; it has the French variety, the French piquancy and aroma. Yet his German training has saved him from falling in with the orchestral vulgarity of many contemporary French composers, whose fortissimo passages for full orchestra too often amount to little else than brass-band writing, with strings and reeds ripieni. One also sees the good results of his being brought up in a genuinely symphonic school, in the way he has of treating the orchestra almost continually in a polyphonic style, and in not lapsing every now and then into that "song-without-words" vein, that quasi-operatic melody with accompaniment, which has, from the beginning, been the bane of the French orchestral school. Of course his freedom from this last fault has to do, in great measure, with his style of writing in general, and does not reside in his orchestration alone. Still, his orchestration has something to do with it, for his scoring has the greatest virtue that scoring, as such, can possibly have—greater than sensuous beauty and richness of tone, greater than power or delicacy, greater even than clearness—the virtue which we find conspicuous in the scoring of all the great classic masters, in the somewhat clumsy orchestral writing of Schumann as in the ideally expert orchestration of Mozart or Mendelssohn: a certain fine unity of conception which leads the composer to treat all the various instruments of the orchestra as component members of one and the same body, valuable only in so far as each one of them acts in proper cooperation with the others. Mr. MacDowell has really achieved this feat of so combining the component elements of his orchestra into one organic whole that, no matter what temporary prominence he may give to this or that instrument, or group of instruments, it has the effect of a particular quality of tone rising, for the moment, to the surface of the orchestra, but not that very different effect of a particular instrument, or group of instruments, severing the bond of federation between itself and the others, and playing an actual solo. No matter what variety of tone-color he may produce, no matter how sharp the contrast between different groups of instruments may be in their successive entries, there is something in his scoring that makes for unity of impression, and binds the successive phrases together as with a band of steel.

Masterly orchestration is, however, by no means the only merit to be descried in this suite. Quite apart from orchestral coloring, there is a rare unity of artistic motive apparent in each one of the four movements. To be sure, this motive seems throughout, even in the "Summer Idyl" and the "Shepherdess's Song," more of an imaginative and picturesque than of an intrinsically musical nature. Subsequent hearings of the suite may very possibly serve to reverse our opinion; but for the present we cannot see that Mr. MacDowell had any other object in view than to embody and illustrate in tones the ideas suggested by the titles of his four movements in what most vividly suggestive and picturesque way he could. What of essentially musical form and development these movements may possess seemed to us on Saturday evening so slight and evanescent that we found it next to impossible to recognize it at all; not that we deny the existence of essentially musical construction in these movements, but that we have not as yet been able to discover it. Until we do, we must, with all our admiration for Mr. MacDowell's cleverness and ability, view his work with a certain coldness, for it makes no appeal to our musical sympathy. Merely picturesque and imaginative writing cannot in the end but seem trivial and not worth doing; especially when it calls into play such vast orchestral resources as are employed in this suite. One would fain have this wealth of orchestral means reserved, and kept sacred for tasks of higher dignity and deeper import than mere fantastic jeux d'esprit; people do not write vers de société in blank verse or Alexandrines—the disproportion between the matter and the vehicle is too great. And we cannot call purely instrumental music in which picturesque and suggestive items occupy the whole ground, or else preponderate largely over the element of organic musical construction, much more than a jeu d'esprit. It has to do only with the outside and surface of things. A truly profound emotion seeks another and more intrinsic sort of musical expression. The suite was admirably played, and most enthusiastically received, the applause at the close being hearty and prolonged. It only ceased when it had become evident that Mr. MacDowell could not be prevailed upon to respond from his seat in the upper gallery.

Mr. Schroeder, the new 'cellist, made a distinctly fine impression in the Volkmann concerto. His tone is rich, warm and pure, his technique brilliant; finest of all is the artistic, natural quality of his phrasing. He is one of the too few 'cellists we have heard with whom the rhythmical accent seems to result solely from a musical conception of the phrase, and does not depend upon a more or less involuntary, automatic movement of the arm and wrist. In a word, he phrases as a good singer sings, and not merely according to the sweet will of his bow. If any playing could reconcile one to the tedium of hearing Volkmann's concerto, his could.

The Brahms symphony was strongly played, and made the profoundest impression. Ah, that was music!

The next programme is: Richard Strauss, symphonic poem, "Don Juan;" Rubinstein, pianoforte concerto in D minor; Beethoven, symphony No. 6, in F major ("pastorale"). Mr. Alfred Grünfeld will be the pianist.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 27, 1891.

The Adamowski Quartette Concert.

In this city of string quartettes the organization headed by Timothee Adamowski is by no means the least important, although its season is modestly short, compared with all the others. Last night, in Union Hall, it began its course of three chamber concerts, with a programme which included two new works of the modern school. As prelude to these there was performed the Mozart quartette in E flat major, and this work, which was given with generally good ensemble, served to prove that the old school is by no means abolished by the new. It was almost unjust to place the Paderewski violin and piano sonata after its clear measures, for where the first work was all simplicity and symmetry, the second seemed, perhaps because of the juxtaposition, to soar at times, after the unattainable, and become turgid.

The constitution of the quartette is as follows: T. Adamowski, 1st, and A. Moldauer 2d violin, Max Zach viola, and J. Adamowski violoncello. These players certainly are gaining in unity, and there were comparatively few faults to note in the Mozart Quartette save that the "con moto" was dropped out of the andante. The first movement of the Paderewski Sonata was by far the most interesting, having much of the Polish abandon and some fine touches of Slavonic melody, but the intermezzo seemed almost incomprehensible, and the finale went far beyond the limits of the two instruments and seemed to struggle with orchestral ideas. Mr. Foote was the pianist, and played with all the power possible, but, while doing good work in the first movement, he scarcely achieved much in the impossible finale. To add to the adverse circumstances, Mr. Adamowski's E string snapped during the performance of this and thereafter his intonation (which had been praiseworthy up to this) became very doubtful, and the work came to a rather lame conclusion.

Adamowski, Paderewski and Tschaikowsky! It was rather a Slavonic combination, and the quartette by the last named was full to the brim of Slavonic ideas. Unfortunately, these ideas were also orchestral in scope, and went beyond the vehicle of expression; unfortunately, too, this vehicle was almost upset by the intricacies of the work, and faults of intonation became all too prevalent. Nevertheless the work impressed me as a great one (it was the quartette in F major, but it dealt most freely in minor passages), and the odd rhythms of the third movement, the remarkable swing of the chief theme of the finale and the excellent fugato of this movement were impressive in spite of some faults of execution.

We may hope for good things from the Adamowski Quartette, and if this first concert had its lapses, it had also its strong points, and was more ambitious than any of the preceding concerts given by the organization.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 119.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1891.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTET.

The fourth season of concerts by the Adamowski Quartet was begun under the most favorable circumstances at Union Hall last evening, when the attendance of subscribing patrons was most flattering to the organization by reason of numbers as well as its representative character. Mr. T. Adamowski, the leader, has as his associates Mr. A. Moldauer, second violin; Mr. Max Zach, viola, and Mr. J. Adamowski, 'cello; these being assisted in last evening's programme by Mr. Arthur Foote, pianist.

The selections made for the concert were Mozart's quartet in E flat major, No. 14, (Peter's); Paderewski's sonata for violin and piano in A minor, op. 13, and the quartet in F major, op. 22, by Tschaikowsky, both the last two works having a first hearing here on this occasion.

The novelties of the evening were well chosen, and their merits were brought out with admirable success by the players, Mr. Foote and Mr. Adamowski doing especially good work in the interesting sonata by Paderewski. The audience was a critical one and the approval gained for the evening's performance was honestly won by Mr. Adamowski and his associates.

At the second concert of the series, Nov. 16, the soloist will be Mrs. Julie M. Wyman.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTET,

T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st VIOLIN.
A. MOLDAUER, 2d VIOLIN.
MAX ZACH, VIOLA.
J. ADAMOWSKI, VIOLONCELLO.

FOURTH SEASON--1891-92.

FIRST SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT

IN

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET,

SECOND CONCERT, NOVEMBER 16TH. SOLOIST: MRS. JULIE M. WYMAN.

Boston Journal.

TEN PAGES.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1891.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTETTE.

Union Hall was again the scene last night of the opening concert of the second series of chamber concerts held in this popular place, this time by the Adamowski Quartette, with Mr. Arthur Foote, piano soloist. The selections chosen were quartettes by Mozart and Tschaikowsky, and a sonata for violin and piano by Paderewski. Of the Mozart quartette, the third movement, minuetto allegretto, proved the most enjoyable and was finely interpreted.

The sonata bore the stamp and characteristics of its Polish composer, in originality and construction, and was most admirably rendered by Mr. Foote and Mr. Adamowski. These two artists played together with fine taste and sympathy to the great satisfaction of their hearers, both sharing the honors in the almost equal requirements of this number. So much delight was expressed over the selection that it is hoped that others of the same composer will be found on subsequent programmes during this series of concerts. The quartette by Tschaikowsky, that composer of increasing popularity and interest, made a very acceptable finale to this order of classical programmes. It was both instructive and entertaining, and was one of the best number for close study, revealing beauties of harmony and movement well worth the careful thought of the musical student.

The second and third movements demanded most minute and thoughtful attention, and rewarded the listener with a peculiar delight and enjoyment that would escape a less attentive hearer.

The second concert of this series occurs on Nov. 16, with Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, soloist.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, OCT. 27.

ADAMOWSKI CONCERT.

Two Numbers New to Boston Given in Union Hall Last Evening.

The first of the three concerts by the Adamowski quartet was given in Union Hall last evening. The audience was small, but appreciative. The programme included Mozart's quintet in E flat major, sonata for violin and piano in A minor, by Paderewski and Tschaikowsky's quartet in F major, the last two being given for the first time in Boston.

The Mozart quartet was given an admirable interpretation, the andante especially being rendered with exceptional smoothness and delicacy.

In the last movement the musicians attained the highest degree of precision and unity, and they were rewarded with flattering applause.

The Paderewski sonata was delightfully rendered by Mr. T. Adamowski and Mr. Arthur Foote. The allegro was brilliantly treated and was pleasingly contrasted with the exquisite tenderness and sweetness of the intermezzo. A broken string unfortunately marred the effect of the finale, which was otherwise given with force and brilliancy.

The hearing of the sonata increases interest in the coming of Paderewski, whose concerts here are already announced. The closing number of the programme, the Tschaikowsky quartet, was very interesting, particularly in the development of the theme in the second movement. Its treatment by the quartet was all that could be desired.

The second concert in the series will be given Nov. 16, when Mrs. Julie M. Wyman will be the soloist.

RECORD, Philadelphia, Pa.

te 10/25

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

The sale of seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra series will begin tomorrow at No. 1119 Chestnut street. There are to be six concerts, to take place at the Academy of Music on the evenings of November 4, December 7, January 11, February 8, March 14 and April 25. The first concert occurs on a Wednesday and all the others on Monday evenings. The soloist at the first concert will be Lillian Nordica. Other soloists announced are Mr. Alfred Grunfeld, Mr. T. Adamoski and Mr. Eugen D'Albert, the distinguished pianist.

EVENING POST, New York, N. Y.

Date 10/24

KNEISEL QUARTET CLUB CONCERTS.

The programme arranged for the first of the four Kneisel Quartet Club concerts, at Sherry's New Concert Hall, on Friday evening, November 6, is as follows: 1, Quartet in C major (Koechel 465, Peters 17), Mozart; 2, Second Movement from Quartet in D major, Tschaikowsky; 3, Quintet in G major, Opus 111, new (first time in America), Brahms.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The programme for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season, on Tuesday, November 3, at Chickering Hall, is as follows: 1, Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz; 2, Aria, "Ah Perfido," Beethoven; 3, Prelude, adagio and gavotte for strings, Bach; 4, Aria, "Tannhäuser," Wagner; 5, Symphony in E flat (Rhenish), Schumann. Mme. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist—her first appearance in New York this season.

[37]

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET.

FIRST CONCERT.

MONDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 26, AT 8.

PROGRAMME.

QUARTET IN E FLAT MAJOR, (No. 14 PETERS.) — MOZART
ALLEGRO MA NON TROPPO.—ANDANTE CON MOTO.—
MINUETTO ALLEGRETTO.—ALLEGRO VIVACE.

SONATA FOR VIOLIN AND PIANO IN A MINOR, OP. 13. — PADEREWSKI
ALLEGRO CON FANTASIA.—INTERMEZZO ANDANTINO.—
FINALE, (ALLEGRO MOLTO QUASI PRESTO.)
(FIRST TIME IN BOSTON.)

QUARTET IN F MAJOR, OP. 22. — TSCHAIKOWSKY
ADAGIO; MODERATO ASSAI QUASI ANDANTE.—
ALLEGRO GUISTO; L'ISTESSO TEMPO.—
ANDANTE MA NON TANTO: POCHISSIMO PIU MOSSO.—
ALLEGRO CON MOLTO.
(FIRST TIME IN BOSTON.)

SOLOIST:

MR. ARTHUR FOOTE.

THE PIANO IS A CHICKERING.

The E flat quartet by Mozart (K 428), the fourth in the set of six dedicated to Haydn, was written in 1783. "They are the fruits of a long and toilsome labor." is one of the phrases of the dedication. How highly Haydn thought of them and their author may be gathered from what he said to Leopold Mozart (the composer's father), after three of the quartets had been played through:—"I tell you in the face of Heaven, and as an honorable man, that I look upon your son as the greatest composer of whom I ever heard."

Ignace J. Paderewski is a Polish pianist and composer, whose first concerts in this country are already announced. He has been a prominent figure in musical Europe for several years, known more generally, however, for his piano playing. Mme. Rève-King's performance of his piano concerto at the Symphony Concerts last season, introduced him to Boston as a composer in the larger forms.

"The work played today, No. 13 in the composer's catalogue, is inscribed to "Pablo de Sarasate." While free in point of detail, essentially modern in character, and marked by a flavor of Sclavonic art, its form is classical throughout. Little difficulty will be experienced, therefore, in following the course of each movement, as far, at any rate, as outline is concerned.

The violin enters upon the leading theme of the Allegro con fantasia after two bars of pianoforte prelude. This is repeated, with and ending in C major, and then the subject continues. The presence of crotchet triplets in the theme should specially be noted. They are characteristic of the movement, and to them is due its chief rhythmic peculiarity. Discussion of the subject above cited is not prolonged nor does it present any change of treatment. It ends in the dominant key, and the ear rather expects the appearance of the second subject in that tonality, instead of the relative major (C), but the composer delays its entrance, and by an abrupt transition, passes into D minor, where after two or three preparatory bars, he presents an episode. The episode is closely followed by the second subject in its orthodox key, with full chords, by way of contrast to the bravura accompaniment of the first theme. The pianoforte here takes precedence. Repetition of this is followed by the usual development, which concerns itself with both sections of the subject, in inverted order. Treatment of the second theme runs over into the second part to the extent of five bars, modulating to C minor, and leading to a working of the principal subject. So on through various keys into E minor, and finally to B major, in which key an accellerando begins conducting impetuously to a resumption of the second subject, now repeated rather than 'worked,' in the key of G major. The formal recapitulation of all the themes follows closely the lines of the first statement, but with unusual freedom of tonality. Thus the episode following the principal subject recurs in E minor, [illegible] sensuous beauty and richness of tone, greater than power or delicacy, greater even than clearness—the virtue which we find conspicuous in the scoring of all the great classic masters, in the somewhat clumsy orchestral writing of Schumann as in the ideally expert orchestration of Mozart or Mendelssohn: a certain fine unity of conception which leads the composer to treat all the various instruments of the orchestra as component members of one and the same body, valuable only in so far as each one of them acts in proper co-operation with the others. Mr. MacDowell has really achieved this feat of so combining the component elements of his orchestra into one organic whole that, no matter what temporary prominence he may give to this or that instrument, or group of instruments, it has the effect of a particular quality of tone rising, for the moment, to the surface of the orchestra, but not that very different effect of a particular instrument, or group of instruments, severing the bond of federation between itself and the others, and playing an actual solo. No matter what variety of tone-color he may produce, no matter how sharp the contrast between different groups of instruments may be in their successive entries, there is something in his scoring that makes for unity of impression, and binds the successive phrases together as with a band of steel.

---

Masterly orchestration is, however, by no means the only merit to be descried in this suite. Quite apart from orchestral coloring, there is a rare unity of artistic motive apparent in each one of the four movements. To be sure, this motive seems throughout, even in the "Summer Idyl" and the "Shepherdess's Song," more of an imaginative and picturesque than of an intrinsically musical nature. Subsequent hearings of the suite may very possibly serve to reverse our opinion; but for the present we cannot see that Mr. MacDowell had any other object in view than to embody and illustrate in tones the ideas suggested by the titles of his four movements in what most vividly suggestive and picturesque way he could. What of essentially musical form and development these movements may possess seemed to us on Saturday evening so slight and evanescent that we found it next to impossible to recognize it at all; not that we deny the existence of essentially musical construction in these movements, but that we have not as yet been able to discover it. Until we do, we must, with all our admiration for Mr. MacDowell's cleverness and ability, view his work with a certain coldness, for it makes no appeal to our musical sympathy. Merely picturesque and imaginative writing cannot in the end but seem trivial and not worth doing; especially when it calls into play such vast orchestral resources as are employed in this suite. We would fain have this wealth of orchestral means reserved, and kept sacred for tasks of higher dignity and deeper import than mere orchestral jeux d'esprit; people do not write vers de société in blank verse or Alexandrines — the disproportion between the matter and the vehicle is too great. If we cannot call purely instrumental music in which picturesque and suggestive items occupy the whole ground, or else preponderate largely over the element of organic musical construction, much more than a jeu d'esprit. It [illegible] only with the outside and surface of snapped during the performance of this and thereafter his intonation (which had been praiseworthy up to this) became very doubtful, and the work came to a rather lame conclusion.

---

Adamowski, Paderewski and Tschaikowsky! It was rather a Slavonic combination, and the quartette by the last named was full to the brim of Slavonic ideas. Unfortunately, these ideas were also orchestral in scope, and went beyond the vehicle of expression; unfortunately, too, this vehicle was almost upset by the intricacies of the work, and faults of intonation became all too prevalent. Nevertheless the work impressed me as a great one (it was the quartette in F major, but it dealt most freely in minor passages), and the odd rhythms of the third movement, the remarkable swing of the chief theme of the finale and the excellent fugato of this movement were impressive in spite of some faults of execution.

We may hope for good things from the Adamowski Quartette, and if this first concert had its lapses, it had also its strong points, and was more ambitious than any of the preceding concerts given by the organization.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 119.
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1891.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTET.

The fourth season of concerts by the Adamowski Quartet was begun under the most favorable circumstances at Union Hall last evening, when the attendance of subscribing patrons was most flattering to the organization by reason of numbers as well as its representative character. Mr. T. Adamowski, the leader, has as his associates Mr. A. Moldauer, second violin; Mr. Max Zach, viola, and Mr. J. Adamowski, 'cello; these being assisted in last evening's programme by Mr. Arthur Foote, pianist.

The selections made for the concert were Mozart's quartet in E flat major, No. 14, (Peter's); Paderewski's sonata for violin and piano in A minor, op. 13, and the quartet in F major, op. 22, by Tschaikowsky, both the last two works having a first hearing here on this occasion.

The novelties of the evening were well chosen, and their merits were brought out with admirable success by the players, Mr. Foote and Mr. Adamowski doing especially good work in the interesting sonata by Paderewski. The audience was a critical one and the approval gained for the evening's performance was honestly won by Mr. Adamowski and his associates.

At the second concert of the series, Nov. 16, the soloist will be Mrs. Julie M. Wyman.

Boston Journal.
TEN PAGES.
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1891.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTETTE.

Union Hall was again the scene last night of the opening concert of the second series of chamber concerts held in this popular place, this time by the Adamowski Quartette, with Mr. Arthur Foote, piano soloist. The selections chosen were quartettes by Mozart and Tschaikowsky, and a sonata for violin and piano by Paderewski. Of the Mozart quartette, the third movement, minuetto allegretto, proved the most enjoyable and was finely interpreted.

The sonata bore the stamp and characteristics of its Polish composer, in originality and construction, and was most admirably rendered by Mr. Foote and Mr. Adamowski. These two artists played together with fine taste and sympathy to the great satisfaction of their hearers, both sharing the honors in the almost equal requirements of this number. So much delight was expressed over the selection that it is hoped that others of the same composer will be found on subsequent programmes during this series of concerts. The quartette by Tschaikowsky, that composer of increasing popularity and interest, made a very acceptable finale to this order of classical programmes. It was both instructive and entertaining, and was one of the best number for close study, revealing beauties of harmony and movement well worth the careful thought of the musical student.

The second and third movements demanded most minute and thoughtful attention, and rewarded the listener with a peculiar delight and enjoyment that would escape a less attentive hearer.

The second concert of this series occurs on Nov. 16, with Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, soloist.

RECORD, Philadelphia, Pa.
te 10/25

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

The sale of seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra series will begin tomorrow at No. 1119 Chestnut street. There are to be six concerts, to take place at the Academy of Music on the evenings of November 4, December 7, January 11, February 8, March 14 and April 25. The first concert occurs on a Wednesday and all the others on Monday evenings. The soloist at the first concert will be Lillian Nordica. Other soloists announced are Mr. Alfred Grunfeld, Mr. T. Adamoski and Mr. Eugen D'Albert, the distinguished pianist.

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, OCT. 27.

ADAMOWSKI CONCERT.

Two Numbers New to Boston Given in Union Hall Last Evening.

The first of the three concerts by the Adamowski quartet was given in Union Hall last evening. The audience was small, but appreciative. The programme included Mozart's quintet in E flat major, sonata for violin and piano in A minor, by Paderewski and Tschaikowsky's quartet in F major, the last two being given for the first time in Boston.

The Mozart quartet was given an admirable interpretation, the andante especially being rendered with exceptional smoothness and delicacy.

In the last movement the musicians attained the highest degree of precision and unity, and they were rewarded with flattering applause.

The Paderewski sonata was delightfully rendered by Mr. T. Adamowski and Mr. Arthur Foote. The allegro was brilliantly treated and was pleasingly contrasted with the exquisite tenderness and sweetness of the intermezzo. A broken string unfortunately marred the effect of the finale, which was otherwise given with force and brilliancy.

The hearing of the sonata increases interest in the coming of Paderewski, whose concerts here are already announced. The closing number of the programme, the Iscnarkowsky quartet, was very interesting, particularly in the development of the theme in the second movement. Its treatment by the quartet was all that could be desired.

The second concert in the series will be given Nov. 16, when Mrs. Julie M. Wyman will be the soloist.

EVENING POST, New York, N. Y.
Date 10/24

KNEISEL QUARTET CLUB CONCERTS.

The programme arranged for the first of the four Kneisel Quartet Club concerts, at Sherry's New Concert Hall, on Friday evening, November 6, is as follows: 1, Quartet in C major (Koechel 465, Peters 17), Mozart; 2, Second Movement from Quartet in D major, Tschaikowsky; 3, Quintet in G major, Opus 111, new (first time in America), Brahms.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The programme for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season, on Tuesday, November 3, at Chickering Hall, is as follows: 1, Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz; 2, Aria, "Ah Perfido," Beethoven; 3, Prelude, adagio and gavotte for strings, Bach; 4, Aria, "Tannhäuser," [illegible] 5, Symphony in E flat (Rhenish), Schumann. [illegible] Lillian Nordica will be the [illegible] in New York this season.

QUAR

SONA

QUAF

and the second subject comes back in D major. The composer has a special purpose in this departure from the rule, for not only does he repeat the themes, as usual, but much of the "working out," making a peroration of the second subject, which now occurs in the previously avoided tonic.

The slow movement, which is not the least characteristic part of the work, consists of a single theme, its developments and episodes, twice heard with, on repetition, changes of tonality and detail. The subject consists of two distinct sections, the first of which is in the nature of a preamble. The more important section follows immediately. All the foregoing is now repeated (with the first section in another key) and followed by development of a somewhat fantastic character. This leads to an energetic accellerando, followed by a brief cadenza for pianoforte. The whole is now repeated, with the variations already remarked, and a brief coda brings the movement to an end.

In point of form the spirited final movement is a counterpart of the first Allegro. Its unostentatious leading theme appears in the pianoforte part at the outset, and is taken up by the violin, in D minor. Nothing could be more simple. To this succeeds an important tributary in the relative major key. The second subject is soon reached. It, also, has a tributary of imprtance, which, with the characteristic bars of the first tributary, is used in another bold development section and followed by the peroration of the first part, in the orthodox relative major. The "working out" deals solely with the leading theme and fragments of the two tributaries, neglecting the second subject altogether. The recapitulatory section is approached,in a vigorous manner. As in the first Allegro, so here, the composer reecapitulates not only the first part but a good deal of the "working out," that procedure evidently commending itself to him very strongly.

The coda (prestissimo), like the "working out," deals with the principal subject and the tributaries. It can tell its own story."

Tschaikowsky's contributions to the department of chamber-music are slight in comparison with his works for the stage and for orchestra. The three string quartets date from a comparatively early period in his career, though acquaintance with them in this country, which is by no means general, followed the introduction of the larger instrumental works.

[illegible] sensuous beauty and richness of tone, greater than power or delicacy, greater even than clearness—the virtue which we find conspicuous in the scoring of all the great classic masters, in the somewhat clumsy orchestral writing of Schumann as in the ideally expert orchestration of Mozart or Mendelssohn: a certain fine unity of conception which leads the composer to treat all the various instruments of the orchestra as component members of one and the same body, valuable only in so far as each one of them acts in proper co-operation with the others. Mr. MacDowell has really achieved this feat of so combining the component elements of his orchestra into one organic whole that, no matter what temporary prominence he may give to this or that instrument, or group of instruments, it has the effect of a particular quality of tone rising, for the moment, to the surface of the orchestra, but not that very different effect of a particular instrument, or group of instruments, severing the bond of federation between itself and the others, and playing an actual solo. No matter what variety of tone-color he may produce, no matter how sharp the contrast between different groups of instruments may be in their successive entries, there is something in his scoring that makes for unity of impression, and binds the successive phrases together as with a band of steel.

Masterly orchestration is, however, by no means the only merit to be descried in this suite. Quite apart from orchestral coloring, there is a rare unity of artistic motive apparent in each one of the four movements. To be sure, this motive seems throughout, even in the "Summer Idyl" and the "Shepherdess's Song," more of an imaginative and picturesque than of an intrinsically musical nature. Subsequent hearings of the suite may very possibly serve to reverse our opinion; but for the present we cannot see that Mr. MacDowell had any other object in view than to embody and illustrate in tones the ideas suggested by the titles of his four movements in what most vividly suggestive and picturesque way he could. What of essentially musical form and development these movements may possess seemed to us on Saturday evening so slight and evanescent that we found it next to impossible to recognize it at all; not that we deny the existence of essentially musical construction in these movements, but that we have not as yet been able to discover it. Until we do, we must, with all our admiration for Mr. MacDowell's cleverness and ability, view his work with a certain coldness, for it makes no appeal to our musical sympathy. Merely picturesque and imaginative writing cannot in the end but seem trivial and not worth doing; especially when it calls into play such vast orchestral resources as are employed in this suite. We would fain have this wealth of orchestral [illegible] reserved, and kept sacred for tasks of higher dignity and deeper import than mere [illegible] jeux d'esprit; people do not write vers de société in blank verse or Alexandrines—the disproportion between the matter and the vehicle is too great. So we cannot call purely instrumental music in which picturesque and suggestive items occupy the whole ground, or else preponderate largely over the element of organic musical construction, much more than a jeu d'esprit. It deals only with the outside and surface of snapped during the performance of this and thereafter his intonation (which had been praiseworthy up to this) became very doubtful, and the work came to a rather lame conclusion.

---

Adamowski, Paderewski and Tschaikowsky! It was rather a Slavonic combination, and the quartette by the last named was full to the brim of Slavonic ideas. Unfortunately, these ideas were also orchestral in scope, and went beyond the vehicle of expression; unfortunately, too, this vehicle was almost upset by the intricacies of the work, and faults of intonation became all too prevalent. Nevertheless the work impressed me as a great one (it was the quartette in F major, but it dealt most freely in minor passages), and the odd rhythms of the third movement, the remarkable swing of the chief theme of the finale and the excellent fugato of this movement were impressive in spite of some faults of execution.

We may hope for good things from the Adamowski Quartette, and if this first concert had its lapses, it had also its strong points, and was more ambitious than any of the preceding concerts given by the organization.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 119.
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1891.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTET.

The fourth season of concerts by the Adamowski Quartet was begun under the most favorable circumstances at Union Hall last evening, when the attendance of subscribing patrons was most flattering to the organization by reason of numbers as well as its representative character. Mr. T. Adamowski, the leader, has as his associates Mr. A. Moldauer, second violin; Mr. Max Zach, viola, and Mr. J. Adamowski, 'cello; these being assisted in last evening's programme by Mr. Arthur Foote, pianist.

The selections made for the concert were Mozart's quartet in E flat major, No. 14, (Peter's); Paderewski's sonata for violin and piano in A minor, op. 13, and the quartet in F major, op. 22, by Tschaikowsky, both the last two works having a first hearing here on this occasion.

The novelties of the evening were well chosen, and their merits were brought out with admirable success by the players, Mr. Foote and Mr. Adamowski doing especially good work in the interesting sonata by Paderewski. The audience was a critical one and the approval gained for the evening's performance was honestly won by Mr. Adamowski and his associates.

At the second concert of the series, Nov. 16, the soloist will be Mrs. Julie M. Wyman.

Boston Journal.
TEN PAGES.
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1891.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTETTE.

Union Hall was again the scene last night of the opening concert of the second series of chamber concerts held in this popular place, this time by the Adamowski Quartette, with Mr. Arthur Foote, piano soloist. The selections chosen were quartettes by Mozart and Tschaikowsky, and a sonata for violin and piano by Paderewski. Of the Mozart quartette, the third movement, minuetto allegretto, proved the most enjoyable and was finely interpreted.

The sonata bore the stamp and characteristics of its Polish composer, in originality and construction, and was most admirably rendered by Mr. Foote and Mr. Adamowski. These two artists played together with fine taste and sympathy to the great satisfaction of their hearers, both sharing the honors in the almost equal requirements of this number. So much delight was expressed over the selection that it is hoped that others of the same composer will be found on subsequent programmes during this series of concerts. The quartette by Tschaikowsky, that composer of increasing popularity and interest, made a very acceptable finale to this order of classical programmes. It was both instructive and entertaining, and was one of the best number for close study, revealing beauties of harmony and movement well worth the careful thought of the musical student.

The second and third movements demanded most minute and thoughtful attention, and rewarded the listener with a peculiar delight and enjoyment that would escape a less attentive hearer.

The second concert of this series occurs on Nov. 16, with Mrs. Julie M. Wyman, soloist.

RECORD, Philadelphia, Pa.
te 10/25

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

The sale of seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra series will begin tomorrow at No. 1119 Chestnut street. There are to be six concerts, to take place at the Academy of Music on the evenings of November 4, December 7, January 11, February 8, March 14 and April 25. The first concert occurs on a Wednesday and all the others on Monday evenings. The soloist at the first concert will be Lillian Nordica. Other soloists announced are Mr. Alfred Grunfeld, Mr. T. Adamoski and Mr. Eugen D'Albert, the distinguished pianist.

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, OCT. 27.

ADAMOWSKI CONCERT.

Two Numbers New to Boston Given in Union Hall Last Evening.

The first of the three concerts by the Adamowski quartet was given in Union Hall last evening. The audience was small, but appreciative. The programme included Mozart's quintet in E flat major, sonata for violin and piano in A minor, by Paderewski and Tschaikowsky's quartet in F major, the last two being given for the first time in Boston.

The Mozart quartet was given an admirable interpretation, the andante especially being rendered with exceptional smoothness and delicacy.

In the last movement the musicians attained the highest degree of precision and unity, and they were rewarded with flattering applause.

The Paderewski sonata was delightfully rendered by Mr. T. Adamowski and Mr. Arthur Foote. The allegro was brilliantly treated and was pleasingly contrasted with the exquisite tenderness and sweetness of the intermezzo. A broken string unfortunately marred the effect of the finale, which was otherwise given with force and brilliancy.

The hearing of the sonata increases interest in the coming of Paderewski, whose concerts here are already announced. The closing number of the programme, the Iscnarkowsky quartet, was very interesting, particularly in the development of the theme in the second movement. Its treatment by the quartet was all that could be desired.

The second concert in the series will be given Nov. 16, when Mrs. Julie M. Wyman will be the soloist.

EVENING POST, New York, N. Y.
Date 10/24

KNEISEL QUARTET CLUB CONCERTS.

The programme arranged for the first of the four Kneisel Quartet Club concerts, at Sherry's New Concert Hall, on Friday evening, November 6, is as follows: 1, Quartet in C major (Koechel 465, Peters 17), Mozart; 2, Second Movement from Quartet in D major, Tschaikowsky; 3, Quintet in G major, Opus 111, new (first time in America), Brahms.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The programme for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season, on Tuesday, November 3, at Chickering Hall, is as follows: 1, Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz; 2, Aria, "Ah Perfido," Beethoven; 3, Prelude, adagio and gavotte for strings, Bach; 4, Aria, "Tannhäuser," Wagner; 5, Symphony in E flat (Rhenish), Schumann. Mme. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist—her first appearance in New York [illegible].

[37]

Boston Post

TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 27, 1891.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTETTE.

The programme of the first concert of the Adamowski Quartette (fourth season), given last evening in Union Hall, was as follows: Mozart's quartette in E flat major; Paderewski's sonata for violin and piano in A minor; and Tschaikowsky's quartet in F major. The second and third of these works were heard in Boston for the first time.

The programmes presented by this quartette are generally interesting. Unfortunately the ensemble work of the four players can seldom be praised. The imperfections noticed are not accidental, they do not come from insufficient rehearsal; they are due to the temperament of two of the members of the quartette, the first violin and the 'cello.

Now let me explain this statement by taking an extreme case. If a string quartette were organized with Sarasate as first violin and Liégeois as 'cello, the ensemble would in nine cases out of ten be less satisfactory than that made by four good musicians taken from an excellent German or French orchestra. Sarasate, who is in many respects the most eminent virtuoso now before the public, would play in a quartette as a virtuoso and not as a quartette player; and Liégeois would be slow in subordinating his superb tone and in concealing his great technique. Without comparing for a moment the two Adamowski brothers with the two great players named, it may justly be said that Mr. T. Adamowski is a man of virtuoso blood, and in the quartette he is not contented with being one of four. And so it is with his brother, though in less degree. Therefore we find in the performances of this quartette, first of all, a lack of proper balance—then unrest, needless shiftings of rhythms and other virtuoso tricks, and an absence of reserve power and hinted strength. Add to all this, surprising falseness in intonation, a frequent misconception of the composer's meaning, carelessness in repeating his very words, and what pray, becomes of a quartette written by Mozart?

It is not an agreeable duty to speak so bluntly, but the performance of the Mozart quartette last evening deserves still harsher words. The first movement was hurried, muddy and out of tune. The andante con moto was played like an adagio, and painfully dragged out. In the menuetto no distinction was made between eighth and quarter notes, and the finale taken at a furious pace at times degenerated into a scramble.

The Paderewski sonata was played by Messrs. T. Adamowski and Arthur Foote. Mr. Paderewski will be here this season and will give recitals. It is to be hoped that this sonata will then be heard. To judge of its merits after the performance of last evening would be an injustice to the composer.

This quartette is more successful in the Wilder works of the modern school, and though in the Tschaikowsky Quartette there were passages of untunefulness and imperfect balance, yet there were many pleasing moments. The scherzo is perhaps the most sane and fresh of the movements, with its strange and haunting motif in seven-four rhythm. The andante is beautiful in thought and curious in construction, and the first movement is interesting, though its exaggerations in harmony and rhythm suggest vodka. It is a singular work, this second of the three quartettes, and it deserves a second hearing. The movements were heartily applauded, and in fact applause was frequently given during the evening.

The next concert will be given Nov. 16. Mrs. Julie L. Wyman will sing.

PHILIP HALE.

PRESS, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/25

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Eminent Soloists at the Academy.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Mr. Arthur Nikisch is the distinguished conductor, will give a series of six concerts at the Academy of Music on the evenings of November 4, December 7, January 11, February 8, March 14, and April 25.

It is not necessary to dwell on the merits of this organization, which has become so well known to the musical public through its splendid concerts of past seasons. The orchestra numbers eighty-five performers, and has been strengthened in some departments since last year by the acquisition of several players of superior ability. The members have already been playing constantly together for five weeks in Boston, and from all accounts the organization was never in finer condition. Sterling programmes will be given, including many worthy and interesting novelties secured by Mr. Nikisch in Europe during the Summer.

Mme. Lillian Nordica, who ranks as one of the world's greatest sopranos, will be the soloist at the opening concert, November 4. The famous pianists, Alfred Grunfeld and Eugen D'Albert, with other eminent soloists, have been engaged for later concerts. The appearances of these artists will form in themselves important features of the musical season.

The sale of season tickets, covering reserved seats for the series of six concerts, will open to-morrow morning at 1119 Chestnut Street.

INQUIRER, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/25 10/2

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The prospectus of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the season of 1891-92 has just been made public. There are to be six concerts, to take place at the Academy of Music on the evenings of November 4, December 7, January 11, February 8, March 14 and April 25. The first concert occurs on a Wednesday, and all the others on Monday evening. No change of substantial importance has taken place during the summer recess in the composition of the orchestra. Franz Kneisel remains the concert meister, with Adamowski and Loeffler as lieutenants. MM. Mole and Santet remain as first flutist and first soloist respectively, and Mr. Arthur Nikisch retains the directorship. As during last season, the full orchestra will comprise eighty-five members. The soloist at the first concert will be Mme. Lillian Nordica, a charming singer, who has won many fresh laurels since she was heard here last with Patti and Tamagno in the season of 1889-90, and the beauty of whose Desdemona in Verdi's opera of "Otello," opera goers will pleasantly remember. Other soloists announced are Mr. Alfred Grunfeld, Mr. T. Adamowski and Mr. Eugen D'Albert, the distinguished pianist. The sale of seats will open at 1119 Chestnut street to-morrow morning.

THE NEW HAVEN EVENING The Register.

OCTOBER 26, 1891.

HYPERION THEATER.

NIKISCH. - - - NORDICA.

ONLY CONCERT THIS SEASON BY THE

BOSTON

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

(70 PERFORMERS,)

Mr. Arthur Nikisch - - - Conductor.

"As fine a band of players as is ever grouped on a concert stage."—New York World.

"New Yorkers have learned to expect delights which their own organizations cannot provide."—New York Tribune.

"Last night's concert again demonstrated very plainly that in some respects the Boston Symphony Orchestra has attained a perfection beyond that of our best organizations."—New York Herald.

"Unrivalled, in this country, at least, for the breadth, delicacy, brilliancy and musical intelligence and finish of its interpretations of the best orchestral works."—Chicago Times.

ONE GRAND CONCERT

AT THE

HYPERION THEATER,

MONDAY EVENING, Nov. 2d,

AT 8 O'CLOCK.

First appearance in this city of the renowned Prima Donna Soprano,

Mme. Nordica.

A BRILLIANT PROGRAMME:

Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini"........Berlioz.
Aria, "La Reine de Saba"............Gounod.
MME. NORDICA.
Suite op. 55 (new)..............Tschaikowsky.
Elegie.
Valse melancholique.
Scherzo.
Tema con Variazioni.
(First time in New Haven.)
Polacca, "Mignon."..................A. Thomas.
MME NORDICA.
Overture, "Phedre."..................Massenet.

Tickets, with Reserved Seats, 75c, $1.00 and $1.50, according to location.

☞ The sale of seats opens TUESDAY, Oct. 27th, at 9 a. m., at the Hyperion Theater.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

o25,26,28,31,n1

Next Monday evening at the Hyperion the Boston Symphony orchestra will appear, the only time in New Haven this season. Arthur Nikisch, who created such a furore of enthusiasm here last year will conduct the orchestra. Mme. Lillian Nordica has been secured as the soloist for the occasion, and her wonderful soprano voice will no doubt captivate her hearers.

STAR, Kansas City, Mo.

Date 10/22

At the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Boston, Saturday evening, the playing of the prelude from "Cavalleria Rusticana" aroused the greatest enthusiasm. William J. Winch sang the same opera to harp and orchestral accompaniment and was given an ovation. The playing of the new Tschaikowsky suite, the first time in America, awakened an equal interest.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1891.

The Adamowski Quartet.

The Adamowski Quartet gave its first concert this season in Union Hall last evening, the programme being as follows:

Mozart: Quartet in E-flat (Peters, No. 3).
Paderewski: Sonata for violin and pianoforte, in A minor, Op. 13.
Tschaikowsky: Quartet in F, Op. 22.
Mr. Arthur Foote was the pianist.

The Mozart quartet is one not often heard here. It is a wonderful work, showing the composer in his finest mood. The Andante con moto especially is a gem of the first water. The other two numbers on the programme were novelties, and, as such, interesting. The Palerenski sonata was the more pleasing of the two, and although a single hearing could give no very distinct notion of its value, it did certainly make us wish to hear the work again. Not so the Tschaikowski Quartet; this, with the best will in the world, we cannot honestly wish to hear again. Passages of unmistakable vigor would now and then meet the ear, but much of it seemed very ugly indeed. Take, for instance, that hideous little time that serves as theme for the second movement (Allegro ginsto); it may seem beautiful to the Slavic musical sense, just as some women, whom we in America should call painfully ill-favored, pass for professional beauties in China; but to our Western ear this theme is by no means a thing of beauty.

The quartet played excellently well shroughout, and the Paderinski sonata was admirably, exquisitely given by Mr. Adamowski and Mr. Foster. The next concert in the course comes on Monday evening, Nov. 16.

Detroit
Oct. 25

Arthur Nikisch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will play the piano part of the Quintet by Christian Sinding for the first time in this country at the Detroit Philharmonic concert, Nov. 9, at the Lyceum theater.

* * *

THE NEW HAVEN EVENING REGISTER. TUESDAY. OCTOBER 27, 1891

HYPERION THEATER

NIKISCH | BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
NORDICA

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH......CONDUCTOR.

ONLY GRAND CONCERT

By this famous organization, with the assistance of

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

The Renowned Prima Donna Soprano,
(Her first appearance in New Haven.)

Monday Evening, Nov. 2, at 8 o'clock

Program—Overture "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz—Aria "La Reine de Saba," Gounod—Suite op. 55, Tschaikowsky (first time)—Polacca, "Mignon," Thomas—Overture, "Phedre," Massenet. Tickets, with reserved seats, 75c, $1.00 and $1.50. Now on sale at the box office, Hyperion Theater. C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

o27,29,30,31

The Boston Symphony orchestra's concerts always prove occasions of rare enjoyment and it has never offered a program possessing more attractive features than the one announced for next Monday evening at the Hyperion theater. The numbers chosen by Mr. Nikisch are representative works of modern composers, which are certain to receive a faultless interpretation at the hands of his splendid body of musicians. The soloist is Madame Nordica, whose appearance of itself will be an important event of the musical season. The sale of seats is now progressing at the Hyperion theater.

TRIBUNE, Detroit, Mich.

Date 10/25

Arthur Nikisch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the piano part of the quintet by Christian Sinding for the first time in this country, at the concert to be given Nov. 9 by the Detroit Philharmonic Club. This will also be the first time that Nikisch has appeared as a pianist outside of Boston.

SUN, New York, N. Y.

Date 10-26

The programme for the first concert of the Boston symphony orchestra this season on Tuesday, Nov. 3, at Chickering Hall, is as follows: 1. Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz; 2. Aria, "Ah Perfido," Beethoven; 3. Prelude, adagio and gavotte for strings, Bach; 4. Aria, "Tannhäuser," Wagner; 5. Symphony in E flat (Rhenish), Schumann. Mme. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist.

The programme arranged for the first of the four Kneisel Quartet Club concerts at Sherry's new concert hall on Friday evening, Nov. 6, is as follows: 1. Quartet in C major (Koechel, 465; Peters, 17), Mozart; 2. Second movement from quartet in D major, Tschaikowsky; 3. Quintet in G major, Opus 111, new (first time in America), Brahms.

NORTH AMERICAN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/26

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

No material change in the personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been made since it was heard here last. Now, as then, it contains eighty-five members, the pick of their profession, and Franz Kneisel continues to act as concert-master at a salary, it is said, of $75 a week. The first concert here will take place at the Academy of Music on Wednesday evening, November 4. The dates of the other five are Monday evenings, December 7, January 11, February 8, March 14 and April 26. The sale of season tickets will begin this morning at 9 o'clock, at 1119 Chestnut street.

43

The Register. THE NEW HAVEN EVENING

WEDNESDAY. OCTOBER 28,

Next Monday evening the Boston Symphony orchestra, Arthur Nikisch, conductor, will give a grand concert at the Hyperion theater. Mme. Lillian Nordica, the renowned prima donna, will make her first appearance in this city as soloist of the evening.

NEWS, New Haven, Conn.

Date 10-26

The Boston Symphony orchestra, with Arthur Nikisch and Mme. Nordica, will appear at the Hyperion next Monday evening. This will be Nordica's first visit to New Haven. Although a New Englander, she received her musical education in Europe, where she has been one of the foremost singers, delighting vast assemblages in almost every capital. During the Queen's jubilee Mme. Nordica sang at one of the state concerts at Buckingham Palace, and made a brilliant success. The Princess of Wales personally thanked the American prima donna for the pleasure she had given her, and the Prince immediately afterward came forward to congratulate her. By royal command Mme. Nordica sang at Westminster Abbey on the day after the jubilee.

TIMES, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/27

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its series of concerts at the Academy of Music on Wednesday evening of next week. Madame Nordica will be the soloist. The sale of subscriptions tickets for the series opened yesterday and was reported as already exceeding that of last year.

PUBLIC LEDGER, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/27

Sale of season tickets [illegible] the Boston Symphony Concerts. Arthur Nikisch will continue to conduct the orchestra, and Franz Kneisel will remain the concert-meister. No important change, it is said, has been made in the personnel of the organization since last season.

THE EAGLE.

TUESDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 26.

The Brooklyn Eagle, and Kings County Democrat.

THE PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

The sale of seats for the Philharmonic rehearsals and concerts will begin at Chandler's tomorrow morning. Not more than ten seats will be sold to any one person. The concerts, by the magnificent Boston symphony orchestra of eighty-five men and eminent soloists, will be of the highest artistic value and interest and the programme books furnished to the audience are of much assistance in understanding the selections, as the phrase goes. The soloists are Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Nikisch and Mr. and Mrs. George Henschel, singers; Ignace Paderewski and Eugen D'Albert, piano players. There are no premiums on the tickets this year. It is not necessary to praise the work of this splendid organization, and it is hoped that it will be heard by every music lover in the city. The programme for the first rehearsal and concert, on November 6 and 7, is as follows:

Overture, "Leonora No. 3"......................Beethoven
Aria, "La Reine de Saba"..........................Gounod
Lillian Nordica.
Suite Op. 55 (new)...............................Tschaikowsky
(First time in Brooklyn.)
Elegie.
Valse melancholique.
Scherzo.
Tema con Variazioni.
Elizabeth's aria from "Tannhauser"...............Wagner
Lillian Nordica.
Vorspiel, "Die Meistersinger"......................Wagner

Brooklyn Daily Eagle

MONDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 26, 1891.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. NIKISCH

Under the auspices of the

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF BROOKLYN,

THE

BOSTON
BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

85 PERFORMERS,

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,
Will give a series of
SIX PUBLIC REHEARSALS,
On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, November 6, December 11, January 15, February 12, March 18 and April 29,
AND
SIX CONCERTS,
On SATURDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13, March 19 and April 30.

Mme. LILLIAN NORDICA, Mrs. ARTHUR NIKISCH
Mr. IGNACE J. PADEREWSKI,
Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT

and other distinguished artists will appear as soloists.

Season tickets, including reserved seats for the series of six rehearsals, or for the series of six concerts, $4, $5 and $7.50, according to location, now on sale at the office of the Philharmonic Society, at CHANDLER'S music store, 300 Fulton st.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

Brooklyn Daily Eagle

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 27, 1891.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. NIKISCH

Under the auspices of the

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF BROOKLYN,

THE

BOSTON
BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

85 PERFORMERS,

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,
Will give a series of
SIX PUBLIC REHEARSALS,
On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, November 6, December 11, January 15, February 12, March 18 and April 29,
AND
SIX CONCERTS,
On SATURDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13, March 19 and April 30.

Mme. LILLIAN NORDICA, Mrs. ARTHUR NIKISCH
Mr. IGNACE J. PADEREWSKI,
Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT

and other distinguished artists will appear as soloists.

Season tickets, including reserved seats for the series of six rehearsals, or for the series of six concerts, $4, $5 and $7.50, according to location, now on sale at the office of the Philharmonic Society, at CHANDLER'S music store, 300 Fulton st.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

Brooklyn Daily Eagle

WEDNESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 28, 1891.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. NIKISCH

Under the auspices of the
PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF BROOKLYN,
THE

BOSTON
BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

85 PERFORMERS,

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,
Will give a series of
SIX PUBLIC REHEARSALS,
On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, November 6, December 11, January 15, February 12, March 18 and April 29,
AND
SIX CONCERTS,
On SATURDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13, March 19 and April 30.

Mme. LILLIAN NORDICA, Mrs. ARTHUR NIKISCH
Mr. IGNACE J. PADEREWSKI,
Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT
and other distinguished artists will appear as soloists.

Season tickets, including reserved seats for the series of six rehearsals, or for the series of six concerts, $4, $5 and $7.50, according to location, now on sale at the office of the Philharmonic Society, at CHANDLER'S music store, 300 Fulton st.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

Brooklyn Daily Eagle

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 29, 1891.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. NIKISCH

Under the auspices of the
PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF BROOKLYN,

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
85 performers,
Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH,
Conductor.

NORDICA,
PADEREWSKI,
D'ALBERT
and other famous soloists.

SIX PUBLIC REHEARSALS:
AFTERNOONS of November 6, December 11, January 15, February 12, March 18 and April 29.

SIX CONCERTS:
EVENINGS of November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13, March 19 and April 30.

Season tickets, including reserved seats for the series of six rehearsals, or for the series of six concerts, $4, $5 and $7.50, according to location, now on sale at CHANDLER'S music store, 300 Fulton st.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

—A WEEKLY PAPER—

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1891.

Kneisel.—The program arranged for the first of the four Kneisel Quartet Club concerts at Sherry's new concert hall on Friday, November 6, is as follows: Quartet in C major (Koechel, 465; Peters, 17), Mozart; second movement from quartet in D major, Tschaikowsky; quartet in G major, op. 111, new (first time in America), Brahms.

JOURNAL AND COURIER, New Haven, Conn.

Date 10/27

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Boston Symphony orchestra of seventy performers, under the able leadership of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, will give only one concert in this city this season at the Hyperion theater next Monday evening. The occasion will also mark the first appearance of the eminent prima donna soprano, Mme. Nordica. The following brilliant program will be rendered:

Overture—"Benvenuto Cellina"..........Berloiz
Aria—"La Reine de Saba"................Gounod
Mme. Nordica.
Suite op. 55 (new)................Tschaikowsky
Elegie.
Valse melancholique.
Scherzo.
Tensa con Variazioni.
(First time in New Haven.)
Polacca—"Mignon"...................A Thomas
Mme. Nordica.
Overture—"Phedre."....................Massenet

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The sale of tickets opens this morning for the concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, to be given at the Hyperion theater next Monday evening. This will be the only opportunity this season to hear this splendid orchestra under its accomplished conductor, Mr. Nikisch, and will doubtless bring out a great audience. Additional interest attaches to this event, as it will be the occasion of the first appearance in this city of one of the world's greatest sopranos, Mme. Nordica. A very attractive program is promised.

STANDARD-UNION, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date 10-27

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give six rehearsals at the Academy of Music on Friday afternoons, beginning on Nov. 6, and six concerts on Saturday evenings, beginning Nov. 7, under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society. The sale of seats has already commenced at Chandler's, 300 Fulton street.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCT. 31, 1891.

Mr. MacDowell's new suite was the gem of the third Symphony concert, for the Volkmann 'cello concert is dull, and the fourth Brahms symphony, even though one manages to get a little used to it from time to time, is often pretentious, labored, rambling and tends to little definite, except the ecstatic adoration of the Transcript, which is perhaps worth writing a symphony for. About all the rest of the public find it dull, as the exodus of weary hearers after each movement proved. Mr. MacDowell always shows himself to be original and independent, full of quaint fancy, strong in expression and not less in self-control, a free melodist and a rich and various harmonist. It would be pleasant to analyze this work, had we time, because it is his best; but we can only record how one peculiarly individual phase of his ideality is exhibited in the fantastic contrasts of the ' Haunted Forest," with its gloom and mystery, and the "Forest Spirits," with its rustle and rush,—both eerie, but each distinct,—and how well the "Summer Idyl" and the "Shepherdess Song" justify their names. Each movement tells its story and ends simply when this is done, and the orchestration fills in beautifully appropriate coloring to the fine outlining. Mr. Schroeder was the 'cellist, and was well received, as a newcomer should be. He played with taste, smooth tone, good phrasing and academic care; but he did not give evidence of having a drop of virtuoso blood in his veins, and is evidently a much better quartette than solo player. The orchestral work was sometimes good and sometimes bad, the blatant blowing of the trombones and trumpets vulgarizing Mr. MacDowell's last movement insufferably. The degeneration of the whole band in accuracy and above all in elegance is made only too potent by each new programme. Tonight the newly arrived pianist, Mr. Grunfield, will play Rubinstein's D-minor concerto, the symphony will be Beethoven's "Pastoral," and the programme will begin by the introduction to Boston of Richard Strauss's symphonic "Don Juan."

Boston Post

SATURDAY MORNING, OCT. 31, 1891.

The programme of this evening's Symphony concert in Music Hall will be as follows: Symphonic Poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss (first time in Boston); Rubenstein's Concerto for pianoforte in D minor; Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 ("Pastorale"). Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld will play the pianoforte part of the concerto.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31. 189

The Saturday Evening Paper.

Symphony Concert.—The third Symphony concert was chiefly remarkable for the performance of Mr. E. A. MacDowell's orchestral suite in A minor. It was played last week for the first time in Boston, and its very first performance was at the Worcester (Mass.) Festival, September 24, by an orchestra under the direction of Mr. Carl Zerrahn. When Mr. MacDowell's symphonic poem "Lancelot and Elaine" was played here nearly two years ago, it seemed like a succession of rapidly dissolving views and the moods of the person gazing changed rapidly with the views till fatigue drove out pleasure. Not that it was not an imaginative, poetical work, which showed the sensitiveness of the composer; but it was intentionally and in the full meaning of the words "program music."

And now Mr. MacDowell comes before the public with his suite, but he is content to let the music suggest to the hearer or remind him, according to the individuality of the hearer. To be sure he calls his movements, "In a Haunted Forest," "Summer Idyl," "The Shepherdess Song" and "Forest Spirits." He does not, however, tell his ghosts by name, or identify trees or give the geological formation of the rocks or the direction of the wind. The hearer can dream as he pleases. There are people who do not enjoy music unless they fancy it is imitative. There are people—and estimable people—who do not enjoy a tune per se, and only tolerate its presence because it may be so used in thematic development that they have great difficulty in detecting it. But Mr. MacDowell in this work did not deliberately appeal to hunters after the mimetic or the seekers after intellectuality in music. He has written musical poetry, pleasing in thought, and most charmingly sung. First of all it was orchestrally thought out; it was not originally and laboriously built with the help of the piano forte and then scored experimentally for this or that combination of instruments. His harmonies presented themselves in variegated orchestral dress; his effects were suggested by a cunning knowlege of the capabilities and limitations of each instrument. The instrumentation throughout is that of a master, and not the perfunctory task of a scholar. How delightful for instance is the use of the flutes, and the cold tones of the bassoons. How skilfully are the different choirs contrasted, how well nourished are the inner parts. This suite is free from artificial morbidness, from straining after effect, from self-consciousness. Self restraint is seen in the wildest passages, and the fantasy leaps from a healthy brain. Taught in foreign schools, Mr. Mac Dowell has chosen the best characteristics of the French and German; but he is not a mere gatherer of samples, a collector of mosaics. His is a genuine poetic spirit, finely trained and happy in expression. The audience was quick to recognize the beauties of the work. Applause was most hearty, and it continued until Mr. MacDowell twice bowed his acknowledgments from the upper gallery.

Mr. Alvin Schroeder made his first appearance in Boston as a solo-player, and he chose the concerto for 'cello in A minor by Volkmann, a very tedious composition. He is not a virtuoso in the common acceptation of the word, but he is a musician of refined taste who plays his instrument carefully. His phrasing was excellent throughout, and his proper place is in the orchestra or quartet. He was loudly applauded.

The symphony was the fourth of Brahms. It was read theatrically by the director and played roughly by the orchestra.

PHILIP HALE.

The Register.

NEW HAVEN CONN.

FRIDAY OCTOBER 30

Madame Nordica who is to be the soloist at the Boston Symphony concert next Monday evening in the Hyperion theater filled the first engagement of her American tour at the Worcester Festival last month. The following description of the famous singer appeared at the time in the Worcester Spy: "Madame Nordica was the star of the evening and her appearance was awaited with great impatience. No sooner had she shown her face beyond the curtain than the applause began. Every step she made was the signal for more prolonged applause, and when she reached the platform under escort of Victor Herbert a perfect ovation awaited her. It was a triumph well earned by laborious study. Her carriage was superb, her form a model for sculptors and her face one that the entire audience looked on and admired. Her costume was designed for her by Worth for use on just such occasion. Great clusters of diamonds ornamented the corsage and in her hair fluttered jeweled butterflies of diamonds of priceless value. When her first song had come to an end a thunder of applause shook the hall. Then came the encore and more applause and Mme. Nordica was never happier in her life."

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, NOV. 1, 1891

THE SYMPHONIES.

THIRD CONCERT.

The audience was tardy in coming in at the third concert, Saturday evening, Oct. 24; and when Conductor Nikisch gave the signal for the orchestra to begin Macdowell's Suite in A, the hall was not more than two thirds full. At the end of the first movement opportunity was given the late comers to get to their seats, when the music was resumed. We saw nothing to remind us of Ghosts in the Forest, though some of the music is quite pretty, if not mysterious and deep. Good music can be just as effective and pretty without great mystery as when shrouded in it; in fact, the less the mystery the better the music is apt to be. "Summer Idyl" might just as well have been called Fall or Winter so far as suggestiveness to any season is concerned. No exception is taken to the music, for it proved pleasantly attractive. "The Shepherdess Song" proved quite like what its name implies, attracting attention, interest and applause. The last movement, "Forest Spirits," is really an effective piece of writing, showing Mr. Macdowell to be well versed in the resources of orchestration. The author escaped being ovated by remaining in some hidden location, while the audience continued to applaud till Mr. Nikisch shrugged his shoulders in characteristic German style, as much as to say, "I don't know where he is!" Then the applause ceased. It may be remarked that Mr. Macdowell bore his honors with rare modesty.

Much interest centred in the first appearance of Mr. Alvin Schroeder, the first 'cello player. Mr. Schroeder was evidently very nervous when he commenced his Concerto, for he scratched a little; later on, however, he evinced more command over himself. His technique is considerable, but with this one hearing we are not quite prepared to stamp him as the equal of either of his predecessors. Perhaps if he had played a more musical composition than the Volkman Concerto proved, our impressions would be more favorably inclined. The Concerto is a dry composition at most, barring its orchestration, which is the most interesting part of it.

Brahms's Fourth Symphony, E minor, is undoubtedly a great work. It has been played here before, but many confess inability to understand or appreciate it, so far. Like everything else, full of science and learning, a vast amount of study and special preparation is required to analyze their beauties to clear, appreciative understanding. Brahms, like Beethoven, composed music for the future, but it will be considerably in the future before Brahms becomes as popular as Beethoven. In the main, the orchestra did their work as well as could be expected, considering the difficulties with which the Symphony abounds.

Many people left the hall between the different movements of the Symphony, so when the last one was concluded, only about half the audience were left. Don't this show that the people have not quite learned to love Brahms yet? A few do; some profess to, but can't give a reason for so doing, while a large majority do not, and are not afraid to say so. What a contrast there is between Haydn's, Mozart's, Beethoven's and Brahms's symphonies! But it is not a difficult matter to tell which of these masters comes nearest the human heart.

JAMES M. TRACY.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, will give the first of its series of six concerts at Chickering hall, New York, next Tuesday evening. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist, and will then make her first appearance this season there.

The Boston Symphony orchestra concerts are to be among the musical and social events of Brooklyn and Philadelphia this season.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, NOV. 1, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY.

The very interesting programme of the fourth symphony rehearsal and concert had for its first concert one of the many new works that were promised at the commencement of the season: Richard Strauss's symphonic poem, "Don Juan." Young Strauss's career during the past ten years appears to have been an enviably successful one. To have succeeded Von Bulow as director of the famous Meiningen Orchestra, and to have received the appointment as court conductor in Liszt's old stronghold, Weimar, is to have greater good fortune than most young musicians, even of unusual talent, enjoy nowadays. "Don Juan" is quite in the vein of modern orchestral writing. Suggested to the composer by an extremely sensuous poem of Nicolas Lenaus, the music, like its inscription, is of a strongly passionate nature. Still, tropical as it is, there is not discoverable in it any tendency towards coarseness or noise. Without introductory measures, the work starts off with a brilliant, impetuous theme given out by the full orchestra, excepting the heavy brass instruments. This, and a broad, sustained melody, in structure and treatment vividly recalling Wagner, constitute the principal subjects. The orchestration is rich and suggestive, the use of the strings being particularly effective. The grand climax near the end is splendidly worked up; and the close is gloomy enough to arouse feelings of satisfaction in the breast of the most pessimistic of beings. Altogether, "Don Juan" is musically attractive and is clearly the product of strong, well disciplined talent. How it would strike the ear after repeated hearings can only be guessed at. But important works, especially of a dramatic nature, may surely be expected in the near future from the hand that penned this brilliant orchestral piece. It was finely played. Mr. Nikisch's genius as a dramatic conductor was evident throughout, and hearty applause followed its conclusion.

Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, the celebrated Viennese pianist, was the soloist, and the work he performed was Rubinstein's D minor concerto. Mr. Gruenfeld bears the reputation of being one of the most finished and elegant pianists of Europe. His touch is famous for its wonderful clearness, delicacy and elasticity, and his command over all the varieties of tone of which the pianoforte is capable is said to be complete. In view of these well established facts, then, it would be unreasonable to ascribe that which was unsatisfactory in his performance to anything more than miscalculation as to the amount of strength he needed to expend in order to fill Music Hall. In point of tempi, energy, phrasing, free and clear execution, the concerto was splendidly played. Accent and rhythm too were expressive, and artistically maintained; and though there was a slightly military air about his musical conception, it was at least free from all traces of sentimentality. The one disappointing feature was the hardness of touch displayed by the pianist. Mr. Gruenfeld's digital strength is simply enormous. If every note was not distinctly heard in the furthermost recesses of the hall, it was through no fault of his; and it must be said that though of clearness there was no lack, both delicacy and breadth of style that the work demands were conspicuous by their absence. There can be no doubt, however, that further acquaintance with Music Hall will enable Mr. Gruenfeld to calculate his dynamic effects more accurately. He was given a cordial reception and several enthusiastic recalls.

Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony was the closing number and evidently gave that pleasure which it must always give to any cultivated audience when it is well played, for it received close attention. The work of the orchestra was notably better than it has been of late, the pianissimo playing being especially good. Mr. Nikisch's reading was sympathetic and well balanced, except that the tempo of the last movement, as it seemed to us, was too slow throughout.

T. P. CURRIER.

[39]

Brooklyn Daily Eagle

WEDNESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 28, 1891.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. NIKISCH

Under the auspices of the
PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF BROOKLYN,
THE

BOSTON
BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

85 PERFORMERS,
Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor,
Will give a series of
SIX PUBLIC REHEARSALS,
On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, November 6, December 11, January 15, February 12, March 18 and April 29,
AND
SIX CONCERTS,
On SATURDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13, March 19 and April 30.

Mme. LILLIAN NORDICA, Mrs. ARTHUR NIKISCH
Mr. IGNACE J. PADEREWSKI,
Mr. EUGEN D'ALBERT

and other distinguished artists will appear as soloists.

Season tickets, including reserved seats for the series of six rehearsals, or for the series of six concerts, $4, $5 and $7.50, according to location, now on sale at the office of the Philharmonic Society, at CHANDLER'S music store, 300 Fulton st.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

Brooklyn Daily Eagle

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 29, 1891.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. NIKISCH

Under the auspices of the
PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF BROOKLYN,

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
85 performers,
Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH,
Conductor.

NORDICA,
PADEREWSKI,
D'ALBERT
and other famous soloists.

SIX PUBLIC REHEARSALS:
AFTERNOONS of November 6, December 11, January 15, February 12, March 18 and April 29.

SIX CONCERTS:
EVENINGS of November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13, March 19 and April 30.

Season tickets, including reserved seats for the series of six rehearsals, or for the series of six concerts, $4, $5 and $7.50, according to location, now on sale at CHANDLER'S music store, 300 Fulton st.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

—A WEEKLY PAPER—

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1891.

Kneisel.—The program arranged for the first of the four Kneisel Quartet Club concerts at Sherry's new concert hall on Friday, November 6, is as follows: Quartet in C major (Koechel, 465; Peters, 17), Mozart; second movement from quartet in D major, Tschaikowsky; quartet in G major, op. 111, new (first time in America), Brahms.

JOURNAL AND COURIER, New Haven, Conn.

Date 27

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Boston Symphony orchestra of seventy performers, under the able leadership of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, will give only one concert in this city this season at the Hyperion theater next Monday evening. The occasion will also mark the first appearance of the eminent prima donna soprano, Mme. Nordica. The following brilliant program will be rendered:

Overture—"Benvenuto Cellina" .... Berloiz
Aria—"La Reine de Saba" .... Gounod
Mme. Nordica.
Suite op. 55 (new) .... Tschaikowsky
Elegie.
Valse melancholique.
Scherzo.
Tema con Variazioni.
(First time in New Haven.)
Polacca—"Mignon" .... A Thomas
Mme. Nordica.
Overture—"Phedre." .... Massenet

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The sale of tickets opens this morning for the concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, to be given at the Hyperion theater next Monday evening. This will be the only opportunity this season to hear this splendid orchestra under its accomplished conductor, Mr. Nikisch, and will doubtless bring out a great audience. Additional interest attaches to this event, as it will be the occasion of the first appearance in this city of one of the world's greatest sopranos, Mme. Nordica. A very attractive program is promised.

STANDARD-UNION, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date 10-27

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give six rehearsals at the Academy of Music on Friday afternoons, beginning on Nov. 6, and six concerts on Saturday evenings, beginning Nov. 7, under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society. The sale of seats has already commenced at Chandler's, 300 Fulton street.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCT. 31, 1891.

Mr. MacDowell's new suite was the gem of the third Symphony concert, for the Volkmann 'cello concert is dull, and the fourth Brahms symphony, even though one manages to get a little used to it from time to time, is often pretentious, labored, rambling and tends to little definite, except the ecstatic adoration of the Transcript, which is perhaps worth writing a symphony for. About all the rest of the public find it dull, as the exodus of weary hearers after each movement proved. Mr. MacDowell always shows himself to be original and independent, full of quaint fancy, strong in expression and not less in self-control, a free melodist and a rich and various harmonist. It would be pleasant to analyze this work, had we time, because it is his best; but we can only record how one peculiarly individual phase of his ideality is exhibited in the fantastic contrasts of the 'Haunted Forest," with its gloom and mystery, and the "Forest Spirits," with its rustle and rush,—both eerie, but each distinct,—and how well the "Summer Idyl" and the "Shepherdess Song" justify their names. Each movement tells its story and ends simply when this is done, and the orchestration fills in beautifully appropriate coloring to the fine outlining. Mr. Schroeder was the 'cellist, and was well received, as a newcomer should be. He played with taste, smooth tone, good phrasing and academic care; but he did not give evidence of having a drop of virtuoso blood in his veins, and is evidently a much better quartette than solo player. The orchestral work was sometimes good and sometimes bad, the blatant blowing of the trombones and trumpets vulgarizing Mr. MacDowell's last movement insufferably. The degeneration of the whole band in accuracy and above all in elegance is made only too potent by each new programme. Tonight the newly arrived pianist, Mr. Grunfield, will play Rubinstein's D-minor concerto, the symphony will be Beethoven's "Pastoral," and the programme will begin by the introduction to Boston of Richard Strauss's symphonic "Don Juan."

Boston Post

SATURDAY MORNING, OCT. 31, 1891.

The programme of this evening's Symphony concert in Music Hall will be as follows: Symphonic Poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss (first time in Boston); Rubenstein's Concerto for pianoforte in D minor; Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 ("Pastorale"). Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld will play the pianoforte part of the concerto.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31. 189

The Saturday Evening Paper.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.—The third Symphony concert was chiefly remarkable for the performance of Mr. E. A. MacDowell's orchestral suite in A minor. It was played last week for the first time in Boston, and its very first performance was at the Worcester (Mass.) Festival, September 24, by an orchestra under the direction of Mr. Carl Zerrahn. When Mr. MacDowell's symphonic poem "Lancelot and Elaine" was played here nearly two years ago, it seemed like a succession of rapidly dissolving views and the moods of the person gazing changed rapidly with the views till fatigue drove out pleasure. Not that it was not an imaginative, poetical work, which showed the sensitiveness of the composer; but it was intentionally and in the full meaning of the words "program music."

And now Mr. MacDowell comes before the public with his suite, but he is content to let the music suggest to the hearer or remind him, according to the individuality of the hearer. To be sure he calls his movements, "In a Haunted Forest," "Summer Idyl," "The Shepherdess Song" and "Forest Spirits." He does not, however, tell his ghosts by name, or identify trees or give the geological formation of the rocks or the direction of the wind. The hearer can dream as he pleases. There are people who do not enjoy music unless they fancy it is imitative. There are people—and estimable people—who do not enjoy a tune per se, and only tolerate its presence because it may be so used in thematic development that they have great difficulty in detecting it. But Mr. MacDowell in this work did not deliberately appeal to hunters after the mimetic or the seekers after intellectuality in music. He has written musical poetry, pleasing in thought, and most charmingly sung. First of all it was orchestrally thought out; it was not originally and laboriously built with the help of the piano forte and then scored experimentally for this or that combination of instruments. His harmonies presented themselves in variegated orchestral dress; his effects were suggested by a cunning knowlege of the capabilities and limitations of each instrument. The instrumentation throughout is that of a master, and not the perfunctory task of a scholar. How delightful for instance is the use of the flutes, and the cold tones of the bassoons. How skilfully are the different choirs contrasted, how well nourished are the inner parts. This suite is free from artificial morbidness, from straining after effect, from self-consciousness. Self restraint is seen in the wildest passages, and the fantasy leaps from a healthy brain. Taught in foreign schools, Mr. Mac Dowell has chosen the best characteristics of the French and German; but he is not a mere gatherer of samples, a collector of mosaics. His is a genuine poetic spirit, finely trained and happy in expression. The audience was quick to recognize the beauties of the work. Applause was most hearty, and it continued until Mr. MacDowell twice bowed his acknowledgments from the upper gallery.

Mr. Alvin Schroeder made his first appearance in Boston as a solo-player, and he chose the concerto for 'cello in A minor by Volkmann, a very tedious composition. He is not a virtuoso in the common acceptation of the word, but he is a musician of refined taste who plays his instrument carefully. His phrasing was excellent throughout, and his proper place is in the orchestra or quartet. He was loudly applauded.

The symphony was the fourth of Brahms. It was read theatrically by the director and played roughly by the orchestra. PHILIP HALE.

The Register.

NEW HAVEN CONN.

FRIDAY OCTOBER 30

Madame Nordica who is to be the soloist at the Boston Symphony concert next Monday evening in the Hyperion theater filled the first engagement of her American tour at the Worcester Festival last month. The following description of the famous singer appeared at the time in the Worcester Spy: "Madame Nordica was the star of the evening and her appearance was awaited with great impatience. No sooner had she shown her face beyond the curtain than the applause began. Every step she made was the signal for more prolonged applause, and when she reached the platform under escort of Victor Herbert a perfect ovation awaited her. It was a triumph well earned by laborious study. Her carriage was superb, her form a model for sculptors and her face one that the entire audience looked on and admired. Her costume was designed for her by Worth for use on just such occasion. Great clusters of diamonds ornamented the corsage and in her hair fluttered jeweled butterflies of diamonds of priceless value. When her first song had come to an end a thunder of applause shook the hall. Then came the encore and more applause and Mme. Nordica was never happier in her life."

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, NOV. 1, 1891

THE SYMPHONIES.

THIRD CONCERT.

The audience was tardy in coming in at the third concert, Saturday evening, Oct. 24; and when Conductor Nikisch gave the signal for the orchestra to begin Macdowell's Suite in A, the hall was not more than two thirds full. At the end of the first movement opportunity was given the late comers to get to their seats, when the music was resumed. We saw nothing to remind us of Ghosts in the Forest, though some of the music is quite pretty, if not mysterious and deep. Good music can be just as effective and pretty without great mystery as when shrouded in it; in fact, the less the mystery the better the music is apt to be. "Summer Idyl" might just as well have been called Fall or Winter so far as suggestiveness to any season is concerned. No exception is taken to the music, for it proved pleasantly attractive. "The Shepherdess Song" proved quite like what its name implies, attracting attention, interest and applause. The last movement, "Forest Spirits," is really an effective piece of writing, showing Mr. Macdowell to be well versed in the resources of orchestration. The author escaped being ovated by remaining in some hidden location, while the audience continued to applaud till Mr. Nikisch shrugged his shoulders in characteristic German style, as much as to say, "I don't know where he is!" Then the applause ceased. It may be remarked that Mr. Macdowell bore his honors with rare modesty.

Much interest centred in the first appearance of Mr. Alvin Schroeder, the first 'cello player. Mr. Schroeder was evidently very nervous when he commenced his Concerto, for he scratched a little; later on, however, he evinced more command over himself. His technique is considerable, but with this one hearing we are not quite prepared to stamp him as the equal of either of his predecessors. Perhaps if he had played a more musical composition than the Volkman Concerto proved, our impressions would be more favorably inclined. The Concerto is a dry composition at most, barring its orchestration, which is the most interesting part of it.

Brahms's Fourth Symphony, E minor, is undoubtedly a great work. It has been played here before, but many confess inability to understand or appreciate it, so far. Like everything else, full of science and learning, a vast amount of study and special preparation is required to analyze their beauties to clear, appreciative understanding. Brahms, like Beethoven, composed music for the future, but it will be considerably in the future before Brahms becomes as popular as Beethoven. In the main, the orchestra did their work as well as could be expected, considering the difficulties with which the Symphony abounds.

Many people left the hall between the different movements of the Symphony, so when the last one was concluded, only about half the audience were left. Don't this show that the people have not quite learned to love Brahms yet? A few do; some profess to, but can't give a reason for so doing, while a large majority do not, and are not afraid to say so. What a contrast there is between Haydn's, Mozart's, Beethoven's and Brahms's symphonies! But it is not a difficult matter to tell which of these masters comes nearest the human heart.

JAMES M. TRACY.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, will give the first of its series of six concerts at Chickering hall, New York, next Tuesday evening. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist, and will then make her first appearance this season there.

The Boston Symphony orchestra concerts are to be among the musical and social events of Brooklyn and Philadelphia this season.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, NOV. 1, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY.

The very interesting programme of the fourth symphony rehearsal and concert had for its first concert one of the many new works that were promised at the commencement of the season: Richard Strauss's symphonic poem, "Don Juan." Young Strauss's career during the past ten years appears to have been an enviably successful one. To have succeeded Von Bulow as director of the famous Meiningen Orchestra, and to have received the appointment as court conductor in Liszt's old stronghold, Weimar, is to have greater good fortune than most young musicians, even of unusual talent, enjoy nowadays. "Don Juan" is quite in the vein of modern orchestral writing. Suggested to the composer by an extremely sensuous poem of Nicolas Lenaus, the music, like its inscription, is of a strongly passionate nature. Still, tropical as it is, there is not discoverable in it any tendency towards coarseness or noise. Without introductory measures, the work starts off with a brilliant, impetuous theme given out by the full orchestra, excepting the heavy brass instruments. This, and a broad, sustained melody, in structure and treatment vividly recalling Wagner, constitute the principal subjects. The orchestration is rich and suggestive, the use of the strings being particularly effective. The grand climax near the end is splendidly worked up; and the close is gloomy enough to arouse feelings of satisfaction in the breast of the most pessimistic of beings. Altogether, "Don Juan" is musically attractive and is clearly the product of strong, well disciplined talent. How it would strike the ear after repeated hearings can only be guessed at. But important works, especially of a dramatic nature, may surely be expected in the near future from the hand that penned this brilliant orchestral piece. It was finely played. Mr. Nikisch's genius as a dramatic conductor was evident throughout, and hearty applause followed its conclusion.

Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, the celebrated Viennese pianist, was the soloist, and the work he performed was Rubinstein's D minor concerto. Mr. Gruenfeld bears the reputation of being one of the most finished and elegant pianists of Europe. His touch is famous for its wonderful clearness, delicacy and elasticity, and his command over all the varieties of tone of which the pianoforte is capable is said to be complete. In view of these well established facts, then, it would be unreasonable to ascribe that which was unsatisfactory in his performance to anything more than miscalculation as to the amount of strength he needed to expend in order to fill Music Hall. In point of tempi, energy, phrasing, free and clear execution, the concerto was splendidly played. Accent and rhythm too were expressive, and artistically maintained; and though there was a slightly military air about his musical conception, it was at least free from all traces of sentimentality. The one disappointing feature was the hardness of touch displayed by the pianist. Mr. Gruenfeld's digital strength is simply enormous. If every note was not distinctly heard in the furthermost recesses of the hall, it was through no fault of his; and it must be said that though of clearness there was no lack, both delicacy and that Rubinstein-like warmth and breadth of style that the work demands were conspicuous by their absence. There can be no doubt, however, that further acquaintance with Music Hall will enable Mr. Gruenfeld to calculate his dynamic effects more accurately. He was given a cordial reception and several enthusiastic recalls.

Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony was the closing number and evidently gave that pleasure which it must always give to any cultivated audience when it is well played, for it received close attention. The work of the orchestra was notably better than it has been of late, the pianissimo playing being especially good. Mr. Nikisch's reading was sympathetic and well balanced, except that the tempo of the last movement, as it seemed to us, was too slow throughout.

T. P. CURRIER.

[39]

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Season of 1891–92.

NOVEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Monday, Nov. 2, Noon, New York and New England Depot.

Arrive New Haven Monday, 4 P.M.

NEW HAVEN HOTEL.

Concert at Hyperion Theatre, 8.00 P.M.

Leave New Haven directly after Concert. Sleeping Cars at Depot.

Arrive in New York, Tuesday, Nov. 3, at 7 A.M.

GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL, 673 Broadway.

Rehearsal at Chickering Hall, 12 o'clock noon.

Concert at Chickering Hall, 8.00 P. M.

Leave New York Wednesday, Nov. 4 at 10 A. M. via Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Ferry at Liberty Street.

Arrive Philadelphia 1.45 P.M.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL.

Concert at Academy of Music, 8 P.M.

Leave Philadelphia Thursday, Nov. 5, 11.30 A.M., Baltimore and Ohio Depot, 24th and Chestnut Streets.

Arrive Baltimore 2.10 P.M.

CARROLTON HOUSE.

Concert at Academy Concert Hall, 8.00 P.M.

Leave Baltimore directly after concert. Baltimore & Ohio Depot.

Arrive New York Friday, Nov. 6, at 7 A.M.

GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL, 673 Broadway.

Public Rehearsal at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, at 3 P.M.

Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Saturday, Nov. 7, at 8 P.M.

Leave Brooklyn directly after the concert. Long Island Depot, corner Flatbush and Atlantic Avenues. Take Flatbush Avenue Horse-cars at Fulton Street,

Arrive Boston Sunday, Nov. 8, at 8 A.M. New York and New England Depot.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

Members of the Orchestra not playing in New Haven will leave for New York Monday, Nov. 2, via Fall River line. Train leaves Park Square Depot at 6.00 P M;

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

SATURDAY, October 31, 1891.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SEASON OF 1891–92.

* * * * * * Hotel List. * * * * * *

65

A. Nikisch.

F. R. Comee.
C. M. Loeffler,

Fr. Kneisel.

T. Adamowski.
J. Adamowski.

A. Schroeder.

C. Mole.

L. Svecenski.
E. Grünberg.

O. Roth.
E. Rose.

W.W. Swornsbourne.
F. E. Schuchmann.

D. Kuntz.
H. Eichheim.

J. Akeroyd,
2 H. A. Greene.

M. Zach.
O. Novacek.

G. Campanari.
P. Fiumara.

H. D. Simpson.
E. B. Marble.

E. Fiedler.
A. Moldauer.

E. Loeffler.

J. Edw. Eichler.
W. Krafft.

E. N. Lafricain.
W. A. Field.

J. Sauerquell.
E. Golde.

H. Schuecker.
J. Hoffmann.

F. Mahn.
H. Berger.

G. Boehm.
J. Miersch.

G. Goldschmidt.
G. Strube.

J. Knecht.
G. Sauer.

4 A. Goldstein.
S. Goldstein.

P. Metzger.
A. Hackebarth.

A. Kolster.
L. Post.

M. Kluge.
J. Michael.

D. Hannemann
C. deL. Delisle.

H. Heindl.
W. Rietzel.

E. M. Heindl.
Jul. E. Eichler,

C. Schumann.

3 G. Bareither.
L. Jennewein.

G. Gerhardt.
H. Hoyer.

L. Demuth.
C. Reibl.

Paul Fox.
C. Dietsch.

F. Muller.
O .Taubert.

H. J. Butler.
A. Reinhart.

A. Gutter.
F. Zahn.

Fr. Hein.
H. Lorbeer.

A. Rigg.
Jos. Mann.

E. Stolz.
J. Abloescher.

H. Burkhardt.

A. Heindl.

McKenzie.
Patterson.

L. Schultz [illegible] C. Barth

Boston Journal.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The announcement that Mr. Alfred Grunfeld, the celebrated pianist, was to act as soloist at Saturday night's symphony, occasioned considerable interest and much expectation, so that an artist of less ability could only have disappointed those who at once recognized the talented musician, whom Von Bulow considers deserving "a foremost place among those virtuosos whom it is really worth while considering in earnest." Mr. Grunfeld's fine physique and strong face commanded instant attention, and when his fingers touched the keyboard the audience felt a magnetic thrill as though some magic power controlled them. His clear, incisive tones were given with a decision in the first movement in the concerto that emphasized the impression already made, and the moderato throughout was performed in a most masterly manner.

Perhaps it would be interesting to know that Mr. Grunfeld began to study when he was only five years of age, and at twelve gave his first concert, when he earned for himself the name of "wonder child." His career since then has won for him an enviable reputation and the praise of the highest musical authorities. In strong contrast to the first theme came the second movement, which was played with such sweetness and tenderness, such delicacy of touch, that Rubinstein himself could scarcely have failed to appreciate it.

Such prominence is rarely given to the pianoforte as was asserted in the last allegro assai. The fire, force and magnetism of a strong musical nature marked the expression of the finale, and brought to a close one of the most thoroughly satisfactory performances listened to for a long time, as the audience promptly attested by the ovation that followed.

The orchestral contributions consisted of Strauss's symphonic poem, "Don Juan," and the ever beautiful Pastoral Symphony No. 6, by Beethoven. At times, in the former, the instruments seemed to throb with emotion, which stirred the very depths of one's nature, and again they would glide away in idyllic phrases, only to return once more to a most brilliant and inspiring interpretation of the noble poem.

Who can resist the wonderful charm of Nature's musical interpreter? Beethoven's melodic pictures seemed as clear and real to the imaginative mind as the most famous painting of the Louvre to the admiring eye.

Every emotion is played upon, and when the storm breaks upon one's senses it is difficult to tell which is truly the most divine, the real or this powerful expression of the same. So many good things coming together on the same programme almost bewilder one with delight, and perhaps it would not be unbecoming to award Director Nikisch a word of praise for this most excellent programme.

The coming concert announces Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni, soloist, in Beethoven's concerto for pianoforte, No. 4 in G major, with orchestral selections from Haydn and Schumann.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1891.

THE first Symphony concert came off on Friday, October 9, but was not remarkably interesting. Lillian Norton was in fine voice for Elizabeth's song from Tannhauser, and Beethoven's Perfido. The Symphony was Schumann's last, with its grand use of trombones in the religious movement. The overture was Beethoven's Dedication, written for the Josephstadt Theatre at Vienna. The one other selection was the Good Friday music, from Parsifal. The audience was as big as usual, with people sitting on the platform steps. Nikisch was cordially welcomed. Several new men have come into the ranks from Germany; but this performance was not up to the full symphony mark.

THE programme for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season, Tuesday, Nov. 3, at Chickering Hall, is as follows: Overture "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz; aria, "Ah Perfido," Beethoven; Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte for strings, Bach; aria, "Tannhäuser," Wagner; Symphony in E flat, (Rhenish), Schumann. Mme. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 1, 1891.

The Symphony Concert, Soloist Alfred Grunfeld.

The Pianist Heartily Welcomed and Given a Grand Ovation—Manager Mapleson Announces a Great Concert—Notable Events Near at Hand—The Austrian Boy's Coming—Notes.

The success attending the first appearance in this city at last evening's symphony concert of Mr. Alfred Grunfeld, the pianist, was most emphatic, and this talented artist may confidently count upon a reliable following here in Boston during the season.

Mr. Grunfeld chose the concerto in D minor by Rubinstein for his contribution to the programme, and the selection was an excellent one, its strongly contrasted movements serving admirably to display the pianist's varied gifts. His playing of the opening movement instantly arrested and held the attention of the audience, the clean clear execution, the pure limped tone, and the admirable taste shown in this portion of the work, gaining an instant recognition of the player's masterly skill and command over his instrument.

A remarkably fine interpretation of the moderato assai followed, in which the lovely theme was sung upon the piano with faultless grace and rare expression, the pianissimo passages being given like the whisper of falling leaves, and with a dainty touch that surprised and delighted all hearers. The bold, free style of the final allegro was caught with equal success, and the concerto brought to a brilliant ending that called out a great ovation for the pianist and gave him a well merited recognition of his grand abilities.

Mr. Nikisch introduced his programme for the concert with the first performance here of the symphonic poem "Don Juan," by Richard Strauss, and ended it with Beethoven's "Pastorale" symphony.

The "Don Juan" poem affords ample scope for the imaginative composer in reproducing the amorous scenes depicted by Nicolaus Lenaus, its author, and the richly scored tone pictures of Strauss afford a fascinating study. The poem was splendidly played, and a very successful interpretation of the familiar "Pastorale" symphony ended the concert.

The next concert comes on the evening of Nov. 14, when Mr. Ferrucio B. Busoni, pianist, will be the soloist, and the programme will be Haydn's symphony No. 1 in E flat, Beethoven's concerto No. 4 in G major, and Schumann's overture, scherzo and finale.

The first concert of the Adamowski quartet last Monday evening, in Union Hall, was the opening one in the series of chamber concerts of which we are promised so many during the coming season. A large and fashionable, as well as musical, audience was present, among the number being noticed Mr. and Mrs. Nikisch, Mr. Kneisel, Miss Elise Fay, Mr. Loeffler, Mrs. Apthorp, Mr. Clayton Johns, Dr. Roland Whitredge, Mrs. Spooner, Mrs. Phoebe Jenks, Mr. Barton Jenks, Mrs. Arthur Foote, Miss Mabel Boardman, Miss Blake.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, NOV. 1.

MUSICAL.

The Symphony Concert.

The fourth concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Music Hall, last evening, was listened to by a large audience. The performances opened with a symphonic poem, "Don Juan," by Richard Strauss. What it meant as music, pure and simple, we failed to discover. Judging by the poem by Lenau, which is said to have suggested it, the intention of the composer was to depict the emotions of the Spanish libertine as he looks back, "flying from surfeit and from rapture's cloy." According to the composer, Don Juan's feelings under these circumstances were exceedingly uncomfortable. They were not exactly coherent, and such reminiscences must have carried their own punishment with them. The agony they caused him were evidently depicted in the fearful caterwauling of the wind instruments. Now and then he has a soothing moment in the shape of a sensuous bit of melody, but it does not last long and the roaring and the groaning and the moral colic seize on him again and render him utterly miserable. The music is ultra modern, full of sound and fury, and as music means nothing. In point of style it is a mingling of Liszt, Wagner and Saint Saëns. Everything is sacrificed to tone color, noise and sensationalism in instrumentation predominating. The whole thing has been done, and better done, by Wagner in the music of the Venusberg in "Tannhauser," of which this is too often a glaring plagiarism. When it was all over, we felt that if Don Juan experienced anything like the fearful agonies that the music indicated, the devil would have been shortsighted to lug him away at last to what must necessarily have been a lighter torture. The work was vigorously, even brilliantly played, but with much roughness in the strings and much of false intonation in the wind. Then came Rubinstein's Concerto in D minor, for piano, the solo part played by Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld. The artist has a technique of great fluency, precision and elegance; he plays with ease and elasticity, and with perfect clearness; but he has one or two tricks that seem to be mannerisms, and they are repeated over and over again, until at last they give a tiresome monotony to his playing. One of these was especially prominent in the andante, and took the form of a sudden and unmeaningly distinct or detached thump, that was invariably followed by an extreme pianissimo, the result being inartistic, and producing an effect of mechanical coldness. The finale was given with great dash and brilliancy, and had many fine moments of technical display, but the performance of the concerto as a whole was characterized more by finger-work than by any deeper qualities. Judging by his performance of last night, we should say that Mr. Gruenfield would be heard to much better advantage in a smaller hall and in lighter music. Whether this be so or not it is certain that despite the energy and brilliancy that marked his playing of the concerto, the performance as a whole was tricky and cold. He was applauded with immense enthusiasm and was twice recalled. The concert ended with Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony; which was read somewhat stiffly and unsympathetically in the opening movement, and with an almost sickly sugariness in the andante. The roughness that has of late characterized the playing of the strings was unpleasantly prominent, and the untunefulness of the wind instruments, notably of the first clarinet in its solos in the andante, was distressing. The programme for the next concert is: Symphony in E flat, Haydn (No. 1, B. & H.); Concerto for piano in G, Beethoven, and Overture, Scherzo and Finale, Schumann. The soloist is to be Mr. F. B. Busoni.

—— The third Symphony concert brought together many familiar faces. Beautiful Mrs. C. E. Inches and pretty Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, in "smart" brown costume, were conspicuous on the floor, as were the tall and splendid looking daughters of Mr. J. Lewis Stackpole. The right balcony was, as usual, the corner to which all eyes were turned, although Mr. MacDowell was in the left balcony. Miss Marie Greland, looking exceedingly handsome, was in Mrs. Gardner's seat, and chatted across the aisle with Mr. Apthorp, whose wife was not present. Mrs. Arthur Foote, looking wonderfully young and piquant, appeared for the first time in her seat; and Mrs Henry Whitman, in a buff gown and thickly veiled, was another new comer.

—— The story of the Boston Symphony concert poodle has caused ripples of laughter all over the country.

—— Those in search of wedding remembrances will find the new silver toast forks pretty and acceptable gifts.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Season of 1891–92.

NOVEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Monday, Nov. 2, Noon, New York and New England Depot.

Arrive New Haven Monday, 4 P.M.

NEW HAVEN HOTEL.

Concert at Hyperion Theatre, 8.00 P.M.

Leave New Haven directly after Concert. Sleeping Cars at Depot.

Arrive in New York, Tuesday, Nov. 3, at 7 A.M.

GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL, 673 Broadway.

Rehearsal at Chickering Hall, 12 o'clock noon.

Concert at Chickering Hall, 8.00 P. M.

Leave New York Wednesday, Nov. 4 at 10 A. M. via Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Ferry at Liberty Street.

Arrive Philadelphia 1.45 P.M.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL.

Concert at Academy of Music, 8 P.M.

Leave Philadelphia Thursday, Nov. 5, 11.30 A.M., Baltimore and Ohio Depot, 24th and Chestnut Streets.

Arrive Baltimore 2.10 P.M.

CARROLTON HOUSE.

Concert at Academy Concert Hall, 8.00 P.M.

Leave Baltimore directly after concert. Baltimore & Ohio Depot.

Arrive New York Friday, Nov. 6, at 7 A.M.

GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL. 673 Broadway.

Public Rehearsal at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, at 3 P.M.

Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Saturday, Nov. 7, at 8 P.M.

Leave Brooklyn directly after the concert. Long Island Depot, corner Flatbush and Atlantic Avenues. Take Flatbush Avenue Horse-cars at Fulton Street.

Arrive Boston Sunday, Nov. 8, at 8 A.M. New York and New England Depot.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

Members of the Orchestra not playing in New Haven will leave for New York Monday, Nov. 2, via Fall River line. Train leaves Park Square Depot at 6.00 P.M.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

SATURDAY, October 31, 1891.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SEASON OF 1891–92.

Hotel List.

A. Nikisch.

F. R. Comee.
✓ C. M. Loeffler.

✓ Fr. Kneisel.

✓ T. Adamowski.
✓ J. Adamowski.

A. Schroeder.

C. Mole.

L. Svecenski.
E. Grünberg.

O. Roth.
E. Rose.

W.W. Swornsbourne.
F. E. Schuchmann.

D. Kuntz.
H. Eichheim.

J. Akeroyd.
2 H. A. Greene.

M. Zach.
O. Novacek.

G. Campanari.
P. Fiumara.

H. D. Simpson.
E. B. Marble.

E. Fiedler.
A. Moldauer.

E. Loeffler.

L. Schultz

J. Edw. Eichler.
W. Krafft.

E. N. Lafricain.
W. A. Field.

J. Sauerquell.
E. Golde.

H. Schuecker.
J. Hoffmann.

F. Mahn.
H. Berger.

G. Boehm.
J. Miersch.

G. Goldschmidt.
G. Strube.

J. Knecht.
G. Sauer.

1 A. Goldstein.
S. Goldstein.

P. Metzger.
A. Hackebarth.

A. Kolster.
L. Post.

M. Kluge.
J. Michael.

D. Hannemann
C. deL. Delisle.

H. Heindl.
W. Rietzel.

E. M. Heindl.
Jul. E. Eichler,

C. Schumann.

G. Bareither.
L. Jennewein.

G. Gerhardt.
H. Hoyer.

L. Demuth.
C. Reibl.

Paul Fox.
C. Dietsch.

F. Muller.
O. Taubert.

H. J. Butler.
A. Reinhart.

A. Gutter.
F. Zahn.

Fr. Hein.
H. Lorbeer.

A. Rigg.
Jos. Mann.

E. Stolz.
J. Abloescher.

H. Burkhardt.

A. Heindl.

McKenzie.
Patterson.

C. Barth

Boston Journal.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The announcement that Mr. Alfred Grunfeld, the celebrated pianist, was to act as soloist at Saturday night's symphony, occasioned considerable interest and much expectation, so that an artist of less ability could only have disappointed those who at once recognized the talented musician, whom Von Bulow considers deserving "a foremost place among those virtuosos whom it is really worth while considering in earnest." Mr. Grunfeld's fine physique and strong face commanded instant attention, and when his fingers touched the keyboard the audience felt a magnetic thrill as though some magic power controlled them. His clear, incisive tones were given with a decision in the first movement in the concerto that emphasized the impression already made, and the moderato throughout was performed in a most masterly manner.

Perhaps it would be interesting to know that Mr. Grunfeld began to study when he was only five years of age, and at twelve gave his first concert, when he earned for himself the name of "wonder child." His career since then has won for him an enviable reputation and the praise of the highest musical authorities. In strong contrast to the first theme came the second movement, which was played with such sweetness and tenderness, such delicacy of touch, that Rubinstein himself could scarcely have failed to appreciate it.

Such prominence is rarely given to the pianoforte as was asserted in the last allegro assai. The fire, force and magnetism of a strong musical nature marked the expression of the finale, and brought to a close one of the most thoroughly satisfactory performances listened to for a long time, as the audience promptly attested by the ovation that followed.

The orchestral contributions consisted of Strauss's symphonic poem, "Don Juan," and the ever beautiful Pastoral Symphony No. 6, by Beethoven. At times, in the former, the instruments seemed to throb with emotion, which stirred the very depths of one's nature, and again they would glide away in idyllic phrases, only to return once more to a most brilliant and inspiring interpretation of the noble poem.

Who can resist the wonderful charm of Nature's musical interpreter? Beethoven's melodic pictures seemed as clear and real to the imaginative mind as the most famous painting of the Louvre to the admiring eye.

Every emotion is played upon, and when the storm breaks upon one's senses it is difficult to tell which is truly the most divine, the real or this powerful expression of the same. So many good things coming together on the same programme almost bewilder one with delight, and perhaps it would not be unbecoming to award Director Nikisch a word of praise for this most excellent programme.

The coming concert announces Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni, soloist, in Beethoven's concerto for pianoforte, No. 4 in G major, with orchestral selections from Haydn and Schumann.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1891.

THE first Symphony concert came off on Friday, October 9, but was not remarkably interesting. Lillian Norton was in fine voice for Elizabeth's song from Tannhauser, and Beethoven's Perfido. The Symphony was Schumann's last, with its grand use of trombones in the religious movement. The overture was Beethoven's Dedication, written for the Josephstadt Theatre at Vienna. The one other selection was the Good Friday music, from Parsifal. The audience was as big as usual, with people sitting on the platform steps. Nikisch was cordially welcomed. Several new men have come into the ranks from Germany; but this performance was not up to the full symphony mark.

THE programme for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season, Tuesday, Nov. 3, at Chickering Hall, is as follows: Overture "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz; aria, "Ah Perfido," Beethoven; Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte for strings, Bach; aria, "Tannhäuser," Wagner; Symphony in E flat, (Rhenish), Schumann. Mme. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 1, 1891.

The Symphony Concert, Soloist Alfred Grunfeld.

The Pianist Heartily Welcomed and Given a Grand Ovation—Manager Mapleson Announces a Great Concert—Notable Events Near at Hand—The Austrian Boy's Coming—Notes.

The success attending the first appearance in this city at last evening's symphony concert of Mr. Alfred Grunfeld, the pianist, was most emphatic, and this talented artist may confidently count upon a reliable following here in Boston during the season.

Mr. Grunfeld chose the concerto in D minor by Rubinstein for his contribution to the programme, and the selection was an excellent one, its strongly contrasted movements serving admirably to display the pianist's varied gifts. His playing of the opening movement instantly arrested and held the attention of the audience, the clean clear execution, the pure limped tone, and the admirable taste shown in this portion of the work, gaining an instant recognition of the player's masterly skill and command over his instrument.

A remarkably fine interpretation of the moderato assai followed, in which the lovely theme was sung upon the piano with faultless grace and rare expression, the pianissimo passages being given like the whisper of falling leaves, and with a dainty touch that surprised and delighted all hearers. The bold, free style of the final allegro was caught with equal success, and the concerto brought to a brilliant ending that called out a great ovation for the pianist and gave him a well merited recognition of his grand abilities.

Mr. Nikisch introduced his programme for the concert with the first performance here of the symphonic poem "Don Juan," by Richard Strauss, and ended it with Beethoven's "Pastorale" symphony.

The "Don Juan" poem affords ample scope for the imaginative composer in reproducing the amorous scenes depicted by Nicolaus Lenaus, its author, and the richly scored tone pictures of Strauss afford a fascinating study. The poem was splendidly played, and a very successful interpretation of the familiar "Pastorale" symphony ended the concert.

The next concert comes on the evening of Nov. 14, when Mr. Ferrucio B. Busoni, pianist, will be the soloist, and the programme will be Haydn's symphony No. 1 in E flat, Beethoven's concerto No. 4 in G major, and Schumann's overture, scherzo and finale.

The first concert of the Adamowski quartet last Monday evening, in Union Hall, was the opening one in the series of chamber concerts of which we are promised so many during the coming season. A large and fashionable, as well as musical, audience was present, among the number being noticed Mr. and Mrs. Nikisch, Mr. Kneisel, Miss Elise Fay, Mr. Loeffler, Mrs. Apthorp, Mr. Clayton Johns, Dr. Roland Waitredge, Mrs. Spooner, Mrs. Phoebe Jenks, Mr. Barton Jenks, Mrs. Arthur Foote, Miss Mabel Boardman, Miss Blake.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, NOV. 1.

MUSICAL.

The Symphony Concert.

The fourth concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Music Hall, last evening, was listened to by a large audience. The performances opened with a symphonic poem, "Don Juan," by Richard Strauss. What it meant as music, pure and simple, we failed to discover. Judging by the poem by Lenau, which is said to have suggested it, the intention of the composer was to depict the emotions of the Spanish libertine as he looks back, "flying from surfeit and from rapture's cloy." According to the composer, Don Juan's feelings under these circumstances were exceedingly uncomfortable. They were not exactly coherent, and such reminiscences must have carried their own punishment with them. The agony they caused him were evidently depicted in the fearful caterwauling of the wind instruments. Now and then he has a soothing moment in the shape of a sensuous bit of melody, but it does not last long and the roaring and the groaning and the moral colic seize on him again and render him utterly miserable. The music is ultra modern, full of sound and fury, and as music means nothing. In point of style it is a mingling of Lizst, Wagner and Saint Saëns. Everything is sacrificed to tone color, noise and sensationalism in instrumentation predominating. The whole thing has been done, and better done, by Wagner in the music of the Venusberg in "Tannhauser," of which this is too often a glaring plagiarism. When it was all over, we felt that if Don Juan experienced anything like the fearful agonies that the music indicated, the devil would have been shortsighted to lug him away at last to what must necessarily have been a lighter torture. The work was vigorously, even brilliantly played, but with much roughness in the strings and much of false intonation in the wind. Then came Rubinstein's Concerto in D-minor, for piano, the solo part played by Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld. The artist has a technique of great fluency, precision and elegance; he plays with ease and elasticity, and with perfect clearness; but he has one or two tricks that seem to be mannerisms, and they are repeated over and over again, until at last they give a tiresome monotony to his playing. One of these was especially prominent in the andante, and took the form of a sudden and unmeaningly distinct or detached thump, that was invariably followed by an extreme pianissimo, the result being inartistic, and producing an effect of mechanical coldness. The finale was given with great dash and brilliancy, and had many fine moments of technical display, but the performance of the concerto as a whole was characterized more by finger-work than by any deeper qualities. Judging by his performance of last night, we should say that Mr. Gruenfield would be heard to much better advantage in a smaller hall and in lighter music. Whether this be so or not it is certain that despite the energy and brilliancy that marked his playing of the concerto, the performance as a whole was tricky and cold. He was applauded with immense enthusiasm and was twice recalled. The concert ended with Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony; which was read somewhat stiffly and unsympathetically in the opening movement, and with an almost sickly sugariness in the andante. The roughness that has of late characterized the playing of the strings was unpleasantly prominent, and the untunefulness of the wind instruments, notably of the first clarinet in its solos in the andante, was distressing. The programme for the next concert is: Symphony in E flat, Haydn (No. 1, B. & H.); Concerto for piano in G, Beethoven, and Overture, Scherzo and Finale, Schumann. The soloist is to be Mr. F. B. Busoni.

—— The third Symphony concert brought together many familiar faces. Beautiful Mrs. C. E. Inches and pretty Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, in "smart" brown costume, were conspicuous on the floor, as were the tall and splendid looking daughters of Mr. J. Lewis Stackpole. The right balcony was, as usual, the corner to which all eyes were turned, although Mr. MacDowell was in the left balcony. Miss Marie Greland, looking exceedingly handsome, was in Mrs. Gardner's seat, and chatted across the aisle with Mr. Apthorp, whose wife was not present. Mrs. Arthur Foote, looking wonderfully young and piquant, appeared for the first time in her seat; and Mrs Henry Whitman, in a buff gown and thickly veiled, was another new comer.

—— The story of the Boston Symphony concert poodle has caused ripples of laughter all over the country.

—— Those in search of wedding remembrances will find the new silver toast forks pretty and acceptable gifts.

DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
DAY MORNING, NOV. 2, 1891.

The Symphony Concert.

It was an interesting programme, although it swept from bombast to simplicity, from musical pepper to musical peasantry. The atmosphere seemed clearest when Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony was reached, although this is by no means the greatest of the nine symphonies of the master. The concert of Saturday began with "Don Juan," a symphonic poem, by that young musical radical, Richard Strauss. It is an easy matter to attack a work of this kind, for it is overswollen and full of roarings, whether of ecstasy or pain it would be hard to determine. It is in "King Cambyses' vein" from the very start, for the composer plunges in, with all possible brasses, as much kettledrum as the muscularity of the percussive artist can furnish, an active triangle, piccolo, glockenspiel and cymbals over and above the ordinary orchestra.

But if one pardons the extravagant ardor of youth, and concedes a little to the "Sturm und Drang" period, there will be found in the work a sufficiency of musical thought and a grand working-up of climaxes. The work is crowded with ideas, many of which jostle each other, and none of which seem to come to a legitimate conclusion, but better wealth than poverty in this direction, and the extreme richness of thought as well as of orchestration gives plenty of promise, even while little of actual fulfilment has yet been attained. The work seems better than the Italian symphony in which Boston first made the acquaintance of the composer, a few years ago, for in that work the sumptuous treatment of a simple Neapolitan folk song was as out of place as the clothing of a Vesuvian guide in silk and velvet would have been.

There are no such incongruities in this composition, but the number of climaxes is rather bewildering, and the following of tender oboe themes (the oboe played very well too) by gruesome dissonances, is rather a meaningless contrast. The modern orchestral tricks are too often resorted to; the muted tones of the horn, the ugliest effects one can evoke from the orchestra, are used with lavish hand, and the theatrical vein was added to by an exaggeration of the rests and the dynamic marks. It was something to go through so difficult a work without an upset, but there was more of enthusiasm than of precision in the performance, and while the two or three catastrophes, and the half dozen explosions with which the work is garnished, were dramatically done, the wind instruments were neither united in attack nor well intoned, and the horn in these days is a very persistent sinner, often overblowing, and trying to make itself into a trombone, like the toad that wanted to be an ox. But we ought to be thankful at least that the work was placed on the programme, for it is in the hearing of all the more recent orchestral works (even if they are not all commendable) that we may expect to evoke a spirit of musical comparison and consequent growth.

After the musical tempest came Alfred Gruenfeld, but with no intention of pouring oil on the troubled waters, for he is a species of Jupiter Tonans and swings his thunderbolts and his arms as freely as Rubinstein himself. If he had lived in the days when Domenico Scarlatti wrote everlasting staccato effects for the clavicembalo (which could not produce a legato), I think that he would have been the greatest artist of the world; but in the 19th century, and particularly at this end of it, there are passages that require other modes of execution. Even the pianissimo passages were at times rapped out with a clear precision and power that gave an impression of a coldly brilliant technique. Of course there were no blurs to condone, but blurring would have been less irritating than the never-ending demi-staccato.

Sometimes, as if suddenly conscious of this defect, the artist would drop into an almost inaudible softness, but this was only semi-occasionally, and there was little shading between. Once this fault is censured, the reviewer can unreservedly praise. Mr. Gruenfeld's wrist action is something remarkable, and his octave and heavy chord work is a model to every pianist. When a work suits his style he is very great in it, and it was this which caused the slow movement of the Rubinstein concerto in D minor to seem very prosaic, while the first and last movements were absolute triumphs of artistic brilliancy. No one could have caught up the hearty animal spirits of the finale (reminding of the finale of Beethoven's eighth symphony, both in theme and in style) more brightly and effectively, and the enthusiastic recalls which ensued were certainly deserved.

Now came that Beethoven work which is more written about, more orated upon, more frequently poetized than any other, simply because it gives a tangible ground for litterateur, orator and poet to hang definite remarks upon. This definiteness, however, makes the sixth weaker than its sister symphonies which speak the vaguer, but more soulful, language of pure music. But its simplicity shows forth the latent defects of an orchestra with startling clearness. If a bill of specifications of the present faults of our orchestra is desired, here it is:—

In the coda of the first movement, where the chief theme appears in full harmonies' the ensemble was very poor and the effect was muddy.

In the Scene by the Brook the clarinet was poor, and the rest of the woodwind, which has such important work to do, was uncertain in pitch.

In the scherzo the unison passages, which begin the movement, were unsteady, and even the players in the village band were weak and too irregular in their simple measures.

In the storm there was no careful shading in the gradual diminuendo effects with which the tempest passes away.

In the finale the horn was unclear, and it made slips in the preceding movements as well.

Per contra, the reading of the storm was commendably energetic, and certain parts of the scherzo, as for example, the entrance of the mountaineers, were powerful and effective.

But the performance as a whole still leaves a balance on the wrong side of the artistic ledger. Gladly do I acknowledge a greater virility, a wilder abandon, than ever before, but these qualities are not always called into requisition. In a classical work, often a perfect balance, a true intonation, a united attack, a refined grading of dynamic effects, outweigh a bold and fiery, an excited and enthusiastic, rendering. [illegible] we all prized the first named qualities, [illegible] cannot afford them at the expense [illegible]

[illegible] Post
MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 2, 1891.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The programme of the fourth Symphony Concert was as follows:

Symphonic Poem, "Don Juan." .... R. Strauss.
Concerto for pianoforte in D minor. .... Rubinstein.
Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral" .... Beethoven.

Nikolaus Lenau took our old friend Don Juan de Tenorio and made him over into a cross between Faust and the Preacher of Jerusalem, and Richard Strauss has chosen Lenau's poem for the text of a musical sermon. Young Strauss started in life as a disciple of Johannes Brahms and a believer in absolute music; but he journeyed from Vienna, and as he came near Weimar he saw suddenly a great light. Ever since he has embraced the belief of Liszt, and he now uses music as the vehicle of expressing everything but music; for he has little invention, and his musical thoughts are of little worth. This symphonic poem is supposed to portray in music the recollections and regrets of a jaded voluptuary. Now, granting that music is capable of doing this, what do we find in this composition? There are recollections, not of Don Juan, but of Liszt and of Wagner. There are also regrets, but the regrets come from the hearers. There is plenty of fuss and fuming; there are passages of brilliant instrumentation, some of them original, some of them borrowed; there is a dramatic effect near the close; but is there any genuine passion or any real terror from the beginning to the end? The hero of Strauss is not the rake-helly man of the legend, the sneering scoundrel of Molière or the impassive figure in Baudelaire's poem who assumes such gigantic proportions after he has given Charon the demanded coin. Nor does the music echo even faintly the passion of Lenau. Besides, Don Juan was more direct in his methods. His wooing was as sudden and as violent as his descent to the lower regions. According to Strauss, he was verbose, fond of turning corners, something of a metaphysician, and a good deal of a bore. When he made love he beat upon a triangle, and when he was dyspeptic he confided his woes to instruments that moaned in sympathy.

There was once a German who wrote an Italian opera for Italian singers. When "Don Juan" is mentioned to musician or theatregoer, he rembers a dashing Spaniard killing an old man and chucking Zerlina under the chin, running away from his wife and loving Donna Anna, mocking the Statue, but welcoming the awful steps outside the banquet hall, although he then anticipates eternal flames. And humming immortal strains, he thinks of Mozart, nor does he breathe the name of Richard Strauss. If it be said that the work of the one is an opera and that of the other a symphonic poem, and therefore they are not to be named together, there remains the overture to "Don Giovanni," in which the life of a libertine with its dash and sparkle and the inevitable horrors of the end is more musically suggested.

This symphonic poem, played for the first time in Boston, was loudly applauded by the audience, and probably in spite of occasional roughness the orchestra made the most of the composition. Still greater applause was given to Mr. Alfred Gruenfield, who made his first appearance in this city as a pianist. He was heard in the Rubinstein concerto in D minor. As Mr. Gruenfeld will give a series of recitals in Music Hall, it is perhaps safer to reserve judgment. It may be said, however, that he certainly has great technique; but technique in these days runs in the streets of Paris, Vienna and Berlin. He played in the concerto with clearness, ease and precision. But singularly enough, although a man of such technique, his forte was often extremely metallic, and his pianissimo seemed to depend entirely upon the use of the "soft" pedal. According to the criticisms of foreigners of authority, Mr. Gruenfeld is heard to greater advantage in compositions of a very different class that demand a smaller hall. Now while there were admirable features in his performance of Saturday evening, there was a lack of the true virility that includes unaffected tenderness. The playing of this concerto in the spirit of the composer is not akin to the cutting of cameos or the painting of perfumed fans.

The symphony was the "Pastoral." The first movement was played with metronomic rigidity, and the second lulled the hearers, who waited confidently for the appearance of the nightingale, quail, cuckoo and thunder storm.

The programme of the concert Nov. 14 will include Haydn's Symphony No. 1 in E flat; Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G major, and Schumann's Overture, Sherzo and Finale. Mr. F. B. Busoni will be the pianist.

PHILIP HALE.

NORTH AMERICAN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/30

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The sale of season tickets for the six concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music between now and April next is proceeding at 1119 Chestnut street, and has already been so large as to insure a financial success. These concerts have become the fashion. Society has taken them up, and so many people who might not be attracted by the music alone are arranging to attend them. This is one reason why this year the sale is far in excess of any previous season. The first concert will be given on Wednesday evening, November 4, when Mme. Lillian Nordica, a charming woman and a delightful singer, who was heard here last as Desdemonia in Verdi's opera of "Otello," performed at the Academy April 3, 1890, when Signor Tamagno made his Philadelphia debut, will be the soloist. Mme. Nordica is fresh from a series of European triumphs, and is said to be singing better than ever.

PRESS, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10 29

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the series of [illegible] by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season in this city occurs on Wednesday evening next, November 4, at the Academy of Music. This famous organization is recognized as one of the foremost symphony orchestras of the world and music lovers every where hail its coming with delight. The series will consist of six concerts.

[illegible] Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, NOV. 1, 1891.

Symphony Hearers Greet Pianist Grunfeld.

ALFRED GRUNFELD, a pianist of great European repute and the possessor of endless decorations from music loving potentates, was the soloist at last evening's Symphony concert. He came with the further prestige of two successful concerts in New York, so it was natural that he should have received a cordial greeting when he appeared at the Friday rehearsal.

There is nothing striking in the personal appearance of Mr. Grunfeld; he seems genial and unaffected, giving no signs in either look or manner of the peculiarities which are commonly supposed to be associated with a highly developed artistic temperament.

His playing did not stir his audience to any great degree of excitement, yet he was listened to with profound attention and twice recalled at the conclusion of his performance.

He is not in any sense a showy player, and it was, possibly, because of the entire absence of sensational devices that no greater enthusiasm was created. While not particularly magnetic in manner, there is often a deal of fervor in his playing, as well as constant evidence of keen artistic appreciation of the beauties of the compositions which he interprets.

Rubinstein's concerto for pianoforte in D minor, No. 4, op. 70, was the selection he chose for first performance here, and was one well adapted to displaying his sober, thoughtful style of playing.

More brilliant pianists have been heard here in the past, but it is safe to say that very few have given greater pleasure to the musical student. His technique is, of course, well nigh perfect. No pianist could, in these days, gain distinction who was not a master of the mechanics of his art. In his playing there is none of that aggressive violence so noticeable in the work of many famous performers. Yet there is no lack of strength in his forte passages, as was well shown in the brilliant final movement of Rubinstein's concerto.

His touch is of rare delicacy and marked precision. Particularly delightful is his pianissimo, and also of uncommon excellence is his phrasing and contrasts of tone color.

Mr. Greenfield is announced shortly to give a series of piano recitals here, which will offer greater opportunities for judging of his virtuosity.

A novelty on Mr. Nikisch's programme was the performance of Richard Strauss' symphonic poem, "Don Juan." It is an exceedingly showy work, bright in unique effects, skilfully contrived and richly harmonized. The composition, however, is not of even excellence. There are a few passages which are meaningless and blatant, but they may readily be forgotten in the remembrance of the exqisitely sentimental and suggestive themes which are so delightfully stated by the wood and string instruments. Mr. Nikisch's interpretation was generally pleasing, but more gentleness in his treatment of the brasses would have been welcome.

Beethoven's magnificent pastoral symphony No. 6 held the rapt attention of the audience until the close of the concert. It is always a rare treat to hear this wonderful tone picture, and yesterday Mr. Nikisch was particularly happy in setting forth its innumerable beauties.

There will be no concert this week. The announcements for Nov. 13 and 14 are Haydn, Symphony No. 1 (B. and H.), in E-flat; Beethoven concerto for pianoforte, No. 4, in G-major; Schuman, overture, Scherzo, and finale; soloist, Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni.

E NEW HAVEN EVENING
The Register.
SATURDAY. OCTOBER 31,

Music lovers are looking forward with pleasure to the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Hyperion Monday evening. This excellent organization delighted New Haven audiences last season, and as the concert Monday evening will be the only one given here this year a large house is assured. The soloist of the evening will be the renowned prima donna Mme. Lillian Nordica.

RECORD, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/30

—The first concert of the Boston Symhony Orchestra here this season will take place on Wednesday of next week, ovember 4, at the ACADEMY OF MUSIC. illian Nordica will be the soloist.

THE COMMONWEALTH.
ESTABLISHED IN 1862.
BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER, 31, 1891.

The Symphony Concerts continue to absorb the attention of the town, though the minor elect have found pleasure and instruction in two chamber concerts. Mr. Mac Dowell's new orchestral suite began the third Symphony programme. No more charming or imaginative music has come from the pen of an American than this set of four movements, called by the composer 'In a Haunted Forest,' 'Summer Idyl,' 'The Shepherdess's Song' and 'Forest Spirits.' The suite seems to have been written for the pleasure of the thing, and, though the learned pundit of an afternoon paper is displeased that the full modern orchestra should have used been in a work of so little purpose, nevertheless the result fully justifies Mr. MacDowell's caprice. Our genial townsman is a master of instrumentation, and his knowledge has in this composition been made the servant of his fancy with delicious and delightful success. Not only do we see the great colorist, Raff, in the new suite, but there is also the grace and fanciful touch of the French school of Massenet and Delibes. The moods of the suite are diverse, and Mr. MacDowell meets them fully equipped. In the first and last movements effects of an original character meet one at every turn; there is no care on the composer's part to make music of a formal character; screech-owls, goblins, gnomes and sprites at best are formless creatures, and in this music they simply revel. The 'Idyl' and the 'Song' are reposeful; they tell their story briefly but with peculiar winsomeness. The suite was well played. At its close the applause was long continued before the composer rose in his seat, in the second balcony, to acknowledge it. The pleasure of the audience on Friday was likewise manifest in even a louder tumult, which the composer answered by such a funny little bob —something which only a modest man could execute.

Following the suite, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the new first violoncellist of the orchestra, played Volkmann's concerto, an over-long and unequally attractive composition. Mr. Schroeder phrases well and plays with the musical certainty that bespeaks the artist, his tone is of fair volume, and he uses a beautiful instrument. His playing was worthy the two recalls it won. Next came Brahms's scholarly but tiresome symphony in E-minor, the fourth and last in the series. To-night, Mr. Alfred Grünfeld, the German pianist lately come to this country, will play Rubinstein's D-minor concerto, and Richard Strauss's symphonic poem 'Don Juan' and Beethoven's 'pastoral' symphony will complete the programme.

The first concert, this season, by the Adamowski String Quartette brought forth a new sonata for piano and violin by Paderewski and Tschaikowsky's F-major quartette, opus 22. Paderewski's vitality in composition is fixed by the two works of his already heard in Boston. While he feels the restraint of fixed forms more in the sonata than in the piano concerto played last season, he is daring enough in his treatment of his models, when once accepted. There is much lovely music in the sonata in A-minor, opus 13, which is sure to be heard again here. Mr. Arthur Foote and Mr. T. Adamowski were the performers, and, though the average result was good, they were not in perfect accord at all times. The new quartette is a hard nut to crack, so we pass it by for the present. It remains to say that the concert began with the E-flat quartette of Mozart, one of the best of the six dedicated to Haydn. The playing of the quartette was agreeable.

GEORGE H. WILSON.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 2, 1891.

The Symphony Concert.

It was an interesting programme; although it swept from bombast to simplicity, from musical pepper to musical peasantry. The atmosphere seemed clearest when Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony was reached, although this is by no means the greatest of the nine symphonies of the master. The concert of Saturday began with "Don Juan," a symphonic poem, by that young musical radical, Richard Strauss. It is an easy matter to attack a work of this kind, for it is overswollen and full of roarings, whether of ecstasy or pain it would be hard to determine. It is in "King Cambyses' vein" from the very start, for the composer plunges in, with all possible brasses, as much kettledrum as the muscularity of the percussive artist can furnish, an active triangle, piccolo, glockenspiel and cymbals over and above the ordinary orchestra.

But if one pardons the extravagant ardor of youth, and concedes a little to the "Sturm und Drang" period, there will be found in the work a sufficiency of musical thought and a grand working-up of climaxes. The work is crowded with ideas, many of which jostle each other, and none of which seem to come to a legitimate conclusion, but better wealth than poverty in this direction, and the extreme richness of thought as well as of orchestration gives plenty of promise, even while little of actual fulfilment has yet been attained. The work seems better than the Italian symphony in which Boston first made the acquaintance of the composer, a few years ago, for in that work the sumptuous treatment of a simple Neapolitan folk song was as out of place as the clothing of a Vesuvian guide in silk and velvet would have been.

There are no such incongruities in this composition, but the number of climaxes is rather bewildering, and the following of tender oboe themes (the oboe played very well too) by gruesome dissonances, is rather a meaningless contrast. The modern orchestral tricks are too often resorted to; the muted tones of the horn, the ugliest effects one can evoke from the orchestra, are used with lavish hand, and the theatrical vein was added to by an exaggeration of the rests and the dynamic marks. It was something to go through so difficult a work without an upset, but there was more of enthusiam than of precision in the performance, and while the two or three catastrophes, and the half dozen explosions with which the work is garnished, were dramatically done, the wind instruments were neither united in attack nor well intoned, and the horn in these days is a very persistent sinner, often overblowing, and trying to make itself into a trombone, like the toad that wanted to be an ox. But we ought to be thankful at least that the work was placed on the programme, for it is in the hearing of all the more recent orchestral works (even if they are not all commendable) that we may expect to evoke a spirit of musical comparison and consequent growth.

After the musical tempest came Alfred Gruenfeld, but with no intention of pouring oil on the troubled waters, for he is a species of Jupiter Tonans and swings his thunderbolts and his arms as freely as Rubinstein himself. If he had lived in the days when Domenico Scarlatti wrote everlasting staccato effects for the clavicembalo (which could not produce a legato), I think that he would have been the greatest artist of the world; but in the 19th century, and particularly at this end of it, there are passages that require other modes of execution. Even the pianissimo passages were at times rapped out with a clear precision and power that gave an impression of a coldly brilliant technique. Of course there were no blurs to condone, but blurring would have been less irritating than the never-ending demi-staccato.

Sometimes, as if suddenly conscious of this defect, the artist would drop into an almost inaudible softness, but this was only semi-occasionally, and there was little shading between. Once this fault is censured, the reviewer can unreservedly praise. Mr. Gruenfeld's wrist action is something remarkable, and his octave and heavy chord work is a model to every pianist. When a work suits his style he is very great in it, and it was this which caused the slow movement of the Rubinstein concerto in D minor to seem very prosaic, while the first and last movements were absolute triumphs of artistic brilliancy. No one could have caught up the hearty animal spirits of the finale (reminding of the finale of Beethoven's eighth symphony, both in theme and in style) more brightly and effectively, and the enthusiastic recalls which ensued were certainly deserved.

Now came that Beethoven work which is more written about, more orated upon, more frequently poetized than any other, simply because it gives a tangible ground for litterateur, orator and poet to hang definite remarks upon. This definiteness, however, makes the sixth weaker than its sister symphonies which speak the vaguer, but more soulful, language of pure music. But its simplicity shows forth the latent defects of an orchestra with startling clearness. If a bill of specifications of the present faults of our orchestra is desired, here it is:—

In the coda of the first movement, where the chief theme appears in full harmonies' the ensemble was very poor and the effect was muddy.

In the Scene by the Brook the clarinet was poor, and the rest of the woodwind, which has such important work to do, was uncertain in pitch.

In the scherzo the unison passages, which begin the movement, were unsteady, and even the players in the village band were weak and too irregular in their simple measures.

In the storm there was no careful shading in the gradual diminuendo effects with which the tempest passes away.

In the finale the horn was unclear, and it made slips in the preceding movements as well.

Per contra, the reading of the storm was commendably energetic, and certain parts of the scherzo, as for example, the entrance of the mountaineers, were powerful and effective.

But the performance as a whole still leaves a balance on the wrong side of the artistic ledger. Gladly do I acknowledge a greater virility, a wilder abandon, than ever before, but these qualities are not always called into requisition. In a classical work, often a perfect balance, a true intonation, a united attack, a refined grading of dynamic effects, outweigh a bold and fiery, or an excited and enthusiastic, rendering. Much as we all prized the first named qualities, we cannot afford them at the expense

---

Boston Post
MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 2, 1891.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The programme of the fourth Symphony Concert was as follows:

Symphonic Poem, "Don Juan."..........R. Strauss.
Concerto for pianoforte in D minor.........Rubinstein.
Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"...............Beethoven.

Nikolaus Lenau took our old friend Don Juan de Tenorio and made him over into a cross between Faust and the Preacher of Jerusalem, and Richard Strauss has chosen Lenau's poem for the text of a musical sermon. Young Strauss started in life as a disciple of Johannes Brahms and a believer in absolute music; but he journeyed from Vienna, and as he came near Weimar he saw suddenly a great light. Ever since he has embraced tne belief of Liszt, and he now uses music as the vehicle of expressing everything but music; for he has little invention, and his musical thoughts are of little worth. This symphonic poem is supposed to portray in music the recollections and regrets of a jaded voluptuary. Now, granting that music is capable of doing this, what do we find in this composition? There are recollections, not of Don Juan, but of Liszt and of Wagner. There are also regrets, but the regrets come from the hearers. There is plenty of fuss and fuming; there are passages of brilliant instrumentation, some of them original, some of them borrowed; there is a dramatic effect near the close; but is there any genuine passion or any real terror from the beginning to the end? The hero of Strauss is not the rake-helly man of the legend, the sneering scoundrel of Molière or the impassive figure in Baudelaire's poem who assumes such gigantic proportions after he has given Charon the demanded coin. Nor does the music echo even faintly the passiôn of Lenau. Besides, Don Juan was more direct in his methods. His wooing was as sudden and as violent as his descent to the lower regions. According to Strauss, he was verbose, fond of turning corners, something of a metaphysician, and a good deal of a bore. When he made love he beat upon a triangle, and when he was dyspeptic he confided his woes to instruments that moaned in sympathy.

There was once a German who wrote an Italian opera for Italian singers. When "Don Juan" is mentioned to musician or theatregoer, he rembers a dashing Spaniard killing an old man and chucking Zerlina under the chin, running away from his wife and loving Donna Anna, mocking the Statue, but welcoming the awful steps outside the banquet hall, although he then anticipates eternal flames. And humming immortal strains, he thinks of Mozart, nor does he breathe the name of Richard Strauss. If it be said that the work of the one is an opera and that of the other a symphonic poem, and therefore they are not to be named together, there remains the overture to "Don Giovanni," in which the life of a libertine with its dash and sparkle and the inevitable horrors of the end is more musically suggested.

This symphonic poem, played for the first time in Boston, was loudly applauded by the audience, and probably in spite of occasional roughness the orchestra made the most of the composition. Still greater applause was given to Mr. Alfred Gruenfield, who made his first appearance in this city as a pianist. He was heard in the Rubinstein concerto in D minor. As Mr. Gruenfeld will give a series of recitals in Music Hall, it is perhaps safer to reserve judgment. It may be said, however, that he certainly has great technique; but technique in these days runs in the streets of Paris, Vienna and Berlin. He played in the concerto with clearness, ease and precision. But singularly enough, although a man of such technique, his forte was often extremely metallic, and his pianissimo seemed to depend entirely upon the use of the "soft" pedal. According to the criticisms of foreigners of authority, Mr. Gruenfeld is heard to greater advantage in compositions of a very different class that demand a smaller hall. Now while there were admirable features in his performance of Saturday evening, there was a lack of the true virility that includes unaffected tenderness. The playing of this concerto in the spirit of the composer is not akin to the cutting of cameos or the painting of perfumed fans.

The symphony was the "Pastoral." The first movement was played with metronomic rigidity, and the second lulled the hearers, who waited confidently for the appearance of the nightingale, quail, cuckoo and thunder storm.

The programme of the concert Nov. 14 will include Haydn's Symphony No. 1 in E flat; Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G major, and Schumann's Overture, Sherzo and Finale. Mr. F. B. Busoni will be the pianist.

PHILIP HALE.

NORTH AMERICAN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date ....11 2 0....

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The sale of season tickets for the six concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music between now and April next is proceeding at 1119 Chestnut street, and has already been so large as to insure a financial success. These concerts have become the fashion. Society has taken them up, and so many people who might not be attracted by the music alone are arranging to attend them. This is one reason why this year the sale is far in excess of any previous season. The first concert will be given on Wednesday evening, November 4, when Mme. Lillian Nordica, a charming woman and a delightful singer, who was heard here last as Desdemonia in Verdi's opera of "Otello," performed at the Academy April 3, 1890, when Signor Tamagno made his Philadelphia debut, will be the soloist. Mme. Nordica is fresh from a series of European triumphs, and is said to be singing better than ever.

PRESS, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10 29

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the series of concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season in this city occurs on Wednesday evening next, November 4, at the Academy of Music. This famous organization is recognized as one of the foremost symphony orchestras of the world and music lovers every where hail its coming with delight. The series will consist of six concerts.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, NOV. 1, 1891.

Symphony Hearers Greet Pianist Grunfeld.

ALFRED GRUNFELD, a pianist of great European repute and the possessor of endless decorations from music loving potentates, was the soloist at last evening's Symphony concert. He came with the further prestige of two successful concerts in New York, so it was natural that he should have received a cordial greeting when he appeared at the Friday rehearsal.

There is nothing striking in the personal appearance of Mr. Grunfeld; he seems genial and unaffected, giving no signs in either look or manner of the peculiarities which are commonly supposed to be associated with a highly developed artistic temperament.

His playing did not stir his audience to any great degree of excitement, yet he was listened to with profound attention and twice recalled at the conclusion of his performance.

He is not in any sense a showy player, and it was, possibly, because of the entire absence of sensational devices that no greater enthusiasm was created. While not particularly magnetic in manner, there is often a deal of fervor in his playing, as well as constant evidence of keen artistic appreciation of the beauties of the compositions which he interprets.

Rubinstein's concerto for pianoforte in D minor, No. 4, op. 70, was the selection he chose for first performance here, and was one well adapted to displaying his sober, thoughtful style of playing.

More brilliant pianists have been heard here in the past, but it is safe to say that very few have given greater pleasure to the musical student. His technique is, of course, well nigh perfect. No pianist could, in these days, gain distinction who was not a master of the mechanics of his art. In his playing there is none of that aggressive violence so noticeable in the work of many famous performers. Yet there is no lack of strength in his forte passages, as was well shown in the brilliant final movement of Rubinstein's concerto.

His touch is of rare delicacy and marked precision. Particularly delightful is his pianissimo, and also of uncommon excellence is his phrasing and contrasts of tone color.

Mr. Greenfield is announced shortly to give a series of piano recitals here, which will offer greater opportunities for judging of his virtuosity.

A novelty on Mr. Nikisch's programme was the performance of Richard Strauss' symphonic poem, "Don Juan." It is an exceedingly showy work, bright in unique effects, skilfully contrived and richly harmonized. The composition, however, is not of even excellence. There are a few passages which are meaningless and blatant, but they may readily be forgotten in the remembrance of the exqisitely sentimental and suggestive themes which are so delightfully stated by the wood and string instruments. Mr. Nikisch's interpretation was generally pleasing, but more gentleness in his treatment of the brasses would have been welcome.

Beethoven's magnificent pastoral symphony No. 6 held the rapt attention of the audience until the close of the concert. It is always a rare treat to hear this wonderful tone picture, and yesterday Mr. Nikisch was particularly happy in setting forth its innumerable beauties.

There will be no concert this week. The announcements for Nov. 13 and 14 are Haydn, Symphony No. 1 (B. and H.), in E-flat; Beethoven concerto for pianoforte, No. 4, in G-major; Schuman, overture, Scherzo, and finale; soloist, Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni.

E NEW HAVEN EVENING
The Register.
SATURDAY. OCTOBER 31,

Music lovers are looking forward with pleasure to the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Hyperion Monday evening. This excellent organization delighted New Haven audiences last season, and as the concert Monday evening will be the only one given here this year a large house is assured. The soloist of the evening will be the renowned prima donna Mme. Lillian Nordica.

RECORD, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/30

—The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here this season will take place on Wednesday of next week, November 4, at the ACADEMY OF MUSIC. Lillian Nordica will be the soloist.

THE COMMONWEALTH.
ESTABLISHED IN 1862.
BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER, 31, 1891.

The Symphony Concerts continue to absorb the attention of the town, though the minor elect have found pleasure and instruction in two chamber concerts. Mr. Mac Dowell's new orchestral suite began the third Symphony programme. No more charming or imaginative music has come from the pen of an American than this set of four movements, called by the composer 'In a Haunted Forest,' 'Summer Idyl,' 'The Shepherdess's Song' and 'Forest Spirits.' The suite seems to have been written for the pleasure of the thing, and, though the learned pundit of an afternoon paper is displeased that the full modern orchestra should have used been in a work of so little purpose, nevertheless the result fully justifies Mr. MacDowell's caprice. Our genial townsman is a master of instrumentation, and his knowledge has in this composition been made the servant of his fancy with delicious and delightful success. Not only do we see the great colorist, Raff, in the new suite, but there is also the grace and fanciful touch of the French school of Massenet and Delibes. The moods of the suite are diverse, and Mr. MacDowell meets them fully equipped. In the first and last movements effects of an original character meet one at every turn; there is no care on the composer's part to make music of a formal character; screech-owls, goblins, gnomes and sprites at best are formless creatures, and in this music they simply revel. The 'Idyl' and the 'Song' are reposeful; they tell their story briefly but with peculiar winsomeness. The suite was well played. At its close the applause was long continued before the composer rose in his seat, in the second balcony, to acknowledge it. The pleasure of the audience on Friday was likewise manifest in even a louder tumult, which the composer answered by such a funny little bob —something which only a modest man could execute.

Following the suite, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the new first violoncellist of the orchestra, played Volkmann's concerto, an over-long and unequally attractive composition. Mr. Schroeder phrases well and plays with the musical certainty that bespeaks the artist, his tone is of fair volume, and he uses a beautiful instrument. His playing was worthy the two recalls it won. Next came Brahms's scholarly but tiresome symphony in E-minor, the fourth and last in the series. To-night, Mr. Alfred Grünfeld, the German pianist lately come to this country, will play Rubinstein's D-minor concerto, and Richard Strauss's symphonic poem 'Don Juan' and Beethoven's 'pastoral' symphony will complete the programme.

The first concert, this season, by the Adamowski String Quartette brought forth a new sonata for piano and violin by Paderewski and Tschaikowsky's F-major quartette, opus 22. Paderewski's vitality in composition is fixed by the two works of his already heard in Boston. While he feels the restraint of fixed forms more in the sonata than in the piano concerto played last season, he is daring enough in his treatment of his models, when once accepted. There is much lovely music in the sonata in A-minor, opus 13, which is sure to be heard again here. Mr. Arthur Foote and Mr. T. Adamowski were the performers, and, though the average result was good, they were not in perfect accord at all times. The new quartette is a hard nut to crack, so we pass it by for the present. It remains to say that the concert began with the E-flat quartette of Mozart, one of the best of the six dedicated to Haydn. The playing of the quartette was agreeable.

GEORGE H. WILSON.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Chickering Hall, - - New York,

Tuesday Evening, Nov. 3, at 8.

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
SEASON 1891-92
PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Academy of Music, - Philadelphia,

Wednesday Evening, November 4, at 8.

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
SEASON 1891-92
PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Season tickets with reserved seats for the series of six concerts, $4, $5, and $7.50, now on sale at 1119 Chestnut Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Academy Concert Hall, - Baltimore,

Thursday Evening, November 5, at 8.

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
SEASON 1891-92
PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Season tickets, with reserved seats, $7.50, now on sale at Albert's ticket office, 13 North Charles Street.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Academy of Music, - - Brooklyn.

Friday Afternoon, November 6, at 3 o'clock.
Saturday Evening, November 7, at 8 o'clock.

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
SEASON 1891-92
PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Season tickets, including reserved seats for the series of six rehearsals, or for the series of six concerts, $4, $5, and $7.50, according to location.

The sale of season tickets for both series opens at the office of the Philharmonic Society, at CHANDLER'S music store, [illegible] Fulton St., Monday, October 26, at 8 A.M.

To insure a fair distribution of tickets, not more than ten will be sold to one person.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1891.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The programme of the fourth concert, given in the Music Hall last Saturday evening, was—

Richard Strauss: Symphonic Poem, "Don Juan."
Rubinstein: Concerto for pianoforte, in D minor, Op. 70.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 6, in F ("Pastorale"), Op. 68.
Mr. Alfred Grünfeld was the pianist.

Richard Strauss's symphonic poem is one of those compositions about which it is excessively hard to make up one's mind after a single hearing. Many works produce a vague enough impression while one is listening to them for the first time; but they leave a certain imprint on the hearer's memory, and he wakes up next morning to find that what sounded confused enough the night before, now seems orderly, coherent and comprehensible. Not so with this "Don Juan;" two nights' sleep and a day's rumination have—in our case, at least—thrown no new light upon it. Indeed, it seems vaguer and more confused to us now than it did last Saturday evening. All that remains distinct in our mind is that the work is a marvel of rich and brilliant orchestration, and has passages in it of exuberant passionate force. In the matter of instrumentation, indeed, the composer seems to have gone farther in the direction of spendthrift lavishness than anyone we have yet heard. Not that he has indulged himself in any unusual excesses in the composition of his orchestra—like Berlioz, in the "Danrémont" Requiem, or Wagner, in the "Nibelungen"—but that he employs the means he has chosen with a prodigality that seems at moments very like squandering. With him everything makes for richness and volume of tone; he has out-Wagnered Wagner in the fullness of his scoring. Yet, we are much mistaken if he has not overshot the mark. He shows wellnigh unexampled skill in using his brass to give weight of tone in strong passages, without allowing it to drown out the rest of the orchestra; his fortissimos do not sound brassy. But, after using his trumpets and trombones like mere clarionets and bassoons, and blending them so beautifully with the other instruments that they no longer sound like brass, he finds himself powerless to produce the characteristic trenchant effects that are associated with trumpets and trombones. The single pair of trumpets in a Mozart score has more brilliancy of effect than all Strauss's seven brass instruments together. When he wishes to put an extra cutting edge to his orchestra he has nothing for it but to take to the cymbals. Looking at the work from another point of view than the merely orchestral one, we seem to find a corresponding extravagance in the general style of writing; there is a constant strenuousness, a being at 90° in the shade all the time, that overreaches itself. It becomes monotonous and oppressive. One cannot believe in such music wearing well. Naturally this is a question to be settled only by trial—by repeated performances of the work.

Mr. Grünfeld's playing of Rubinstein's fourth concerto was one of the most completely satisfying performances we have listened to for a long time. The day is past for wondering at the technique of pianists; what once was a nine-days' wonder is now a sine qua non, and technique is the common property of pianists who know their business. But Mr. Grünfeld has one great merit in common with the astounding player who wrote the concerto he played: physical avoirdupois; and this is by no means common, as pianists go. It fits him admirably for just the task he selected, for playing this concerto of Rubinstein's. He can get volume and force of tone from the pianoforte by sheer weight, and can keep his muscular strength for higher artistic purposes, such as shading, accent and contrast. His phrasing is simply beautiful, his style at once dignified and flexible, brilliant and artistlike. He plays, too, with admirable warmth of feeling—with how much real depth of emotion one could not well determine, for there is little in the concerto to call this forth—but of one thing one could be certain: the quality of his feeling was entirely adequate to the music. A finer performance one can hardly wish to hear.

The orchestra played the Strauss poem admirably. The Beethoven symphony might have been done more delicately, but it was played with a warmth and unity of feeling that let the glorious music make its full effect. As we are often at loggerheads with Mr. Nikisch about questions of tempo, it is doubly a pleasure to note the admirable tempo at which he took the Andante molto moto; it is only once in a dog's age that one hears this movement go fast enough!

The next programme is: Hayden, symphony No. 1 [B. & H.], in E-flat; Beethoven, pianoforte concerto No. 4, in G major; Schumann, overture, scherzo and finale. Mr. Ferruccio Busoni will be the pianist.

BULLETIN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/31

The sale of season tickets for the six concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Academy of Music, between now and April next, is proceeding at 1119 Chestnut street, and has already been so large as to insure a financial success. These concerts have become the fashion. Society has taken them up, and so many people who might not be attracted by the music alone are arranging to attend them. This is one reason why this year the sale is far in excess of any previous season. The first concert will be given on Wednesday evening, November 4, when Mme. L[illegible] woman and a delightful singer, who was [illegible] here last as Desdemona in Verdi's opera of Otello when Signor Tamagno made his Philadelphia début will be the soloist. Mme. Nordica is fresh from a series of European triumphs, and is said to be sing-

---

RECORD, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/1

Chamber Music By the Adamowski Quartet.

On Tuesday afternoon next the series of chamber concerts by the Adamowski Quartet will begin at Haseltime's Galleries. Besides a violin solo by Adamowski, there will be performed Mozart's quartet in E flat, and three movements from Tschaikowsky's interesting if somewhat obscure quartet in F

PRESS, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/1

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Initial Concert of the Season.

The initial concert of a series of six by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Mr. Arthur Nikisch is the accomplished conductor, will take place at the Academy next Wednesday evening, November 4. The merits of this superb organization are too well known to require any further comment, and the mere announcement of their coming is sufficient to guarantee a large attendance.

The orchestra numbers eighty-five performers of superior quality, and in some of the departments advantageous changes have been made. The orchestra has begun its season at home and so far the attendance has been the largest yet seen in the Boston Music Hall at these concerts, and the success artistically is greater than ever before. Mr. Nikisch spent the past Summer in Europe, and while there secured many interesting novelties which will be given by him for the first time on this continent during the coming series.

The soloist for the first concert is Mme. Lillian Nordica, one of the world's greatest sopranos, who created such furor at the Worcester Musical Festival recently. This renowned vocalist has not been heard in Philadelphia for some time and her appearance here on this occasion has called forth considerable interest. At the other concerts of the series the soloist will be Eugen D'Albert, the famous pianist; Alfred Greenfield, court pianist of the Emperors of Germany and Austria, and other renowned artists.

The Adamowski Chamber Concerts.

The third series of chamber concerts in this city by the Adamowski String Quartette will begin Tuesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock at the Hazeltine Galleries. The quartette is composed of Messrs T. Adamowski, first violin; A. Moldauer, second violin; Max Zach, viola; J. Adamowski, violincello. The series will consist of five subscription concerts, the dates of which are November 3, Jan. 12, Dec. 8, Feb. 9, and March 15. The admirers of quartette music will thus have an opportunity of enjoying the work of the masters of this, the most beautiful and dainty of all instrumental combinations, claimed to be the acme of music. The programme for Tuesday afternoon is composed of the complete "E Flat Major Quartette" of Mozart; Mr. T. Adamowski in a violin solo, consisting of Paderewski's "Melodie" and Nachez "Gipsy Dance." The scherzo andante and finale of Tschaikowsky's "Quartette in F."

The Daily Standard-Union.

MONDAY EVENING, NOV. 2, 1891.

AMUSEMENTS.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. NIKISCH

Under the auspices of the

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF BROOKLYN.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

NORDICA.
PADEREWSKI.
D'ALBERT,
And other famous Soloists

85 PERFORMERS.

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

SIX PUBLIC REHEARSALS.

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, November 6, December 11, January 15, February 12, March 18 and April 29.

SIX CONCERTS.

On SATURDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13, March 19 and April 30.

Season tickets, including reserved seats for the series of six rehearsals, or for the series of six concerts, $4, $5, and $7.50, according to location, now on sale at Chandler's.

FIRST PUBLIC REHEARSAL AND CONCERT, NOVEMBER 6 AND 7.

SOLOIST.

MADAME NORDICA.

Tickets, with reserved seat, 75 cents, $1 and $1.50, according to location, on sale at Chandler's, 300 Fulton st., on and after Wednesday, November 4.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

Philharmonic Concerts.

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Nikisch, have come to be known as unsurpassed by any of their kind in this country. Patrons of the Philharmonic Society are to be congratulated upon the engagement of this fine organization to provide the coming series of concerts. The first concert will be given at the Academy of Music on Saturday evening of this week, preceded by the usual public rehearsal on Friday afternoon. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist on both occasions. The sale of season tickets for both series is now in progress. Single tickets will be ready at Chandler's on and after Wednesday.

Telegraph,

Clipping from

~~BULLETIN~~, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10-31

—The prospectus of the Boston Symphony rchestra for the season of 1891-92 has been ade public. There are to be six concerts, o take place at the Academy of Music on the venings of November 4, December 7, Janu-ry 11, February 8, March 14, and April 2[illegible]. No change of substantial importance has aken place during the summer recess in the composition of the orchestra. Franz Kneisel remains the concert meister, with Adamowsky and Loeffier as lieutenants, and Mr. Arthur Nikisch retains the directorship. As during last season, the full orchestra will comprise eighty-five members. The soloist at the first concert will be Mme. Lillian Nordica, a charming singer, who has won many fresh laurels since she was heard here last with Patti and Tamaguo in the season of 1889-90.

Clipping from News
New Haven Conn

Date 10/31

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first concert of the season here, at the Hyperion on Monday evening, under the leadership of Herr Arthur Nikisch who has conducted the club so successfully for the past two seasons. The orchestra numbers over sixty performers of great merit, and the programme for the evening is especially interesting and varied. It is as follows:

Berloiz–Overture "Benvenuto Celleni."
Gounod–Aria, from "Queen of Sheba."
Taschaikowsky–Suite, Op. 55 Elegic.
  Valse Melancholique.
  Scherzo.
  Terna con Variezioni (given for first time in New Haven).
A. Thomas–Polacea from "Mignon."
Massauet–Overture, "Phaedre."

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, NOV. 3.

Symphony Orchestra at New Haven.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 2.—The Boston Symphony orchestra gave their first concert of the season here tonight in the Hyperion Theatre, which was completely filled. Conductor Nikisch and his men were received with the greatest enthusiasm. The soloist of the evening was Madame Lillian Nordica and she maintained the success that she has already inaugurated. At the close of the concert the orchestra left for New York.

RECORD, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/1

First Boston Symphony Concert.

The programme for the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Nikisch, at the Academy of Music next Wednesday evening, November 4, has been announced. There are to be two soloists. Mme. Lillian Nordica will sing the cavatina from Gounod's "Reine de Saba" and the polacca from "Mignon;" and Mr. Adamowski will play Saint Saens' "Rondo Capriccioso" for the violin. There are to be three orchestral numbers, namely, Beethoven's "Leonora," overture No. 3, a suite by Tschaikowsky op. 55, and the prelude to the "Meistersænger." It will be seen that the programme is one of much variety and interest.

INQUIRER, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/1

The Boston Symphony Concerts.

The sale of season tickets for the six concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music between now and April next is proceeding at 1119 Chestnut street, and has already been so large as to insure a financial success. These concerts have become the fashion. Society has taken them up, and so many people who might not be attracted by the music alone are arranging to attend them. This is one reason why this year the sale is far in excess of any previous season. The first concert will be given on Wednesday evening, November 4, when Mme. Lillian Nordica, a charming woman and a delightful singer, who was heard here last as Desdemona, in Verdi's opera of "Otello," performed at the Academy April 3, 1890, when Signor Tamagno made his Philadelphia debut, will be the soloist. Mme. Nordica is fresh from a series of European triumphs, and is said to be singing better than ever.

TRIBUNE. New York, N. Y.

Date 11-1

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will occupy much of the attention of music-lovers in this vicinity this week. Its first concert will take place in Chickering Hall on Tuesday evening and on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening it will open the Brooklyn Philharmonic course. On Friday evening Mr. Kneisel and his club of chamber music players will be heard in Sherry's Hall.

BULLETIN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/31

It is said that Mr. Arthur Nikisch, who this season, as last, will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at the Academy of Music, receives a salary of $10,000 a year.

THE NEW HAVEN EVENING REGISTER, MONDAY,

NOVEMBER 2, 1891

AT THE THEATERS.

The Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra This Evening—Clara Morris November 8.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Arthur Nikisch conductor, will give its first and only concert of the season at the Hyperion theater this evening. The program, which has already been given in these columns, is a delightful one and the concert will be made exceptionally attractive by the first appearance in this city of Madame Nordica, the distinguished soprano.

Boston Daily Globe.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 4.

MME. NORDICA THE STAR.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Delights New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—The Boston Symphony orchestra gave their first concert in their New York season here tonight before an audience which packed Chickering Hall. Mme. Nordica was the soloist of the evening, making her first appearance here since her return to this country. The programme was as follows:

Overture, Benvenuto Cellini	Berlioz
Aria, Ah Perfido	Beethoven
Prelude, adagio and gavotte for string orchestra	Bach, arranged by Bachrich
Aria, O hall of song, from Tannhauser	Wagner
Symphony, No. 3, in E flat (Rhenish), op. 97	Schumann

Mme. Nordica was received with the greatest enthusiasm, and the orchestra was never heard to better advantage.

HERALD, Chicago, Ill

Date 11-1

Features of the Musical Season.

In the line of amusements Boston can suit all tastes. The musical season has begun in earnest, with the appearance of the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Nikisch, fresh from a rest in Europe, has lost none of his old power, and the orchestra itself played with great smoothness and delicacy, notwithstanding the long period of separation. Mme. Nordica, who improves every year, was the soloist at the opening concert, and at the second Mr. Winch, the local tenor, sang the pretty aria that interrupts the prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana." The opera itself has been given here by two companies; once at a single and rather doleful performance in the Music Hall, when Miss Emma Juch was the only redeeming feature; and this week the Casino Company, headed by Pauline L'Allemand, are singing it at the Tremont Theatre. L'Allemand has improved since the old days of the National Opera Company, and her Santuzza is a really fine performance. Still, managers say she is not a drawing card. Everybody who hears her likes her, and yet she doesn't fill the houses. There is missing in her that indefinable something which, for want of a better name, we call "personal magnetism;" a gift of nature it is too and falls, like other gifts of nature alike upon the just and unjust.

Clipping from

UNION, New Haven, Conn.

Date 10/30

AMUSEMENTS.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikish, conductor, will visit this city for a single concert at the Hyperion theater next Monday evening. The brilliant and varied attractions of the programme to be performed will doubtless call out concert-goers in great numbers. The appearance of Madame Nordica, the distinguished prima donna soprano will be a notable feature of the concert. The sale of seats is now in progress at the Hyperion theater.

NORTH AMERICAN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/2

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's First Concert This Season.

The programme for the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, at the Academy of Music next Wednesday evening, November 4, has been announced. There are to be two soloists. Mme. Lillian Nordica will sing the familiar scena from Gounod's "Reine de Saba" and the polacca from "Mignon," and Mr. Adamowski will play Saint-Saens' "Rondo Capriccioso" for the violin. There are to be three orchestral numbers, namely, Beethoven's "Leonora," overture No. 3, a suite by Tschaikowsky op. 55 and the prelude to the Meistersinger. It will be seen that the programme is one of much variety and interest.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTET.

Encouraged by the success of previous seasons, Mr. Adamowski will again give a series of five chamber concerts at Haseltine's Galleries, of which the first will take place to-morrow afternoon at 2.30. The programme upon this occasion will comprise Mozart's string quartet in E flat major No. 14 Peters, three movements from Tschaikowsky's quartet in F, op. 22 and two violin solos by Paderewski and

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1891.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The programme of the fourth concert, given in the Music Hall last Saturday evening, was—

Richard Strauss: Symphonic Poem, "Don Juan."
Rubinstein: Concerto for pianoforte, in D minor, Op. 70.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 6, in F ("Pastorale"), Op. 68.
Mr. Alfred Grünfeld was the pianist.

Richard Strauss's symphonic poem is one of those compositions about which it is excessively hard to make up one's mind after a single hearing. Many works produce a vague enough impression while one is listening to them for the first time; but they leave a certain imprint on the hearer's memory, and he wakes up next morning to find that what sounded confused enough the night before, now seems orderly, coherent and comprehensible. Not so with this "Don Juan;" two nights' sleep and a day's rumination have—in our case, at least—thrown no new light upon it. Indeed, it seems vaguer and more confused to us now than it did last Saturday evening. All that remains distinct in our mind is that the work is a marvel of rich and brilliant orchestration, and has passages in it of exuberant passionate force. In the matter of instrumentation, indeed, the composer seems to have gone farther in the direction of spendthrift lavishness than anyone we have yet heard. Not that he has indulged himself in any unusual excesses in the composition of his orchestra—like Berlioz, in the "Danrémont" Requiem, or Wagner, in the "Nibelungen"—but that he employs the means he has chosen with a prodigality that seems at moments very like squandering. With him everything makes for richness and volume of tone; he has out-Wagnered Wagner in the fullness of his scoring. Yet, we are much mistaken if he has not overshot the mark. He shows wellnigh unexampled skill in using his brass to give weight of tone in strong passages, without allowing it to drown out the rest of the orchestra; his fortissimos do not sound brassy. But, after using his trumpets and trombones like mere clarionets and bassoons, and blending them so beautifully with the other instruments that they no longer sound like brass, he finds himself powerless to produce the characteristic trenchant effects that are associated with trumpets and trombones. The single pair of trumpets in a Mozart score has more brilliancy of effect than all Strauss's seven brass instruments together. When he wishes to put an extra cutting edge to his orchestra he has nothing for it but to take to the cymbals. Looking at the work from another point of view than the merely orchestral one, we seem to find a corresponding extravagance in the general style of writing; there is a constant strenuousness, a being at 90° in the shade all the time, that overreaches itself. It becomes monotonous and oppressive. One cannot believe in such music wearing well. Naturally this is a question to be settled only by trial—by repeated performances of the work.

Mr. Grünfeld's playing of Rubinstein's fourth concerto was one of the most completely satisfying performances we have listened to for a long time. The day is past for wondering at the technique of pianists; what once was a nine-days' wonder is now a sine qua non, and technique is the common property of pianists who know their business. But Mr. Grünfeld has one great merit in common with the astounding player who wrote the concerto he played: physical avoirdupois; and this is by no means common, as pianists go. It fits him admirably for just the task he selected, for playing this concerto of Rubinstein's. He can get volume and force of tone from the pianoforte by sheer weight, and can keep his muscular strength for higher artistic purposes, such as shading, accent and contrast. His phrasing is simply beautiful, his style at once dignified and flexible, brilliant and artistlike. He plays, too, with admirable warmth of feeling—with how much real depth of emotion one could not well determine, for there is little in the concerto to call this forth—but of one thing one could be certain: the quality of his feeling was entirely adequate to the music. A finer performance one can hardly wish to hear.

The orchestra played the Strauss poem admirably. The Beethoven symphony might have been done more delicately, but it was played with a warmth and unity of feeling that let the glorious music make its full effect. As we are often at loggerheads with Mr. Nikisch about questions of tempo, it is doubly a pleasure to note the admirable tempo at which he took the Andante molto moto; it is only once in a dog's age that one hears this movement go fast enough!

The next programme is: Hayden, symphony No. 1 [B. & H.], in E-flat; Beethoven, pianoforte concerto No. 4, in G major; Schumann, overture, scherzo and finale. Mr. Ferruccio Busoni will be the pianist.

BULLETIN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/31

The sale of season tickets for the six concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Academy of Music between now and April next, is proceeding at 1119 Chestnut street, and has already been so large as to insure a financial success. These concerts have become the fashion. Society has taken them up, and so many people who might not be attracted by the music alone are arranging to attend them. This is one reason why this year the sale is far in excess of any previous season. The first concert will be given on Wednesday evening, November 4, when Mme. [illegible] ing woman and a delightful singer, wh[illegible] here last as Desdemona in Verdi's opera of Otello when Signor Tamagno made his Philadelphia début will be the soloist. Mme. Nordica is fresh from a series of European triumphs, and is said to be sing

---

RECORD, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/1

Chamber Music By the Adamowski Quartet.

On Tuesday afternoon next the series of chamber concerts by the Adamowski Quartet will begin at Haseltime's Galleries. Besides a violin solo by Adamowski, there will be performed Mozart's quartet in E flat, and three movements from Tschaikowsky's interesting if somewhat obscure quartet in F.

PRESS, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/1

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Initial Concert of the Season.

The initial concert of a series of six by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Mr. Arthur Nikisch is the accomplished conductor, will take place at the Academy next Wednesday evening, November 4. The [illegible]erits of this superb organization are too well known to require any further comment, and the mere announcement of their coming is sufficient to guarantee a large attendance.

The orchestra numbers eighty-five performers of superior quality, and in some of the departments advantageous changes have been made. The orchestra has begun its season at home and so far the attendance has been the largest yet seen in the Boston Music Hall at these concerts, and the success artistically is greater than ever before. Mr. Nikisch spent the past Summer in Europe, and while there secured many interesting novelties which will be given by him for the first time on this continent during the coming series.

The soloist for the first concert is Mme. Lillian Nordica, one of the world's greatest sopranos, who created such furor at the Worcester Musical Festival recently. This renowned vocalist has not been heard in Philadelphia for some time and her appearance here on this occasion has called forth considerable interest. At the other concerts of the series the soloist will be Eugen D'Albert, the famous pianist; Alfred Greenfield, court pianist of the Emperors of Germany and Austria, and other renowned artists.

The Adamowski Chamber Concerts.

The third series of chamber concerts in this city by the Adamowski String Quartette will begin Tuesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock at the Hazeltine Galleries. The quartette is composed of Messrs T. Adamowski, first violin; A. Moldauer, second violin; Max Zach, viola; J. Adamowski, violincello. The series will consist of five subscription concerts, the dates of which are November 3, Jan. 12, Dec. 8, Feb. 9, and March 15. The admirers of quartette music will thus have an opportunity of enjoying the work of the masters of this, the most beautiful and dainty of all instrumental combinations, claimed to be the acme of music. The programme for Tuesday afternoon is composed of the complete "E Flat Major Quartette" of Mozart; Mr. T. Adamowski in a violin solo, consisting of Paderewski's "Melodie" and Nachez "Gipsy Dance." The scherzo andante and finale of Tschaikowsky's "Quartette in F."

The Daily Standard-Union.

MONDAY EVENING, NOV. 2, 1891.

AMUSEMENTS.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. NIKISCH

Under the auspices of the

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF BROOKLYN.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

NORDICA.
PADEREWSKI.
D'ALBERT,
And other famous Soloists

85 PERFORMERS.

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

SIX PUBLIC REHEARSALS.

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, November 6, December 11, January 15, February 12, March 18 and April 29.

SIX CONCERTS.

On SATURDAY EVENINGS, November 7, December 12, January 16, February 13, March 19 and April 30.

Season tickets, including reserved seats for the series of six rehearsals, or for the series of six concerts, $4, $5, and $7.50, according to location, now on sale at Chandler's.

FIRST PUBLIC REHEARSAL AND CONCERT, NOVEMBER 6 AND 7.

SOLOIST.

MADAME NORDICA.

Tickets, with reserved seat, 75 cents, $1 and $1.50, according to location, on sale at Chandler's, 300 Fulton st., on and after Wednesday, November 4.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

Philharmonic Concerts.

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Nikisch, have come to be known as unsurpassed by any of their kind in this country. Patrons of the Philharmonic Society are to be congratulated upon the engagement of this fine organization to provide the coming series of concerts. The first concert will be given at the Academy of Music on Saturday evening of this week, preceded by the usual public rehearsal on Friday afternoon. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist on both occasions. The sale of season tickets for both series is now in progress. Single tickets will be ready at Chandler's on and after Wednesday.

Telegraph,
Clipping from

~~BULLETIN~~, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10-31

—The prospectus of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the season of 1891–92 has been made public. There are to be six concerts, to take place at the Academy of Music on the evenings of November 4, December 7, January 11, February 8, March 14, and April 2[illegible]. No change of substantial importance has taken place during the summer recess in the composition of the orchestra. Franz Kneisel remains the concert meister, with Adamowsky and Loeffler as lieutenants, and Mr. Arthur Nikisch retains the directorship. As during last season, the full orchestra will comprise eighty-five members. The soloist at the first concert will be Mme. Lillian Nordica, a charming singer, who has won many fresh laurels since she was heard here last with Patti and Tamagno in the season of 1889–90.

Clipping from News
New Haven Conn

Date 10/31

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first concert of the season here, at the Hyperion on Monday evening, under the leadership of Herr Arthur Nikisch who has conducted the club so successfully for the past two seasons. The orchestra numbers over sixty performers of great merit, and the programme for the evening is especially interesting and varied. It is as follows:

Berloiz–Overture "Benvenuto Celleni."
Gounod–Aria, from "Queen of Sheba."
Taschaikowsky–Suite, Op. 55 Elegic.
  Valse Melancholique.
  Scherzo.
  Terna con Variezioni (given for first time in New Haven).
A. Thomas–Polacea from "Mignon."
Massauet–Overture, "Phaedre."

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, NOV. 3.

Symphony Orchestra at New Haven.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 2.—The Boston Symphony orchestra gave their first concert of the season here tonight in the Hyperion Theatre, which was completely filled. Conductor Nikisch and his men were received with the greatest enthusiasm. The soloist of the evening was Madame Lillian Nordica and she maintained the success that she has already inaugurated. At the close of the concert the orchestra left for New York.

RECORD, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/1

First Boston Symphony Concert.

The programme for the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Nikisch, at the Academy of Music next Wednesday evening, November 4, has been announced. There are to be two soloists. Mme. Lillian Nordica will sing the cavatina from Gounod's "Reine de Saba" and the polacca from "Mignon;" and Mr. Adamowski will play Saint Saens' "Rondo Capriccioso" for the violin. There are to be three orchestral numbers, namely, Beethoven's "Leonora," overture No. 3, a suite by Tschaikowsky op. 55, and the prelude to the "Meistersænger." It will be seen that the programme is one of much variety and interest.

INQUIRER, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/1

The Boston Symphony Concerts.

The sale of season tickets for the six concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music between now and April next is proceeding at 1119 Chestnut street, and has already been so large as to insure a financial success. These concerts have become the fashion. Society has taken them up, and so many people who might not be attracted by the music alone are arranging to attend them. This is one reason why this year the sale is far in excess of any previous season. The first concert will be given on Wednesday evening, November 4, when Mme. Lillian Nordica, a charming woman and a delightful singer, who was heard here last as Desdemona, in Verdi's opera of "Otello," performed at the Academy April 3, 1890, when Signor Tamagno made his Philadelphia debut, will be the soloist. Mme. Nordica is fresh from a series of European triumphs, and is said to be singing better than ever.

TRIBUNE. New York, N. Y.

Date 11/

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will occupy much of the attention of music-lovers in this vicinity this week. Its first concert will take place in Chickering Hall on Tuesday evening and on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening it will open the Brooklyn Philharmonic course. On Friday evening Mr. Kneisel and his club of chamber music players will be heard in Sherry's Hall.

BULLETIN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 10/31

It is said that Mr. Arthur Nikisch, who this season, as last, will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at the Academy of Music, receives a salary of $10,000 a year.

THE NEW HAVEN EVENING REGISTER, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1891.

AT THE THEATERS.

The Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra This Evening—Clara Morris November 8.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Arthur Nikisch conductor, will give its first and only concert of the season at the Hyperion theater this evening. The program, which has already been given in these columns, is a delightful one and the concert will be made exceptionally attractive by the first appearance in this city of Madame Nordica, the distinguished soprano.

Boston Daily Globe.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 4.

MME. NORDICA THE STAR.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Delights New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—The Boston Symphony orchestra gave their first concert in their New York season here tonight before an audience which packed Chickering Hall. Mme. Nordica was the soloist of the evening, making her first appearance here since her return to this country. The programme was as follows:

Overture, Benvenuto Cellini .... Berlioz
Aria, Ah Perfido .... Beethoven
Prelude, adagio and gavotte for string orchestra .... Bach, arranged by Bachrich
Aria, O hall of song, from Tannhauser ..... Wagner
Symphony, No. 3, in E flat (Rhenish), op. 97 .... Schumann

Mme. Nordica was received with the greatest enthusiasm, and the orchestra was never heard to better advantage.

HERALD, Chicago, Ill

Date 11/

Features of the Musical Season.

In the line of amusements Boston can suit all tastes. The musical season has begun in earnest, with the appearance of the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Nikisch, fresh from a rest in Europe, has lost none of his old power, and the orchestra itself played with great smoothness and delicacy, notwithstanding the long period of separation. Mme. Nordica, who improves every year, was the soloist at the opening concert, and at the second Mr. Winch, the local tenor, sang the pretty aria that interrupts the prelude to "Cavalleria Rusticana." The opera itself has been given here by two companies; once at a single and rather doleful performance in the Music Hall, when Miss Emma Juch was the only redeeming feature; and this week the Casino Company, headed by Pauline L'Allemand, are singing it at the Tremont Theatre. L'Allemand has improved since the old days of the National Opera Company, and her Santuzza is a really fine performance. Still, managers say she is not a drawing card. Everybody who hears her likes her, and yet she doesn't fill the houses. There is missing in her that indefinable something which, for want of a better name, we call "personal magnetism;" a gift of nature it is too and falls, like other gifts of nature, alike upon the just and unjust.

UNION, New Haven, Conn.

Date 10/30

AMUSEMENTS.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikish, conductor, will visit this city for a single concert at the Hyperion theater next Monday evening. The brilliant and varied attractions of the programme to be performed will doubtless call out concert-goers in great numbers. The appearance of Madame Nordica, the distinguished prima donna soprano will be a notable feature of the concert. The sale of seats is now in progress at the Hyperion theater.

NORTH AMERICAN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/2

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's First Concert This Season.

The programme for the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, at the Academy of Music next Wednesday evening, November 4, has been announced. There are to be two soloists. Mme. Lillian Nordica will sing the familiar scena from Gounod's "Reine de Saba" and the polacca from "Mignon," and Mr. Adamowski will play Saint-Saëns' "Rondo Capriccioso" for the violin. There are to be three orchestral numbers, namely, Beethoven's "Leonora," overture No. 3, a suite by Tschaikowsky op. 55 and the prelude to the Meistersinger. It will be seen that the programme is one of much variety and interest.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTET.

Encouraged by the success of previous seasons, Mr. Adamowski will again give a series of five chamber concerts at Haseltine's Galleries, of which the first will take place to-morrow afternoon at 2.30. The programme upon this occasion will comprise Mozart's string quartet in E flat major No. 14 Peters, three movements from Tschaikowsky's quartet in F op. 22 and two violin solos by Paderewski and Nachez.

[43]

Brooklyn Eagle 11/1

THE PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

Next Friday afternoon the Brooklyn public will hear some of the finest music that it has ever had the chance to listen to, for on that date the Boston symphony orchestra will begin the course of performances that will replace or constitute the Philharmonic concerts for this season. The concert, proper, will be given at the Academy on Saturday evening. This orchestra, which is permanent, being maintained through the munificence of a Boston banker who has organized it without reference to cost, has been received with wonder and delight wherever it has appeared. In volume and richness of tone, in expression, in firmness of attack, in brilliancy, both of ensemble and solo, and in the singing quality of the strings, this orchestra is admirable, and there is a vigor and sweep in its work that make one almost hold his breath. Consonant with the desires of a large portion of the public there will be solos at the concerts, Lillian Nordica being the choice for the first one. She will sing an air from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and Elizabeth's air from "Tannhauser," while the orchestra will play Beethoven's third overture to "Leonora," Tchaikowsky's new suite and the vorspiel to "The Master Singers."

HERALD, Baltimore, Md.

ate 10-31

The Boston Symphony Concerts.

The sale of season tickets for the six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, began on Thursday at Albert's. The orchestra is the largest that ever came to this city, and its renditions are unsurpassed. Among the soloists will be Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julia E. Wyman, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Eugen D'Albert and other eminent artists. There are many advance orders for seats.

EVENING POST, New York, N. Y.

Date 11/2

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first of six concerts at Chickering Hall to-morrow evening, Mme. Lillian Nordica being the soloist. Programme:

1. Overture—Benvenuto Cellini..............Berlioz
2. Aria—Ah perfido..............Beethoven
3. Adagio and Gavotte for Strings..............Bach
4. Aria—Tannhaeuser..............Wa ner
5. Symphony in E flat—(Rhenish)..............Schumann

New-York Daily Tribune.

FOUNDED BY HORACE GREELEY

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

It fell to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to have the honor of opening the local symphony season this year. The first concert of that admirable organisation took place in Chickering Hall last night. The social brilliancy which marked the concerts of last year was not maintained on this occasion, nor, though the audience was numerous enough to pay a handsome compliment to the visitors, were the evidences of financial success peculiarly striking. This is scarcely to be wondered at in view of the plethora of high-class music with which New-York City is threatened. Still it must be said that the fact that a foreign orchestra can command so large a share of the city's patronage is a tribute which can scarcely be overestimated. Mr. Nikisch's programme last night offered nothing new or striking. All the music was familiar. Comparison in one instance was somewhat urgently invited by the fact that by a coincidence the first two numbers on the list figured only two weeks ago on the first of Mr. Seidl's popular Sunday evening concerts at the Lenox Lyceum. The comparison could do no harm to Mr. Nikisch's band so far as it went to the "Benvenuto Cellini" overture of Berlioz, but Mme. Nordica's singing of Beethoven's "Ah Perfido" challenged the remark that New-Yorkers are accustomed to hear the scena only from singers with a command of the grand style which it exacts and which is not part of the equipment, admirable in some respects, possessed by Mme. Nordica. This lack was quite as manifest in the lady's performance of Elizabeth's entrance air in "Tannhaeuser," which was sadly deficient in the sweeping enthusiasm which is the characteristic expression of this piece of Wagner's music. The other numbers were the transcription for strings by Bachrich of a Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte of Bach's and Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony. The finest work of Mr. Nikisch was done in the Berlioz overture, which had a most eloquent reading—one that would have been more effective had not the smallness of the hall and the disposition of the brass choir combined to make the assaults of that assertive battalion somewhat painful to the ears of the listners and destructive of that nice balance of tone which has generally excited admiration at the concerts of the Boston Orchestra.

STANDARD-UNION, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date 11-2

Philharmonic Concerts.

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Nikisch, have come to be known as unsurpassed by any of their kind in this country. Patrons of the Philharmonic Society are to be congratulated upon the engagement of this fine organization to provide the coming series of concerts. The first concert will be given at the Academy of Music on Saturday evening of this week, preceded by the usual public rehearsal on Friday afternoon. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist on both occasions. The sale of season tickets for both series is now in progress. Single tickets will be ready at Chandler's on and after Wednesday.

[illegible]

JOSEPH PULITZER.

Published Every Day in the Year at Nos. 53-63 Park Row.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1891.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A Most Enjoyable Concert Under Mr. Nikisch's Leadership.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave their first concert this season at Chickering Hall last evening. The following was the programme:

Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini"..............Berlioz
Aria, "Ah, Perfido"..............Beethoven
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte for String Orchestra, arranged by Bachrich..............Bach
Aria, "O Hall of Song," from "Tannhaeuser," ....Wagner
Symphony No. 3, in E flat (Rhenish), Op. 97. ....Schumann
Vivace. Molto moderato. Andante. Religioso. Vivace.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra certainly stands to-day among the half-dozen great orchestras of the world where, a perfect balance of the component parts having been obtained, all sense of individualism is lost, merged into a forceful compact unit, thereby forming a magnificent solo instrument; the grandest instrument that human intellect and artistic developement has ever fashioned and perfected.

The soloist of the occasion, Mme. Lillian Mordica, who made her first appearance in America this season, was heard to advantage in two selections, in both of which she once more showed herself to be a finished and most acceptable artiste. Mme. Mordica is a most conscientious and earnest student, and as a natural result her progress in her art has been constant and marked. Her voice is still sowewhat lacking in force and resonance in the lower register, but her upper notes seemed to have gained in strength and sweetness, and her singing is marked by intelligence, sentiment and dramatic power. Her rendering of the Tannhäuser Aria was most adequate and satisfactory, and was deservedly applauded. It is refreshing to see a purely orchestral conductor who knows how to accompany a song properly. All in all it was anunusually enjoyable concert.

The New-York Times.

NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, NOV. 4, 1891.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first appearance here this season at Chickering Hall last night. The audience was not so large as it might have been had not the excitement of an election been in the air, but it endeavored to atone for its lack of numbers by an abundance of enthusiasm. The programme was composed of well-known music. The numbers were Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, Beethoven's concert aria, "Ah, perfido," Bach's familiar prelude, adagio, and gavotte for strings, the aria "Dich theure Halle," from "Tannhäuser," and Schumann's Rhenish symphony.

At no time in the course of the evening did the splendid power and unanimity of the orchestra show to better advantage than in the Berlioz number. Like all of the gifted Frenchman's compositions, this overture is an excellent medium for the display of an orchestra's virtuosity, but it is something more than that. It ranks as one of the best pieces of music written by Berlioz, and it offers a conductor opportunity for an intelligent and influential reading. Arthur Nikisch is indubitably a romantic conductor, and in this composition he finds ample scope for the effective display of his temperament. The work was given a wholly admirable reading last night. None of Mr. Nikisch's well-prepared exaggerations were out of place in this composition, and their effect was stirring and convincing.

The Bach number revealed in a brilliant manner the magnificent quality of Mr. Nikisch's strings, but firm believers in a classical style might possibly take exception to the over-elaboration of some of his nuances. The gavotte, however, was given in a truly admirable manner. In the Schumann symphony the conductor took the tempo of the first movement a trifle slowly—undoubtedly aiming at a breadth of utterance which the thematic material seems to call for, but which Schumann's imperfect instrumentation does not support. The last movement was given with overwhelming vigor and with that superb ensemble work for which this orchestra is justly celebrated.

The soloist of the evening was Mme. Lillian Nordica. The popular soprano's voice seemed just a little tired and did not always answer to the demands she made upon it. Perhaps weariness may account for the rather cool reading she gave both her numbers. Still her work was praiseworthy for its conscientious effort, and the audience rewarded her with an abundance of applause.

NEW YORK HERALD,
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER
4,

NORDICA AND BOSTON'S ORCHESTRA.

Freshened up and much improved by the cutting of windows along the north wall, affording much needed ventilation, is Chickering Hall, which was crowded last night with music lovers eager to welcome back the Boston Orchestra and its chief, Mr. Arthur Nikisch.

The programme of this opening concert of the series was short but well balanced and interesting, beginning with the Berlioz overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," in the performance of which this orchestra proved, as it has so often proved before, that it has the finest body of strings ever heard in this country. The beauty of tone, delicacy and finish of its strings were still more evident in an arrangement of the "Prelude, Adagio and Gandtte" of Bach, the last movement of which was absolutely startling in brilliancy and fire.

The soloist of the evening was Mme. Lillian Nordica, who was heard here after an absence of several years. I was rather unfortunate that she chose the "Ah, Perfido" aria from "Fidelio," and the "Hall of Song" aria from "Tannhauser," both of which require not only a more powerful voice than Mme. Nordica's, pleasant mezzo-soprano, but also infinitely more dramatic breadth of style. The reception awarded to the singer was, however, cordial in the extreme, and she was recalled a number of times.

The concert ended with a delightful performance of Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony.

THE SUN, WEDNESDAY,
NOVEMBER 4,

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Chickering Hall, preceding the regular performances of the Philharmonic and Symphony societies, may be considered as having formally opened the musical season of 1891-92. If its genial influence and the encouraging concomitants of a crowded and distinctly fashionable audience can be regarded as prophetic of a prosperous writer, from a musical standpoint, the series of entertainments that it inaugurated is likely to be a remarkable one. Chickering Hall, which, by the way, has been recarpeted and refreshed during the summer, besides being equipped with additional windows, that kept the auditorium at a comfortable temperature, has never been filled by a more appreciative and stylish assemblage.

Mr. Nikisch's programme was, as usual, brief, its interpretation occupying but an hour and three-quarters. It included Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," a prelude, adagia, and gavotte, by Bach, Schumann's E Flat symphony No. 3, in two vocal numbers—Beethoven's "Ah Perfido" and Elisabeth's entrance air from "Tannhäuser." To the habitual concertgoer there were certainly not one dozen bars of all this music that had not become familiar by repetition, and perhaps the strongest testimony as to the expressive character and technical perfection of the performance was furnished by the reverent attention with which it was followed and the applause that broke out at the close of each number.

The brightest impression of the evening was wrought by the Bach pieces for string orchestra, which delighted, first by their quaintness and next through an interpretation of extreme daintiness, precision, and finish. Viewing the quartet as the foundation and soul of the orchestra there is no withholding from Mr. Nikisch's band the palm of supremacy over all kindred organizations on this side of the water. Quite as admirable as the playing of the Bach tunes though was that of the solemn fourth movement of the symphony, from which the composition as whole takes its appelation. In this, feeling and execution were alike impeccable, while at times during the evening the horns were not exactly at their best in respect to intonation. The final movement of the symphony was also finely given.

Mme. Nordica, the soloist of the concert, is well known to the New York public as a vocalist of expesience, and a comely woman. She was happiest last night in the "Tannhäuser" air, in which she judiciously adhered to the German text, and in the plaintive passages of "Ah perfido." After the Wagner aria, into which she infused as much vitality as can well be put into it on the concert platform, Mme. Nordica was enthusiasticalled recalled.

NEWS, New Haven, Conn.

Date 11-3

THE NIKISCH-NORDICA CONCERT.

CLASSICAL MUSIC WELL RENDERED—THIS WEEK'S THEATRICAL ATTRACTIONS.

At the Hyperion last evening the Boston Symphony orchestra discoursed with all its old-time vivacity, harmony and exceeding finish. The rare execution of Mr. Nikisch's band is too well known in New Haven to need any higher praise. The classical numbers on the program, although displaying the peculiar genius of the several composers in a most striking manner, were yet rather unfamiliar to the general public and failed to arouse in the audience that enthusiasm which more popular selections would have done. The composition of Tschaikowski, unique and varied in its method and melodies, gave ample scope for the display of that remarkable unity and force of expression for which this orchestra is renowned. The talent of Mr. Nikisch's performers is only exceeded by his own skill in harmonizing them to that perfection which enables everyone to do his best.

Madame Lillian Nordica realized the anticipations of the audience in every respect. Her stately carriage and graceful demeanor at once won its sympathy. The selection from "Mignon" was well—even brilliantly rendered. Madame Nordica's voice is remarkably true in tone, and although perhaps a trifle lacking in sweetness and flexibility, is strong and assured, showing great culture and admirable training. It was some years ago that she made her successful debut in Paris and met with a most charming reception from that exacting and somewhat capricious audience. In grand opera she long ago won for herself deserved recognition of her vocal and histrionic art. She persistently refused to render an encore after either of her musical numbers last evening, although the gallery gods were very demonstrative in their demands for one after the aria from "Mignon." A memorable concert—without an encore during the entire performance.

ROMOLA.

PRESS, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/2

MUSICAL MATTERS.

43

The Boston Symphony Orchestra of eighty-five musicians, with Arthur Nikisch as conductor, will give the first of its series of concerts of the season at the Academy of Music next Wednesday evening. The high esteem in which Mr. Nikisch and his fine orchestra are held by concert-goers of this city is shown by the large subscription, which exceeds that of any previous year. Madame Nordica, the distinguished soprano, will be the singer at the opening concert, when she will be heard here for the first time since her appearance in opera two years ago with Tamagno. Her superior vocalization at that time will be well remembered. T. Adamowski, the violinist, will also contribute a solo number. Mr. Nikisch's programme is as follows: Overture, "Lenore," No. 3, Beethoven; aria, "La Reine de Saba," Gounod, Mme. Nordica; suite, (new,) Tschaikowsky; rondo capriccioso for violin, Saint-Saens, Mr. Adamowski; polacco, "Mignon," Thomas, Mme. Nordica; prelude, "Die Meistersinger," Wagner.

The first chamber concert of the season by the Adamowski String Quartette takes place to-morrow afternoon at the Hazeltine Galleries. The piece de resistance will be a complete Mozart quartette. The concert begins at 2.30 o'clock.

STA[illegible] New York, N. Y.

te 11-4

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Brilliant Opening of the Season at Chickering Hall Last Night.

Arthur Nikisch and his band from Boston gave their first concert in Chickering Hall last night, and demonstrated undeniably by the large audience they gathered to listen to them that politics were not paramount in the city after all. The piece de resistance of the evening's programme was the Rhenish Symphony of Schumann, which received a vigorous, sympathetic interpretation at the hands of Mr. Nikisch, who conducts with his same wonderful vitality and magnetism as ever. All of the many delightful characteristics of the orchestra were present in this performance. Such a string quartet and such a wood and brass choir is at once a charm and the envy of a metropolitan music lover. We simply have nothing like it in New York, neither in quality nor in ensemble.

The well-balanced strings were heard to great advantage in the Bach numbers, the familiar prelude, Adajio and Gavotte, and the virtuosity of the entire orchestra had abundant chances for display in Berlioz's brilliantly scored "Benvenuto Cellini" overture. Mme. Lillian Nordica sang for the first time here in several seasons, Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," and Wagner's aria, "Oh Hall of Song" from Tannhauser.

Barring a tendency toward theatrical exaggeration in the Beethoven aria, it was sung acceptably enough. The "Tannhauser" aria was beyond her altogether. Her voice is frosty in quality, and in the upper register forced to sharpness. She was recalled three times after her last number.

The Musical Courier.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1891

The Brooklyn Philharmonic Concerts.—The first of the series takes place next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Mr. Arthur Nikisch will conduct, Lillian Nordica being the soloist. She will sing an air from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and Elizabeth's air from "Tannhäuser," while the orchestra will play Beethovon's third overture to "Leonora," Tschaikowsky's new suite and the Vorspiel to "The Meistersingers."

called recalled.

TRIBUNE. New York, N. Y.

Date 11-4

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

It fell to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to have the honor of opening the local symphony season this year. The first concert of that admirable organization took place in Chickering Hall last night. The social brilliancy which marked the concerts of last year was not maintained on this occasion, nor, though the audience was numerous enough to pay a handsome compliment to the visitors, were the evidences of financial success peculiarly striking. This is scarcely to be wondered at in view of the plethora of high-class music with which New-York City is threatened. Still it must be said that the fact that a foreign orchestra can command so large a share of the city's patronage is a tribute which can scarcely be overestimated. Mr. Nikisch's programme last night offered nothing new or striking. All the music was familiar. Comparison in one instance was somewhat urgently invited by the fact that by a coincidence the first two numbers on the list figured only two weeks ago on the first of Mr. Seidl's popular Sunday evening concerts at the Lenox Lyceum. The comparison could do no harm to Mr. Nikisch's band so far as it went to the "Benvenuto Cellini" overture of Berlioz, but Mme. Nordica's singing of Beethoven's "Ah Perfido" challenged the remark that New-Yorkers are accustomed to hear the scena only from singers with a command of the grand style which it exacts and which is not part of the equipment, admirable in some respects, possessed by Mme. Nordica. This lack was quite as manifest in the lady's performance of Elizabeth's entrance air in "Tannhaeuser," which was sadly deficient in the sweeping enthusiasm which is the characteristic expression of this piece of Wagner's music. The other numbers were the transcription for strings by Bachrich of a Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte of Bach's and Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony. The finest work of Mr. Nikisch was done in the Berlioz overture, which had a most eloquent reading—one that would have been more effective had not the smallness of the hall and the disposition of the brass choir combined to make the assaults of that assertive battalion somewhat painful to the ears of the listners and destructive of the nice balance of tone which has generally excited admiration at the concerts of the Boston Orchestra.

CITIZEN, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date 11-3

[illegible] Concerts.

The concerts of the Philharmonic Society, which are to be given this season by the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open with a public rehearsal and concert at the Academy on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of this week. A brilliant programme is announced, including solo numbers by Mme. Nordica, the distinguished American soprano. The sale of season tickets for both public rehearsals and concerts is now in progress. The sale of single tickets for this week's performances opens at Chandler's on Wednesday.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, NOV. 5.

Symphony Orchestra.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 4.—The Boston Symphony orchestra made its first appearance here this season at the Academy of Music tonight, before a large audience. Conductor Nikisch was warmly received on his appearance, and throughout the evening the audience was most enthusiastic. The soloists were Mme. Lilian Nordica and Mr. T. Adamowski.

Brooklyn Eagle 11/1

THE PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

Next Friday afternoon the Brooklyn public will hear some of the finest music that it has ever had the chance to listen to, for on that date the Boston symphony orchestra will begin the course of performances that will replace or constitute the Philharmonic concerts for this season. The concert, proper, will be given at the Academy on Saturday evening. This orchestra, which is permanent, being maintained through the munificence of a Boston banker who has organized it without reference to cost, has been received with wonder and delight wherever it has appeared. In volume and richness of tone, in expression, in firmness of attack, in brilliancy, both of ensemble and solo, and in the singing quality of the strings, this orchestra is admirable, and there is a vigor and sweep in its work that make one almost hold his breath. Consonant with the desires of a large portion of the public there will be solos at the concerts, Lillian Nordica being the choice for the first one. She will sing an air from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and Elizabeth's air from "Tannhauser," while the orchestra will play Beethoven's third overture to "Leonora," Tchaikowsky's new suite and the vorspiel to "The Master Singers."

HERALD, Baltimore, Md.

ate........ 10-31

The Boston Symphony Concerts.

The sale of season tickets for the six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, began on Thursday at Albert's. The orchestra is the largest that ever came to this city, and its renditions are unsurpassed. Among the soloists will be Mme. Lillian Nordica, Mrs. Julia E. Wyman, Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld, Eugen D'Albert and other eminent artists. There are many advance orders for seats.

EVENING POST, New York, N. Y.

Date 11/2

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first of six concerts at Chickering Hall to-morrow evening, Mme. Lillian Nordica being the soloist. Programme:

1. Overture—Benvenuto Cellini............Berlioz
2. Aria—Ah perfido............Beethoven
3. Adagio and Gavotte for Strings............Bach
4. Aria—Tannhaeuser............Wagner
5. Symphony in E flat—(Rhenish)............Schumann

New-York Daily Tribune.

FOUNDED BY HORACE GREELEY

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

It fell to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to have the honor of opening the local symphony season this year. The first concert of that admirable organization took place in Chickering Hall last night. The social brilliancy which marked the concerts of last year was not maintained on this occasion, nor, though the audience was numerous enough to pay a handsome compliment to the visitors, were the evidences of financial success peculiarly striking. This is scarcely to be wondered at in view of the plethora of high-class music with which New-York City is threatened. Still it must be said that the fact that a foreign orchestra can command so large a share of the city's patronage is a tribute which can scarcely be overestimated. Mr. Nikisch's programme last night offered nothing new or striking. All the music was familiar. Comparison in one instance was somewhat urgently invited by the fact that by a coincidence the first two numbers on the list figured only two weeks ago on the first of Mr. Seidl's popular Sunday evening concerts at the Lenox Lyceum. The comparison could do no harm to Mr. Nikisch's band so far as it went to the "Benvenuto Cellini" overture of Berlioz, but Mme. Nordica's singing of Beethoven's "Ah Perfido" challenged the remark that New-Yorkers are accustomed to hear the scena only from singers with a command of the grand style which it exacts and which is not part of the equipment, admirable in some respects, possessed by Mme. Nordica. This lack was quite as manifest in the lady's performance of Elizabeth's entrance air in "Tannhaeuser," which was sadily deficient in the sweeping enthusiasm which is the characteristic expression of this piece of Wagner's music. The other numbers were the transcription for strings by Bachrich of a Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte of Bach's and Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony. The finest work of Mr. Nikisch was done in the Berlioz overture, which had a most eloquent reading—one that would have been more effective had not the smallness of the hall and the disposition of the brass choir combined to make the assaults of that assertive battalion somewhat painful to the ears of the listners and destructive of that nice balance of tone which has generally excited admiration at the concerts of the Boston Orchestra.

STANDARD-UNION, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date........ 11-2

Philharmonic Concerts.

The concerts of the ~~Boston Symphony Or~~chestra under the direction of Arthur Nikisch, have come to be known as unsurpassed by any of their kind in this country. Patrons of the Philharmonic Society are to be congratulated upon the engagement of this fine organization to provide the coming series of concerts. The first concert will be given at the Academy of Music on Saturday evening of this week, preceded by the usual public rehearsal on Friday afternoon. Mme. Nordica will be the soloist on both occasions. The sale of season tickets for both series is now in progress. Single tickets will be ready at Chandler's on and after Wednesday.

The World

JOSEPH PULITZER.

Published Every Day in the Year at Nos. 53-63 Park Row.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1891.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A Most Enjoyable Concert Under Mr. Nikisch's Leadership.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave their first concert this season at Chickering Hall last evening. The following was the programme:

Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini"............Berlioz
Aria, "Ah, Perfido"............Beethoven
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte for String Orchestra, arranged by Bachrich............Bach
Aria, "O Hall of Song," from "Tannhaeuser," Wagner
Symphony No. 3, in E flat (Rhenish), Op. 97. Schumann
Vivace. Molto moderato. Andante. Religioso. Vivace.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra certainly stands to-day among the half-dozen great orchestras of the world where, a perfect balance of the component parts having been obtained, all sense of individualism is lost, merged into a forceful compact unit, thereby forming a magnificent solo instrument; the grandest instrument that human intellect and artistic developement has ever fashioned and perfected.

The soloist of the occasion, Mme. Lillian Mordica, who made her first appearance in America this season, was heard to advantage in two selections, in both of which she once more showed herself to be a finished and most acceptable artiste. Mme. Mordica is a most conscientious and earnest student, and as a natural result her progress in her art has been constant and marked. Her voice is still sowewhat lacking in force and resonance in the lower register, but her upper notes seemed to have gained in strength and sweetness, and her singing is marked by intelligence, sentiment and dramatic power. Her rendering of the Tannhäuser Aria was most adequate and satisfactory, and was deservedly applauded. It is refreshing to see a purely orchestral conductor who knows how to accompany a song properly. All in all it was anunusually enjoyable concert.

The New-York Times.

NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, NOV. 4, 1891.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first appearance here this season at Chickering Hall last night. The audience was not so large as it might have been had not the excitement of an election been in the air, but it endeavored to atone for its lack of numbers by an abundance of enthusiasm. The programme was composed of well-known music. The numbers were Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, Beethoven's concert aria, "Ah, perfido," Bach's familiar prelude, adagio, and gavotte for strings, the aria "Dich theure Halle," from "Tannhäuser," and Schumann's Rhenish symphony.

At no time in the course of the evening did the splendid power and unanimity of the orchestra show to better advantage than in the Berlioz number. Like all of the gifted Frenchman's compositions, this overture is an excellent medium for the display of an orchestra's virtuosity, but it is something more than that. It ranks as one of the best pieces of music written by Berlioz, and it offers a conductor opportunity for an intelligent and influential reading. Arthur Nikisch is indubitably a romantic conductor, and in this composition he finds ample scope for the effective display of his temperament. The work was given a wholly admirable reading last night. None of Mr. Nikisch's well-prepared exaggerations were out of place in this composition, and their effect was stirring and convincing.

The Bach number revealed in a brilliant manner the magnificent quality of Mr. Nikisch's strings, but firm believers in a classical style might possibly take exception to the over-elaboration of some of his nuances. The gavotte, however, was given in a truly admirable manner. In the Schumann symphony the conductor took the tempo of the first movement a trifle slowly—undoubtedly aiming at a breadth of utterance which the thematic material seems to call for, but which Schumann's imperfect instrumentation does not support. The last movement was given with overwhelming vigor and with that superb ensemble work for which this orchestra is justly celebrated.

The soloist of the evening was Mme. Lillian Nordica. The popular soprano's voice seemed just a little tired and did not always answer to the demands she made upon it. Perhaps weariness may account for the rather cool reading she gave both her numbers. Still her work was praiseworthy for its conscientious effort, and the audience rewarded her with an abundance of applause.

NEW YORK HERALD,

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4,

NORDICA AND BOSTON'S ORCHESTRA.

Freshened up and much improved by the cutting of windows along the north wall, affording much needed ventilation, is Chickering Hall, which was crowded last night with music lovers eager to welcome back the Boston Orchestra and its chief, Mr. Arthur Nikisch.

The programme of this opening concert of the series was short but well balanced and interesting, beginning with the Berlioz overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," in the performance of which this orchestra proved, as it has so often proved before, that it has the finest body of strings ever heard in this country. The beauty of tone, delicacy and finish of its strings were still more evident in an arrangement of the "Prelude, Adagio and Gandtte" of Bach, the last movement of which was absolutely startling in brilliancy and fire.

The soloist of the evening was Mme. Lillian Nordica, who was heard here after an absence of several years. I was rather unfortunate that she chose the "Ah, Perfido" aria from "Fidelio," and the "Hall of Song" aria from "Tannhauser," both of which require not only a more powerful voice than Mme. Nordica's, pleasant mezzo-soprano, but also infinitely more dramatic breadth of style. The reception awarded to the singer was, however, cordial in the extreme, and she was recalled a number of times.

The concert ended with a delightful performance of Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony.

THE SUN, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4,

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Chickering Hall, preceding the regular performances of the Philharmonic and Symphony societies, may be considered as having formally opened the musical season of 1891-92. If its genial influence, and the encouraging concomitants of a crowded and distinctly fashionable audience can be regarded as prophetic of a prosperous writer, from a musical standpoint, the series of entertainments that it inaugurated is likely to be a remarkable one. Chickering Hall, which, by the way, has been recarpeted and refreshed during the summer, besides being equipped with additional windows, that kept the auditorium at a comfortable temperature, has never been filled by a more appreciative and stylish assemblage.

Mr. Nikisch's programme was, as usual, brief, its interpretation occupying but an hour and three-quarters. It included Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," a prelude, adagia, and gavotte, by Bach, Schumann's E Flat symphony No. 3, in two vocal numbers—Beethoven's "Ah Perfido" and Elisabeth's entrance air from "Tannhäuser." To the habitual concertgoer there were certainly not one dozen bars of all this music that had not become familiar by repetition, and perhaps the strongest testimony as to the expressive character and technical perfection of the performance was furnished by the reverent attention with which it was followed and the applause that broke out at the close of each number.

The brightest impression of the evening was wrought by the Bach pieces for string orchestra, which delighted, first by their quaintness, and next through an interpretation of extreme daintiness, precision, and finish. Viewing the quartet as the foundation and soul of the orchestra there is no withholding from Mr. Nikisch's band the palm of supremacy over all kindred organizations on this side of the water. Quite as admirable as the playing of the Bach tunes though was that of the solemn fourth movement of the symphony, from which the composition as whole takes its appelation. In this, feeling and execution were alike impeccable, while at times during the evening the horns were not exactly at their best in respect to intonation. The final movement of the symphony was also finely given.

Mme. Nordica, the soloist of the concert, is well known to the New York public as a vocalist of expesience, and a comely woman. She was happiest last night in the "Tannhäuser" air, in which she judiciously adhered to the German text, and in the plaintive passages of "Ah perfido." After the Wagner aria, into which she infused as much vitality as can well be put into it on the concert platform, Mme. Nordica was enthusiasticalled recalled.

NEWS, New Haven, Conn.

Date........ 11 3

THE NIKISCH-NORDICA CONCERT.

CLASSICAL MUSIC WELL RENDERED—THIS WEEK'S THEATRICAL ATTRACTIONS.

At the Hyperion last evening the Boston Symphony orchestra discoursed with all its old-time vivacity, harmony and exceeding finish. The rare execution of Mr. Nikisch's band is too well known in New Haven to need any higher praise. The classical numbers on the program, although displaying the peculiar genius of the several composers in a most striking manner, were yet rather unfamiliar to the general public and failed to arouse in the audience that enthusiasm which more popular selections would have done. The composition of Tschaikowski, unique and varied in its method and melodies, gave ample scope for the display of that remarkable unity and force of expression for which this orchestra is renowned. The talent of Mr. Nikisch's performers is only exceeded by his own skill in harmonizing them to that perfection which enables everyone to do his best.

Madame Lillian Nordica realized the anticipations of the audience in every respect. Her stately carriage and graceful demeanor at once won its sympathy. The selection from "Mignon" was well—even brilliantly rendered. Madame Nordica's voice is remarkably true in tone, and although perhaps a trifle lacking in sweetness and flexibility, is strong and assured, showing great culture and admirable training. It was some years ago that she made her successful debut in Paris and met with a most charming reception from that exacting and somewhat capricious audience. In grand opera she long ago won for herself deserved recognition of her vocal and histrionic art. She persistently refused to render an encore after either of her musical numbers last evening, although the gallery gods were very demonstrative in their demands for one after the aria from "Mignon." A memorable concert—without an encore during the entire performance.

ROMOLA.

PRESS, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date........ 11/2

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra of eighty-five musicians, with Arthur Nikisch as conductor, will give the first of its series of concerts of the season at the Academy of Music next Wednesday evening. The high esteem in which Mr. Nikisch and his fine orchestra are held by concert-goers of this city is shown by the large subscription, which exceeds that of any previous year. Madame Nordica, the distinguished soprano, will be the singer at the opening concert, when she will be heard here for the first time since her appearance in opera two years ago with Tamagno. Her superior vocalization at that time will be well remembered. T. Adamowski, the violinist, will also contribute a solo number. Mr. Nikisch's programme is as follows: Overture, "Lenore," No. 3, Beethoven; aria, "La Reine de Saba," Gounod, Mme. Nordica; suite, (new,) Tschaikowsky; rondo capriccioso for violin, Saint-Saens, Mr. Adamowski: polacco, "Mignon," Thomas, Mme. Nordica; prelude, "Die Meistersinger," Wagner.

The first chamber concert of the season by the Adamowski String Quartette takes place tomorrow afternoon at the Hazeltine Galleries. The piece de resistance will be a complete Mozart quartette. The concert begins at 2.30 o'clock.

STAR, New York, N. Y.

te........ 11-4

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Brilliant Opening of the Season at Chickering Hall Last Night.

Arthur Nikisch and his band from Boston gave their first concert in Chickering Hall last night, and demonstrated undeniably by the large audience they gathered to listen to them that politics were not paramount in the city after all. The piece de resistance of the evening's programme was the Rhenish Symphony of Schumann, which received a vigorous, sympathetic interpretation at the hands of Mr. Nikisch, who conducts with his same wonderful vitality and magnetism as ever. All of the many delightful characteristics of the orchestra were present in this performance. Such a string quartet and such a wood and brass choir is at once a charm and the envy of a metropolitan music lover. We simply have nothing like it in New York, neither in quality nor in ensemble.

The well-balanced strings were heard to great advantage in the Bach numbers, the familiar prelude, Adajio and Gavotte, and the virtuosity of the entire orchestra had abundant chances for display in Berlioz's brilliantly scored "Benvenuto Cellini" overture. Mme. Lillian Nordica sang for the first time here in several seasons, Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," and Wagner's aria, "Oh Hall of Song" from Tannhauser.

Barring a tendency toward theatrical exaggeration in the Beethoven aria, it was sung acceptably enough. The "Tannhauser" aria was beyond her altogether. Her voice is frosty in quality, and in the upper register forced to sharpness. She was recalled three times after her last number.

The Musical Courier.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1891

The Brooklyn Philharmonic Concerts.—The first of the series takes place next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Mr. Arthur Nikisch will conduct, Lillian Nordica being the soloist. She will sing an air from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and Elizabeth's air from "Tannhäuser," while the orchestra will play Beethovon's third overture to "Leonora," Tschaikowsky's new suite and the Vorspiel to "The Meistersingers."

called recalled.

TRIBUNE. New York, N. Y.

Date 11-4

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

It fell to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to have the honor of opening the local symphony season this year. The first concert of that admirable organization took place in Chickering Hall last night. The social brilliancy which marked the concerts of last year was not maintained on this occasion, nor, though the audience was numerous enough to pay a handsome compliment to the visitors, were the evidences of financial success peculiarly striking. This is scarcely to be wondered at in view of the plethora of high-class music with which New-York City is threatened. Still it must be said that the fact that a foreign orchestra can command so large a share of the city's patronage is a tribute which can scarcely be overestimated. Mr. Nikisch's programme last night offered nothing new or striking. All the music was familiar. Comparison in one instance was somewhat urgently invited by the fact that by a coincidence the first two numbers on the list figured only two weeks ago on the first of Mr. Seidl's popular Sunday evening concerts at the Lenox Lyceum. The comparison could do no harm to Mr. Nikisch's band so far as it went to the "Benvenuto Cellini" overture of Berlioz, but Mme. Nordica's singing of Beethoven's "Ah Perfido" challenged the remark that New-Yorkers are accustomed to hear the scena only from singers with a command of the grand style which it exacts and which is not part of the equipment, admirable in some respects, possessed by Mme. Nordica. This lack was quite as manifest in the lady's performance of Elizabeth's entrance air in "Tannhaeuser," which was sadily deficient in the sweeping enthusiasm which is the characteristic expression of this piece of Wagner's music. The other numbers were the transcription for strings by Bachrich of a Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte of Bach's and Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony. The finest work of Mr. Nikisch was done in the Berlioz overture, which had a most eloquent reading—one that would have been more effective had not the smallness of the hall and the disposition of the brass choir combined to make the assaults of that assertive battalion somewhat painful to the ears of the listners and destructive of the nice balance of tone which has generally excited admiration at the concerts of the Boston Orchestra.

CITIZEN, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date........ 11-3

Philharmonic Concerts.

The concerts of the Philharmonic Society, which are to be given this season by the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open with a public rehearsal and concert at the Academy on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of this week. A brilliant programme is announced, including solo numbers by Mme. Nordica, the distinguished American soprano. The sale of season tickets for both public rehearsals and concerts is now in progress. The sale of single tickets for this week's performances opens at Chandler's on Wednesday.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, NOV. 5.

Symphony Orchestra.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 4.—The Boston Symphony orchestra made its first appearance here this season at the Academy of Music tonight, before a large audience. Conductor Nikisch was warmly received on his appearance, and throughout the evening the audience was most enthusiastic. The soloists were Mme. Lilian Nordica and Mr. T. Adamowski.

[illegible]

[illegible] NOVEMBER 5, 1891.

[illegible] Symphony orchestra began its [illegible] season of concerts at Philadelphia [illegible] evening, the immense Academy [illegible] being packed to the doors. The [illegible] sale has practically closed out [illegible] of seats for the entire series. Last [illegible] Mme. Lillian Norton and Mr. Adamowski were the soloists, and both artists [illegible] grand ovations.

[illegible]ER AND TRANSCRIPT

Philadelphia, Thursday, Nov. 5, 1891.

Academy of Music—The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

At the first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night one of those big audiences that are sure to crowd the Academy of Music on such occasions welcomed the return of Mr. Nikisch and his splendid band. There was no symphony on the programme, its usual place being given to the meteoric Tschaikowsky in his last suite, not hitherto performed here by Mr. Nikisch. First Beethoven's grand "Leonore" overture was played, a work that conductor and men knew by heart. Mr. Nikisch's reading differs very decidedly, in many particulars of time and expression, from that which has made the work familiar here, but is not likely to obscure recollections of the latter interpretation.

Tschaikowsky's suite is in four movements. The first is an "Elegie," possibly Gray's, for the succeeding one is a waltz ("melancholique") which seems to people the imagination with dancers in full mourning, and the succeeding scherzo suggests a grave yard frolic. The final movement, a theme and variations, appears to have no particular relations with the rest of the suite, except that it is in the same genre style, which makes the whole a sort of musical curio, overwrought at times to the point of tediousness, but showing at all points the mastery of its author in fanciful and elaborate orchestral effects. It need hardly be said that the orchestra played it to perfection, for it is in this kind of music that it is at its best.

Mr. Adamowski furnished one of the most interesting items of the concert by his playing of Saint Saens's Rondo Capriccioso for violin, his playing being characterized by a clearness, expressiveness and flawless execution that won for him the heartiest recognition of his hearers.

Mme. Lillian Nordica sang the well-known aria from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and the equally familiar polacca from Thomas's "Mignon." Her voice retains almost unimpaired its agreeable quality, though she had not last night the evenness and fullness of tone required for an impressive presentation of Gounod's aria, which, nevertheless, she sang with good effect. In the polacca she sang with an ease, grace and vivacity that approached brilliancy, and fairly merited the three or four warm recalls that followed her achievement in it.

The spirited performance of Wagner's "Meistersinger" overture brought the concert to a close.

THE TIMES-PHILADELPHIA. NOVEMBER 5,

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

A Crowded House Greets the Boston Orchestra at the Academy.

The season at the Academy of Music may be said to have opened last night, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first of its annual series of concerts before a very large and brilliant audience that qute filled the house. The orchestra appeared more numerous than ever. Its numbers make an unusual display upon the stage, though it nowise gains proportionately in volume of tone, Mr. Nikisch's aim being apparently to make many instruments sound like few. The concert began with a remarkably small and pale representation of the great "Leonore" overture. This is usually thought of as a splendid, inspiring work. Mr. Nikisch gives it a curious far-away effect, as though heard in another room, like the "Loin du Bal," and he dwells so elaborately upon details that his climaxes are lost. The overture displayed the fine virtuosity of the violins, that in accuracy of execution are unexcelled, but it is always a disappointment to hear one of Beethoven's great orchestral compositions treated as chamber music.

Nearly half the programme was occupied by a suite of Tschaikowsky. The first of the four movements, a poetic and dainty elegy, is much the best. After that the work wanders off into vague and formless dullness, with most wearying effect. The last movement consists of some clever variations on an obvious theme that are often bright and graceful, but when it is recalled what a wealth of better music, even of the same school, remains unfamiliar to our public, this hour did not seem profitably spent. It ought to be added that the suite was beautifully performed, with more earnestness and more color than were given to Beethoven.

Madame Nordica, who is always a pleasing singer, gave the favorite aria from "La Reine de Saba" and the polacca from "Mignon," with good voice and good taste, and Mr. Adamowski played charmingly Saint-Saens' rondo for the violin, with a bright tone and clean execution and a suave and manly style. In the accompaniments to the arias, notably in the "Mignon," the orchestra was delightful. The concert closed with the prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

TIMES, New York, N. Y.

Date 11/5

[illegible] noted Kneisel String Quartet of Boston [illegible] its first concert at Sherry's to-morrow

---

INQUIRER, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11-4

[illegible]swer at court

The Adamowski Recital.

The first of the series of Adamowski Chamber concerts was given yesterday afternoon at Haseltine's Galleries before a large audience. The programme was as follows:

43

Quartet in E flat major (No. 14 Peters)..........Mozart

Allegro ma non troppo—Andante con moto.
Minuetto allegretto—Allegro vivace.
For violin solo—
(a) Melodie..........Paderewski
(b) Gipsy Dance..........Nachez
Mr. T. Adamowski.
Three movements from quartet in F, op. 22..........Tschaikowsky
Scherzo, Andante, Finale.

The work of the artists was fully up to the high standard which they have established long ago. It was an artistic treat.

Philadelphia Inquirer

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

The Academy of Music was crowded last night at the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The organization has been slightly reinforced and is better than ever before. The programme last night was as follows:

Beethoven..........Overture, "Leonore," No. 3
Gounod..........Aria from "Queen of Sheba"
Mme. Lillian Nordica.
Tschaikowsky..........Suite, Op. 55
Elegie.
Valse melancholique.
Scherzo.
Tema con Variazioni.
Saint-Saens..........Rondo Capriccioso for violin
Mr. T. Adamowski.
A. Thomas..........Polacca from "Mignon"
Mme. Nordica.
Wagner..........Prelude, "Die Meistersinger"

It is a little remarkable that the first symphony concert of the season should contain no symphony. In place was substituted a suite by Tschaikowsky, a diversified series of compositions, which show great skill in construction, but are musically less interesting than might be desired. The Leonore (No. 3) overture and the "Meistersinger" prelude largely atoned for this. The Leonore overtures are all works of high value, but the No. 3 ranks as chief. It was played last night superbly.

Mme. Nordica was in excellent voice and sang the aria with great power, but was less pleasing in the polacca.

Mr. Adamowski played brilliantly, and the orchestration was masterly. The orchestra starts out with the prospect of the most brilliant season in its history.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS.—THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 5.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Auspicious Opening of This Season's Series.

The Academy of Music was crowded from parquet to gallery last evening with an audience representing the music lovers of this city, who had assembled to listen to the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the season of 1891-92. So thoroughly was the interest aroused that seats were selling at a premium and many were unable to obtain even standing room. This superb musical organization has made such marvelous progress in its work and in popularity under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Nikisch as to place it in the foreground of renown in America as a symphony orchestra.

The great ovation tendered Mme. Lillian Nordica upon her first appearance demonstrated that the diva stood high in the favor of the audience. For some moments she was compelled to bow her acknowledgment of the flattering reception given her. Her first number was the beautiful aria from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba." Mme Nordica in this selection displayed advantageously her full, rich, clear soprano voice, and but for the occasional nasal tones—which resulted from singing in the French language—rendered this aria equal to any prima donna that has been heard in it on this continent. In her second selection, the "Polacca," from "Mignon" she did not please as well, for her intonation in some of the colorature passages was faulty and made the impression that it was hard work. Yet in both of her solos she convinced all that she was a great vocalist, in possession of a beautiful trill and clear, powerful, well-cultivated voice.

The symphonic work assumed by the orchestra was the Tschaikowsky "Suite," opus 55. The grandeur of the orchestra is supremely suited for work of this kind and throughout the excellence of the string and the beauties of the reed and wind instruments were shown to advantage. Mr. Nikish's treatment thereof was masterly and the delicacy with which the "Elegie" and "Valse Melancholique" were given aroused enthusiasm. In the "Tema con Variazoni," fine shadings and dainty phrasing were the main features.

The violin soloist, Mr. T. Adamowski, gave a finished rendering of Saint-Saens' "Rondo Capriccioso," in which his powerful tone and clear intonation stood out boldly. His execution is good, but his harmonics are rather weak and imperfect.

In the Wagner number, "Prelude of Die Meistersinger," Mr. Nikisch displayed the weakness of brass. Three cornets, a quartette of French horns, three trombones and a tuba are inadequate for the proper rendering of this selection. Not that it is necessary to have a thundering brass effect but the combination is too small. As a whole the concert was one of the grandest heard here in years and made many new admirers for this great musical organization.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD, NOVEMBER 5, 1891

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.

Last evening at the Academy of Music a crowded and fashionable audience welcomed the Boston Symphony Orchestra, probably the most proficient and thoroughly disciplined band of musicians ever organized in this country. In the orchestral numbers—Beethoven's "Leonora" overture, the Tschaikowsky suite of 55, and the prelude to the Meistersænger, the admirable training and perfect artistic balance of tone values was exemplified with wonderful effect. The Wagnerian selection especially was given with a breezy and poetic ardor that approached to inspiration. Mr. Adamowski played Saint-Saens' difficult "Rondo Capriccioso," for solo violin and orchestra, with amazing technical facility and fine appreciation of the beauties of the work. This violinist is increasing steadily in artistic stature and is likely to go far. Mme. Nordica, who has not been heard here since Tamagno's "Otello" engagement, sang Gounod's cavatina "Plus grand dans son obscurite," and the Titania polka from "Mignon," giving the intricate and florid ornamentation of the latter air with great facility. The high dramatic quality of the Gounod selection, however, was quite beyond her reach.

Boston Daily Globe.

FRIDAY, NOV. 6.

Boston Artists at Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5—The Boston Symphony orchestra gave their first concert of the season here tonight in the Academy Concert Hall. The programme was as follows:

Beethoven..........Overture, Leonore, No. 3
Gounod..........Aria from the Queen of Sheba
Tschaikowsky..........Suite, op. 55
Elegie.
Valse melancholique.
Scherzo.
Tema con Variazioni.
A. Thomas..........Polacca from Mignon
Wagner..........Prelude, Die Meistersinger

Mme. Nordica was the soloist of the evening and repeated her successes of old.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, NOV. 7, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

Reflection made, the one thing which deserves praise and remembrance out of the last Symphony concert, is Mr. Albert Grünfeld's Boston début in the Rubinstein D-minor concerto for pianoforte. While this work and its reading cannot have shown all the qualities which the new pianist possesses, and very likely did not show him in altogether the most favorable light, it nevertheless proved him to be a man of mark, who has won by substantial and straightforward work the eminent position and complimentary titles which are his in Europe. He belongs among the executants rather than the interpreters, and his command of the key-board is remarkable for its force and also for its finesse—thus touching the extremes of technical pianism—and also being both bold and sure in meeting all the other tests to which a virtuoso of this day must respond. It is true that this force is sometimes abused and that finesse displayed fantastically, as it is also apparent that sweetness of sound is often substituted for suavity of sentiment. But Mr. Grünfeld's peculiar excellences—which will undoubtedly shine most clearly in a diversified programme of music more nearly approaching the chamber style—are so many that it would be unreasonable to complain because in his concerto he did not supply something, the lack of which was evidently due to his temperament and the general course of his art work. The concert began with a turgid and tumultuous thing by young Richard Strauss, who calls it a symphonic poem, and bases it upon some verses about Don Juan, by Lenaus. The poem does not mean much and the music less. It is noisily rich, soundingly sensuous, clamorous to the top of all the brazen lungs of the orchestra, demonstrative with almost every known instrument of percussion and imitative of nearly all the fantastic or vociferous authors of the time. It has some pretty melodies, some splendid instrumental effects and some big climaxes; but it has no more consistency and meaning than a turbulent sunset full of huge clouds and vapors resplendent with all the fierce, full colors of the celestial palette. That it might be made to appear at least as meaning more, is possible; for Mr. Nikisch did not manage with it as if he understood it himself, being a great part of the time from a half-beat to a whole one behind the orchestra and having no power to prevent false entrances and improvised dissonances. Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony ended the evening in a performance which ranged from the acceptable and mediocre to the absolutely bad.

[illegible]

SATURDAY, NOV. 7.

HEARD MME. NORDICA.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Delights Brooklyn Audience.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 6.—The Boston Symphony orchestra opened its season here today, by a public rehearsal in the Academy of Music this afternoon. The audience was a large one and most generous in its applause.

The Boston Symphony orchestra fills the place formerly occupied by Thomas' orchestra in the musical season of this city.

The programme was as follows:

Overture, Leonore, No. 3..........Beethoven
Aria from the Queen of Sheba..........Gounod
Suite, op. 55..........Tschaikowsky
Elegie.
Valse melancholique.
Scherzo.
Tema con Variazioni.
Aria, O Hall of Song, from Tannhaeuser...Wagner
Prelude, Die Meistersinger..........Wagner

Mme. Lillian Nordica, the soloist of the evening, was heard to better advantage than in New York on Tuesday evening.

The same programme will be repeated tomorrow evening, and at the close of the concert the orchestra will return to Boston on the new Long Island & New England States line.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1891

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The program of the fourth Symphony concert opened with a Symphonic Poem, "Don Juan," by Richard Strauss, which was performed for the first time in this city. The old legend of the Spanish libertine has been for years a favorite stage-subject. Operas, plays, ballets and puppet shows have told of the loves of the dashing blade and shown to gaping crowds the vengeance of angry Heaven. The rake and the statue have fascinated the poet, the essayist, and the painter. The gentle Washington Irving and the morbid Bandelaire have looked upon "Don Juan" with ill-disguised admiration, and Nikolaus Lenau has turned him into a philosopher who speculates, and explains his life. Now Richard Strauss has taken the poem of Lenau and treated it musically. Strauss is the son of a Munich horn player, and he is only twenty-seven years old. He wrote a symphony which was performed under Levy's direction in 1881, and since then he has written many pieces, among them "Italia," "Macbeth," "Don Juan" and "Death and Explanation." He was at first a believer in Brahms, but for some time he has swung round to the theories of Liszt and Wagner, and he now is a maker of program-music. In setting Lenau's poem, it was the purpose of Strauss to give musically the poet's conception of Don Juan's summing up of his life. Now if this were possible in music, the two elements apparent in the composition should be sensuousness and wild regret. The music, however, suggests neither one of the two. The only touch of voluptuousness is an echo of Wagner's Venusberg music, and percussion instruments are freely used; but the music itself is not sensuous or sensual. Nor is there any trace of terror or great woe as an antithesis. The work is labored, verbose and incoherent. It is weak in invention, and though the elaboration is often ingenious in instrumentation, the disciple borrows from his masters. It is made music, the rhetorical contrivings of a man that has really little to say. The poem was played with spirit, and it was favorably received by the audience.

Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld made his first appearance in Boston as a pianist, and he chose the Rubinstein Concerto in D minor. Mr. Gruenfeld has won his reputation in Europe by playing compositions of a very different nature, in which the elegance of his performance is said to give the pieces themselves an exaggerated value. The Rubinstein concerto is not among them, but it demands a player like the composer or Franz Rummel, or D'Albert or Sophie Menter. It would then be unfair to judge Mr. Gruenfeld from his playing of last Saturday, particularly as he will be heard in four recitals. It may be said here, however, that he has ample technique, that he plays with great clearness and accuracy, but that he occasionally seeks inartistic contrasts by following metallic harshness with sensational pianissimos derived from the soft pedal. He plays with elegance—the elegance of the salon, with its artificial lights, its artificial courtliness, its artificial conversation. But it is better to wait until he is heard in recitals that perhaps favor more his musical characteristics. He was very loudly applauded.

The symphony was Beethoven's Pastoral, so loved by many for its imitations of bird-calls and thunder storms. Many who are tempted to doze through the first three movements, pinch themselves that they may not miss the quail, the nightingale and the cuckoo; and when they hear the imitations they are pleased and say "Is it not wonderful!" But Johannes Weber hit the nail upon the head when he wrote: "Beethoven has imitated the cuckoo's song by means of the clarinet; but the notes of this bird differ materially from the tones of the clarinet; and, besides, the cuckoo does not always give the interval of a major third." The enthusiasm shown whenever imitations occur in musical compositions, sometimes leads one to think that after all it is not music itself which pleases many, but what they find in it, external and foreign.

Mme. Nordica has been singing in New York this week, but the Gothamites do not think she is the Nordica of old.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 128.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1891.

The Boston Symphony orchestra began its most successful season of concerts at Philadelphia last evening, the immense Academy of Music being packed to the doors. The season sale has practically closed out the supply of seats for the entire series. Last evening Mme. Lillian Norton and Mr. Adamowski were the soloists, and both artists gained grand ovations.

LEDGER AND TRANSCRIPT

Philadelphia, Thursday, Nov. 5, 1891.

Academy of Music—The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

At the first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night one of those big audiences that are sure to crowd the Academy of Music on such occasions welcomed the return of Mr. Nikisch and his splendid band. There was no symphony on the programme, its usual place being given to the meteoric Tschaikowsky and his last suite, not hitherto performed here by Mr. Nikisch. First Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture was played, a work that conductor and men knew by heart. Mr. Nikisch's reading differs very decidedly, in many particulars of time and expression, from that which has made the work familiar here, but is not likely to obscure recollections of the latter interpretation.

Tschaikowsky's suite is in four movements. The first is an "Elegie," possibly Gray's, for the succeeding one is a waltz ("melancholique") which seems to people the imagination with dancers in full mourning, and the succeeding scherzo suggests a grave yard frolic. The final movement, a theme and variations, appears to have no particular relations with the rest of the suite, except that it is in the same genre style, which makes the whole a sort of musical curio, overwrought at times to the point of tediousness, but showing at all points the mastery of its author in fanciful and elaborate orchestral effects. It need hardly be said that the orchestra played it to perfection, for it is in this kind of music that it is at its best.

Mr. Adamowski furnished one of the most interesting items of the concert by his playing of Saint Saens's Rondo Capriccioso for violin, his playing being characterized by a clearness, expressiveness and flawless execution that won for him the heartiest recognition of his hearers.

Mme. Lillian Nordica sang the well-known aria from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and the equally familiar polacca from Thomas's "Mignon." Her voice retains almost unimpaired its agreeable quality, though she had not last night the evenness and fullness of tone required for an impressive presentation of Gounod's aria, which, nevertheless, she sang with good effect. In the polacca she sang with an ease, grace and vivacity that approached brilliancy, and fairly merited the three or four warm recalls that followed her achievement in it.

The spirited performance of Wagner's "Meistersinger" overture brought the concert to a close.

THE TIMES-PHILADELPHIA.

NOVEMBER 5.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

A Crowded House Greets the Boston Orchestra at the Academy.

The season at the Academy of Music may be said to have opened last night, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first of its annual series of concerts before a very large and brilliant audience that qute filled the house. The orchestra appeared more numerous than ever. Its numbers make an unusual display upon the stage, though it nowise gains proportionately in volume of tone, Mr. Nikisch's aim being apparently to make many instruments sound like few. The concert began with a remarkably small and pale representation of the great "Leonore" overture. This is usually thought of as a splendid, inspiring work. Mr. Nikisch gives it a curious far-away effect, as though heard in another room, like the "Loin du Bal," and he dwells so elaborately upon details that his climaxes are lost. The overture displayed the fine virtuosity of the violins, that in accuracy of execution are unexcelled, but it is always a disappointment to hear one of Beethoven's great orchestral compositions treated as chamber music.

Nearly half the programme was occupied by a suite of Tschaikowsky. The first of the four movements, a poetic and dainty elegy, is much the best. After that the work wanders off into vague and formless dullness, with most wearying effect. The last movement consists of some clever variations on an obvious theme that are often bright and graceful, but when it is recalled what a wealth of better music, even of the same school, remains unfamiliar to our public, this hour did not seem profitably spent. It ought to be added that the suite was beautifully performed, with more earnestness and more color than were given to Beethoven.

Madame Nordica, who is always a pleasing singer, gave the favorite aria from "La Reine de Saba" and the polacca from "Mignon," with good voice and good taste, and Mr. Adamowski played charmingly Saint-Saens' rondo for the violin, with a bright tone and clean execution and a suave and manly style. In the accompaniments to the solos, notably in the "Mignon," the orchestra was delightful. The concert closed with the prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

TIMES, New York, N. Y.

Date 11/5

The noted Kneisel String Quartet of Boston will give its first concert at Sherry's to-morrow evening.

INQUIRER, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11-4

swer at court

The Adamowski Recital.

The first of the series of Adamowski Chamber concerts was given yesterday afternoon at Haseltine's Galleries before a large audience. The programme was as follows:

Quartet in E flat major (No. 14 Peters)	Mozart
Allegro ma non troppo—Andante con moto.
Minuetto allegretto—Allegro vivace.
For violin solo—
(a) Melodie	Paderewski
(b) Gipsy Dance	Nachez
Mr. T. Adamowski.
Three movements from quartet in F, op. 22	Tschaikowsky
Scherzo, Andante, Finale.

43

The work of the artists was fully up to the high standard which they have established long ago. It was an artistic treat.

Philadelphia Inquirer

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

The Academy of Music was crowded last night at the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The organization has been slightly reinforced and is better than ever before. The programme last night was as follows:

Beethoven	Overture, "Leonore," No. 3
Gounod	Aria from "Queen of Sheba"
	Mme. Lillian Nordica.
Tschaikowsky	Suite, Op. 55
	Elegie.
	Valse melancholique.
	Scherzo.
	Tema con Variazioni.
Saint-Saens	Rondo Capriccioso for violin
	Mr. T. Adamowski.
A. Thomas	Polacca from "Mignon"
	Mme. Nordica.
Wagner	Prelude, "Die Meistersinger"

It is a little remarkable that the first symphony concert of the season should contain no symphony. In place was substituted a suite by Tschaikowsky, a diversified series of compositions, which show great skill in construction, but are musically less interesting than might be desired. The Leonore (No. 3) overture and the "Meistersinger" prelude largely atoned for this. The Leonore overtures are all works of high value, but the No. 3 ranks as chief. It was played last night superbly.

Mme. Nordica was in excellent voice and sang the aria with great power, but was less pleasing in the polacca.

Mr. Adamowski played brilliantly, and the orchestration was masterly. The orchestra starts out with the prospect of the most brilliant season in its history.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS.—THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 5.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Auspicious Opening of This Season's Series.

The Academy of Music was crowded from parquet to gallery last evening with an audience representing the music lovers of this city, who had assembled to listen to the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the season of 1891-92. So thoroughly was the interest aroused that seats were selling at a premium and many were unable to obtain even standing room. This superb musical organization has made such marvelous progress in its work and in popularity under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Nikisch as to place it in the foreground of renown in America as a symphony orchestra.

The great ovation tendered Mme. Lillian Nordica upon her first appearance demonstrated that the diva stood high in the favor of the audience. For some moments she was compelled to bow her acknowledgment of the flattering reception given her. Her first number was the beautiful aria from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba." Mme Nordica in this selection displayed advantageously her full, rich, clear soprano voice, and but for the occasional nasal tones—which resulted from singing in the French language—rendered this aria equal to any prima donna that has been heard in it on this continent. In her second selection, the "Polacca," from "Mignon" she did not please as well, for her intonation in some of the coloratura passages was faulty and made the impression that it was hard work. Yet in both of her solos she convinced all that she was a great vocalist, in possession of a beautiful trill and clear, powerful, well-cultivated voice.

The symphonic work assumed by the orchestra was the Tschaikowsky "Suite," opus 55. The grandeur of the orchestra is supremely suited for work of this kind and throughout the excellence of the string and the beauties of the reed and wind instruments were shown to advantage. Mr. Nikish's treatment thereof was masterly and the delicacy with which the "Elegie" and "Valse Melancholique" were given aroused enthusiasm. In the "Tema con Variazoni," fine shadings and dainty phrasing were the main features.

The violin soloist, Mr. T. Adamowski, gave a finished rendering of Saint-Saens' "Rondo Capriccioso," in which his powerful tone and clear intonation stood out boldly. His execution is good, but his harmonics are rather weak and imperfect.

In the Wagner number, "Prelude of Die Meistersinger," Mr. Nikisch displayed the weakness of brass. Three cornets, a quartette of French horns, three trombones and a tuba are inadequate for the proper rendering of this selection. Not that it is necessary to have a thundering brass effect but the combination is too small. As a whole the concert was one of the grandest heard here in years and made many new admirers for this great musical organization.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD,

NOVEMBER 5, 1891

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.

Last evening at the Academy of Music a crowded and fashionable audience welcomed the Boston Symphony Orchestra, probably the most proficient and thoroughly disciplined band of musicians ever organized in this country. In the orchestral numbers—Beethoven's "Leonora" overture, the Tschaikowsky suite of 55, and the prelude to the Meistersænger, the admirable training and perfect artistic balance of tone values was exemplified with wonderful effect. The Wagnerian selection especially was given with a breezy and poetic ardor that approached to inspiration. Mr. Adamowski played Saint-Saens' difficult "Rondo Capriccioso," for solo violin and orchestra, with amazing technical facility and fine appreciation of the beauties of the work. This violinist is increasing steadily in artistic stature and is likely to go far. Mme. Nordica, who has not been heard here since Tamagno's "Otello" engagement, sang Gounod's cavatina "Plus grand dans son obscurite," and the Titania polka from "Mignon," giving the intricate and florid ornamentation of the latter air with great facility. The high dramatic quality of the Gounod selection, however, was quite beyond her reach.

Boston Daily Globe.

FRIDAY, NOV. 6.

Boston Artists at Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5—The Boston Symphony orchestra gave their first concert of the season here tonight in the Academy Concert Hall. The programme was as follows:

Beethoven	Overture, Leonore, No. 3
Gounod	Aria from the Queen of Sheba
Tschaikowsky	Suite, op. 55
	Elegie.
	Valse melancholique.
	Scherzo.
	Tema con Variazioni.
A. Thomas	Polacca from Mignon
Wagner	Prelude, Die Meistersinger

Mme. Nordica was the soloist of the evening and repeated her successes of old.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, NOV. 7, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

Reflection made, the one thing which deserves praise and remembrance out of the last Symphony concert, is Mr. Albert Grünfeld's Boston début in the Rubinstein D-minor concerto for pianoforte. While this work and its reading cannot have shown all the qualities which the new pianist possesses, and very likely did not show him in altogether the most favorable light, it nevertheless proved him to be a man of mark, who has won by substantial and straightforward work the eminent position and complimentary titles which are his in Europe. He belongs among the executants rather than the interpreters, and his command of the key-board is remarkable for its force and also for its finesse—thus touching the extremes of technical pianism—and also being both bold and sure in meeting all the other tests to which a virtuoso of this day must respond. It is true that this force is sometimes abused and that finesse displayed fantastically, as it is also apparent that sweetness of sound is often substituted for suavity of sentiment. But Mr. Grünfeld's peculiar excellences—which will undoubtedly shine most clearly in a diversified programme of music more nearly approaching the chamber style—are so many that it would be unreasonable to complain because in his concerto he did not supply something, the lack of which was evidently due to his temperament and the general course of his art work. The concert began with a turgid and tumultuous thing by young Richard Strauss, who calls it a symphonic poem, and bases it upon some verses about Don Juan, by Lenaus. The poem does not mean much and the music less. It is noisily rich, soundingly sensuous, clamorous to the top of all the brazen lungs of the orchestra, demonstrative with almost every known instrument of percussion and imitative of nearly all the fantastic or vociferous authors of the time. It has some pretty melodies, some splendid instrumental effects and some big climaxes; but it has no more consistency and meaning than a turbulent sunset full of huge clouds and vapors resplendent with all the fierce, full colors of the celestial palette. That it might be made to appear at least as meaning more, is possible; for Mr. Nikisch did not manage with it as if he understood it himself, being a great part of the time from a half-beat to a whole one behind the orchestra and having no power to prevent false entrances and improvised dissonances. Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony ended the evening in a performance which ranged from the acceptable and mediocre to the absolutely bad.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, NOV. 7.

HEARD MME. NORDICA.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Delights Brooklyn Audience.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 6.—The Boston Symphony orchestra opened its season here today, by a public rehearsal in the Academy of Music this afternoon. The audience was a large one and most generous in its applause.

The Boston Symphony orchestra fills the place formerly occupied by Thomas' orchestra in the musical season of this city.

The programme was as follows:

Overture, Leonore, No. 3	Beethoven
Aria from the Queen of Sheba	Gounod
Suite, op. 55	Tschaikowsky
Elegie.
Valse melancholique.
Scherzo.
Tema con Variazioni.
Aria, O Hall of Song, from Tannhaeuser	Wagner
Prelude, Die Meistersinger	Wagner

Mme. Lillian Nordica, the soloist of the evening, was heard to better advantage than in New York on Tuesday evening.

The same programme will be repeated tomorrow evening, and at the close of the concert the orchestra will return to Boston on the new Long Island & New England States line.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1891

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The program of the fourth Symphony concert opened with a Symphonic Poem, "Don Juan," by Richard Strauss, which was performed for the first time in this city. The old legend of the Spanish libertine has been for years a favorite stage-subject. Operas, plays, ballets and puppet shows have told of the loves of the dashing blade and shown to gaping crowds the vengeance of angry Heaven. The rake and the statue have fascinated the poet, the essayist, and the painter. The gentle Washington Irving and the morbid Bandelaire have looked upon "Don Juan" with ill-disguised admiration, and Nikolaus Lenau has turned him into a philosopher who speculates, and explains his life. Now Richard Strauss has taken the poem of Lenau and treated it musically. Strauss is the son of a Munich horn player, and he is only twenty-seven years old. He wrote a symphony which was performed under Levy's direction in 1881, and since then he has written many pieces, among them "Italia," "Macbeth," "Don Juan" and "Death and Explanation." He was at first a believer in Brahms, but for some time he has swung round to the theories of Liszt and Wagner, and he now is a maker of program-music. In setting Lenau's poem, it was the purpose of Strauss to give musically the poet's conception of Don Juan's summing up of his life. Now if this were possible in music, the two elements apparent in the composition should be sensuousness and wild regret. The music, however, suggests neither one of the two. The only touch of voluptuousness is an echo of Wagner's Venusberg music, and percussion instruments are freely used; but the music itself is not sensuous or sensual. Nor is there any trace of terror or great woe as an antithesis. The work is labored, verbose and incoherent. It is weak in invention, and though the elaboration is often ingenious in instrumentation, the disciple borrows from his masters. It is made music, the rhetorical contrivings of a man that has really little to say. The poem was played with spirit, and it was favorably received by the audience.

Mr. Alfred Gruenfeld made his first appearance in Boston as a pianist, and he chose the Rubinstein Concerto in D minor. Mr. Gruenfeld has won his reputation in Europe by playing compositions of a very different nature, in which the elegance of his performance is said to give the pieces themselves an exaggerated value. The Rubinstein concerto is not among them, but it demands a player like the composer or Franz Rummel, or D'Albert or Sophie Menter. It would then be unfair to judge Mr. Gruenfeld from his playing of last Saturday, particularly as he will be heard in four recitals. It may be said here, however, that he has ample technique, that he plays with great clearness and accuracy, but that he occasionally seeks inartistic contrasts by following metallic harshness with sensational pianissimos derived from the soft pedal. He plays with elegance—the elegance of the salon, with its artificial lights, its artificial courtliness, its artificial conversation. But it is better to wait until he is heard in recitals that perhaps favor more his musical characteristics. He was very loudly applauded.

The symphony was Beethoven's Pastoral, so loved by many for its imitations of bird-calls and thunder storms. Many who are tempted to doze through the first three movements, pinch themselves that they may not miss the quail, the nightingale and the cuckoo; and when they hear the imitations they are pleased and say "Is it not wonderful!" But Johannes Weber hit the nail upon the head when he wrote: "Beethoven has imitated the cuckoo's song by means of the clarinet; but the notes of this bird differ materially from the tones of the clarinet; and, besides, the cuckoo does not always give the interval of a major third." The enthusiasm shown whenever imitations occur in musical compositions, sometimes leads one to think that after all it is not music itself which pleases many, but what they find in it, external and foreign.

Mme. Nordica has been singing in New York this week, but the Gothamites do not think she is the Nordica of old.

[45]

—THE—

KNEISEL QUARTET

(ORGANIZED 1885),

FRANZ KNEISEL, First Violin, L. SVECENSKI, Viola,
OTTO ROTH, Second Violin, ALWIN SCHROEDER, Violoncello,
(Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.)

Friday Evening, November 6,
Friday Evening, December 11,
Friday Evening, January 15,
Friday Evening, February 12,

—AT—

Sherry's New Concert Hall,

FIFTH AVENUE and 37th STREET.

PROGRAMME OF THE FIRST CONCERT:

1—QUARTET in C major, - - - - - - - - MOZART
(Koechel, 465. Peters, 17.)
Adagio; Allegro—Andante cantabile—Menuetto (allegretto)—Allegro molto.

2—SECOND MOVEMENT from Quartet in D major, - TSCHAIKOWSKY

3—QUINTET in G major, - - - - - - - - BRAHMS
(Opus 111, new.)
Allegro con brio—Adagio—Allegretto—Finale.
SECOND VIOLA, MR. O. NOVACEK.
(First time in America.)

Seats for all the Concerts ready now at Schuberth & Co's., 23 Union Square

Manager of the Kneisel Quartet........................ Mr. Charles A. Ellis
Manager of the New York Concerts........................ Mr. Frederick A. Schwab

---

—THE—

KNEISEL QUARTET

(ORGANIZED 1885),

FRANZ KNEISEL, First Violin, L. SVECENSKI, Viola,
OTTO ROTH, Second Violin, ALWIN SCHROEDER, Violoncello,
(Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.)

Friday Evening, November 6,
Friday Evening, December 11,
Friday Evening, January 15,
Friday Evening, February 12,

—AT—

SHERRY'S NEW CONCERT HALL

FIFTH AVENUE and 37th STREET.

PROGRAMME OF THE FIRST CONCERT:

1—QUARTET in C major, - - - - - - MOZART
(Koechel, 465, Peters, 17.)
Adagio; Allegro—Andante cantabile—Menuetto (allegretto)—Allegro molto.

2—SECOND MOVEMENT from Quartet in D major, TSCHAIKOWSKY

3—QUINTET in G major, - - - - - BRAHMS
(Opus 111, new.)
Allegro con brio—Adagio—Allegretto—Finale.
SECOND VIOLA, MR. O. NOVACEK.
(First time in America.)

—SEATS READY NOW.—

Manager of the Kneisel Quartet........................ Mr. Charles A. Ellis
Manager of the New York Concerts........................ Mr. Frederick A. Schwab

---

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, NOV. 8, 1891.

TWENTY-EIGHT PAGES.

——The Boston Symphony orchestra gave the first of this season's concerts at Chickering Hall, New York, on Tuesday evening. The hall was filled in every part, and a more fashionable audience was never brought together than gathered to welcome Mr. Nikisch and his performers. Everything was played with expression and absolute accuracy, but the Bach music was exquisitely done, and the auditorium at the finish rang with applause. The soloist of the concert was Mme. Nordica, whose aria d'entrata from "Tannhauser" was excellently sung. The performances start off with a subscription list, representing almost twice last year's figures per concert.

——Among those who attended the first concert of the symphony orchestra in New York last week were Mr. Walter Damrosch and Mr. Brodsky, his newly imported first violin; Mrs. Damrosch, Mr. Reginald De Coven, the recently appointed musical critic of the World; Mrs. De Coven; Col. Mapleson and his wife, Laura Schirmer-Mapleson; Mme. Rive-King, and hosts more musical and society people. In Philadelphia, Baltimore and Brooklyn the same great houses and enthusiasm greeted Mr. Nikisch and his men and Mme. Nordica.

——Mr. Adamowski was entertained by several of his friends while in New York with the Symphony orchestra last week. Among them were George Munzig. In Philadelphia Mr. Adamowski was the soloist, playing superbly.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, NOV. 8.

HENRY G. PARKER, Editor and Publisher

—— Mrs. Arthur Nikisch is in New York, having joined her husband there on Friday. They will leave for Detroit to-day, and will both appear in a chamber concert there to-morrow, when Mr. Nikisch will play the piano part in a quintette.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 8, 1891.

The first of the season's tour by the Boston Symphony orchestra has occupied the week just ended, and its results have more than met all the anticipations of Manager Ellis. The reception given the orchestra in New York and Philadelphia was an especially gratifying tribute to the organization. Mme. Nordica's appearance in the concerts of the tour have added still further honors to her already brilliant list of triumphs this season.

Clipping from Telegram
New York N.Y
Date 11/6.

piece which is being written for her.

Herr Nikisch, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is one of the best accompanists on the piano in this country. It is a treat to hear him play an accompaniment to a song for an artist. He is a curious looking little man—so short that when he directs he has to stand on an extra platform that is placed on the stage for him. His leonine head, covered with long, shaggy, black hair, makes an odd contrast with his small body. He has the typical face of an artist; his black mustache and beard enhance the pallor of his face, and his handsome blue eyes are full of expression. The girls in Boston worship him.

World, Baltimore, Md.
Date 11/5

They're Worth Hearing.

The Boston symphony orchestra begins another series of concerts in this city Thursday evening at Academy hall. The series of last season were the principal music events of the winter and were highly enjoyed. Herr Nikisch is again in charge of the orchestra this season and the series will doubtless be fully as successful as those of last year.

Clipping from
Recorder New York, N. Y.
Date 11-6

The seventy-eight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are giving the guests of the Grand Central such a feast of the "strains of unpremeditated art" as is seldom enjoyed by a chance congregation of voyagers at a cosmopolitan hostelry. One of the guests said yesterday that it was a marvel to him that Conductor Nikish is able to train and drill into harmonious action the diversified talents of this remarkable gathering of musicians. This guest, who is a Western merchant, said that he didn't care what the musical sharps of the press said, the Boston Symphony people can make good enough music for him.

NEWS, Baltimore, Md.
Date 11-5

The Boston Symphony To-Night.

The sale of seats for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Concert Hall of the Academy of Music this evening has progressed most favorably, only a few choice seats being left. The concert will be conducted by Mr. Arthur Nikisch, with Madame Lillian Nordica as the soprano soloist. The programme includes works by Beethoven, Gounod, Tschaikowsky, Ambroise Thomas and Wagner.

SUN, New York, N. Y.
Date 11-7

States consulate during the disorder following the insurgent victory.

AMUSEMENTS. 43

Concert of the Kneisel Quartet.

The Kneisel Quartet, composed of Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth second violin; L. Svecenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder violoncello—all members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—gave its first concert yesterday evening at Sherry's Concert Hall before a large and enthusiastic audience. The programme was most admirable, comprising Mozart's Quartet in C major (Koechel No. 465), the second movement of Tschaikowsky's Quartet in D major, and Brahm's Quintet in G major, the second viola part of this number being supplied by Mr. O. Novacek.

The entire performance was characterized by general purity of tone, beauty of style, and charm and delicacy of phrasing, as would be the natural accomplishment of artists so constantly under the rare training of Mr. Nikisch. They should also be commended for their reverent appreciation of their art and dignified manner of rendering it. The Mozart Quartet and the number from the Tschaikowsky Quartet—a most exquisite composition—were especially well given. But in Brahm's Quintet, though it was played with excellent execution and finish, there was a slight degree of nervousness perceptible, which was evidently due to the unexpected and sudden appearance of Mr. Nikisch just before that composition was performed.

Another point must be mentioned which increased the respect of all music lovers for the Kneisel Quartet. This was the fact that they had engaged no solo singer or pianist to appear, and the concert was therefore made up exclusively of chamber music, so that no harsh contrast disturbed the interests of the audience, and this chamber music was given in almost perfect style

---

The Evening Post.

New York, Wednesday, Nov. 4, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Every year the musical season in New York appears to begin a week or two later. Apart from the Seidl Sunday concerts, which have been going on for some time, the first orchestral concert by a local organization this season will be that of the Symphony Society on November 13 and 14. The Philharmonic Society will not be heard till November 20, 21, while the opera season will begin a month later than usual. If this procrastinating tendency continues a few years longer New York will soon be in line with those Western cities which have no regular season at all, but take their whole year's music in a highly concentrated dose during a week's music festival.

While the New York organizations are thus still tuning their fiddles and rehearsing their new scores, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been putting on its war-paint and invading the city. There is certainly a good deal of brilliant orchestral war-paint in Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, which opened last evening's concert at Chickering Hall, and which gave Mr. Nikisch and his well-trained forces opportunity to display their tactics to best advantage. The audience was large and much disposed to applause, the favorite numbers being Elizabeth's monologue "Dich theure Halle grüss, ich wieder" from Tannhäuser, and the gavotte, in an arrangement for string orchestra, of three Bach pieces, by Bachrich. Of all the old-fashioned dances, the gavotte seems to appeal most to modern audiences, and it is through the medium of his charming pieces in this form that Bach will perhaps gradually win the favor of the general musical public. In the grandiose broadening out and slight retarding of the final bars, Mr. Nikisch gave a lesson in expression which should not be lost on musical students. The Wagner number was sung by Mme. Lillian Nordica, who also gave Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," both of which pieces she sang well from a purely vocal point of view, though with less depth of dramatic feeling than these numbers are capable of. In the final piece, the Rhenish symphony, Mr. Nikisch once more proved that as a Schumann conductor he has no superior, perhaps no equal.

—THE—

KNEISEL QUARTET

(ORGANIZED 1885),

FRANZ KNEISEL, First Violin, L. SVECENSKI, Viola,
OTTO ROTH, Second Violin, ALWIN SCHROEDER, Violoncello,
(Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.)

Friday Evening, November 6,
Friday Evening, December 11,
Friday Evening, January 15,
Friday Evening, February 12,

—AT—

Sherry's New Concert Hall,

FIFTH AVENUE and 57th STREET.

PROGRAMME OF THE FIRST CONCERT:

1—QUARTET in C major, - - - - - - MOZART
(Koechel, 465. Peters, 17.)
Adagio; Allegro—Andante cantabile—Menuetto (allegretto)—Allegro molto.

2—SECOND MOVEMENT from Quartet in D major, - TSCHAIKOWSKY

3—QUINTET in G major, - - - - - - BRAHMS
(Opus 111, new.)
Allegro con brio—Adagio—Allegretto—Finale.
SECOND VIOLA, MR. O. NOVACEK.
(First time in America.)

Seats for all the Concerts ready now at Schuberth & Co's., 23 Union Square

Manager of the Kneisel Quartet........................Mr. Charles A. Ellis
Manager of the New York Concerts........................Mr. Frederick A. Schwab

---

—THE—

KNEISEL QUARTET

(ORGANIZED 1885),

FRANZ KNEISEL, First Violin, L. SVECENSKI, Viola,
OTTO ROTH, Second Violin, ALWIN SCHROEDER, Violoncello,
(Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.)

Friday Evening, November 6,
Friday Evening, December 11,
Friday Evening, January 15,
Friday Evening, February 12,

—AT—

SHERRY'S NEW CONCERT HALL

FIFTH AVENUE and 57th STREET.

PROGRAMME OF THE FIRST CONCERT:

1—QUARTET in C major, - - - - - - MOZART
(Koechel, 465, Peters, 17.)
Adagio; Allegro—Andante cantabile—Menuetto (allegretto)—Allegro molto.

2—SECOND MOVEMENT from Quartet in D major, TSCHAIKOWSKY

3—QUINTET in G major, - - - - - BRAHMS
(Opus 111, new.)
Allegro con brio—Adagio—Allegretto—Finale.
SECOND VIOLA, MR. O. NOVACEK.
(First time in America.)

—SEATS READY NOW.—

Manager of the Kneisel Quartet........................Mr. Charles A. Ellis
Manager of the New York Concerts........................Mr. Frederick A. Schwab

---

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, NOV. 8, 1891.
TWENTY-EIGHT PAGES.

—The Boston Symphony orchestra gave the first of this season's concerts at Chickering Hall, New York, on Tuesday evening. The hall was filled in every part, and a more fashionable audience was never brought together than gathered to welcome Mr. Nikisch and his performers. Everything was played with expression and absolute accuracy, but the Bach music was exquisitely done, and the auditorium at the finish rang with applause. The soloist of the concert was Mme. Nordica, whose aria d'entrata from "Tannhauser" was excellently sung. The performances start off with a subscription list, representing almost twice last year's figures per concert.

—Among those who attended the first concert of the symphony orchestra in New York last week were Mr. Walter Damrosch and Mr. Brodsky, his newly imported first violin; Mrs. Damrosch, Mr. Reginald De Coven, the recently appointed musical critic of the World; Mrs. De Coven; Col. Mapleson and his wife, Laura Schirmer-Mapleson; Mme. Rive-King, and hosts more musical and society people. In Philadelphia, Baltimore and Brooklyn the same great houses and enthusiasm greeted Mr. Nikisch and his men and Mme. Nordica.

—Mr. Adamowski was entertained by several of his friends while in New York with the Symphony orchestra last week. Among them were George Munzig. In Philadelphia Mr. Adamowski was the soloist, playing superbly.

Gazette
BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, NOV. 8.
HENRY G. PARKER, Editor and Publisher

—Mrs. Arthur Nikisch is in New York, having joined her husband there on Friday. They will leave for Detroit to-day, and will both appear in a chamber concert there to-morrow, when Mr. Nikisch will play the piano part in a quintette.

SUNDAY HERALD.
BOSTON, NOVEMBER 8, 1891.

The first of the season's tour by the Boston Symphony orchestra has occupied the week just ended, and its results have more than met all the anticipations of Manager Ellis. The reception given the orchestra in New York and Philadelphia was an especially gratifying tribute to the organization. Mme. Nordica's appearance in the concerts of the tour have added still further honors to her already brilliant list of triumphs this season.

[illegible], Md.

Date 11/5

They're Worth Hearing.

The Boston symphony orchestra begins another series of concerts in this city Thursday evening at Academy hall. The series of last season were the principal music events of the winter and were highly enjoyed. Herr Nikisch is again in charge of the orchestra this season and the series will doubtless be fully as successful as those of last year.

Clipping from [illegible]
New York N.Y.

Date 11/6

piece which is being written for her.

Herr Nikisch, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is one of the best accompanists on the piano in this country. It is a treat to hear him play an accompaniment to a song for an artist. He is a curious looking little man—so short that when he directs he has to stand on an extra platform that is placed on the stage for him. His leonine head, covered with long, shaggy, black hair, makes an odd contrast with his small body. He has the typical face of an artist; his black mustache and beard enhance the pallor of his face, and his handsome blue eyes are full of expression. The girls in Boston worship him.

SUN, New York, N. Y.

Date 11-7

States consulate during the disorder following the insurgent victory.

AMUSEMENTS. 43

Concert of the Kneisel Quartet.

The Kneisel Quartet, composed of Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth second violin; L. Svecenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder violoncello—all members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—gave its first concert yesterday evening at Sherry's Concert Hall before a large and enthusiastic audience. The programme was most admirable, comprising Mozart's Quartet in C major (Koechel No. 465), the second movement of Tschaikowsky's Quartet in D major, and Brahm's Quintet in G major, the second viola part of this number being supplied by Mr. O. Novacek.

The entire performance was characterized by general purity of tone, beauty of style, and charm and delicacy of phrasing, as would be the natural accomplishment of artists so constantly under the rare training of Mr. Nikisch. They should also be commended for their reverent appreciation of their art and dignified manner of rendering it. The Mozart Quartet and the number from the Tschaikowsky Quartet—a most exquisite composition—were especially well given. But in Brahm's Quintet, though it was played with excellent execution and finish, there was a slight degree of nervousness perceptible, which was evidently due to the unexpected and sudden appearance of Mr. Nikisch just before that composition was performed.

Another point must be mentioned which increased the respect of all music lovers for the Kneisel Quartet. This was the fact that they had engaged no solo singer or pianist to appear, and the concert was therefore made up exclusively of chamber music, so that no harsh contrast disturbed the interests of the audience, and this chamber music was given in almost perfect style

---

NEWS, Baltimore, Md.

Date 11-5

The Boston Symphony To-Night.

The sale of seats for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Concert Hall of the Academy of Music this evening has progressed most favorably, only a few choice seats being left. The concert will be conducted by Mr. Arthur Nikisch, with Madame Lillian Nordica as the soprano soloist. The programme includes works by Beethoven, Gounod, Tschaikowsky, Ambroise Thomas and Wagner.

Clipping from
Recorder New York, N. Y.

Date 11-6

The seventy-eight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are giving the guests of the Grand Central such a feast of the "strains of unpremeditated art" as is seldom enjoyed by a chance congregation of voyagers at a cosmopolitan hostelry. One of the guests said yesterday that it was a marvel to him that Conductor Nikish is able to train and drill into harmonious action the diversified talents of this remarkable gathering of musicians. This guest, who is a Western merchant, said that he didn't care what the musical sharps of the press said, the Boston Symphony people can make good enough music for him.

The Evening Post.
New York, Wednesday, Nov. 4, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Every year the musical season in New York appears to begin a week or two later. Apart from the Seidl Sunday concerts, which have been going on for some time, the first orchestral concert by a local organization this season will be that of the Symphony Society on November 13 and 14. The Philharmonic Society will not be heard till November 20, 21, while the opera season will begin a month later than usual. If this procrastinating tendency continues a few years longer New York will soon be in line with those Western cities which have no regular season at all, but take their whole year's music in a highly concentrated dose during a week's music festival.

While the New York organizations are thus still tuning their fiddles and rehearsing their new scores, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been putting on its war-paint and invading the city. There is certainly a good deal of brilliant orchestral war-paint in Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, which opened last evening's concert at Chickering Hall, and which gave Mr. Nikisch and his well-trained forces opportunity to display their tactics to best advantage. The audience was large and much disposed to applause, the favorite numbers being Elizabeth's monologue "Dich theure Halle grüss' ich wieder" from Tannhäuser, and the gavotte, in an arrangement for string orchestra, of three Bach pieces, by Bachrich. Of all the old-fashioned dances, the gavotte seems to appeal most to modern audiences, and it is through the medium of his charming pieces in this form that Bach will perhaps gradually win the favor of the general musical public. In the grandiose broadening out and slight retarding of the final bars, Mr. Nikisch gave a lesson in expression which should not be lost on musical students. The Wagner number was sung by Mme. Lillian Nordica, who also gave Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," both of which pieces she sang well from a purely vocal point of view, though with less depth of dramatic feeling than these numbers are capable of. In the final piece, the Rhenish symphony, Mr. Nikisch once more proved that as a Schumann conductor he has no superior, perhaps no equal.

Brooklyn Daily Eagle

[illegible] EVENING, NOVEMBER 7, 1891.

PHILHARMONIC.

Beginning of the Concert Season, Under a New Regime.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Makes a Magnificent Artistic Success at the Academy of Music—Conductor Nikisch. Wonderful String Playing—The Programme—Lillian Nordica as Soloist.

Theodore Thomas, after serving the musical interests of Brooklyn for nearly twenty years, has gone to Chicago, which has seeming need of his missionary efforts, and his place is taken by Arthur Nikisch of Boston. Mr. Thomas is a great musician; he has done more than any one man in this country to advance the popular knowledge of, and taste for, good music; he has given a sound and high pleasure to more people than any other two conductors now in service, but we have his artistic equal in Mr. Nikisch, and, as new organized, the superior of his band in the one that Mr. Nikisch brings from Boston. This band, the famous Boston symphony orchestra, the rival of any force of the kind in the world, began its series of concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music yesterday, that are to be known as the Philharmonic concerts, albeit the Philharmonic society takes no active part in them, either in management or choice of programmes. Some of its members attend, and they lend their set of scenery for these entertainments. The audience yesterday was large, but less large than it should have been, for there has been no finer playing in this city than this audience heard. The orchestra is nicely balanced and ample in every division, but it is in the strings that its merits are most strikingly exhibited. This department, numbering fifty-six men, an orchestra in itself, is without equal, and it is in this department that merit is most quickly recognized and produces the most telling effects, for the strings are the main stay, the infantry of the band, the wood wind being comparable to the brilliant cavalry, and the brasses and percussing instruments to the loud sounding, but not always serviceable, artillery. It is, perhaps, to be regretted that the first programme does not contain a number for the special exploitation of the strings, like the Bach suite that was played in New York on Tuesday night, that their wonderful smoothness, voice quality, precision, expression and spirit could have been judged the better, but such opportunities will occur during the season. As it is, the violins and basses make new disclosures of the scope of strings. Their attack is so absolutely uniform, their volume so magnificent, their crescendos so inspiring and their full tone so rich and organ like that the hearer is thrilled and startled. These effects follow the readings of the conductor, who is, himself, as quietly notable as his musicians. A man of short stature, black mustached and bearded, with refined and clear cut face as fresh in its complexion as a child's, with hair and beard worn in artistic carelessness, quiet and almost bashful in manner, he advances to the leader's platform and mounts it when the house is stilled. Even the back rows of the orchestra are lifted but a few inches above the stage; so, in order to have all the players under his eye, his platform is slightly taller than usual. Once before his men he fills with the spirit of command. Without extravagance of gesture and sometimes with the slightest beat of the baton, he sways them to his will. There is an electrical communication of thought between him and his band; every motion is charged with nervous force; the constrained position of his left arm bent against his side with hand clenched shows to what tension he is wrought; he is like the hypnotist, centering his life force on his subject, and his magnetism is felt like an animating fire. He plays upon that orchestra as a master plays upon an organ; he hushes it to whispers; he rouses it to thunder gusts; it sings for him; it dances for him; it runs the gamut of passion and meaning, so far as thought has spread or bounded it; it tells more than speech and it tells it in the art that is highest and purest and most absolute in beauty. When this voice spoke in the surging rhythms of Beethoven, it had the authority of genius that is so like the authority of nature as we hear it spoken in the wind, the waves, the rocking pines and no less efficiently in those hinting spiritual tones that steal from mountain silences into the wanderer's ear. Beethoven was properly chosen to begin the concert and to inaugurate what should prove an enduring attachment between the music loving public of this city and this corps of artists. The selection was the third "Leonora" overture, a work of tried and accepted popularity and containing much that is moving and delightful, particularly the solemn and boding utterance of the horns near the beginning, and one or two things that are not agreeable. The scales played in unison just before the finale are so bare and [illegible] and are so impertinent to the subject, that [illegible] a wonder that some conductor has not found [illegible] to cut them out, though their leanness and insignificance do lend contrast to the triumphant and gorgeous measures of conclusion. Mr. Nikisch adhered to custom in sending a trumpeter behind the scenes to sound the call, first far away, then nearer, that indicates the arrival of the governor, in the opera, but that stands for whatever you like it to, as you hear it in the pause of the orchestra. A writer quoted in the valuable analytical programme that is furnished at these concerts finds in it "the effect of a summons to a vanquished nation to lay down its arms; there is a forlorn, desolate, [illegible] of night effect about it that is overpowering." The blowing of the trumpet from recesses [illegible] the stage has often been criticised as a trick, [illegible] at a concert, where the curtain is not about [illegible] on the work that it helps to usher in, it [illegible] seem a little forced, yet it gains in dramatic [illegible] by remoteness and makes a stronger [illegible] on the imagination. The new number in the programme was the Tschaikowsky suite, [illegible] a work symphonic in arrangement, but [illegible] not strict enough in form for the con[illegible] to regard as a symphony, though why [illegible] should not comprise any forms that [illegible] to put into it no formalist has ex[illegible] day for mere forms has gone [illegible] organ poetry, contrapuntal [illegible] novels, eight headed ser[illegible] [illegible] individual expression [illegible] The Tschaikowsky music is [illegible] under even its happiest moods can be heard the strain of lament that is in every phase of Russian art and writing, the pain and questioning of an oppressed people, longing for liberty, but blind to the ways that lead to it. The first number, an elegy, is beautiful in orchestration and the principal theme is charming. This melody, sounded by various instruments in the wood wind choir, successively, elicits a surprising wealth of solo talent in the orchestra. Such broad, sweet tone, such facile execution, are seldom heard on the concert stage as the flute, oboe, clarinet, English horn and even the bassoon players produced in the songs and phrases assigned to them. The "Melancholy Waltz" that forms the second number in the suite is sometimes oriental in manner, then it is a gambol of imps; anon it is the frenetic dance of a hungry, starving creature who must move to keep from freezing or from brooding on suicide; it is morbid and strange—the cry of a Chopin of the steppes. The scherzo offsets this by its frolic, gaiety and humor, as delicate as Mendelssohn's fairy music, as bizarre as Berlioz. The effects of the snare drum and cymbals toned down to their softest and chiming with the quick rush of the strings, and of the basses lumbering on as in a vain effort to overtake the violins are odd in the extreme and are full of originality. The last and longest section of the suite is a theme with twelve variations. The theme is a clear melody, like an old English air, and in the variants Tschaikowsky displays remarkable knowledge of the orchestra and practice in the use of its resources. The third variation, for wood wind, is quite suggestive of Berlioz; the announcement by the brasses in the fourth is strong and noble; the fifth is complex and the strings are kept in strict fugue routine; Luther might have written the seventh, so medieval is it in form; the ninth works up to a furious speed and is followed by a cadenza, played with excellent taste by Mr. Kneisel, that recurs in the next two sections and leads up to the twelfth variation, which has opulence and fantastic character enough to serve as an eastern processional. Toward the close occurs a protracted effect of crescendo that is merely a result of employing the dominant seventh for several bars before its resolution into the tonic. This resolution the ear becomes almost impatient for, but when made it is in a stately theme, with a fine outburst of tone and rich instrumental color. The prelude to "The Master Singers of Nuremberg" proved that Mr. Nikisch could play Wagner understandingly and with force and sweep, the admirable temper of the band serving to this end. The beautiful overture was beautifully played and brought the concert to an end. The soloist was Lillian Nordica, once Miss Norton of Maine, whose agreeable personality won her audience before she sang. The strain of operatic work has put a hint of acid quality into her upper and stronger notes, but it has also developed in her a large and commanding style and dramatic expression. Her notes are clean cut, true and produced with simplicity and directness, and the air from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and the apostrophe to the hall of song from "Tannhauser" were given with largeness of tone and fluency and force of execution. Unlike many solos they were happy additions to the concert. Mr. Nikisch is seemingly afraid of tiring his listeners, for he played but an hour and a half yesterday, but such fears are groundless. He has no long waits, however, and does not waste time; still, there is space on the programme for a Schumann overture or another Wagner excerpt. The success of the orchestra was decided and the audience was palpably delighted. To-night, at the concert, the programme will be repeated.

The Evening Post.

New York, Wednesday, Nov. 4, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Every year the musical season in New York appears to begin a week or two later. Apart from the Seidl Sunday concerts, which have been going on for some time, the first orchestral concert by a local organization this season will be that of the Symphony Society on November 13 and 14. The Philharmonic Society will not be heard till November 20, 21, while the opera season will begin a month later than usual. If this procrastinating tendency continues a few years longer New York will soon be in line with those Western cities which have no regular season at all, but take their whole year's music in a highly concentrated dose during a week's music festival.

While the New York organizations are thus still tuning their fiddles and rehearsing their new scores, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been putting on its war-paint and invading the city. There is certainly a good deal of brilliant orchestral war-paint in Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, which opened last evening's concert at Chickering Hall, and which gave Mr. Nikisch and his well-trained forces opportunity to display their tactics to best advantage. The audience was large and much disposed to applause, the favorite numbers being Elisabeth's monologue "Dich theure Halle grüss ich wieder" from Tannhäuser, and the gavotte, in an arrangement for string orchestra, of three Bach pieces, by Bachrich. Of all the old-fashioned dances, the gavotte seems to appeal most to modern audiences, and it is through the medium of his charming pieces in this form that Bach will perhaps gradually win the favor of the general musical public. In the grandiose broadening out and slight retarding of the final bars, Mr. Nikisch gave a lesson in expression which should not be lost on musical students. The Wagner number was sung by Mme. Lillian Nordica, who also gave Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," both of which pieces she sang well from a purely vocal point of view, though with less depth of dramatic feeling than these numbers are capable of. In the final piece, the Rhenish symphony, Mr. Nikisch once more proved that as a Schumann conductor he has no superior, perhaps no equal.

N. Y. Figaro.

New York, Sonnabend, den 31. October

Boſton Symphonie Orcheſter.

Weit energiſcher als alle hieſigen Orcheſter-Organiſationen huldigt das obengenannte Orcheſter dem muſikaliſchen Klaſſizismus. Von dem Col. Higginſon vor elf Jahren für die ausſchließliche Pflege dieſer Tongattung geſtiftet, iſt das Boſton Symphonie Orcheſter bis heute unter den verſchiedenen Dirigenten beharrlich dieſem idealen Prinzip getreu geblieben. Wagner, Liszt, Rubinſtein und Tondichter anderer Nationen werden mit Auswahl, die Werke des Klaſſizismus und der Romantik in einer Fülle und Reichhaltigkeit geſpendet, wie es wohl nur noch in der deutſchen Heimat geſchehen mag.

Arthur Nikiſch iſt wohl ein großer Theil des Rufes zu danken, deſſen ſich dieſe Konzerte überall, ſelbſt über die Grenzen der Vereinigten Staaten hinaus, erfreuen. Vielfach iſt Herr Nikiſch angefeindet worden, weil er ſich gegen die Dichtungen neuerer Componiſten etwas abgeſchloſſen verhält. Wirklich begabte junge Componiſten ſind bis jetzt immer von ihm gewürdigt worden, aber freilich mit Vorſicht und Unterſcheidung, ſollen ja dieſe Konzerte kein Tummelplatz für muſikaliſche Wettrennen bilden, wo ſich Neulinge oder Dilettanten erſt die Sporen erringen möchten. Das Programm des erſten Konzertes brachte unter Anderem folgendes: Suite, op. 55, von Tſchaikowsky; Arie aus „La Reine de Saba" von Gounod, geſungen von Mme. Nordica; Char-Freitag's Zauber aus „Parſifal" von Wagner.

Was das Boſton Symphonie Orcheſter unter oder vielmehr durch Nikiſch leiſtet, kann nur mit dem Worte erſtaunlich bezeichnet werden. Solche bis in die kleinſten Einzelheiten dringende Genauigkeit der Wiedergabe, dieſes Klarlegen der thematiſchen Verſchlingungen, ſolche unglaubliche Gleichheit und Bemeſſung der Steigerungen, der Tonfärbungen, Feinheit der Geiger (hier ſitzen unter anderen die Herren Kneiſel, Löffler, Heindl, Mollenhauer), Kraft und Sicherheit der Bläſer (hier ſind die Herren Stolz, Hackebarth, Straſſer, F. Müller, Heindl, Ablöſcher zu nennen) haben wir hier noch nicht gehört. Die ſehr ſchwierigen Stellen und der auffallende ſchöne Ton des neuen engliſchen Horns (Herr F. Müller), welches in der Tſchaikowsky's Suite ſehr zur Geltung kommt, ſowie das höchſt ſchwierige Einſetzen der Poſaunen (die Herren Stolz und Ablöſcher) bezeugten uns, daß die drei genannten Herren gewiſſenhafte Muſiker ſind.

Auch dem Herrn Konzertmeiſter Kneiſel gebührt hohes Lob für das Violin-Solo in derſelben Kompoſition. Die Soliſtin des Abends war Mme. Nordica. Die Stimme dieſer Künſtlerin iſt von außerordentlicher Stärke und findet ihren Schwerpunkt in einem geradezu phänomenal entwickelten Staccato. Nach Schluß ihrer Soli hatte ſich die Künſtlerin verſchiedener Hervorrufe zu erfreuen.

* * *

The New York Recorder.

"FIRST OF ALL, THE NEWS."

Published every day in the year at
NO. 21 PARK ROW.
BY THE NEW YORK RECORDER COMPANY.

Wednesday, November 4, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Brilliant Opening of the Season at Chickering Hall Last Night.

Arthur Nikisch and his band from Boston gave their first concert in Chickering Hall last night, and demonstrated undeniably by the large audience they gathered to listen to them that politics were not paramount in the city after all. The piece de resistance of the evening's programme was the Rhenish Symphony of Schumann, which received a vigorous, sympathetic interpretation at the hands of Mr. Nikisch, who conducts with his same wonderful vitality and magnetism as ever. All of the many delightful characteristics of the orchestra were present in this performance. Such a string quartet and such a wood and brass choir is at once a charm and the envy of a metropolitan music lover. We simply have nothing like it in New York, neither in quality nor in ensemble.

The well-balanced strings were heard to great advantage in the Bach numbers, the familiar prelude, Adajio and Gavotte, and the virtuosity of the entire orchestra had abundant chances for display in Berlioz's brilliantly scored "Benvenuto Cellini" overture. Mme. Lillian Nordica sang for the first time here in several seasons, Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," and Wagner's aria, "Oh Hall of Song" from Tannhauser.

Barring a tendency toward theatrical exaggeration in the Beethoven aria, it was sung acceptably enough. The "Tannhauser" aria was beyond her altogether. Her voice is frosty in quality, and in the upper register forced to sharpness. She was recalled three times after her last number.

[illegible]

BOSTON, SUNDAY, NOV. 8, 1891.

THE SYMPHONIES.

FOURTH CONCERT.

At the fourth Symphony concert at Music hall this season, Saturday evening, Oct. 31, this was the programme:

Richard Strauss.	Symphonic Poem—"Don Juan." (First time in Boston.)
Rubinstein.	Concerto for Pianoforte in D minor, No. 4, op. 70. Moderato.—Moderato assai. —Allegro assai.
Beethoven.	Symphony No. 6. "Pastoral." Allegro ma non troppo.—Andante molto moto.—Allegro; Allegro; Allegretto.

The first of the two novelties presented were Symphonic Poem—"Don Juan" by Richard Strauss. The great brilliancy of this highly colored tone-picture cannot be denied. It must be conceded that its author possesses the knowledge of and has succeeded in bringing the whole power of the modern orchestra to his assistance in this poem. It does seem, however, as if he was aiming more for stunning effect, than for pure, unalloyed, pleasurable music. The wood, brass, parchment and everything else in the orchestra visible to the eye was brought into requisition to help swell the tonal, noisy effect. But it seemed as if there was too much of this wholesale tone business. The horns, so beautiful in tone quality when carefully played, were so overblown as to produce a coarse, unpleasant impression of their real utility, and so with some of the other instruments. From an out-door standpoint, the rendition and effect of the piece was fine, but too much of it in a hall is too severe on the ears. We doubt if Strauss, or Von Bülow, if they were conducting this piece, would permit quite so much volume to come forth from the orchestra. But perhaps Mr. Strauss intended it for such purpose.

Mr. Alfred Grünfeld was the second novelty. He is a pianist who occupies a high position in the capital of Austria as one of the greatest of modern pianists: that means a good deal in these days of numerous great pianists. Yet there is no question but his position is equal to the foremost of them.

The Rubenstein Concerto in D is of great difficulty, requiring the strength of a Sampson, the delicacy of an elf, and the technique of Rubenstein himself to bring it out in all its glory. Mr. Grünfeld succeeded in doing all this to the satisfaction of those interested in the performance of this colossal concerto. Mr. Grünfeld possesses the necessary physique, as well as the self consciousness of being able to do what he attempts; for his wrists, hands and fingers possess the strength and velocity for the playing of any pianoforte music written. This was demonstrated in the last movement of the Concerto, where all the powers of a great pianist are brought into requisition. We thought at first he was going to prove a "pounder" but were happily disappointed for he used power for the purpose of bringing out the required musical effects. Mr. Grünfeld knows how to play staccato, legato and how to begin and end a musical phrase in a proper finished manner. While at times his tone seemed somewhat dry and hard, it was on the whole satisfactory, showing him to be a most wonderful, fascinating artist. We hope to hear him in a wider field, when he will have full opportunity to show what he can really do.

The "Pastoral" symphony, barring a few slips, was well played according to Mr. Nikisch's interpretation. There was a slight improvement noticeable in two or three crescendos of the orchestra, and the strings appeared to do a little better than usual, but the brass is still too brassy. The thunder storm in the last movement might be considerably bettered.

JAMES M. TRACY.

Brooklyn Daily Eagle

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 7, 1891.

PHILHARMONIC.

Beginning of the Concert Season Under a New Regime.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Makes a Magnificent Artistic Success at the Academy of Music—Conductor Nikisch. Wonderful String Playing—The Programme—Lillian Nordica as Soloist.

Theodore Thomas, after serving the musical interests of Brooklyn for nearly twenty years, has gone to Chicago, which has seeming need of his missionary efforts, and his place is taken by Arthur Nikisch of Boston. Mr. Thomas is a great musician; he has done more than any one man in this country to advance the popular knowledge of, and taste for, good music; he has given a sound and high pleasure to more people than any other two conductors now in service, but we have his artistic equal in Mr. Nikisch, and, as now organized, the superior of his band in the one that Mr. Nikisch brings from Boston. This band, the famous Boston symphony orchestra, the rival of any force of the kind in the world, began its series of concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music yesterday, that are to be known as the Philharmonic concerts, albeit the Philharmonic society takes no active part in them, either in management or choice of programmes. Some of its members attend, and they lend their set of scenery for these entertainments. The audience yesterday was large, but less large than it should have been, for there has been no finer playing in this city than this audience heard. The orchestra is nicely balanced and ample in every division, but it is in the strings that its merits are most strikingly exhibited. This department, numbering fifty-six men, an orchestra in itself, is without equal, and it is in this department that merit is most quickly recognized and produces the most telling effects, for the strings are the main stay, the infantry of the band, the wood wind being comparable to the brilliant cavalry, and the brasses and percussing instruments to the loud sounding, but not always serviceable, artillery. It is, perhaps, to be regretted that the first programme does not contain a number for the special exploitation of the strings, like the Bach suite that was played in New York on Tuesday night, that their wonderful smoothness, voice quality, precision, expression and spirit could have been judged the better, but such opportunities will occur during the season. As it is, the violins and basses make new disclosures of the scope of strings. Their attack is so absolutely uniform, their volume so magnificent, their crescendos so inspiring and their full tone so rich and organ like that the hearer is thrilled and startled. These effects follow the readings of the conductor, who is, himself, as quietly notable as his musicians. A man of short stature, black mustached and bearded, with refined and clear cut face as fresh in its complexion as a child's, with hair and beard worn in artistic carelessness, quiet and almost bashful in manner, he advances to the leader's platform and mounts it when the house is stilled. Even the back rows of the orchestra are lifted but a few inches above the stage; so, in order to have all the players under his eye, his platform is slightly taller than usual. Once before his men he fills with the spirit of command. Without extravagance of gesture and sometimes with the slightest beat of the baton, he sways them to his will. There is an electrical communication of thought between him and his band; every motion is charged with nervous force; the constrained position of his left arm bent against his side with hand clenched shows to what tension he is wrought; he is like the hypnotist, centering his life force on his subject, and his magnetism is felt like an animating fire. He plays upon that orchestra as a master plays upon an organ; he hushes it to whispers; he rouses it to thunder gusts; it sings for him; it dances for him; it runs the gamut of passion and meaning, so far as thought has spread or bounded it; it tells more than speech and it tells it in the art that is highest and purest and most absolute in beauty. When this voice spoke in the surging rhythms of Beethoven, it had the authority of genius that is so like the authority of nature as we hear it spoken in the wind, the waves, the rocking pines and no less efficiently in those hinting spiritual tones that steal from mountain silences into the wanderer's ear. Beethoven was properly chosen to begin the concert and to inaugurate what should prove an enduring attachment between the music loving public of this city and this corps of artists. The selection was the third "Leonora" overture, a work of tried and accepted popularity and containing much that is moving and delightful, particularly the solemn and boding utterance of the horns near the beginning, and one or two things that are not agreeable. The scales played in unison just before the finale are so bare and hard and are so impertinent to the subject, that it is a wonder that some conductor has not found heart to cut them out, though their leanness and insignificance do lend contrast to the triumphant and gorgeous measures of conclusion. Mr. Nikisch adhered to custom in sending a trumpeter behind the scenes to sound the call, first far away, then nearer, that indicates the arrival of the governor, in the opera, but that stands for whatever you like it to, as you hear it in the pause of the orchestra. A writer quoted in the valuable analytical programme that is furnished at these concerts finds in it "the effect of a summons to a vanquished nation to lay down its arms; there is a forlorn, desolate, dead of night effect about it that is overpowering." The blowing of the trumpet from recesses of the stage has often been criticised as a trick, and at a concert, where the curtain is not about to rise on the work that it helps to usher in, it may seem a little forced, yet it gains in dramatic significance by remoteness and makes a stronger draft on the imagination. The new number in the programme was the Tschaikowsky suite, opus 55, a work symphonic in arrangement, but perhaps not strict enough in form for the conservatives to regard as a symphony, though why a symphony should not comprise any forms that its writer likes to put into it no formalist has explained. The days for mere forms has gone by, and barrel organ poetry, contrapuntal [illegible] eight headed sermons and cast iron melodramas are out of key with modernity, that wants the truest and quickest and most individual expression of a thought. The Tschaikowsky music is Russian, and under even its happiest moods can be heard the strain of lament that is in every phase of Russian art and writing, the pain and questioning of an oppressed people, longing for liberty, but blind to the ways that lead to it. The first number, an elegy, is beautiful in orchestration and the principal theme is charming. This melody, sounded by various instruments in the wood wind choir, successively, elicits a surprising wealth of solo talent in the orchestra. Such broad, sweet tone, such facile execution, are seldom heard on the concert stage as the flute, oboe, clarinet, English horn and even the bassoon players produced in the songs and phrases assigned to them. The "Melancholy Waltz" that forms the second number in the suite is sometimes oriental in manner, then it is a gambol of imps; anon it is the frenetic dance of a hungry, starving creature who must move to keep from freezing or from brooding on suicide; it is morbid and strange—the cry of a Chopin of the steppes. The scherzo offsets this by its frolic, gaiety and humor, as delicate as Mendelssohn's fairy music, as bizarre as Berlioz. The effects of the snare drum and cymbals toned down to their softest and chiming with the quick rush of the strings, and of the basses lumbering on as in a vain effort to overtake the violins are odd in the extreme and are full of originality. The last and longest section of the suite is a theme with twelve variations. The theme is a clear melody, like an old English air, and in the variants Tschaikowsky displays remarkable knowledge of the orchestra and practice in the use of its resources. The third variation, for wood wind, is quite suggestive of Berlioz; the announcement by the brasses in the fourth is strong and noble; the fifth is complex and the strings are kept in strict fugue routine; Luther might have written the seventh, so medieval is it in form; the ninth works up to a furious speed and is followed by a cadenza, played with excellent taste by Mr. Kneisel, that recurs in the next two sections and leads up to the twelfth variation, which has opulence and fantastic character enough to serve as an eastern processional. Toward the close occurs a protracted effect of crescendo that is merely a result of employing the dominant seventh for several bars before its resolution into the tonic. This resolution the ear becomes almost impatient for, but when made it is in a stately theme, with a fine outburst of tone and rich instrumental color. The prelude to "The Master Singers of Nuremberg" proved that Mr. Nikisch could play Wagner understandingly and with force and sweep, the admirable temper of the band serving to this end. The beautiful overture was beautifully played and brought the concert to an end. The soloist was Lillian Nordica, once Miss Norton of Maine, whose agreeable personality won her audience before she sang. The strain of operatic work has put a hint of acid quality into her upper and stronger notes, but it has also developed in her a large and commanding style and dramatic expression. Her notes are clean cut, true and produced with simplicity and directness, and the air from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and the apostrophe to the hall of song from "Tannhauser" were given with largeness of tone and fluency and force of execution. Unlike many solos they were happy additions to the concert. Mr. Nikisch is seemingly afraid of tiring his listeners, for he played but an hour and a half yesterday, but such fears are groundless. He has no long waits, however, and does not waste time; still, there is space on the programme for a Schumann overture or another Wagner excerpt. The success of the orchestra was decided and the audience was palpably delighted. To-night, at the concert, the programme will be repeated.

N. Y. Figaro.

New York, Sonnabend, den 31. October

* * *

Boſton Symphonie Orcheſter.

Weit energiſcher als alle hieſigen Orcheſter-Organiſationen huldigt das obengenannte Orcheſter dem muſikaliſchen Klaſſizismus. Von dem Col. Higginſon vor elf Jahren für die ausſchließliche Pflege dieſer Tongattung geſtiftet, iſt das Boſton Symphonie Orcheſter bis heute unter den verſchiedenen Dirigenten beharrlich dieſem idealen Prinzip getreu geblieben. Wagner, Liszt, Rubinſtein und Tondichter anderer Nationen werden mit Auswahl, die Werke des Klaſſizismus und der Romantik in einer Fülle und Reichhaltigkeit geſpendet, wie es wohl nur noch in der deutſchen Heimat geſchehen mag.

Arthur Nikiſch iſt wohl ein großer Theil des Rufes zu danken, deſſen ſich dieſe Konzerte überall, ſelbſt über die Grenzen der Vereinigten Staaten hinaus, erfreuen. Vielfach iſt Herr Nikiſch angefeindet worden, weil er ſich gegen die Dichtungen neuerer Componiſten etwas abgeſchloſſen verhält. Wirklich begabte junge Componiſten ſind bis jetzt immer von ihm gewürdigt worden, aber freilich mit Vorſicht und Unterſcheidung, ſollen ja dieſe Konzerte kein Tummelplatz für muſikaliſche Wettrennen bilden, wo ſich Neulinge oder Dilettanten erſt die Sporen erringen möchten. Das Programm des erſten Konzertes brachte unter Anderem folgendes: Suite, op. 55, von Tſchaikowsky; Arie aus „La Reine de Saba" von Gounod, geſungen von Mme. Nordica; Char-Freitag's Zauber aus „Parſifal" von Wagner.

Was das Boſton Symphonie Orcheſter unter oder vielmehr durch Nikiſch leiſtet, kann nur mit dem Worte erſtaunlich bezeichnet werden. Solche bis in die kleinſten Einzelheiten dringende Genauigkeit der Wiedergabe, dieſes Klarlegen der thematiſchen Verſchlingungen, ſolche unglaubliche Gleichheit und Bemeſſung der Steigerungen, der Tonfärbungen, Feinheit der Geiger (hier ſitzen unter anderen die Herren Kneiſel, Löffler, Heindl, Mollenhauer), Kraft und Sicherheit der Bläſer (hier ſind die Herren Stolz, Hackebarth, Straſſer, F. Müller, Heindl, Ablöſcher zu nennen) haben wir hier noch nicht gehört. Die ſehr ſchwierigen Stellen und der auffallende ſchöne Ton des neuen engliſchen Horns (Herr F. Müller), welches in der Tſchaikowsky's Suite ſehr zur Geltung kommt, ſowie das höchſt ſchwierige Einſetzen der Poſaunen (die Herren Stolz und Ablöſcher) bezeugten uns, daß die drei genannten Herren gewiſſenhafte Muſiker ſind.

Auch dem Herrn Konzertmeiſter Kneiſel gebührt hohes Lob für das Violin-Solo in derſelben Kompoſition. Die Soliſtin des Abends war Mme. Nordica. Die Stimme dieſer Künſtlerin iſt von außerordentlicher Stärke und findet ihren Schwerpunkt in einem geradezu phänomenal entwickelten Staccato. Nach Schluß ihrer Soli hatte ſich die Künſtlerin verſchiedener Hervorrufe zu erfreuen.

* * *

The Evening Post.

New York, Wednesday, Nov. 4, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Every year the musical season in New York appears to begin a week or two later. Apart from the Seidl Sunday concerts, which have been going on for some time, the first orchestral concert by a local organization this season will be that of the Symphony Society on November 13 and 14. The Philharmonic Society will not be heard till November 20, 21, while the opera season will begin a month later than usual. If this procrastinating tendency continues a few years longer New York will soon be in line with those Western cities which have no regular season at all, but take their whole year's music in a highly concentrated dose during a week's music festival.

While the New York organizations are thus still tuning their fiddles and rehearsing their new scores, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been putting on its war-paint and invading the city. There is certainly a good deal of brilliant orchestral war-paint in Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, which opened last evening's concert at Chickering Hall, and which gave Mr. Nikisch and his well-trained forces opportunity to display their tactics to best advantage. The audience was large and much disposed to applause, the favorite numbers being Elizabeth's monologue "Dich theure Halle grüss ich wieder' from Tannhäuser, and the gavotte, in an arrangement for string orchestra, of three Bach pieces, by Bachrich. Of all the old-fashioned dances, the gavotte seems to appeal most to modern audiences, and it is through the medium of his charming pieces in this form that Bach will perhaps gradually win the favor of the general musical public. In the grandiose broadening out and slight retarding of the final bars, Mr. Nikisch gave a lesson in expression which should not be lost on musical students. The Wagner number was sung by Mme. Lillian Nordica, who also gave Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," both of which pieces she sang well from a purely vocal point of view, though with less depth of dramatic feeling than these numbers are capable of. In the final piece, the Rhenish symphony, Mr. Nikisch once more proved that as a Schumann conductor he has no superior, perhaps no equal.

The New York Recorder.

"FIRST OF ALL, THE NEWS."

Published every day in the year at
NO. 21 PARK ROW.
BY THE NEW YORK RECORDER COMPANY.

Wednesday, November 4, 1891.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Brilliant Opening of the Season at Chickering Hall Last Night.

Arthur Nikisch and his band from Boston gave their first concert in Chickering Hall last night, and demonstrated undeniably by the large audience they gathered to listen to them that politics were not paramount in the city after all. The pièce de resistance of the evening's programme was the Rhenish Symphony of Schumann, which received a vigorous, sympathetic interpretation at the hands of Mr. Nikisch, who conducts with his same wonderful vitality and magnetism as ever. All of the many delightful characteristics of the orchestra were present in this performance. Such a string quartet and such a wood and brass choir is at once a charm and the envy of a metropolitan music lover. We simply have nothing like it in New York, neither in quality nor in ensemble.

The well-balanced strings were heard to great advantage in the Bach numbers, the familiar prelude, Adajio and Gavotte, and the virtuosity of the entire orchestra had abundant chances for display in Berlioz's brilliantly scored "Benvenuto Cellini" overture. Mme. Lillian Nordica sang for the first time here in several seasons, Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," and Wagner's aria, "Oh Hall of Song" from Tannhauser.

Barring a tendency toward theatrical exaggeration in the Beethoven aria, it was sung acceptably enough. The "Tannhauser" aria was beyond her altogether. Her voice is frosty in quality, and in the upper register forced to sharpness. She was recalled three times after her last number.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, NOV. 8, 1891

THE SYMPHONIES.

FOURTH CONCERT.

At the fourth Symphony concert at Music hall this season, Saturday evening, Oct. 31, this was the programme:

Richard Strauss.	Symphonic Poem — "Don Juan." (First time in Boston.)
Rubinstein.	Concerto for Pianoforte in D minor, No. 4, op. 70. Moderato.—Moderato assai.—Allegro assai.
Beethoven.	Symphony No. 6. "Pastoral." Allegro ma non troppo.—Andante molto moto.—Allegro; Allegro; Allegretto.

The first of the two novelties presented were Symphonic Poem—"Don Juan" by Richard Strauss. The great brilliancy of this highly colored tone-picture cannot be denied. It must be conceded that its author possesses the knowledge of and has succeeded in bringing the whole power of the modern orchestra to his assistance in this poem. It does seem, however, as if he was aiming more for stunning effect, than for pure, unalloyed, pleasurable music. The wood, brass, parchment and everything else in the orchestra visible to the eye was brought into requisition to help swell the tonal, noisy effect. But it seemed as if there was too much of this wholesale tone business. The horns, so beautiful in tone quality when carefully played, were so overblown as to produce a coarse, unpleasant impression of their real utility, and so with some of the other instruments. From an out-door standpoint, the rendition and effect of the piece was fine, but too much of it in a hall is too severe on the ears. We doubt if Strauss, or Von Bülow, if they were conducting this piece, would permit quite so much volume to come forth from the orchestra. But perhaps Mr. Strauss intended it for such purpose.

Mr. Alfred Grünfeld was the second novelty. He is a pianist who occupies a high position in the capital of Austria as one of the greatest of modern pianists: that means a good deal in these days of numerous great pianists. Yet there is no question but his position is equal to the foremost of them.

The Rubenstein Concerto in D is of great difficulty, requiring the strength of a Sampson, the delicacy of an elf, and the technique of Rubenstein himself to bring it out in all its glory. Mr. Grünfeld succeeded in doing all this to the satisfaction of those interested in the performance of this colossal concerto. Mr. Grünfeld possesses the necessary physique, as well as the self consciousness of being able to do what he attempts; for his wrists, hands and fingers possess the strength and velocity for the playing of any pianoforte music written. This was demonstrated in the last movement of the Concerto, where all the powers of a great pianist are brought into requisition. We thought at first he was going to prove a "pounder" but were happily disappointed for he used power for the purpose of bringing out the required musical effects. Mr. Grünfeld knows how to play staccato, legato and how to begin and end a musical phrase in a proper finished manner. While at times his tone seemed somewhat dry and hard, it was on the whole satisfactory, showing him to be a most wonderful, fascinating artist. We hope to hear him in a wider field, when he will have full opportunity to show what he can really do.

The "Pastoral" symphony, barring a few slips, was well played according to Mr. Nikisch's interpretation. There was a slight improvement noticeable in two or three crescendos of the orchestra, and the strings appeared to do a little better than usual, but the brass is still too brassy. The thunder storm in the last movement might be considerably bettered.

JAMES M. TRACY.

Date 11/6

The musical season in Baltimore was formally opened when Conductor Nikisch brought down his baton in the Academy hall Thursday night and the first notes of the famous "Leonore" overture came to the ears of the audience. And what a brilliant opening it was! If one has any appreciation of harmony at all he soon enters a world away apart from the cold matter-of-fact every-day life we live, under the influence of that company of players over which Nikisch is the ruling spirit. There's a subtile charm about their playing which captivates the hearer and to a certain extent they magnetize an audience just as a powerful actor can carry the theater folk with him in his stage troubles and triumphs from the rise to the fall of the curtain.

While the overture was given a grand rendition the piece de resistance of the evening was the theme and variations from Tschaikowsky's opus 55. This is a work which brings every part of an orchestra into prominence. Even the kettle drum has what might be called a solo part. The first violins are called upon for the most delicate shading and effects. The band has to produce some of the climaxes unaided by the strings, while running through one of the variations is an exquisite flute solo which the slightest error in accompaniment would spoil. There's a wonderful variety to the composition. The variations are variations in truth. Yet throughout, the ear can detect the air running through the whole as a thread of gold is woven into a silken fabric. No other orchestra in this country, save perhaps one—Thomas'—could interpret the composition with the artistic effect that the Symphony orchestra gave it.

Mme. Nordica was heard in but two selections. Her voice is as powerful and clear yet sweet, and has as much range as when she first appeared in oratorio. She sang the Polacca from "Mignon" with all the brilliancy and dash it requires to make it effective and also gave a superb rendition of the aria from the "Queen of Sheba."

Though the management could not secure a theater for the concerts the sound properties were shown to be very good in the Academy hall, and the large audience present were not prevented from appreciating the music by any defect in the building as is so often the case.

MAIL AND EXPRESS, New York, N. Y.

Date 11/14

Boston Symphony Orchestra at Chickering Hall.

MR. NIKISCH'S CONCERT A SUCCESS

"Miss Helyett" Starts on a Brilliant Career at the Star Theatre — Audran's Pretty Music and a Superb Stage Setting—"The Country Circus" and the Prospect of Seeing It in This City.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's course for the present season was given last evening at Chickering Hall before an audience that evidently fully appreciated the excellence of the entertainment provided by Mr. Nikisch. The programme included Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," a prelude, adagio and gavotte by Bach, arranged for string orchestra by Bachrich; Schumann's E flat symphony No. 3, and two vocal selections—Beethoven's "Ah, Perfido" and Elizabeth's air, "O Hall of Song," from 'Tannhaeuser."

The excellences which have distinguished the Boston Symphony Orchestra since its organization by Mr. Gericke two years ago, and which have been no less notable under its present conductor, were evident in the performance last evening. To the perfection of finish and the exactness of ensemble which have been its prominent characteristics there have been added in recent years a vigor and a vitality of playing that add to the effect of the mechanical perfection which long practice has given. These last-named qualities of Mr. Nikisch's orchestra were especially displayed last evening in the Berlioz overture and in the Schumann symphony. The Bach selections were given with a dainty grace and a faultless precision that were delightful, and that called forth the hearty applause of the audience.

In the last movement of the symphony, which was given with fine effect, the excellence of the trombones in M. Nikisch's orchestra was well shown, and throughout the evening the vigor and brilliancy of effect as well as refinement and delicacy of expression which characterize the work of the orchestra were admirably shown.

Mme. Lillian Nordica was the vocalist of the evening. She sang the Beethoven aria with a good deal of dramatic feeling, and in the Wagner selection showed herself to be a brilliant vocalist. Her agreeable presence adds to the effect of her excellent vocalization.

HERALD, New York, N.

Date 11-7

BOSTON MAKES MUSIC FOR BROOKLYN

Herr Nikisch's First Appearance as Leader of the Philharmonic Concerts Across the River.

43

MAIKOWSKY IN OLD FASHIONED DRAMA

Calderon de la Barca's "Life's a Dream" Revived at the Amberg Theatre.

When Mr. Theodore Thomas left these parts for Chicago the directors of the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn voted to engage the Boston Orchestra and Herr Nikisch to give six concerts under their auspices. The first rehearsal of the series was given yesterday afternoon in the Brooklyn Academy of Music, and will be followed by the first concert this evening.

From the rather empty appearance of the parquet yesterday, it is to be feared that many of the old subscribers to these concerts have had their doubts as to the wisdom of the change. It will perhaps please these over cautious ones to know that better orchestral music was never heard in the Academy than was heard there yesterday.

The programme consisted of Beethoven's "Leonore" overture No. 3; Tschaikowsky's suite, Op. 55, and the "Meistersinger" overture, besides which Mme. Lillian Nordica sang an aria from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba," and one from "Tannhäuser." The Tschaikowsky suite is a wonderful composition of symphonic proportions, which is already fairly familiar to our music lovers, and was heard here last spring under the composer's bâton. It was superbly given by Mr. Nikisch and his orchestra, and roused the audience—usually a staid and decorous one at the Brooklyn Philharmonic—to a high pitch of enthusiasm. The final variation, a polacca of great brilliancy, was a genuine triumph for this body of virtuosi.

In the "Meistersinger" overture there might have been more freedom of tempi, but it was nevertheless a performance of great spirit, and the fine sonority of the band in the march of the mastersingers deserves any amount of praise.

Mme. Nordica's voice and style fit Gounod's music far better than that of Wagner, and the hearty applause the singer received for the "Queen of Sheba" air was well earned.

At the next concert—December 12—Herr Paderewski will be the soloist.

TIMES, New York, N. Y.

Date 11-7

AMUSEMENTS.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

43

It is largely owing to a fortuitous combination of circumstances that Boston's pet chamber music organization, the Kneisel String Quartet, visits this city once again. It was originally announced that it had never played here, but that was only one of those enthusiastic errors into which concert managers fall in their eagerness to score points. The Kneisel Quartet played at Steinway Hall about three years ago just once. That once, however, was enough to make lovers of the most chaste form of instrumental music eager to hear it again. So the fact that the presence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city for concerts here and in Brooklyn has induced the members of the quartet to announce four concerts is a matter for congratulation.

The first of these concerts was given last night at Sherry's, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street, in a small hall, whose upholstered walls were decidedly inimical to sonority. The programme offered for consideration was altogether charming. It consisted of Mozart's beautiful quartet in C major, (Köchel, 465,) the second movement of Tschaikowsky's D major quartet, and Johannes Brahms's new quintet in G major, Opus 111, which had not been heard before in this country. This, as may be seen, was a clean, compact programme, the Tschaikowsky movement acting as a sort of intermezzo between the other two numbers, and with its clear and characteristic solo melody affording a nicely-graded transition from Mozart to Brahms.

The new quintet, in which the quartet is reinforced by a second viola, was, of course, the centre of interest. When the work was originally produced in Vienna by the Rosé Quartet Edward Hanslick praised it heartily, and it is a great pleasure to be able to agree with him. The new work is fully worthy of the warm commendation which it has received in Europe, and this public is indebted to Mr. Kneisel and his associates for producing it here.

It is in four movements, marked allegro con brio, adagio, allegretto, and finale, and is in the sonata form. Indeed, its construction is notably pure in its classicism, and the composition is a delightful evidence of the possibilities still remaining in the form which so many modern romanticists find ill-suited to their purposes. Though Brahms adheres to the classic outline, he is intensely modern in his first and fourth movements. The first is built on two themes which contrast admirably in melody, rhythm, and character. The first is bold, enthusiastic, aggressive; the second, sweet, pleading, touching. If there be any truth in Sidney Lanier's declaration that "music is love in search of a word," these two themes may be taken as indicating two moods of a lover. They are treated in a masterly manner, the working out being a really noble piece of writing.

The second and third movements, so lovely in their classic purity of form and instrumentation, so fresh, youthful and naïve in their melodic ideas, that one is at a loss to find words to voice the praise which they deserve. Perhaps no higher commendation can be uttered—and this does not go too far—than to say that the third movement is worthy of Mozart. It is like his writing in the perspicuous treatment of the voice parts. The song of a real genius is heard here. The last movement is again ebullient, brimming over with a happiness that at once challenges and invites sympathy. Brahms is a great master of chamber music, and in this quintet he is at his best.

The Kneisel Quartet consists of Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second; Louis Svecenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder, 'cello. These gentlemen had the assistance of O. Novacek as second viola in the quintet. The playing of the quartet is an epitome of all that is best in chamber music performance. The four gentlemen have a refined delicacy of touch that is rare, an artistic feeling and a musicianly intelligence altogether admirable, and a mastery of the routine of ensemble playing that commands unqualified admiration. It would be difficult to find anything more lovely than their performance of the Mozart number, and Mr. Kneisel's solo playing in the Tschaikowsky excerpt was masterly.

BULLETIN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11

MUSICAL.

Mr. Nikisch's Orchestral Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is just now the most powerful musical magnet that comes to Philadelphia. It "draws" as no other does. Last evening there was a proof of this in the brilliant assemblage that filled every part of the Academy of Music. It is not Mr. Nikisch that attracts, nor one of his soloists; certainly it was not the programme last evening, for it was a weak one. It is the fashion to go to hear this fine musical association, just as it used to be to go to hear Theodore Thomas's. The fashion is so good a one that it is to be hoped it will "rage" all through this season and indefinitely in the future. Perhaps it may stir up the people of Philadelphia to an ambition to establish a permanent local orchestra as good as those of Boston, New York and Chicago.

Beethoven's third Leonora overture was the first piece on last evening's programme. It is not so good as the other three, but it was played well, and Beethoven always delights. The second instrumental piece was a very long Suite by Tchaikowsky, the Russian composer whom it is the fashion to admire as a very great composer. The work is one of considerable constructive ability, lacking, however, every mark of genius. It gives plenty for the different instruments to do, and there are occasional resorts to unknown or unusual instruments which savor of the trickery of musical charlatanry. There is no distinct motif in any of the several movements. They are thrown together without being united concordantly. The nine variations of the last movement express little; their purpose seems to be chiefly to test the technique of the principal instrumentalists. The scherzo is scrappy, and more remarkable for eccentricity than for the higher qualities of composition. The preceding movements (for we have reversed the order in noticing them, though without damage to the work) are open to similar criticism. The conclusion of all who have heard the works of the great masters was that Tchaikowsky cannot be classed among them. The final piece for the orchestra was the vorspiel of Wagner's Meistersinger, and it showed how much greater he is than the new composer. Several of the fine themes of the opera are introduced, but not in the common-place manner employed by many in overtures to operas. This was the most satisfying performance by the full orchestra.

Mr. Adamowski, the violinist, who has a large body of admirers in Philadelphia, delighted them in the Rondo Capriccioso of Saint-Saens. He is a most expert and elegant performer, and his skill is so great that his lack of fervor of style is little thought of. Mme. Lilian Nordica was the solo singer of the evening. Her voice is strong and her execution brilliant without being faultless. The sympathetic quality of voice that is so essential in dramatic music either does not exist or is not fully developed. She was excessively applauded, but it is quite certain that her singing stirred no deep emotions. The aria from the Queen of Sheba and Filina's polacca from Mignon have both been more effectively sung here.

The next concert of this superb band will be given on Monday evening, December 7.

INQUIRER, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11-3

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

The Academy of Music was crowded last night at the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The organization has been slightly reinforced and is better than ever before. The programme last night was as follows:

Beethoven..........Overture, "Leonore," No. 3
Gounod.......... Aria from "Queen of Sheba"
Mme. Lillian Nordica.
Tschaikowsky........................Suite, Op. 55
Elegie.
Valse melancholique.
Scherzo.
Tema con Variazioni.
Saint-Saens.......Rondo Capriccioso for violin
Mr. T. Adamowski.
A. Thomas............Polacca from "Mignon"
Mme. Nordica.
Wagner..........Prelude, "Die Meistersinger"

It is a little remarkable that the first symphony concert of the season should contain no symphony. In place was substituted a suite by Tschaikowsky, a diversified series of compositions, which show great skill in construction, but are musically less interesting than might be desired. The Leonore (No. 3) overture and the "Meistersinger" prelude largely atoned for this. The Leonore overtures are all works of high value, but the No. 3 ranks as chief. It was played last night superbly.

Mme. Nordica was in excellent voice and sang the aria with great power, but was less pleasing in the polacca.

Mr. Adamowski played brilliantly, and the orchestration was masterly. The orchestra starts out with the prospect of the most brilliant season in its history.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

ESTABLISHED IN 1862.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1891.

The fourth Symphony concert began with Richard Strauss's setting of Lenau's poem, 'Don Juan.' Richard, who is of a different family from the tricksy Edouard and the dapper Johann of Vienna, puts his thoughts into the form of the 'symphonic poem'. While he is testing his strength in composition, the 'symphonic poem' is just the vehicle for his experiments; for it is formless and does not demand musical sequence of any sort, so that, if a young composer is prolific of ideas and has not the technique and restraint to make a master work, symmetrical, artistic and beautiful, he can lose himself in the mazes of this convenient and nondescript concoction. Richard has ideas, millions of them, and his 'Don Juan,' as a piece of instrumentation, is as startling and suggestive as it is incoherent and elusive. The public can afford to bear with this young man during his sprouting period; for 'Don Juan' is an improvement over 'Italy,' the ambitious production with which Mr. Gericke introduced the young man to Boston. His next work will be calmer and more artistic than 'Don Juan'. It is inevitable: in music as in life there exists a wild oats period. Strauss has a natural bent in instrumentation and delights in gorgeous combinations. Lenau's poem is a little too sensual for Richard, who is first of all barbaric and robust. The piece was splendidly played.

Alfred Grünfeld was the pianist at the concert, playing Rubinstein's D-minor concerto. He has a prodigious technique and a finger-grip like iron; his touch, too, is remarkably clear; but whether he has sentiment and the fine poetic temperament remains to be seen. His playing was well received, and, after the concert, various and contrary were the expressions of opinion. Grünfeld gives a series of recitals very soon. Beethoven's 'Pastoral' symphony completed the fourth programme, and Mr. Nikisch made its familiar measures interesting.

Th rmonic Orche lven at the T

Mr. Alfred Grünfeld, the German pianist who made so excellent an impression at the last Symphony Concert, will give his first recital at Music Hall next Thursday afternoon. He will be assisted by his brother Heinrich, the violoncellist. Other recitals are announced for the afternoons of November 14, 18, and 24.

The much-heralded Austrian Juvenile Band will give four concerts at Music Hall, beginning Wednesday evening, Nov. 11.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first tour of the current season last week, giving concerts in New York (Chickering Hall), Philadelphia (Academy of Music) and Baltimore (Academy Concert Hall), in each case before an audience that filled the house. In each case, too, people were turned away. It was a triumphal journey, considered not only in a financial sense but in the reception of the band and its leader by amateurs and connoisseurs of music. The New York Evening Post declared that Mr. Nikisch, as a Schumann conductor, has no superior, and compliments of like warmth were uttered all along the line. In both Philadelphia and Baltimore the opinion was expressed that the band was better than ever before. Mrs. Nordica and Mr. Adamowski, the solo performer of the trip, also commanded the favor of all listeners.

M

Date 11/6

The musical season in Baltimore was formally opened when Conductor Nikisch brought down his baton in the Academy hall Thursday night and the first notes of the famous "Leonore" overture came to the ears of the audience. And what a brilliant opening it was! If one has any appreciation of harmony at all he soon enters a world away apart from the cold matter-of-fact every-day life we live, under the influence of that company of players over which Nikisch is the ruling spirit. There's a subtile charm about their playing which captivates the hearer and to a certain extent they magnetize an audience just as a powerful actor can carry the theater folk with him in his stage troubles and triumphs from the rise to the fall of the curtain.

While the overture was given a grand rendition the piece de resistance of the evening was the theme and variations from Tschaikowsky's opus 55. This is a work which brings every part of an orchestra into prominence. Even the kettle drum has what might be called a solo part. The first violins are called upon for the most delicate shading and effects. The band has to produce some of the climaxes unaided by the strings, while running through one of the variations is an exquisite flute solo which the slightest error in accompaniment would spoil. There's a wonderful variety to the composition. The variations are variations in truth. Yet throughout, the ear can detect the air running through the whole as a thread of gold is woven into a silken fabric. No other orchestra in this country, save perhaps one—Thomas'—could interpret the composition with the artistic effect that the Symphony orchestra gave it.

Mme. Nordica was heard in but two selections. Her voice is as powerful and clear yet sweet, and has as much range as when she first appeared in oratorio. She sang the Polacca from "Mignon" with all the brilliancy and dash it requires to make it effective and also gave a superb rendition of the aria from the "Queen of Sheba."

Though the management could not secure a theater for the concerts the sound properties were shown to be very good in the Academy hall, and the large audience present were not prevented from appreciating the music by any defect in the building as is so often the case.

MAIL AND EXPRESS, New York, N. Y.

Date 11/14

WORLD OF MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra at Chickering Hall.

MR. NIKISCH'S CONCERT A SUCCESS

"Miss Helyett" Starts on a Brilliant Career at the Star Theatre — Audran's Pretty Music and a Superb Stage Setting—"The Country Circus" and the Prospect of Seeing It in This City.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's course for the present season was given last evening at Chickering Hall before an audience that evidently fully appreciated the excellence of the entertainment provided by Mr. Nikisch. The programme included Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," a prelude, adagio and gavotte by Bach, arranged for string orchestra by Bachrich; Schumann's E flat symphony No. 3, and two vocal selections—Beethoven's "Ah, Perfido" and Elizabeth's air, "O Hall of Song," from 'Tannhaeuser."

The excellences which have distinguished the Boston Symphony Orchestra since its organization by Mr. Gericke two years ago, and which have been no less notable under its present conductor, were evident in the performance last evening. To the perfection of finish and the exactness of ensemble which have been its prominent characteristics there have been added in recent years a vigor and a vitality of playing that add to the effect of the mechanical perfection which long practice has given. These last-named qualities of Mr. Nikisch's orchestra were especially displayed last evening in the Berlioz overture and in the Schumann symphony. The Bach selections were given with a dainty grace and a faultless precision that were delightful, and that called forth the hearty applause of the audience.

In the last movement of the symphony, which was given with fine effect, the excellence of the trombones in M. Nikisch's orchestra was well shown, and throughout the evening the vigor and brilliancy of effect as well as refinement and delicacy of expression which characterize the work of the orchestra were admirably shown.

Mme. Lillian Nordica was the vocalist of the evening. She sang the Beethoven aria with a good deal of dramatic feeling, and in the Wagner selection showed herself to be a brilliant vocalist. Her agreeable presence adds to the effect of her excellent vocalization.

HERALD, New York, N. Y.

Date 11-7

BOSTON MAKES MUSIC FOR BROOKLYN

Herr Nikisch's First Appearance as Leader of the Philharmonic Concerts Across the River.

43

MAIKOWSKY IN OLD FASHIONED DRAMA

Calderon de la Barca's "Life's a Dream" Revived at the Amberg Theatre.

When Mr. Theodore Thomas left these parts for Chicago the directors of the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn voted to engage the Boston Orchestra and Herr Nikisch to give six concerts under their auspices. The first rehearsal of the series was given yesterday afternoon in the Brooklyn Academy of Music, and will be followed by the first concert this evening.

From the rather empty appearance of the parquet yesterday, it is to be feared that many of the old subscribers to these concerts have had their doubts as to the wisdom of the change. It will perhaps please these over cautious ones to know that better orchestral music was never heard in the Academy than was heard there yesterday.

The programme consisted of Beethoven's "Leonore" overture No. 3; Tschaikowsky's suite, Op. 55, and the "Meistersinger" overture, besides which Mme. Lillian Nordica sang an aria from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba," and one from "Tannhäuser." The Tschaikowsky suite is a wonderful composition of symphonic proportions, which is already fairly familiar to our music lovers, and was heard here last spring under the composer's bâton. It was superbly given by Mr. Nikisch and his orchestra, and roused the audience—usually a staid and decorous one at the Brooklyn Philharmonic—to a high pitch of enthusiasm. The final variation, a polacca of great brilliancy, was a genuine triumph for this body of virtuosi.

In the "Meistersinger" overture there might have been more freedom of tempi, but it was nevertheless a performance of great spirit, and the fine sonority of the band in the march of the mastersingers deserves any amount of praise.

Mme. Nordica's voice and style fit Gounod's music far better than that of Wagner, and the hearty applause the singer received for the "Queen of Sheba" air was well earned.

At the next concert—December 12—Herr Paderewski will be the soloist.

TIMES, New York, N. Y.

Date 11-7

AMUSEMENTS.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

43

It is largely owing to a fortuitous combination of circumstances that Boston's pet chamber music organization, the Kneisel String Quartet, visits this city once again. It was originally announced that it had never played here, but that was only one of those enthusiastic errors into which concert managers fall in their eagerness to score points. The Kneisel Quartet played at Steinway Hall about three years ago just once. That once, however, was enough to make lovers of the most chaste form of instrumental music eager to hear it again. So the fact that the presence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city for concerts here and in Brooklyn has induced the members of the quartet to announce four concerts is a matter for congratulation.

The first of these concerts was given last night at Sherry's, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street, in a small hall, whose upholstered walls were decidedly inimical to sonority. The programme offered for consideration was altogether charming. It consisted of Mozart's beautiful quartet in C major, (Köchel, 465,) the second movement of Tschaikowsky's D major quartet, and Johannes Brahms's new quintet in G major, Opus 111, which had not been heard before in this country. This, as may be seen, was a clean, compact programme, the Tschaikowsky movement acting as a sort of intermezzo between the other two numbers, and with its clear and characteristic solo melody affording a nicely-graded transition from Mozart to Brahms.

The new quintet, in which the quartet is reinforced by a second viola, was, of course, the centre of interest. When the work was originally produced in Vienna by the Rosé Quartet Edward Hanslick praised it heartily, and it is a great pleasure to be able to agree with him. The new work is fully worthy of the warm commendation which it has received in Europe, and this public is indebted to Mr. Kneisel and his associates for producing it here.

It is in four movements, marked allegro con brio, adagio, allegretto, and finale, and is in the sonata form. Indeed, its construction is notably pure in its classicism, and the composition is a delightful evidence of the possibilities still remaining in the form which so many modern romanticists find ill-suited to their purposes. Though Brahms adheres to the classic outline, he is intensely modern in his first and fourth movements. The first is built on two themes which contrast admirably in melody, rhythm, and character. The first is bold, enthusiastic, aggressive; the second, sweet, pleading, touching. If there be any truth in Sidney Lanier's declaration that "music is love in search of a word," these two themes may be taken as indicating two moods of a lover. They are treated in a masterly manner, the working out being a really noble piece of writing.

The second and third movements, so lovely in their classic purity of form and instrumentation, so fresh, youthful and naïve in their melodic ideas, that one is at a loss to find words to voice the praise which they deserve. Perhaps no higher commendation can be uttered—and this does not go too far—than to say that the third movement is worthy of Mozart. It is like his writing in the perspicuous treatment of the voice parts. The song of a real genius is heard here. The last movement is again ebullient, brimming over with a happiness that at once challenges and invites sympathy. Brahms is a great master of chamber music, and in this quintet he is at his best.

The Kneisel Quartet consists of Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second; Louis Svecenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder, 'cello. These gentlemen had the assistance of O. Novacek as second viola in the quintet. The playing of the quartet is an epitome of all that is best in chamber music performance. The four gentlemen have a refined delicacy of touch that is rare, an artistic feeling and a musicianly intelligence altogether admirable, and a mastery of the routine of ensemble playing that commands unqualified admiration. It would be difficult to find anything more lovely than their performance of the Mozart number, and Mr. Kneisel's solo playing in the Tschaikowsky excerpt was masterly.

BULLETIN, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11

MUSICAL.

Mr. Nikisch's Orchestral Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is just now the most powerful musical magnet that comes to Philadelphia. It "draws" as no other does. Last evening there was a proof of this in the brilliant assemblage that filled every part of the Academy Music. It is not Mr. Nikisch that attracts, nor one of his soloists; certainly it was not the programme last evening, for it was a weak one. It is the fashion to go to hear this fine musical association, just as it used to be to go to hear Theodore Thomas's. The fashion is so good a one that it is to be hoped it will "rage" all through this season and indefinitely in the future. Perhaps it may stir up the people of Philadelphia to an ambition to establish a permanent local orchestra as good as those of Boston, New York and Chicago.

Beethoven's third Leonora overture was the first piece on last evening's programme. It is not so good as the other three, but it was played well, and Beethoven always delights. The second instrumental piece was a very long Suite by Tchaikowsky, the Russian composer whom it is the fashion to admire as a very great composer. The work is one of considerable constructive ability, lacking, however, every mark of genius. It gives plenty for the different instruments to do, and there are occasional resorts to unknown or unusual instruments which savor of the trickery of musical charlatanry. There is no distinct motif in any of the several movements. They are thrown together without being united concordantly. The nine variations of the last movement express little; their purpose seems to be chiefly to test the technique of the principal instrumentalists. The scherzo is scrappy, and more remarkable for eccentricity than for the higher qualities of composition. The preceding movements (for we have reversed the order in noticing them, though without damage to the work) are open to similar criticism. The conclusion of all who have heard the works of the great masters was that Tchaikowsky cannot be classed among them. The final piece for the orchestra was the vorspiel of Wagner's Meistersinger, and it showed how much greater he is than the new composer. Several of the fine themes of the opera are introduced, but not in the common-place manner employed by many in overtures to operas. This was the most satisfying performance by the full orchestra.

Mr. Adamowski, the violinist, who has a large body of admirers in Philadelphia, delighted them in the Rondo Capriccioso of Saint-Saens. He is a most expert and elegant performer, and his skill is so great that his lack of fervor of style is little thought of. Mme. Lilian Nordica was the solo singer of the evening. Her voice is strong and her execution brilliant without being faultless. The sympathetic quality of voice that is so essential in dramatic music either does not exist or is not fully developed. She was excessively applauded, but it is quite certain that her singing stirred no deep emotions. The aria from the Queen of Sheba and Filina's polacca from Mignon have both been more effectively sung here.

The next concert of this superb band will be given on Monday evening, December 7.

INQUIRER, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11-3

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

The Academy of Music was crowded last night at the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The organization has been slightly reinforced and is better than ever before. The programme last night was as follows:

Beethoven..........Overture, "Leonore," No. 3
Gounod.......... Aria from "Queen of Sheba"
Mme. Lillian Nordica.
Tschaikowsky......................Suite, Op. 55
Elegie.
Valse melancholique.
Scherzo.
Tema con Variazioni.
Saint-Saens.......Rondo Capriccioso for violin
Mr. T. Adamowski.
A. Thomas.............Polacca from "Mignon"
Mme. Nordica.
Wagner..........Prelude, "Die Meistersinger"

It is a little remarkable that the first symphony concert of the season should contain no symphony. In place was substituted a suite by Tschaikowsky, a diversified series of compositions, which show great skill in construction, but are musically less interesting than might be desired. The Leonore (No. 3) overture and the "Meistersinger" prelude largely atoned for this. The Leonore overtures are all works of high value, but the No. 3 ranks as chief. It was played last night superbly.

Mme. Nordica was in excellent voice and sang the aria with great power, but was less pleasing in the polacca.

Mr. Adamowski played brilliantly, and the orchestration was masterly. The orchestra starts out with the prospect of the most brilliant season in its history.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

ESTABLISHED IN 1862.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER, 7, 1891.

The fourth Symphony concert began with Richard Strauss's setting of Lenau's poem, 'Don Juan.' Richard, who is of a different family from the tricksy Edouard and the dapper Johann of Vienna, puts his thoughts into the form of the 'symphonic poem'. While he is testing his strength in composition, the 'symphonic poem' is just the vehicle for his experiments; for it is formless and does not demand musical sequence of any sort, so that, if a young composer is prolific of ideas and has not the technique and restraint to make a master work, symmetrical, artistic and beautiful, he can lose himself in the mazes of this convenient and nondescript concoction. Richard has ideas, millions of them, and his 'Don Juan,' as a piece of instrumentation, is as startling and suggestive as it is incoherent and elusive. The public can afford to bear with this young man during his sprouting period; for 'Don Juan' is an improvement over 'Italy,' the ambitious production with which Mr. Gericke introduced the young man to Boston. His next work will be calmer and more artistic than 'Don Juan'. It is inevitable: in music as in life there exists a wild oats period. Strauss has a natural bent in instrumentation and delights in gorgeous combinations. Lenau's poem is a little too sensual for Richard, who is first of all barbaric and robust. The piece was splendidly played.

Alfred Grünfeld was the pianist at the concert, playing Rubinstein's D-minor concerto. He has a prodigious technique and a finger-grip like iron; his touch, too, is remarkably clear; but whether he has sentiment and the fine poetic temperament remains to be seen. His playing was well received, and, after the concert, various and contrary were the expressions of opinion. Grünfeld gives a series of recitals very soon. Beethoven's 'Pastoral' symphony completed the fourth programme, and Mr. Nikisch made its familiar measures interesting.

Th rmonic
Orche iven at the T

Mr. Alfred Grünfeld, the German pianist who made so excellent an impression at the last Symphony Concert, will give his first recital at Music Hall next Thursday afternoon. He will be assisted by his brother Heinrich, the violoncellist. Other recitals are announced for the afternoons of November 14, 18, and 24.

The much-heralded Austrian Juvenile Band will give four concerts at Music Hall, beginning Wednesday evening, Nov. 11.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first tour of the current season last week, giving concerts in New York (Chickering Hall), Philadelphia (Academy of Music) and Baltimore (Academy Concert Hall), in each case before an audience that filled the house. In each case, too, people were turned away. It was a triumphal journey, considered not only in a financial sense but in the reception of the band and its leader by amateurs and connoisseurs of music. The New York Evening Post declared that Mr. Nikisch, as a Schumann conductor, has no superior, and compliments of like warmth were uttered all along the line. In both Philadelphia and Baltimore the opinion was expressed that the band was better than ever before. Mrs. Nordica and Mr. Adamowski, the solo performer of the trip, also commanded the favor of all listeners.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

The Oldest Musical Weekly Published in America.

FOUNDED IN 1863 BY HENRY C. WATSON.

☞ The first and most important object the journalist should have in mind is to criticise productive and reproductive art with such discriminating care and honesty of purpose as to offer a safe guide to popular judgment rather than act as its echo, thus creating a demand for higher culture in artists.

WM. M. THOMS, Editor.

OFFICES, 23 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Society Opens Its Season at Chickering Hall.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra drew the usual large and appreciative audience together in Chickering Hall last Tuesday evening. The opening number of the programme was the "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture of Berlioz. We cannot say that this overture is in Berlioz's best vein. The opera was a lamentable failure when produced in Paris, but this fact proves little, for most of Berlioz's works were stamped with failure. The overture was, however, partially successful and that judgment was correct. It possesses certain elements that command favor, yet fails to attain the highest ideal. It is strong in dramatic feeling, perhaps overstrong, for this leads to the almost fragmentary nature that pervades the music. It was listened to, however, with a great deal of satisfaction and musical enjoyment upon the present occasion, owing to the fine instrumentation of Berlioz and the superb handling of the same by Mr. Nikisch and the fine orchestra.

The varied tone colorings were made the most of, and the admirable training of the orchestra made every phrase a delight to the hearer. The soloist of the evening, Mme. Lillian Nordica, followed, singing Beethoven's "Ah Perfido." Mme. Nordica possesses in many respects an admirable voice, fresh, clear, ringing and free in emission, but Beethoven has ever been more or less of a stumbling block for singers and Mme. Nordica found it so. She has neither the dramatic power nor the breadth of style or tone that inexorable Beethoven demands and therefore her really excellent talents went for naught. Truly a pity, for there must be many things that she would sing delightfully. She afterward gave the aria from Wagner's "Tannhauser," "O Hall of Song," in which she pleased the audience more, but which lacked many of the same essential qualities that marred the enjoyment of the first number. The orchestra then gave Bach's Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte for string orchestra. The strings of this orchestra have always been conceded to be delightful in quality and superbly trained since the first concert given by them some seasons ago, when their playing of a Handel number—if we remember rightly—was a revelation of what might be accomplished in this direction. It is therefore always with pleasurable anticipations that we see a selection for the string orchestra upon their programmes Nor were we disappointed. The full, resonant tones, excellent in tonal quality, the broad phrasing, the absolute unison, the crisp trills and turns, all combined to afford the audience a glimpse of Bach as he is best represented, with his broad geniality of style and exquisite simplicity of method. The delighted hearers would fain have demanded a repetition of this number, but Mr. Nikisch gracefully declined, and only responded to the numerous recalls by non-committal acknowledgments.

The concert closed with Schumann's Symphony No. 3, in E flat (Rhenish), op. 97.

◆

Schirmer Brings Out a Series of Piano Pieces by Edgar Stillman Kelley.

Boston Daily Globe.

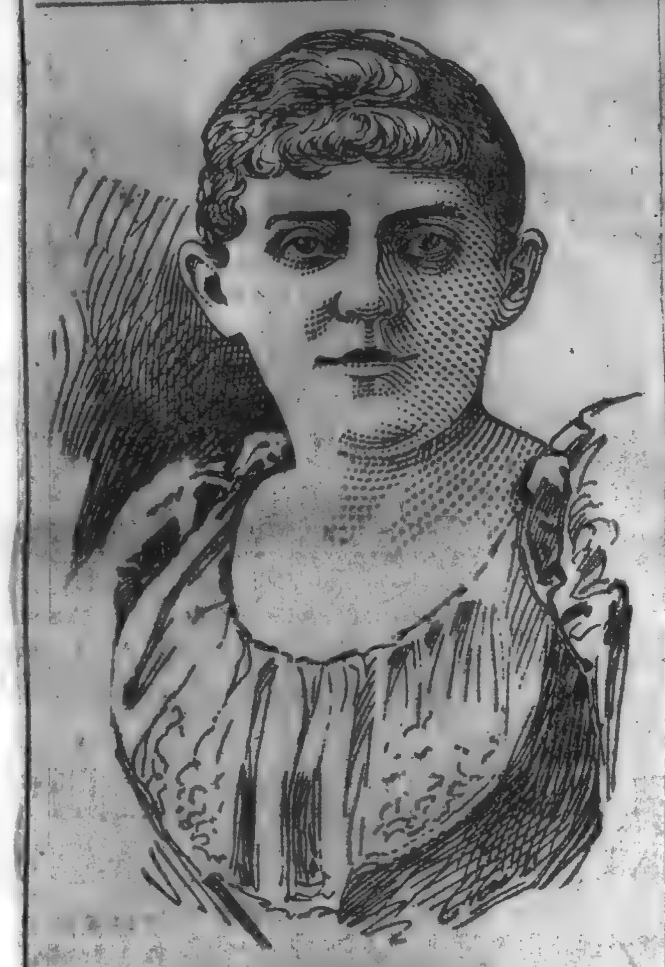
MONDAY, NOV. 9.

HOME OF FRAU NIKISCH.

Charming Dwelling of the Symphony Director and his Accomplished Wife—They Say They Both Like America Better Than Europe.

The piquant moue made by more than one "Symphony Girl" when she heard that pale, poetic success of Director Gericke was to be joined by his German frau and kinder gave place to a radiant welcoming smile as soon as the little lady had fairly set foot in America.

There was but one verdict: "Mrs. Nikisch is charming;" and from that first day when the social fiat went forth, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch has reigned in Boston's artistic firmament, not by reflected glory, but by reason of her own attitude as a musician and the undeniable charm of her personality.



MRS. ARTHUR NIKISCH.

The temple of the family Lares and Penates is a commodious wooden residence at the corner of High st. and Cumberland av., in the older part of Brookline, the unrelieved dun of the external walls giving no hint of the picturesque interior, which is, as the shrine of music should be, unpretentious and suggestive of culture.

In place of the customary drawing-room there is a music room where a grand piano has the place of honor, and a portrait of the mistress of the house, which she laughingly refers to as "a very pious picture of me," is framed in an alcove, bordered by palms and ropes of laurel, suggestive of an anniversary fete.

Beneath is an exquisite copy of a Madonna in rich, soft coloring, that looks as old as the original. It is a photograph, under glass, painted by Mrs. Nikisch, showing that fingers as well as voice have been laid under tribute to art, for art's sake.

Back of the music room is the library, lined with books and decorated with etchings, engravings, photographs, and more books and more pictures, that tell their own tales of many peoples and many lands.

Editions of Dickens, Shakespeare, Schiller and Goethe bespeak among others from their cherry shelves built into the apartment, the Catholic taste of the master and the mistress, the latter of whom comes to meet the SUNDAY GLOBE's representative, looking as fair as any girl, in a trailing gown of dark blue with a scarlet silk blouse showing under the jacket bodice.

Mrs. Nikisch is a pretty woman who does not look her 27 years by half a decade. Soft, light brown hair curling over her forehead, laughing blue eyes, regular features and a fair skin name but half the charms of her face.

Enthusiasm for whatever appeals to her is written in the quick, sympathetic play of expression as she talks, and her manner is as unaffected, cordial and unmistakably that of a gentlewoman as it is agreeable.

Mrs. Nikisch confines her own newspaper reading, as does Mr. Nikisch, to New York and German journals, to avoid being disturbed by local criticisms, which they think so contradictory as to be of no help, and in any case powerless to inspire more earnest endeavor than personal love for their work already dictates. But, upon being assured that she and her husband are in a minority of two, Mrs. Nikisch good humoredly consented to outline a bit of autobiography for the hosts of GLOBE readers who will like to know something of the personality of such a society favorite as the wife of the director of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Mrs. Nikisch was born Amelie Heussner in Brussels, where she lived for the first dozen years of her life, speaking only French and laying the foundation, it is to be surmised, of her present fluent command of that language.

She made her first visit to Paris only this last summer, when for five weeks she spent every day with the celebrated Mme. Marchesi, who is an old friend of Mr. Nikisch, and one who did very much, says Mrs. Nikisch, gratefully, to help him when, as a very young man, he was getting his first footing in the musical world.

Mr. Nikisch, by the way, is not a German, but a Hungarian by birth, and later a Bohemian by long residence in that unique country. Then he settled in Deutschland and learned the German tongue, and in so doing, has forgotten his native language as well as that of Bohemia, which is neither Prussian nor Hungarian, nor like any other.

When she was 12 years old Mrs. Nikisch entered the conservatory at Cologne, where she studied singing and the piano, recitations and so on, and at 17 years of age she made her debut as an opera singer, appearing in Mozart's and the lighter French operas until her marriage, and with marked success.

There was a season in Berlin, and then one in Leipsic, where, in the role of a nun at the age of 18, she first met Mr. Nikisch, who was conductor of the orchestra in the theatre.

"It was a case of love at first sight," she says, naively and with amusement at the recollection of the rehearsals.

The little man left the city before they were engaged, but the betrothal and marriage followed soon. Mrs. Nikisch sang for the last time upon the operatic stage in Castle a week before her wedding day as Zerlina in "Don Juan."

"Such a happy time as it all was," she says, and, if one may judge, it has been a happy time ever since.

After their marriage they lived in Leipsic until they came to this country, Mrs. Nikisch retiring from the opera stage out of deference to her husband's wishes; he objected to the wearing life for her when there was no longer need for her to continue.

They like America, both she and her hus- [illegible] pretty hands [illegible] love it. We were on the other side for 10 weeks this last summer, and when we were preparing to come back we said to each other, 'it is good to be going again to America.'

"Life is more varied here, more interesting. In Germany people seem to find nothing but common places to talk about—the beard of the Emperor, or something of that sort.

"We are lively people, and like good nice times," says Mrs. Nikisch, with her quaint foreign accent, and for the first time making a little slip in English, which she speaks remarkably well.

Interrogated as to how she has so quickly learned the language, she credits her success to her instruction in her school days, and to the private lessons she took just before coming over, by advice of Mr. Nikisch, who admonished her that she could not enjoy American society unless she could speak in its vernacular.

But, in common with most Europeans, Mrs. Nikisch has a talent for mastering language, although she avers it is somewhat a matter of moods.

"Some days," she says, "I know myself I get on very well, and I say beautiful; and then the next day, perhaps, I say to Mr. Nikisch, 'Oh, but today you should have heard the blunders I made.'"

In their home German is spoken for the benefit of the children, who are certain to learn English, and must not be allowed to forget the speech of their fatherland.

The children are two; Katie is the graceful little maiden of 5 who smiles from the painting on the easel in the library.

The baby of the family is Master Arthur, aged 3, a clever little fellow who, if he answers to his parents' hopes, will be a master of the violin in the days to come. "But musicians' children are often not at all musical, you know," says their mother.

On Friday Mrs. Nikisch went to New York, of which city she is very fond, to join her husband. Today they leave for Detroit, where tomorrow they will appear in a chamber concert, with Mrs. Nikisch as the singer, while Mr. Nikisch will do what he has never consented to do here, play the piano part in a string quintet.

Their Brookline home is one of the nuclei of the artistic life of Boston, Mrs. Nikisch's Mondays being among the pleasantest of "at homes."

New-York Daily Tribune.

FOUNDED BY HORACE GREELEY

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1891.

MR. NIKISCH IN BROOKLYN.

The first of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in Brooklyn took place last night. There are to be six of these concerts, in lieu of the series formerly given by the Philharmonic Society, which gracefully permits its name to be used, but has only a sentimental interest in the entertainments. Perhaps this is well, for although last night's concert was in respect of performance immeasurably more brilliant than any Philharmonic concert within the last five or six years, it must have grieved some self-elected champions of classicism to observe with what brimming eloquence this young opera conductor from Leipsic read the "Leonore" Overture No. 3 and Tschaikowsky's Suite op. 55. The former was played by the magnificent band quite in the exuberant and vital manner of Mr. Seidl, especially toward its close. This should be sacrilege, but somehow it was much admired last night. The orchestra appeared in all its work to better advantage than it did last Tuesday evening in Chickering Hall, and the programme was more interesting. Madame Nordica again essayed the air from "Tannhaeuser," for which she is ill equipped, but instead of Beethoven's concert air, "Ah, Perfido!" she sang "Plus grand dans son Obscurite," from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba," which being nearer her capacity, was much more satisfactory than her chief endeavor last Tuesday.

CHICKERING HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Tuesday Evening, Nov. 3,
Tuesday Evening, Dec. 8,
Tuesday Evening, Jan. 12,
Tuesday Evening, Feb. 9,
Tuesday Evening, March 15,
Tuesday Evening, April 26,

THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

☞The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the only orchestra in the United States, that for ten years past, has been maintained for the daily interpretation of symphonic and high class music.☜

Programme of the Concert of Nov. 3.

1—OVERTURE, "Benvenuto Cellini,"	BERLIOZ
2—ARIA, "Ah perfido,"	BEETHOVEN
3—ADAGIO AND GAVOTTE for Strings,	BACH
4—ARIA, "Tannhaeuser,"	WAGNER
5—SYMPHONY in E flat ("Rhenish,")	SCHUMANN

Soloist, - - Mme. LILLIAN NORDICA,

(Her first appearance in New York, this season.)

☞—SEATS READY NOW.—☜

Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra	Mr. Charles A. Ellis
Assistant Manager	Mr. Frederick R. Comee
Manager of the New York Concerts	Mr. Frederick A. Schwab

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

The Oldest Musical Weekly Published in America.

FOUNDED IN 1863 BY HENRY C. WATSON.

☞ The first and most important object the journalis should have in mind is to criticise productive and reproductive art with such discriminating care and honesty of purpose as to offer a safe guide to popular judgment rather than act as its echo, thus creating a demand for higher culture in artists.

WM. M. THOMS, Editor.

OFFICES, 23 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1891.

The Boston Symphony Society Opens Its Season at Chickering Hall.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra drew the usual large and appreciative audience together in Chickering Hall last Tuesday evening. The opening number of the programme was the "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture of Berlioz. We cannot say that this overture is in Berlioz's best vein. The opera was a lamentable failure when produced in Paris, but this fact proves little, for most of Berlioz's works were stamped with failure. The overture was, however, partially successful and that judgment was correct. It possesses certain elements that command favor, yet fails to attain the highest ideal. It is strong in dramatic feeling, perhaps overstrong, for this leads to the almost fragmentary nature that pervades the music. It was listened to, however, with a great deal of satisfaction and musical enjoyment upon the present occasion, owing to the fine instrumentation of Berlioz and the superb handling of the same by Mr. Nikisch and the fine orchestra.

The varied tone colorings were made the most of, and the admirable training of the orchestra made every phrase a delight to the hearer. The soloist of the evening, Mme. Lillian Nordica, followed, singing Beethoven's "Ah Perfido." Mme. Nordica possesses in many respects an admirable voice, fresh, clear, ringing and free in emission, but Beethoven has ever been more or less of a stumbling block for singers and Mme. Nordica found it so. She has neither the dramatic power nor the breadth of style or tone that inexorable Beethoven demands and therefore her really excellent talents went for naught. Truly a pity, for there must be many things that she would sing delightfully. She afterward gave the aria from Wagner's "Tannhauser," "O Hall of Song," in which she pleased the audience more, but which lacked many of the same essential qualities that marred the enjoyment of the first number. The orchestra then gave Bach's Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte for string orchestra. The strings of this orchestra have always been conceded to be delightful in quality and superbly trained since the first concert given by them some seasons ago, when their playing of a Handel number—if we remember rightly—was a revelation of what might be accomplished in this direction. It is therefore always with pleasurable anticipations that we see a selection for the string orchestra upon their programmes Nor were we disappointed. The full, resonant tones, excellent in tonal quality, the broad phrasing, the absolute unison, the crisp trills and turns, all combined to afford the audience a glimpse of Bach as he is best represented, with his broad geniality of style and exquisite simplicity of method. The delighted hearers would fain have demanded a repetition of this number, but Mr. Nikisch gracefully declined, and only responded to the numerous recalls by non-committal acknowledgments.

The concert closed with Schumann's Symphony No. 3, in E flat (Rhenish), op. 97.

◆

Schirmer Brings Out a Series of Piano Pieces by Edgar Stillman Kelley.

Boston Daily Globe.

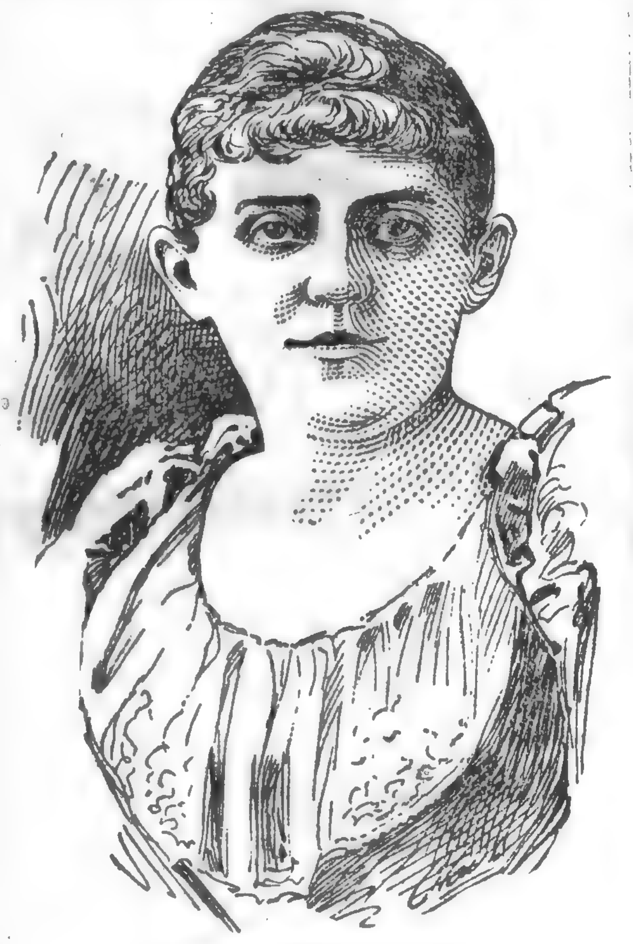
MONDAY, NOV. 9.

HOME OF FRAU NIKISCH.

Charming Dwelling of the Symphony Director and his Accomplished Wife—They Say They Both Like America Better Than Europe.

The piquant moue made by more than one "Symphony Girl" when she heard that pale, poetic success of Director Gericke was to be joined by his German frau and kinder gave place to a radiant welcoming smile as soon as the little lady had fairly set foot in America.

There was but one verdict: "Mrs. Nikisch is charming;" and from that first day when the social fiat went forth, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch has reigned in Boston's artistic firmament, not by reflected glory, but by reason of her own attitude as a musician and the undeniable charm of her personality.



MRS. ARTHUR NIKISCH.

The temple of the family Lares and Penates is a commodious wooden residence at the corner of High st. and Cumberland av., in the older part of Brookline, the unrelieved dun of the external walls giving no hint of the picturesque interior, which is, as the shrine of music should be, unpretentious and suggestive of culture.

In place of the customary drawing-room there is a music room where a grand piano has the place of honor, and a portrait of the mistress of the house, which she laughingly refers to as "a very pious picture of me," is framed in an alcove, bordered by palms and ropes of laurel, suggestive of an anniversary fete.

Beneath is an exquisite copy of a Madonna in rich, soft coloring, that looks as old as the original. It is a photograph, under glass, painted by Mrs. Nikisch, showing that fingers as well as voice have been laid under tribute to art, for art's sake.

Back of the music room is the library, lined with books and decorated with etchings, engravings, photographs, and more books and more pictures, that tell their own tales of many peoples and many lands.

Editions of Dickens, Shakespeare, Schiller and Goethe bespeak among others from their cherry shelves built into the apartment, the Catholic taste of the master and the mistress, the latter of whom comes to meet the SUNDAY GLOBE's representative, looking as fair as any girl, in a trailing gown of dark blue with a scarlet silk blouse showing under the jacket bodice.

Mrs. Nikisch is a pretty woman who does not look her 27 years by half a decade. Soft, light brown hair curling over her forehead, laughing blue eyes, regular features and a fair skin name but half the charms of her face.

Enthusiasm for whatever appeals to her is written in the quick, sympathetic play of expression as she talks, and her manner is as unaffected, cordial and unmistakably that of a gentlewoman as it is agreeable.

Mrs. Nikisch confines her own newspaper reading, as does Mr. Nikisch, to New York and German journals, to avoid being disturbed by local criticisms, which they think so contradictory as to be of no help, and in any case powerless to inspire more earnest endeavor than personal love for their work already dictates. But, upon being assured that she and her husband are in a minority of two, Mrs. Nikisch good humoredly consented to outline a bit of autobiography for the hosts of GLOBE readers who will like to know something of the personality of such a society favorite as the wife of the director of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Mrs. Nikisch was born Amelie Heussner in Brussels, where she lived for the first dozen years of her life, speaking only French and laying the foundation, it is to be surmised, of her present fluent command of that language.

She made her first visit to Paris only this last summer, when for five weeks she spent every day with the celebrated Mme. Marchesi, who is an old friend of Mr. Nikisch, and one who did very much, says Mrs. Nikisch, gratefully, to help him when, as a very young man, he was getting his first footing in the musical world.

Mr. Nikisch, by the way, is not a German, but a Hungarian by birth, and later a Bohemian by long residence in that unique country. Then he settled in Deutschland and learned the German tongue, and in so doing, has forgotten his native language as well as that of Bohemia, which is neither Prussian nor Hungarian, nor like any other.

When she was 12 years old Mrs. Nikisch entered the conservatory at Cologne, where she studied singing and the piano, recitations and so on, and at 17 years of age she made her debut as an opera singer, appearing in Mozart's and the lighter French operas until her marriage, and with marked success.

There was a season in Berlin, and then one in Leipsic, where, in the role of a nun, at the age of 18, she first met Mr. Nikisch, who was conductor of the orchestra in the theatre.

"It was a case of love at first sight," she says, naively and with amusement at the recollection of the rehearsals.

The little man left the city before they were engaged, but the betrothal and marriage followed soon. Mrs. Nikisch sang for the last time upon the operatic stage in Castle a week before her wedding day as Zerlina in "Don Juan."

"Such a happy time as it all was," she says, and, if one may judge, it has been a happy time ever since.

After their marriage they lived in Leipsic until they came to this country, Mrs. Nikisch retiring from the opera stage out of deference to her husband's wishes; he objected to the wearing life for her when there was no longer need for her to continue.

They like America, both she and her husband.

[illegible] very much," she says, bringing her pretty hands together enthusiastically, "we love it. We were on the other side for 10 weeks this last summer, and when we were preparing to come back we said to each other, 'it is good to be going again to America.'

"Life is more varied here, more interesting. In Germany people seem to find nothing but common places to talk about—the beard of the Emperor, or something of that sort.

"We are lively people, and like good nice times," says Mrs. Nikisch, with her quaint foreign accent, and for the first time making a little slip in English, which she speaks remarkably well.

Interrogated as to how she has so quickly learned the language, she credits her success to her instruction in her school days, and to the private lessons she took just before coming over, by advice of Mr. Nikisch, who admonished her that she could not enjoy American society unless she could speak in its vernacular.

But, in common with most Europeans, Mrs. Nikisch has a talent for mastering language, although she avers it is somewhat a matter of moods.

"Some days," she says, "I know myself I get on very well, and I say beautiful; and then the next day, perhaps, I say to Mr. Nikisch, 'Oh, but today you should have heard the blunders I made.'"

In their home German is spoken for the benefit of the children, who are certain to learn English, and must not be allowed to forget the speech of their fatherland.

The children are two; Katie is the graceful little maiden of 5 who smiles from the painting on the easel in the library.

The baby of the family is Master Arthur, aged 3, a clever little fellow who, if he answers to his parents' hopes, will be a master of the violin in the days to come. "But musicians' children are often not at all musical, you know," says their mother.

On Friday Mrs. Nikisch went to New York, of which city she is very fond, to join her husband. Today they leave for Detroit, where tomorrow they will appear in a chamber concert, with Mrs. Nikisch as the singer, while Mr. Nikisch will do what he has never consented to do here, play the piano part in a string quintet.

Their Brookline home is one of the nuclei of the artistic life of Boston, Mrs. Nikisch's Mondays being among the pleasantest of "at homes."

New-York Daily Tribune

FOUNDED BY HORACE GREELEY

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1891.

MR. NIKISCH IN BROOKLYN.

The first of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in Brooklyn took place last night. There are to be six of these concerts, in lieu of the series formerly given by the Philharmonic Society, which gracefully permits its name to be used, but has only a sentimental interest in the entertainments. Perhaps this is well, for although last night's concert was in respect of performance immeasurably more brilliant than any Philharmonic concert within the last five or six years, it must have grieved some self-elected champions of classicism to observe with what brimming eloquence this young opera conductor from Leipsic read the "Leonore" Overture No. 3 and Tschaikowsky's Suite op. 55. The former was played by the magnificent band quite in the exuberant and vital manner of Mr. Seidl, especially toward its close. This should be sacrilege, but somehow it was much admired last night. The orchestra appeared in all its work to better advantage than it did last Tuesday evening in Chickering Hall, and the programme was more interesting. Madame Nordica again essayed the air from "Tannhaeuser," for which she is ill equipped, but instead of Beethoven's concert air, "Ah, Perfido!" she sang "Plus grand dans son Obscurite," from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba," which being nearer her capacity, was much more satisfactory than her chief endeavor last Tuesday.

◆

CHICKERING HALL.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Tuesday Evening, Nov. 3,
Tuesday Evening, Dec. 8,
Tuesday Evening, Jan. 12,
Tuesday Evening, Feb. 9,
Tuesday Evening, March 15,
Tuesday Evening, April 26,

THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

☞The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the only orchestra in the United States, that for ten years past, has been maintained for the daily interpretation of symphonic and high class music.☜

Programme of the Concert of Nov. 3.

1—OVERTURE, "Benvenuto Cellini,"	BERLIOZ
2—ARIA, "Ah perfido,"	BEETHOVEN
3—ADAGIO AND GAVOTTE for Strings,	BACH
4—ARIA, "Tannhaeuser,"	WAGNER
5—SYMPHONY in E flat ("Rhenish.")	SCHUMANN

Soloist, - - Mme. LILLIAN NORDICA,

(Her first appearance in New York, this season.)

☞—SEATS READY NOW.—☜

Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra	Mr. Charles A. Ellis
Assistant Manager	Mr. Frederick R. Comee
Manager of the New York Concerts	Mr. Frederick A. Schwab

INCOMPLETE

The New-York Times.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOV. 7, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

It is largely owing to a fortuitous combination of circumstances that Boston's pet chamber music organization, the Kneisel String Quartet, visits this city once again. It was originally announced that it had never played here, but that was only one of those enthusiastic errors into which concert managers fall in their eagerness to score points. The Kneisel Quartet played at Steinway Hall about three years ago just once. That once, however, was enough to make lovers of the most chaste form of instrumental music eager to hear it again. So the fact that the presence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city for concerts here and in Brooklyn has induced the members of the quartet to announce four concerts is a matter for congratulation.

The first of these concerts was given last night at Sherry's, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street, in a small hall, whose upholstered walls were decidedly inimical to sonority. The programme offered for consideration was altogether charming. It consisted of Mozart's beautiful quartet in C major, (Köchel, 465,) the second movement of Tschaikowsky's D major quartet, and Johannes Brahms's new quintet in G major, Opus 111, which had not been heard before in this country. This, as may be seen, was a clean, compact programme, the Tschaikowsky movement acting as a sort of intermezzo between the other two numbers, and with its clear and characteristic solo melody affording a nicely-graded transition from Mozart to Brahms.

The new quintet, in which the quartet is reinforced by a second viola, was, of course, the centre of interest. When the work was originally produced in Vienna by the Rosé Quartet Edward Hanslick praised it heartily, and it is a great pleasure to be able to agree with him. The new work is fully worthy of the warm commendation which it has received in Europe, and this public is indebted to Mr. Kneisel and his associates for producing it here.

It is in four movements, marked allegro con brio, adagio, allegretto, and finale, and is in the sonata form. Indeed, its construction is notably pure in its classicism, and the composition is a delightful evidence of the possibilities still remaining in the form which so many modern romanticists find ill-suited to their purposes. Though Brahms adheres to the classic outline, he is intensely modern in his first and fourth movements. The first is built on two themes which contrast admirably in melody, rhythm, and character. The first is bold, enthusiastic, aggressive; the second, sweet, pleading, touching. If there be any truth in Sidney Lanier's declaration that "music is love in search of a word," these two themes may be taken as indicating two moods of a lover. They are treated in a masterly manner, the working out being a really noble piece of writing.

The second and third movements, so lovely in their classic purity of form and instrumentation, so fresh, youthful and naïve in their melodic ideas, that one is at a loss to find words to voice the praise which they deserve. Perhaps no higher commendation can be uttered—and this does not go too far—than to say that the third movement is worthy of Mozart. It is like his writing in the perspicuous treatment of the voice parts. The song of a real genius is heard here. The last movement is again ebullient, brimming over with a happiness that at once challenges and invites sympathy. Brahms is a great master of chamber music, and in this quintet he is at his best.

The Kneisel Quartet consists of Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second; Louis Svecenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder, 'cello. These gentlemen had the assistance of O. Novacek as second viola in the quintet. The playing of the quartet is an epitome of all that is best in chamber music performance. The four gentlemen have a refined delicacy of touch that is rare, an artistic feeling and a musicianly intelligence altogether admirable, and a mastery of the routine of ensemble playing that commands unqualified admiration. It would be difficult to find anything more lovely than their performance of the Mozart number, and Mr. Kneisel's solo playing in the Tschaikowsky excerpt was masterly.

The Daily Standard-Union.
BROOKLYN.

MONDAY EVENING, NOV. 9, 1891.

The Philharmonic.

The first Philharmonic concert Saturday evening consisted of a repetition of the interesting programme given at the rehearsal on Friday afternoon, which was exhaustively noticed in Saturday's issue of this paper. At the concerts the playing is very apt to be more spirited than at the rehearsals, and the Saturday concert was no exception. The audience was larger and more enthusiastic than on Friday. One missed, however, the bright social atmosphere of the old Philharmonics. The long intermission, when the men in evening dress went around to greet their friends, was omitted, and the programme was carried rapidly through from beginning to end. The "Leonora" overture was again beautifully played, with a decided gain in force over Friday's rendering. The first number of the Tschaikowsky Suite was well received, and improved on a second hearing. The waltz and the scherzo failed to strengthen the faint impression made on Friday. The brilliant theme and variations were well played and heartily applauded. Fortunately, the claque which interrupted the music Friday with ill-timed applause was conspicuously absent. The "Meistersinger" prelude was played with much the same effect as on Friday, again lacking solidity in the brass.

Madame Nordica's fine voice sounded rather tired, and she did not sing the cavatina from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" as well as at the rehearsal. In the "Tannhauser" aria, "O Hall of Song," however, she sang with all the fire and spirit noticeable on Friday. It made one long for an opportunity to hear her in such Wagnerian roles as Elsa, Elizabeth and Senta. The audience heartily appreciated her singing, and she received three recalls, though they failed to secure a repetition.

Mr. Nikisch conducted the concert with his customary intelligence and with the most profound gravity of manner. The success of the concert was quite sufficient to demonstrate that we are going to have a musical season of unusual quality and lively interest. Something that critical concert-goers will notice with pleasure is the fact that the first Seidl Society concert, to-morrow evening, will open with the same "Leonora" overture, No. 3, by Beethoven.

WORLD: SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET CONCERT.

Their First Appearance Before a New York Audience—The Selections.

A delightful concert of chamber music was given by the quartet directed by Mr. Kneisel, the well-known violin virtuoso and leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Sherry's new hall last evening. The concert was doubly interesting from the fact that the quartet, as at present constituted, made its first appearance before a New York audience, and also on account of the first performance in America of a new quintet in G major for two violins, two violas and cello by Brahms, op. III.

The programme also included Mozart's beautiful quartet in C major dedicated to Hadyn, and the very effective "Andante con Sordini," from Tschaikowsky's very popular D major quartet. Knowing that one can easily get too much of this class of music, which is perhaps more interesting to play than to listen to, Mr. Kneisel wisely made his programme short, and the result was in every way successful. The playing of the quartet is smooth, even and refined, with a wonderfully well-balanced tone, rather than dashing or vigorous. While there is no lack of effective climax, it is reached by delicately-graduated finish rather than by bold energy.

The ever delightful Mozart Quartet, which breathes the fresh, joyous spirit of the master from beginning to end, was delightfully played, the shading and phrasing being alike admirable. The Tschaikowsky "Andante con Sordini," a most uniquely charming bit of writing, was rendered with a poetic sentiment and a delicacy that was fairly fascinating.

The new Brahms Quintet is in four movements—allegro con brio, adagio, allegretto, finale. As far as could be judged from a single hearing this quintet is certainly destined to take a high place among works of its class. It is broadly conceived in the modern spirit, and is full of individuality of a somewhat plaintive character. Of the four movements, the second and fourth are the most interesting. The opening allegro, though forcible, is somewhat diffuse, and the allegretto is comparatively tame.

The adagio, on the other hand, is deliciously naïve and full of a sad, sweet pathos which recalls Grieg, and the melancholy of the Norse and Russian Volkslieder. The finale alternately sparkles with mirth and gayety, and sighs with the pathetic sadness which underlies the whole work. Altogether a most interesting and masterly work, and one that will bear repetition.

The second viola part was played by Mr. O. Novacek. The regular members of the quartet are: Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; L. Sveceuski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder, 'cello. All are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The next concert takes place on Friday evening, Dec. 11, and will be awaited with interest.

WORLD: SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1891.

While the musical events of the past week have not been especially remarkable for novelty, what with the unusually enjoyable concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday evening, the first appearance of the Kneisel Quartet on Friday evening, the rehearsal and concert of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society under the direction of Arthur Nikisch and the two concerts by Messrs. Grünfeld on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, lovers of music have had no reason to complain either of the quantity or quality of their musical pabulum. It is evident that the present musical season has opened in earnest.

There is no question that the Boston Symphony Orchestra stands to-day among the three or four foremost orchestras of the world. For five years Mr. Gericke did faithful and intelligent work and Mr. Nikisch has made good use of the material left him by his predecessor. With rare intelligence and knowledge of artistic effect, he has broadened and intensified the scope and power of this orchestra until to-day it is almost beyond criticism. Where such perfection in detail and general effect has been reached, where such precision and sonorousness of tone is united with so much delicacy and finish, criticism becomes little more than an individual expression of preference for or against the rendition of certain pieces. As a rule, Mr. Nikisch's readings are intelligent, well considered, consistent and forceful, and if at times he allows a slight feeling for sensationalism to influence his interpretation, he can hardly be quarrelled with for wishing in this way to produce the greatest possible effect with the greatest number of his audiences.

The excellent concert of the Kneisel Quartet was made especially interesting by the first performance in America of a new quintet by Brahms in G minor, op. 111, which proved an interesting and masterly work, admirably interpreted. The Messrs. Grünfeld, in two well-selected programmes, deepened the good impression that they have already made here.

TRIBUNE, Detroit, Mich.

Date 11/8

Mr. Arthur Nikisch,

The great conductor of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be heard next Monday evening in the Philharmonic club concert as pianist, playing Christian Sinding's quintet, in E minor, with the club, and his other solo piano numbers, using as his especial choice a fine Knabe Grand, furnished from the music house of F. J. Schwankovsky.

We hear with much pleasure that Mr. Arthur Nikisch proposes to give what promises to be an exceptionally fine performance of Beethoven's masterwork, the "Ninth or 'Choral' Symphony," towards the end of the present season in Boston. The work will be heard then for the first time under Mr. Nikisch's direction and for the first time in this country for several years. The chorus, which always has proved the most serious difficulty to a successful performance of this colossal work, will be picked from among the very best singers of the leading choral societies of Boston. The names of the soloists have not yet been announced.

STANDARD-UNION, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date 11/7

THE PHILHARMONIC FIRST PUBLIC REHEARSAL

The first rehearsal of the Philharmonic Society yesterday afternoon opened what promises to be a musical season of unusual brilliancy in Brooklyn. The change of orchestra and leader has been so widely advertised in musical circles that it seems almost unnecessary to mention the fact that Arthur Nikisch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been engaged to undertake the difficult task of filling the vacant places of Thomas and Thomas' orchestra, names so long synonymous with the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn.

The Academy was well filled yesterday by an audience composed largely of ladies, as is usually the case at the rehearsals. The familiar faces of Philharmonic goers of the last quarter of a century were in their accustomed places. Their contented and cheerful countenances indicated the general conviction that under the new regime the musical success of the season was assured. The orchestra had stopped tuning their instruments and the house was quiet when Mr. Nikisch made his appearance. A generous, though not especially enthusiastic, round of applause greeted him as he stepped on to the familiar little conductor's box covered with red cloth.

Mr. Nikisch and his orchestra have already been extensively discussed and criticised. He has been heard in Brooklyn before and is no stranger to us. Still, in his new capacity as leader of the historic Philharmonics, he will awaken fresh interest, and comparisons between him and his predecessor, as well as his rival for the coming season, Anton Seidl, will be inevitable and profitable. It is therefore perfectly proper to say here that apparently Mr. Nikisch will not fill Mr. Thomas' place. Better than that, he will make one for himself. He has an individuality as strongly marked as that of either of the other two leaders. Whether he will be as popular personally remains to be seen. Weight of character undoubtedly has had much to do with the popularity of both Thomas and Seidl. Nikisch is a small man, who looks younger than he is. His slight physique would lead one at first to suspect him of lack of weight and force, so much has the corporeal solidity of Thomas and Seidl associated itself in our minds with their mental attributes.

The programme yesterday was an interesting though a rather short one. The opening number, the famous "Leonore" overture No. 3, by Beethoven, was rendered brilliantly, with an exquisite attention to details. The dramatic element was kept well in view, and the horn scene, with its crescendo and climax, was finely handled. The power and excellence of the strings, in which the orchestra is strong, were specially noticeable. As a whole, Nikisch's interpretation of the overture is fine, and in some respects novel. A bit of pardonable ostentation on the part of the conductor was the leading of the overture without notes.

Madame Lillian Nordica, young and pretty, was kindly received by an audience which is rarely enthusiastic. Her singing of the beautiful cavatina from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" was a most excellent piece of work. Her voice is fresh, flexible, and of a pure, round quality, though it cannot be called a heavy soprano. It is admirably adapted to Gounod's music, and she sang with intelligence and the ease born of good training. The intellectual quality which strongly underlies the most delicate lyric work of the French composer was felt in Madame Nordica's singing. While her style is dramatic, it is refined and self-contained; appreciation of the beautiful words of the aria was everywhere evident. She received only a moderately enthusiastic recall, due, perhaps, to the novelty of the selection, which, like most good music, cannot be grasped at a first hearing.

In the "Tannhauser" aria, "O Hall of Song," which opens the second act of the opera, she was more fortunate in winning applause, being recalled twice. This bit of dramatic work hinted at greater possibilities. It was broadly and comprehensively sung, with a touch of heroic spirit which we have not been taught to associate with the character of Elizabeth as presented to us by the rather ordinary singers at the German opera. Mme. Nordica goes back to London in February to join Harris' Covent Garden Opera Company.

The Tschaikowsky Suite, op. 55, was the musical novelty of the programme, being performed for the first time in Brooklyn. A certain weakness and effeminacy in Tschaikowsky's music will probably prevent it ever taking a strong hold on the public, although musicians appreciate its cleverness. The suite played yesterday, however, shows more force and vigor than some of his work, and may possibly obtain a foothold. The opening number, an "elegie," is a thing of exquisite sweetness and tenderness.

The "valse melancholique," in E minor, which follows the elegie, is sad and monotonous. The scherzo is light and brilliant, and was played with great precision and delicacy. It is in the last movement, however, that the composer is at his best, and it was there that the orchestra did their most striking work. The movement consists of a theme and twelve variations. These are divided among the various instruments, which are grouped in an original and artistic manner. The first and third variations are arranged for the wooden wind and strings in contrapuntal form, as is also the fifth. The fourth variation is an especially rich one, and in the seventh the melody is quaintly treated as a chorale by the wooden wind instruments alone. The melancholy tendency of Tschaikowsky appears again in the eighth variation, where the English horn plays a prominent part. In the ninth variation occurs a cadenza for the first violin, which was intelligently rendered, and which leads into the tenth variation. Here the full orchestra accompanies a solo on the first violin. In the eleventh variation the striking thing is the use of the sustained tonic note, B major, throughout the entire variation. The finale and twelfth variation is a "Polacca," and is the least satisfactory of the entire number. It is noisy, and lacks the massive qualities characteristic of a good polonaise. That Tschaikowsky is out of his element here is emphasized by the relief with which we accept the second melody of the polonaise. This is in his natural, plaintive style.

Of the "Meistersinger" prelude it can be said that it was conscientiously rendered. The brass in the orchestra being overbalanced by the strings, it was robbed of much of its impressive richness, and took on a character of intellectual refinement foreign to it. The entire programme will be repeated at to-night's concert. Although as an interpreter Mr. Nikisch has neither the easy, flowing grace of Thomas nor the broad and massive rendering of Seidl, he makes up for the former lack by his careful attention to questions of tempo, and for the latter by his refinement.

[illegible] regard to refinement? We are accustomed at our best orchestral concerts to look for our most cultivated citizens. Yet it is a fact that one can rarely attend one of these concerts without being prevented by some neighbor from hearing the music. It is funny that people tolerate these things, but there are funny things in the world. Yesterday a man and woman who wished to attract attention succeeded in doing so. Both noisily devoured peppermints and talked aloud during the music. The woman frequently rattled a paper bag, and the man, who was arrayed in a soiled white waistcoat, was apparently so overcome by his swelling feelings that he unbuttoned the said waistcoat and displayed a more soiled shirt-front during the greater part of the concert. However, he is probably accounted for by the fact that he made notes and apparently wished to be taken for a newspaper man. Another curious thing in a Philharmonic audience was the burst of applause from a certain part of the family circle which interrupted the tenth of the Tschaikowsky variations, immediately after the first violin's solo. Fortunately, the offenders, who were doubtless well-meaning people friendly to some one in the orchestra, were promptly

---

CITIZEN, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date 11/7

NIKISCH CONCERT.

MALL BUT SEVERELY CRITICAL AUDIENCE AT THE ACADEMY.

he Boston Symphony Orchestra's Debut Here Was a Musical if Not a Financial Triumph—Mme. Nodica's Reappearance After Many Years.

One had a right to expect that (if only from vulgar curiosity) the Academy of Music would have been crowded at the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Nikisch, instead of being scarcely half-filled. The representative musical organization of that cultured city, Boston, must try to bear with patience the apparent neglect (it was nothing more) of Brooklyn because the magnificent efforts of Seidl and Thomas have so recently been heard that their memory, always dear, still retains a perhaps too exclusive control over the people to enable them to appreciate at its proper worth these new aspirants for classic favor and recognition.

Add to this, that no novelty was promised except the appearance of Madam Nodici, and that the initial concert given in the afternoon was slightly in advance of the ordinary season, and the splendid band of artists and their accomplished leader will more readily understand the meagerness of the attendance.

Some praise must be awarded Mr. Nikisch for daring to compete with Seidl and Thomas, to erect his standard on the strong rampart of public favor which Brooklyn affords. When good conductors are so rare as to be counted on the fingers of one hand, in a country of 65,000,000 people, it requires great confidence, allied to consummate ability, to aspire to be one among the chosen few. Mr. Arthur Nikisch is a conductor of unquestionable ability, as was rendered evident by his unique, original and entirely unconventional delineation of Tschikowski's suite, which, it is only fair to add, has never before been heard with entire satisfaction. The daintiness and delicacy with which its complicated network of beauties was unfolded and interpreted was beyond all praise; in fact, it placed this modern composer's work in an entirely new light.

If Tschikowski is unappreciated, the fault or misfortune is due to himself for having erected a musical edifice of imposing dimensions on a groundwork of melodic rubble only. The product of a genius it is not, the work of a profound, practical and speculative musician it is. With a few inconsiderable trifles this wonderful master of modern orchestration in its most advanced phases has welded together a picture luminous in variety, ample in originality, and attractive in its wealth of graceful details. It reminds one of the daub of pigment which the leading artist of the world was wont to commence his pictures with; ugly, repulsive and meaningless at first, by the genius with which it was touched, and its lines outstretched from the centre, it was made to assume proportions which first pleased and afterward captivated and enthralled the connoisseurs by its fidelity to truth, its subdued coloring and the faultless symmetry of its lines, curves and angles. So Tschikowsky has supplied a want, covered up, so as to be almost undiscoverable, a void, peopled a dark space with aerial sprites of surpassing loveliness, rendered vital that which was only a dead commonplace and produced or created a new realm peculiarly his own, for no living composer has so successfully magnified into colossal proportions musical trifles as he.

So entirely did the orchestra enter into and become absorbed by this production that the musical part of the audience became more enthusiastic than discreet, breaking into applause at inopportune places. The strings were perfect. The attack unanimous, the pianissimo the perfection of delicacy, the response to the director's baton could not have been excelled for inflexible adherence to the various tempos indicated, the release of a theme (always most difficult at the exact point of time) showed the watchful care that Mr. Nikisch had exercised over his forces.

The beauty of the great violin cadenza evoked well-earned applause, and the mathematical execution of the fugatta was a treat. In short, it was infinitely the best and most perfect performance of a hitherto unjustly underrated work by a band of artists under the supreme control of a musician who has attained popularity by the right of hard work and the possession of musicianly instincts.

Of the performance of Beethoven's Leonore No. 3 and the prelude to the "Meistersinger" there remains little to say. They have been heard frequently in this city, widely differing in their interpretation by Seidl and Thomas, as the one yesterday differed from both. It might have been from the constitution of the orchestra, its distribution on a novel basis of strings, wood and brass, or it might have arisen from a lack of enthusiasm; but from whatever cause the opinion was unanimous that Mr. Nikisch's portrayal of these two famous works was lacking in the dignity and strength to which our people have been accustomed.

With meagre sound of trumpetings, almost unheralded, Madam Nordici made her bow before a Brooklyn audience for the first time in many years. Her improvement is almost incredible, and it is no exaggeration to say that she has all the classic purity of the great Novello in her palmiest days. The uniform evenness of her tones, her faultless enunciation and intonation, her magnificent crescendoes, her perfect pianissimo devoid of

The New York Recorder.

"FIRST OF ALL, THE NEWS."

Published every day in the year at
NO. 21 PARK ROW.
BY THE NEW YORK RECORDER COMPANY.

Sunday, November 8, 1891.

HERE AND THERE IN MUSIC.

There was a certain sense of joyousness in listening to the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Chickering Hall last week, so rich, so full was its musical utterance. Perhaps there may be on the farther shores of the Atlantic bands better in technical powers, but there are few that play with such elasticity, snap and freedom as this one.

To be sure the personality of the conductor pervades, permeates, in strict fact envelopes the orchestra, and very often the compositions played; but it is ever thus. When we get a subjective conductor we criticise and prate hugely of "objecting," and if we are forced to listen to a Bulow who skeletonizes his readings so that the bare ribs of a symphony protrude pointwise, we long for the individual conductor and will not be confronted by mere scholarships devoid of warmth.

Arthur Nikisch is a conductor who is radical in his readings of the classics, and classic in his readings of the modern school. The latter is noticeable in Wagner's music, which Nikisch handles with a moderation that delights the anti-Wagnerite. Singular it is that this fiery, magnetic little Hungarian with the beautiful, dainty hands, should cool down in the presence of the mighty Richard and search rather after meanings than dynamic effects. Familiar as was the great aria that Mme. Nordica sang the other night to the majority of the audience, yet new beauties were brought to view in the introduction; or was it that perfect balance, that supreme finish that seemed to give the lie to those opponents of Wagner who pronounce his music rough and incapable of finesse as to treatment?

ARTHUR NIKISCH.

Mr. Nikisch's version of the "Rhenish" symphony of Schumann was not all that could be desired by the ardent Schumann lover, for some of the alterations in tempi and accent well-nigh robbed the first movement of its headlong impetuosity and daring dramatic flight. The religioso was most solemnly intoned, barring certain deviations from tonality in the bass. But the symphony as a whole received a noteworthy performance, and the Boston Band and its interesting conductor will be sure of a welcome at their second concert, Dec.

TRIBUNE. New York, N. Y.

Date 11-11

The young wife of Mr. Nikisch is so much of a musician herself, and is such a fascinating woman otherwise, that Boston society is greatly in love with her, although her home is in Brookline. Prior to her marriage she sang in light opera, having studied in the Cologne Conservatory; but she has abandoned the stage altogether now, except for an occasional appearance in concerts.

43

Boston Post

FRIDAY MORNING, NOV. 13, 1891.

The second concert of the series given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Sanders Theatre took place last evening. The programme was as follows:

Overture, "Hebrides,"....................Mendelssohn
Aria, "La Reine de Saba,"....................Gounod
Suite, op. 55,....................Tschaikowsky
Song, "The Erl King,"....................Schubert
Overture, "Euryanthe,"....................Weber

The Mendelssohn overture still keeps its romantic freshness, and the Tschaikowsky suite made a profound impression. A second hearing confirms the opinion lately expressed in these columns that the first and last movements are the work of a master of instrumentation and a composer of great fancy, while the other movements suffer from a clever display of eccentricity that takes the place of true musical thought. Mrs. Lillian Norton was the singer, and she was very heartily applauded. But her singing of the two arias was chiefly characterized by its heartlessness.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 136.

FRIDAY, NOV. 13, 1891.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, gave the second Cambridge concert of the season at Sanders Theatre last evening. There was a large attendance of students and [51]

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

—A WEEKLY PAPER—

DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1891.

LAST Sunday's "Recorder," in commenting on the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has the following pertinent things to say of Mr. Nikisch and his band:

> There was a certain sense of joyousness in listening to the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Chickering Hall last week, so rich, so full was its musical utterances. Perhaps there may be on the farther shores of the Atlantic bands better in technical powers, but there are few that play with such elasticity, snap and freedom as this one.
>
> To be sure the personality of the conductor pervades, permeates, in strict fact envelops the orchestra, and very often the compositions played; but it is ever thus. When we get a subjective conductor we criticise and prate hugely of "objecting," and if we are forced to listen to a Bülow who skeletonizes his readings so that the bare ribs of a symphony protrude pointwise, we long for the individual conductor and will not be confronted by mere scholarships devoid of warmth.
>
> Arthur Nikisch is a conductor who is radical in his readings of the classics, and classic in his readings of the modern school. The latter is noticeable in Wagner's music, which Nikisch handles with a moderation that delights the anti-Wagnerite. Singular it is that this fiery, magnetic little Hungarian with the beautiful, dainty hands should cool down in the presence of the mighty Richard and search rather after meanings than dynamic effects. Familiar as was the great aria which Nordica sang to the majority of the audience, yet new beauties were brought to view in the introduction; or was it that perfect balance, that supreme finish that seemed to give the lie to those opponents of Wagner who pronounce his music rough and incapable of finesse as to treatment?

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THE regular orchestral concert season was ushered in on Tuesday night of last week with the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This ever welcome organization will give this season six instead of, as in former years, four concerts, and that the increase, in spite of the likewise augmented number of local orchestral concerts, is looked upon favorably by a New York musical public is evidenced in the fact that the subscription is the largest one so far experienced. This in itself is no small compliment to the visiting orchestra and its great conductor, Arthur Nikisch. It was commented upon that in spite of the announcement made by the management to the effect that the concert was entirely sold out, Chickering Hall showed quite a number of vacant seats in the parquet. We are assured, however, that these seats were sold to a bold speculator, who subscribed for 200 seats for the entire season, but who on this occasion, because of the election night, was "left" with almost two rows of seats on his hands.

As for the concert itself, it brought the following well chosen and interesting program:

Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini"....................Berlioz
Aria, "Ah Perfido"....................Beethoven
Prelude, adagio and gavotte for string orchestra....................Bach
Arranged by Bachrich.
Aria, "O hall of song," from "Tannhäuser"....................Wagner
Symphony No. 3, in E flat (Rhenish), op. 97....................Schumann

Berlioz's fantastic and yet in form and contents his very best overture at once showed both orchestra and conductor to the greatest possible advantage. No finer performance of this difficult work has ever been heard here; in fact it was simply electrifying. Mr. Nikisch's reading is at once original, highly intellectual and refined, and the magnificent orchestra followed each pulsation of his magic wand, every indication of rhythmic or dynamic shading with a readiness and faithfulness which were admirable.

The three selected movements from Bach's unaccompanied violin sonatas showed a brilliancy and homogeneity of tone quality in the string orchestra which were perfectly exquisite, and as for precision the performance has never been equaled, although these three movements have frequently been heard here under Theodore Thomas. But if Bachrich's arrangement in itself deprives them somewhat of the genuine Bach simplicity which is so inseparable a part from his greatness, Mr. Nikisch's reading did not tend to decrease this detraction from the true style. To be quite sincere, his many and very abrupt changes from forte to pianissimo made a portion of these movements sound somewhat artificial and affected.

The two first movements of the Rhenish symphony also did not quite come up to our expectations; they were both taken at considerably too slow a tempo, and in the last movement the counter accentuation in the syncopations became at times so pronounced as to make one for moments lose the sense of the right rhythm. But otherwise we have no criticism to offer, and the sweet andante and the ponderous E flat minor religious movement were absolute pearls of interpretation.

Mrs. Nordica was not quite felicitous in the selection of her soli. The Beethoven aria especially demands a more dramatic and deeper colored voice than the lady possesses, and she did neither herself nor the composer justice in the interpretation of it. She is still, however, a remarkably handsome woman, and the upper portion of her voice is agreeable and sympathetic.

FREE PRESS, Detroit, Mich.

Date 11/10

Arthur Nikisch, the accomplished director the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his talented wife were at the Russell House yesterday

---

MUSIC AND DRAMA
PHILADELPHIA,
SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1891.

WEDNESDAY evening was made memorable through the reappearance at the Academy of Music of Mr. Nikisch and his superb Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program of this, the first concert of the season's series, contained no symphony, and yet it was made specially interesting by the performance of Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3; Tschaikowsky's Suite op. 55 in four movements, and the prelude to Wagner's "Die Meistersinger." The rendition of the overture was undoubtedly a most beautiful conception of this masterly composition, though it differed somewhat from the readings we have been accustomed to. The Tschaikowsky Suite was new to Philadelphians. It is one of the composer's favorites, and Tschaikowsky has the reputation of having given it in every European city where he has held a baton. The work is in the main very sombre, and at times is of the deepest seriousness, though there are occasional brilliant passages, and at rare intervals indications of triviality. The last movement is particularly brilliant and slightly reminiscent of Meyerbeer. In its entirety the work is extremely exacting on the resources of an orchestra, and only such excellent organizations as the Boston Symphony can hope to give it adequate interpretation. The soloists were Mme. Lillian Nordica and Mr. T. Adamowski. Mme. Nordica sang a familiar aria from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and the Polacco from "Mignon," in a brilliant and artistic manner. Mr. Adamowski contributed to the pleasures of the evening by a careful performance of Saint Säens' "Rondo Capriccioso" for violin. The program was brought to a close by the Wagner selection. Every seat in the house was occupied and hundreds were obliged to stand. The applause was enthusiastic almost to a fault..

* * *

THE first Adamowski Quartet concert of the present series was given at the Haseltine Galleries Tuesday afternoon. The program consisted of Mozart's Quartet in E flat major; three movements from Tschaikowsky's Quartet in F, opus 22, and two violin solos—Melodie by Paderewski and Gipsy Dance by Nachez—by Mr. Adamowski. The Mozart number is a wonderful work in which the composer is shown in his finest mood. Not so much can be said of the Tschaikowsky number, however, as it is hardly in keeping with his usual standard of composition. There are passages of unmistakable vigor, that meet the ear now and then, but much of it is very unpleasant. Mr. Adamowski's solo work is not as good as in former years. At one time he gave promise of becoming the world's greatest violinist, but he has fallen considerably short of the mark, and appearances indicate that he is degenerating.

* * *

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, NOV. 14, 1891.

Mrs. Nikisch rather imprudently told a Globe interviewer that she "confines her own newspaper reading, as does Mr. Nikisch, to New York and German journals, to avoid being disturbed by local criticism, which they think so contradictory as to be of no help, and in any case powerless to inspire more earnest endeavor than personal love for their work already dictates." One can hardly understand how she knows so much about what she does not read. But waiving that, as Mr. and Mrs. Nikisch are getting their living in Boston, it would be policy, if nothing more, for them to study the Boston press a little more closely. They might get some profitable hints out of the virtual unanimity of this season's comments and criticisms. When New York engages them—as it is not likely ever to do—it will be time to limit their reading of criticisms to the papers of that city.

The Symphony concerts will be resumed tonight with a programme right curiously constructed. It begins with Haydn's first symphony, proceeds with Beethoven's fourth pianoforte concerto, introducing Mr. Busoni, and ends with the overture, scherzo and finale of Schumann. Mr. Busoni, it may be remembered, is the Italian pianist who has just taken a chair in the New England Conservatory faculty.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1891.

A MUSICAL TREAT.

We were treated to a real Boston symphony concert here last week, with Nikisch as conductor, and Nordica as the soloist. It was given in Chickering Hall. We are not quite up to the Boston craze for these concerts as yet; the real musical people attend, but not the fashionable set as is the case in Boston. There are a great many former Bostonians in New York, and it was noticeable that they were very prominent in the audience. Mrs. William H. Wickham, formerly Miss Adrienne Pfaff of Boylston street, has a very charming home in New York, where she frequently entertains her Boston friends who may be in the city.

The New York Recorder.

"FIRST OF ALL, THE NEWS."

Published every day in the year at
NO. 21 PARK ROW.
BY THE NEW YORK RECORDER COMPANY.

Sunday, November 8, 1891.

HERE AND THERE IN MUSIC.

There was a certain sense of joyousness in listening to the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Chickering Hall last week, so rich, so full was its musical utterance. Perhaps there may be on the farther shores of the Atlantic bands better in technical powers, but there are few that play with such elasticity, snap and freedom as this one.

To be sure the personality of the conductor pervades, permeates, in strict fact envelopes the orchestra, and very often the compositions played; but it is ever thus. When we get a subjective conductor we criticise and prate hugely of "objecting," and if we are forced to listen to a Bulow who skeletonizes his readings so that the bare ribs of a symphony protrude pointwise, we long for the individual conductor and will not be confronted by mere scholarships devoid of warmth.

Arthur Nikisch is a conductor who is radical in his readings of the classics and classic in his readings of the modern school. The latter is noticeable in Wagner's music, which Nikisch handles with a moderation that delights the anti-Wagnerite. Singular it is that this fiery, magnetic little Hungarian with the beautiful, dainty hands, should cool down in the presence of the mighty Richard and search rather after meanings than dynamic effects. Familiar as was the great aria that Mme. Nordica sang the other night to the majority of the audience, yet new beauties were brought to view in the introduction; or was it that perfect balance, that supreme finish that seemed to give the lie to those opponents of Wagner who pronounce his music rough and incapable of finesse as to treatment?

ARTHUR NIKISCH.

Mr. Nikisch's version of the "Rhenish" symphony of Schumann was not all that could be desired by the ardent Schumann lover, for some of the alterations in tempi and accent well-nigh robbed the first movement of its headlong impetuosity and daring dramatic flight. The religioso was most solemnly intoned, barring certain deviations from tonality in the bass. But the symphony as a whole received a noteworthy performance, and the Boston Band and its interesting conductor will be sure of a welcome at their second concert, Dec. 8 next.

TRIBUNE. New York, N. Y.

Date 11-11

The young wife of Mr. Nikisch is so much of a musician herself, and is such a fascinating woman otherwise, that Boston society is greatly in love with her, though her home is in Brookline. Prior to her marriage she sang in light opera, having studied in the Cologne Conservatory; but she has abandoned the stage altogether now, except for an occasional appearance in concerts.

43

Boston Post

FRIDAY MORNING, NOV. 13, 1891.

The second concert of the series given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Sanders Theatre took place last evening. The programme was as follows:

Overture, "Hebrides,"	Mendelssohn
Aria, "La Reine de Saba,"	Gounod
Suite, op. 55,	Tschaikowsky
Song, "The Erl King,"	Schubert
Overture, "Euryanthe,"	Weber

The Mendelssohn overture still keeps its romantic freshness, and the Tschaikowsky suite made a profound impression. A second hearing confirms the opinion lately expressed in these columns that the first and last movements are the work of a master of instrumentation and a composer of great fancy, while the other movements suffer from a clever display of eccentricity that takes the place of true musical thought. Mrs. Lillian Norton was the singer, and she was very heartily applauded. But her singing of the two arias was chiefly characterized by its heartlessness.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 136.

FRIDAY, NOV. 13, 1891.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, gave its second Cambridge concert of the season in Sanders Theatre last evening. There was a large attendance of students and people.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.
—A WEEKLY PAPER—
DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1891.

LAST Sunday's "Recorder," in commenting on the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has the following pertinent things to say of Mr. Nikisch and his band:

> There was a certain sense of joyousness in listening to the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Chickering Hall last week, so rich, so full was its musical utterances. Perhaps there may be on the farther shores of the Atlantic bands better in technical powers, but there are few that play with such elasticity, snap and freedom as this one.
>
> To be sure the personality of the conductor pervades, permeates, in strict fact envelops the orchestra, and very often the compositions played; but it is ever thus. When we get a subjective conductor we criticise and prate hugely of "objecting," and if we are forced to listen to a Bülow who skeletonizes his readings so that the bare ribs of a symphony protrude pointwise, we long for the individual conductor and will not be confronted by mere scholarships devoid of warmth.
>
> Arthur Nikisch is a conductor who is radical in his readings of the classics, and classic in his readings of the modern school. The latter is noticeable in Wagner's music, which Nikisch handles with a moderation that delights the anti-Wagnerite. Singular it is that this fiery, magnetic little Hungarian with the beautiful, dainty hands should cool down in the presence of the mighty Richard and search rather after meanings than dynamic effects. Familiar as was the great aria which Nordica sang to the majority of the audience, yet new beauties were brought to view in the introduction; or was it that perfect balance, that supreme finish that seemed to give the lie to those opponents of Wagner who pronounce his music rough and incapable of finesse as to treatment?

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THE regular orchestral concert season was ushered in on Tuesday night of last week with the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This ever welcome organization will give this season six instead of, as in former years, four concerts, and that the increase, in spite of the likewise augmented number of local orchestral concerts, is looked upon favorably by a New York musical public is evidenced in the fact that the subscription is the largest one so far experienced. This in itself is no small compliment to the visiting orchestra and its great conductor, Arthur Nikisch. It was commented upon that in spite of the announcement made by the management to the effect that the concert was entirely sold out, Chickering Hall showed quite a number of vacant seats in the parquet. We are assured, however, that these seats were sold to a bold speculator, who subscribed for 200 seats for the entire season, but who on this occasion, because of the election night, was "left" with almost two rows of seats on his hands.

As for the concert itself, it brought the following well chosen and interesting program:

Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini"	Berlioz
Aria, "Ah Perfido"	Beethoven
Prelude, adagio and gavotte for string orchestra Arranged by Bachrich.	Bach
Aria, "O hall of song," from "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Symphony No. 3, in E flat (Rhenish), op. 97	Schumann

Berlioz's fantastic and yet in form and contents his very best overture at once showed both orchestra and conductor to the greatest possible advantage. No finer performance of this difficult work has ever been heard here; in fact it was simply electrifying. Mr. Nikisch's reading is at once original, highly intellectual and refined, and the magnificent orchestra followed each pulsation of his magic wand, every indication of rhythmic or dynamic shading with a readiness and faithfulness which were admirable.

The three selected movements from Bach's unaccompanied violin sonatas showed a brilliancy and homogeneity of tone quality in the string orchestra which were perfectly exquisite, and as for precision the performance has never been equaled, although these three movements have frequently been heard here under Theodore Thomas. But if Bachrich's arrangement in itself deprives them somewhat of the genuine Bach simplicity which is so inseparable a part from his greatness, Mr. Nikisch's reading did not tend to decrease this detraction from the true style. To be quite sincere, his many and very abrupt changes from forte to pianissimo made a portion of these movements sound somewhat artificial and affected.

The two first movements of the Rhenish symphony also did not quite come up to our expectations; they were both taken at considerably too slow a tempo, and in the last movement the counter accentuation in the syncopations became at times so pronounced as to make one for moments lose the sense of the right rhythm. But otherwise we have no criticism to offer, and the sweet andante and the ponderous E flat minor religious movement were absolute pearls of interpretation.

Mrs. Nordica was not quite felicitous in the selection of her soli. The Beethoven aria especially demands a more dramatic and deeper colored voice than the lady possesses, and she did neither herself nor the composer justice in the interpretation of it. She is still, however, a remarkably handsome woman, and the upper portion of her voice is agreeable and sympathetic.

FREE PRESS, Detroit, Mich.

Date 11/6

Arthur Nikisch, the accomplished director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his talented wife were at the Russell House yesterday.

• MUSIC AND DRAMA •
PHILADELPHIA,
SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1891.

WEDNESDAY evening was made memorable through the reappearance at the Academy of Music of Mr. Nikisch and his superb Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program of this, the first concert of the season's series, contained no symphony, and yet it was made specially interesting by the performance of Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3; Tschaikowsky's Suite op. 55 in four movements, and the prelude to Wagner's "Die Meistersinger." The rendition of the overture was undoubtedly a most beautiful conception of this masterly composition, though it differed somewhat from the readings we have been accustomed to. The Tschaikowsky Suite was new to Philadelphians. It is one of the composer's favorites, and Tschaikowsky has the reputation of having given it in every European city where he has held a baton. The work is in the main very sombre, and at times is of the deepest seriousness, though there are occasional brilliant passages, and at rare intervals indications of triviality. The last movement is particularly brilliant and slightly reminiscent of Meyerbeer. In its entirety the work is extremely exacting on the resources of an orchestra, and only such excellent organizations as the Boston Symphony can hope to give it adequate interpretation. The soloists were Mme. Lillian Nordica and Mr. T. Adamowski. Mme. Nordica sang a familiar aria from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and the Polacco from "Mignon," in a brilliant and artistic manner. Mr. Adamowski contributed to the pleasures of the evening by a careful performance of Saint Saens' "Rondo Capriccioso" for violin. The program was brought to a close by the Wagner selection. Every seat in the house was occupied and hundreds were obliged to stand. The applause was enthusiastic almost to a fault..

* * *

THE first Adamowski Quartet concert of the present series was given at the Haseltine Galleries Tuesday afternoon. The program consisted of Mozart's Quartet in E flat major; three movements from Tschaikowsky's Quartet in F, opus 22, and two violin solos—Melodie by Paderewski and Gipsy Dance by Nachez—by Mr. Adamowski. The Mozart number is a wonderful work in which the composer is shown in his finest mood. Not so much can be said of the Tschaikowsky number, however, as it is hardly in keeping with his usual standard of composition. There are passages of unmistakable vigor, that meet the ear now and then, but much of it is very unpleasant. Mr. Adamowski's solo work is not as good as in former years. At one time he gave promise of becoming the world's greatest violinist, but he has fallen considerably short of the mark, and appearances indicate that he is degenerating.

* * *

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, NOV. 14, 1891.

Mrs. Nikisch rather imprudently told a Globe interviewer that she "confines her own newspaper reading, as does Mr. Nikisch, to New York and German journals, to avoid being disturbed by local criticism, which they think so contradictory as to be of no help, and in any case powerless to inspire more earnest endeavor than personal love for their work already dictates." One can hardly understand how she knows so much about what she does not read. But waiving that, as Mr. and Mrs. Nikisch are getting their living in Boston, it would be policy, if nothing more, for them to study the Boston press a little more closely. They might get some profitable hints out of the virtual unanimity of this season's comments and criticisms. When New York engages them—as it is not likely ever to do—it will be time to limit their reading of criticisms to the papers of that city.

The Symphony concerts will be resumed tonight with a programme right curiously constructed. It begins with Haydn's first symphony, proceeds with Beethoven's fourth pianoforte concerto, introducing Mr. Busoni, and ends with the overture, scherzo and finale of Schumann. Mr. Busoni, it may be remembered, is the Italian pianist who has just taken a chair in the New England Conservatory faculty.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1891

A MUSICAL TREAT.

We were treated to a real Boston symphony concert here last week, with Nikisch as conductor, and Nordica as the soloist. It was given in Chickering Hall. We are not quite up to the Boston craze for these concerts as yet; the real musical people attend, but not the fashionable set as is the case in Boston. There are a great many former Bostonians in New York, and it was noticeable that they were very prominent in the audience. Mrs. William H. Wickham, formerly Miss Adrienne Pfaff of Boylston street, has a very charming home in New York, where she frequently entertains her Boston friends who may be in the city.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

ELEVENTH SEASON,—1891-92.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

II. CONCERT.

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 12, AT 7.45.

PROGRAMME.

MENDELSSOHN.	OVERTURE. "Hebrides."
GOUNOD.	ARIA. "La Reine de Saba."
TSCHAIKOWSKY.	SUITE, op. 55. Elegie.—Valse melancholique.— Scherzo.—Tema con Variazioni.
SCHUBERT.	SONG with ORCHESTRA. "The Erl King." (Orchestrated by LISZT.)
WEBER.	OVERTURE. "Euryanthe."

SOLOIST:

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

DEMOCRAT AND CHRONICLE, Rochester, N. Y.

Date 11/12

MUSICAL MATTERS IN NEW YORK.

A Few Words About the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Correspondence of the Democrat and Chronicle.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Arthur [redacted] well. Emerson says somewhere, that "pursuits of men charm them in proportion as they beget a sense of enlarged personal power." Thus in rowing one's arms they seem to reach to the tips of the oars. By this touchstone,an orchestra is seen to confer God-like attributes on its leader. He has in himself the resources of fifty men, and if he be great enough he can use them all. But here's the rub. Nobody is great enough. It is always a question of approximation. Mr. Nikisch has not only a superb orchestra, but has also the rare advantage of being allowed to drill it ad libitum. It, therefore, possesses a unity and finish, very uncommon. The difference between Nikisch enforcing all the study he desires, and the late Dr.Damrosch, who was accustomed to gather up his men, and after two or three rehearsals drag them by main strength through a concert, is a difference of opportunity. But when it comes to the magnetic force of the baton, another and personal comparison arises. The concert of Mr. Nikisch was his own concert, played by him upon his fifty instruments. It had all the charm of a free, untrammeled expression of his personal ideas. His orchestral tone was delicious; the brass wonderfully full and mellow; the quality of the whole tone-mass velvety, but at the same time full of flavor. It was sensative, energetic and elastic. It rose and fell in undulations. He hurled it against the objective point in crescents, and it returned again securely to his grasp.

As to the readings—Berlioz's overture to Beurenuto Cellini was rich and picturesque, the accompaniment to the singing a marvel of delicacy and taste. The prelude and adagio arranged from Bach were rythmically charming. The Garotte from the same suite(Joseffy has transcribed it for the left hand) though spirited and broad, struck us as a little harsh in its tone-color, and stiff in its motion.

Schumann's Renish symphony, Op. 97, completed the programme. The Gothic character of Schumann's genius certainly asserts itself in the opening vivace. Hearing it for the first time Mr. Nikisch did not clear up the details enough to show us the massive framework demanded to support the redundent ornament. It was mechanically clean, but musically its proportions were scarcely defined. The orchestral and harmonic coloring were superb. The phrases of the moderato, too, though perfectly apparent and properly arranged, did not always discover that point of equilibrium, which in a rhythm makes the supreme content of the listener. The religioso,and final vivace, however, were broad and living. Intellect, culture, spirit and good taste, marked every number on the programme. All terse qualities does Mr. Nikisch possess. Further this deponent sayeth not. The soloist of the evening was Madame Lillian Nordica. It has long seemed to me that civilization is only the final expression of the order of nature. In the heart of the flower is the pistil; and round it cluster petals and leaves,at once its protection and its complement. So the orchestra was by itself a very fine organization; but when Mme. Nordica came and stood in its midst, shapely and graceful, it became an organism! She was like the heart of a rose in its petals! all appeared to have existed for the amplification of her gifts! She in her own charming self at once adorned and completed the perfect whole. As she stood there, her head, her lovely shoulders and her general pose recalled Parepa—so have we seen Parepa stand, in bygone years. But when Mme. Nordica began to sing "Ah! Parfido," we knew the exponent of a later and widely different art was before us. Not a singer, but a dramatic soprano unfolded her theme. Mme. Nordica appeared to give great pleasure. She was cheered with smiles, applause and flowers. As for us, we know much more about the abominable sin of perfidy than before. It was laid bare to us in a psychological tonal exposition! It is harsh and screaming on high notes; it is metallic on middle notes; it is husky on low notes! Its diabolical quality is such that it never permits a naturally rich, full and tender voice to be itself for one instant. It blares like a trumpet, squeaks like anoboe, hisses ike a cello, rumbles like a bassoon and ipes like a cornet—but alas! it never sings. Since Wagner that is a renounced weakess!

When one realizes that Mme. Nordica is ble to sing—has a true ear, good comass and must have started out with a decious voice, which, however, more than nce showed that loose thread that will resently unravel the whole—we see that erfidy is not only the crime of one air, ut also of a whole art development.

There have been more Grunfeld concerts nd a Kammer-musik evening, given by he Kueisel Quartette—but we will discuss hese next time.

NEWS, Detroit, Mich.

Date 11/10

THE PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

A large audience assembled at the Lyceum theater yesterday afternoon, especially attracted by the announcement that Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Nikisch would appear at the first concert this season of the Philharmonic club. Most of the auditors were ladies. The first number, a quintet in E minor (Christian Sinding), for piano and string quartet, proved extremely interesting and was admirably rendered by Mr. Nikisch and the club. It was the first time this number has been played in America, and served to introduce the composer, a talented Swede, to Detroit music-lovers. The first movement, allegro ma non troppo, was replete with variety and feeling, a bright melody being introduced here and there, although for the most part a certain vagueness and striving for strange effects was noticeable. The ending was particularly impressive, tender yet peculiar, consisting of a succession of unusual chords.

As might have been expected the andante movement was more more melodious. Something of Grieg's mannerisms seem imbued in the work of this Swedish master. The movement begins and ends without the piano, the violins starting an interesting motive, afterward taken up by the piano and a good climax being reached. Here again the termination was excellent, the melody, which had been more or less lost as the movement progressed, being beautifully brought out by the string instruments. The "intermeggo" partook of the character of a Grieg allegro number, sprightly like a dance, with an air so like that it might be remembered. The finale particularly reminded the auditor that the composer had studied in the Norwegian school and had acquainted himself with its best theories. It was powerful, emotional, yet full of reserve and might well have been an overture for some strange Norse legend such as the modern German composer saw fit to embody in opera. The number was enthusiastically received. Mr. Nikisch's playing was refined and scholarly, devoid of physical contortions.

Mrs. Arthur Nikisch then rendered a group of German songs, "Der Lindenbaum" (Wallnofer), "Kleines Lied" (Bungert) and "Winterlied" (Koss), all of which were charmingly given. Without any pretense of being a great artist, Mrs. Nikisch is a delightful one. She usually gives selections that appeal to the feelings, and her manner is as unaffected as that of Mr. Nikisch. William Yunck played the Mendelssohn concerto, Op. 84, which he has frequently rendered here and which is always given with artistic taste. In response to enthusiastic applause, Mr. Yunck appeared, dragging on Mr. Nikisch who had accompanied him and who, with characteristic modesty, seemed averse to sharing the honors with the talented local violinist. Mrs. Nikisch followed in a serenade (Strauss) a dainty number, "Abendrein" (Reinicke), which is as quaintly sweet as most of that composer's songs and "vergebliches stanchen" (Brahm.) Her voice, a mezzo soprano with decided contralto low tones, was heard to great advantage in the simple numbers, almost partaking of the character of "folk-songs." She was presented with two handsome bouquets.

Mozart's quartet in D major, rendered by the club, completed the program. The characteristic qualities of their work are well known, and the club interpreted the work in its usual skillful manner. In conclusion it should be stated that while Mr. Nikisch is undoubtedly one of the best conductors and most talented musicians in the country, it is evident that he does not care about posing as a piano soloist. His usefulness is too marked in other directions, and his appearance here yesterday with his wife is regarded by the Philharmonic club more as a compliment to the music-lovers of this city than as a paid engagement.

THE RICHMOND DISPATCH.

SUNDAY.........NOVEMBER 8, 1891.

What's in a Name?

The celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra gave concerts in Baltimore and Washington during the past week to crowded houses. This organization, as great as it was under its former leader, has reached a still greater degree of perfection under Mr. Arthur Nikisch.

Speaking of this orchestra, a curious law suit is brought to mind, which grew out of the now too-general practice of counterfeiting the name of anything that is meritorious and sailing under false colors. About two seasons ago, Max Bachert organized in Boston a small instrumental club of seven members and called it the "Boston Symphony Orchestral Club," a name remarkably suggestive of the "Boston Symphony Orchestra." At the opening of the present season a similar organization in New York started out under the name "Boston Symphony Club." Singularly enough, Bachert actually brought suit against this club for using his name, and in the latter part of September actually won his case. Can the question any longer be asked, "What's in a name?"

[52]

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

ELEVENTH SEASON,—1891--92.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

II. CONCERT.

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 12, AT 7.45.

PROGRAMME.

MENDELSSOHN.	OVERTURE. "Hebrides."
GOUNOD.	ARIA. "La Reine de Saba."
TSCHAIKOWSKY.	SUITE, op. 55. Elegie.—Valse melancholique.— Scherzo.—Tema con Variazioni.
SCHUBERT.	SONG with ORCHESTRA. "The Erl King." (Orchestrated by LISZT.)
WEBER.	OVERTURE. "Euryanthe."

SOLOIST:

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA.

DEMOCRAT AND CHRONICLE, Rochester, N. Y.

Date 11/12

MUSICAL MATTERS IN NEW YORK.

A Few Words About the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Correspondence of the Democrat and Chronicle.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Nikisch played well. Emerson says somewhere, that "pursuits of men charm them in proportion as they beget a sense of enlarged personal power." Thus in rowing one's arms they seem to reach to the tips of the oars. By this touchstone,an orchestra is seen to confer God-like attributes on its leader. He has in himself the resources of fifty men, and if he be great enough he can use them all. But here's the rub. Nobody is great enough. It is always a question of approximation. Mr. Nikisch has not only a superb orchestra, but has also the rare advantage of being allowed to drill it ad libitum. It, therefore, possesses a unity and finish, very uncommon. The difference between Nikisch enforcing all the study he desires, and the late Dr.Damrosch, who was accustomed to gather up his men, and after two or three rehearsals drag them by main strength through a concert, is a difference of opportunity. But when it comes to the magnetic force of the baton, another and personal comparison arises. The concert of Mr. Nikisch was his own concert, played by him upon his fifty instruments. It had all the charm of a free, untrammeled expression of his personal ideas. His orchestral tone was delicious; the brass wonderfully full and mellow; the quality of the whole tone-mass velvety, but at the same time full of flavor. It was sensative, energetic and elastic. It rose and fell in undulations. He hurled it against the objective point in crescents, and it returned again securely to his grasp.

As to the readings—Berlioz's overture to Beurenuto Cellini was rich and picturesque, the accompaniment to the singing a marvel of delicacy and taste. The prelude and adagio arranged from Bach were rythmically charming. The Garotte from the same suite(Joseffy has transcribed it for the left hand) though spirited and broad, struck us as a little harsh in its tone-color, and stiff in its motion.

Schumann's Renish symphony, Op. 97, completed the programme. The Gothic character of Schumann's genius certainly asserts itself in the opening vivace. Hearing it for the first time Mr. Nikisch did not clear up the details enough to show us the massive framework demanded to support the redundent ornament. It was mechanically clean, but musically its proportions were scarcely defined. The orchestral and harmonic coloring were superb. The phrases of the moderato, too, though perfectly apparent and properly arranged, did not always discover that point of equilibrium, which in a rhythm makes the supreme content of the listener. The religioso,and final vivace, however, were broad and living. Intellect, culture, spirit and good taste, marked every number on the programme. All terse qualities does Mr. Nikisch possess. Further this deponent sayeth not. The soloist of the evening was Madame Lillian Nordica. It has long seemed to me that civilization is only the final expression of the order of nature. In the heart of the flower is the pistil; and round it cluster petals and leaves,at once its protection and its complement. So the orchestra was by itself a very fine organization; but when Mme. Nordica came and stood in its midst, shapely and graceful, it became an organism! She was like the heart of a rose in its petals! all appeared to have existed for the amplification of her gifts! She in her own charming self at once adorned and completed the perfect whole. As she stood there, her head, her lovely shoulders and her general pose recalled Parepa—so have we seen Parepa stand, in bygone years. But when Mme. Nordica began to sing "Ah! Parfido," we knew the exponent of a later and widely different art was before us. Not a singer, but a dramatic soprano unfolded her theme. Mme. Nordica appeared to give great pleasure. She was cheered with smiles, applause and flowers. As for us, we know much more about the abominable sin of perfidy than before. It was laid bare to us in a psychological tonal exposition! It is harsh and screaming on high notes; it is metallic on middle notes; it is husky on low notes! Its diabolical quality is such that it never permits a naturally rich, full and tender voice to be itself for one instant. It blares like a trumpet, squeaks like anoboe, hisses ike a cello, rumbles like a bassoon and pipes like a cornet—but alas! it never sings. Since Wagner that is a renounced weakness!

When one realizes that Mme. Nordica is able to sing—has a true ear, good compass and must have started out with a de-icious voice, which, however, more than nce showed that loose thread that will presently unravel the whole—we see that perfidy is not only the crime of one air, but also of a whole art development.

There have been more Grunfeld concerts and a Kammer-musik evening, given by the Kueisel Quartette--but we will discuss hese next time.

NEWS, Detroit, Mich.

Date 11/10

THE PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

A large audience assembled at the Lyceum theater yesterday afternoon, especially attracted by the announcement that Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Nikisch would appear at the first concert this season of the Philharmonic club. Most of the auditors were ladies. The first number, a quintet in E minor (Christian Sinding), for piano and string quartet, proved extremely interesting and was admirably rendered by Mr. Nikisch and the club. It was the first time this number has been played in America, and served to introduce the composer, a talented Swede, to Detroit music-lovers. The first movement, allegro ma non troppo, was replete with variety and feeling, a bright melody being introduced here and there, although for the most part a certain vagueness and striving for strange effects was noticeable. The ending was particularly impressive, tender yet peculiar, consisting of a succession of unusual chords.

As might have been expected the andante movement was more more melodious. Something of Grieg's mannerisms seem imbued in the work of this Swedish master. The movement begins and ends without the piano, the violins starting an interesting motive, afterward taken up by the piano and a good climax being reached. Here again the termination was excellent, the melody, which had been more or less lost as the movement progressed, being beautifully brought out by the string instruments. The "intermeggo" partook of the character of a Grieg allegro number, sprightly like a dance, with an air so like that it might be remembered. The finale particularly reminded the auditor that the composer had studied in the Norwegian school and had acquainted himself with its bast theories. It was powerful, emotional, yet full of reserve and might well have been an overture for some strange Norse legend such as the modern German composer saw fit to embody in opera. The number was enthusiastically received. Mr. Nikisch's playing was refined and scholarly, devoid of physical contortions.

Mrs. Arthur Nikisch then rendered a group of German songs, "Der Lindenbaum" (Wallnofer), "Kleines Lied" (Bungert) and "Winterlied" (Koss), all of which were charmingly given. Without any pretense of being a great artist, Mrs. Nikisch is a delightful one. She usually gives selections that appeal to the feelings, and her manner is as unaffected as that of Mr. Nikisch. William Yunck played the Mendelssohn concerto, Op. 84, which he has frequently rendered here and which is always given with artistic taste. In response to enthusiastic applause, Mr. Yunck appeared, dragging on Mr. Nikisch who had accompanied him and who, with characteristic modesty, seemed averse to sharing the honors with the talented local violinist. Mrs. Nikisch followed in a serenade (Strauss) a dainty number, "Abendrein" (Reinicke), which is as quaintly sweet as most of that composer's songs and "vergebliches stanchen" (Brahm.) Her voice, a mezzo-soprano with decided contralto low tones, was heard to great advantage in the simple numbers, almost partaking of the character of "folk-songs." She was presented with two handsome bouquets.

Mozart's quartet in D major, rendered by the club, completed the program. The characteristic qualities of their work are well known, and the club interpreted the work in its usual skillful manner. In conclusion it should be stated that while Mr. Nikisch is undoubtedly one of the best conductors and most talented musicians in the country, it is evident that he does not care about posing as a piano soloist. His usefulness is too marked in other directions, and his appearance here yesterday with his wife is regarded by the Philharmonic club more as a compliment to the music-lovers of this city than as a paid engagement.

THE RICHMOND DISPATCH.

SUNDAY........NOVEMBER 8, 1891.

What's in a Name?

The celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra gave concerts in Baltimore and Washington during the past week to crowded houses. This organization, as great as it was under its former leader, has reached a still greater degree of perfection under Mr. Arthur Nikisch.

Speaking of this orchestra, a curious law suit is brought to mind, which grew out of the now too-general practice of counterfeiting the name of anything that is meritorious and sailing under false colors. About two seasons ago, Max Bachert organized in Boston a small instrumental club of seven members and called it the "Boston Symphony Orchestral Club," a name remarkably suggestive of the "Boston Symphony Orchestra." At the opening of the present season a similar organization in New York started out under the name "Boston Symphony Club." Singularly enough, Bachert actually brought suit against this club for using his name, and in the latter part of September actually won his case. Can the question any longer be asked, "What's in a name?"

[52]

Brooklyn Independent

November 12, 1891.

Music.

BY E. IRENÆUS STEVENSON.

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert for the season, on Tuesday evening, drew as distinctive an audience in musical quality as has been the rule ever since the first series these welcome guests undertook in this city. The program offered instrumentally Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture, the energetic and complex brilliancy of which becomes singularly lucid and effective when interpreted under such conditions; a Bach Prelude Adagio and Gavotte, played by the string-orchestra with delightful smoothness and crispness; and Schumann's E flat ("Rhenish") Symphony, something that the Bostonians play so peculiarly well as to lead one to the enthusiastic opinion that Schumann's symphonies have no such interpreters anywhere else. This idea used to occur to the Schumannist when Mr. Gericke was the conductor. It has lost none of its insistency. Mrs. Lillian Nordica was the soloist—in Beethoven's "Ah Perfido" and "Thou Hall Beloved" in "Tannhäuser." Mrs. Nordica has a firm, fresh and rich soprano of excellent, if somewhat cold, quality. Her training has given her a superior ease in its use—her method is admirable. "Ah Perfido," however, exacts an absolute sincerity of musical and an artless, fervent, dramatic feeling, of a sort quite diverse from anything like the conventions of Italian opera art; and the Wagnerian air hardly less imperatively demands a spontaneous, a broad and noble style—one thoroughly German withal. To either selection anything like artistic self-consciousness is a capital fault that carries its own punishment. Mrs. Nordica would better have chosen other music than that in which her best traits as an artist could win for her relatively little success. She was cordially received and recalled several times after each appearance; but popular success is a mischievous friend sometimes. It is worth while to note that Chickering Hall's tricky atmosphere was kept at a most comfortable coolness and freshness during the evening.

On Thursday night and on Saturday afternoon the Messrs. Grünfeld, pianist and cellist, were heard in their third and fourth concerts of chamber-music, in the Madison Square Garden's Music Hall. Friday evening brought the first of another group of chamber-music entertainments, projected by the Kneisel Quartet, in whose work a special interest is justifiable. Sherry's new hall, in Fifth Avenue, is a convenient and pleasant place for the series; the audience was a most appreciative one. Mozart's Quartet in C Major (Köchel 465, Ed. Peters 17), the second movement from Tschaikowsky's D Major Quartet and the new Quartet Opus, 111, by Brahms, constructed a program given first and last, with that peculiar finish and fine balance of tone that one would expect from the Messrs. Kneisel and Roth, violins, Svecenski, viola, and Schroeder, violoncello. About the Brahms qnartet, the program's novelty and chief interest, it would be easy to write a great deal, so characteristically beautiful is it in spirit and so exquisite in execution. It is a small masterpiece from the composer who continues to prove himself a loftier mind, among all the lofty ones at work in music, with every year of his life and with each new work. That Brahms's mantle will have to be put into camphor after his death is more and more a probability; and no other composer in Germany or the world can fare his way or can wear his sandals. It is good to be reminded of it again, now and then. The Kneisel Club's next concert is December 11th.

Coincidence turned the week into almost a clean sweep for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. No other Richmonds were in the field. In Brooklyn, on Saturday evening, they assumed the practical responsibility for the music to be expected in that city under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society there. So happy an arrangement seems to be regarded with as much popular favor in Brooklyn as critical satisfaction. The Academy of Music was crowded. The audience more than once became enthusiastic—not a matter of course in Brooklyn—over the band's performance, in an emphatic degree. Beethoven's Third "Leonore" Overture, Tschaikowsky's fascinating Suite Opus 55, and Wagner's "Mastersingers" prelude, with two vocal numbers sung by Mrs. Nordica, furnished the evening's bill. The favorite, Tschaikowsky Suite was played to perfection—the one work that, despite its length, is so overflowing in its store of melody, rhythm, and rich variety of orchestration that one would not object if a conductor, on concluding it, suddenly should imitate Dr. von Bülow and say to the orchestra: "Gentlemen, if you please—da capo!" Mrs. Nordica sang Gounod's stately air, "Plus Grand dans son Obscurité" extremely well—evidently entirely in her element in it. Her other selection was the Wagnerian air as on Tuesday's concert in this city. The next of these concerts, under the Brooklyn Philharmonic's auspices, comes December 11th and Mr. Ignace Paderewski will be the soloist.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, NOV. 15, 1891.

At the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Mrs. Lillian Nordica was the soloist, singing for her first number an aria of Gounod's, and afterwards Schumann's "Erl King." Her work was strong and effective, and called forth enthusiastic applause. The orchestral numbers were Mendelssohn's overture, "Hebrides," suite opus 55, by Tschaikowski, and the overture to "Euryanthe."

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 15, 1891.

Symphony Concert, Soloist Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni.

Still another pianist was introduced to a Boston audience at last evening's symphony concert, this newcomer being Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni, who has recently become a resident teacher. His appearance was made in a performance of Beethoven's concerto for pianoforte No. 4, in G major, op. 50, to which the player added some original cadenzas. Mr. Busoni is a player who impresses an audience more by the eminent attainments he displays as a musician than by his brilliancy as a pianist. He is evidently well grounded in the science of his chosen profession, and he commanded the respect and admiration of his audience by the well-studied performance he gave of the familiar work. His own embellishments, in the cadenzas, were a further evidence of his skill and good taste, and his merits, both as a player and composer, found a ready recognition.

Mr. Nikisch introduced his programme with a highly interesting performance of the Haydn symphony No. 1 (B. & H.), in B flat, and ended the evening's concert with a very enjoyable interpretation of the overture, scherzo and finale, op. 50, by Schumann.

Next Saturday evening Mr. C. M. Loeffler, the violinist, is to appear, both as composer and soloist, his contribution to the programme consisting of a suite for orchestra, "Les Veillees de l'Ukraine." Miss Marguerite Hall is to sing some songs, and the "Leonore" symphony, by Raff, and Lalo's overture, "Le Roi d'Ys," are to be played.

Mme. Lillian Nordica has been engaged to sing at the second Cecilia concert, Jan. 28, and makes her last appearance then before returning to England. She will be heard in songs and in the Franchetti cantata.

Boston Journal.

TEN PAGES.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

An apparently hungry audience, after its two weeks' musical fast, welcomed Conductor Nikisch and his splendid corps of musicians, bearing fresh laurels from New York and Baltimore, where they met with a "pronounced and unequivocal artistic success."

The programme Saturday evening was of an order classical enough to suit the most fastidious, including Haydn's Symphony No. 1 (B. and H.) in E flat, Beethoven's concerto for pianoforte with original cadenzas by the evening's soloist, Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni, and Schumann's overture, scherzo and finale, op. 50. The Haydn symphony moved with the dignified solemnity of a funeral cortege, as though in honor of some such glorious hero as the devout and profound composer himself. The sacred harmony and religious sentiment expressed were superb, and the exquisite interpolation of the single voice from Franz Kneisel's artistic, plaintive violin came like the pleading of some pure spirit. Beethoven's beautiful sonata introduced another new claimant for excellent work, both as a composer and pianist. Mr. Busoni was warmly welcomed and merited the high standard for excellence so quickly awarded him. He was especially felicitious in his cadenza of the second movement when the trying ordeal of a first appearance had disappeared and he had become thoroughly warmed up to his subject. His execution is very even and fluent, and, although not an extraordinary performer, he impresses one with an idea of his thoroughness as a musician. Schumann's overture, symphonic in character, was admirably interpreted and played with the usual characteristic care and skill.

A very interesting programme is announced for Nov. 21, in which Miss Marguerite Hall appears as vocal soloist and Mr. C. M. Loeffler as composer of a suite for violin and orchestra, entitled "Les Veillees de l'Ukraine," as well as soloist. Other numbers are Lalo's overture "Le Roi d'Ys," and Raff's "Leonore."

Brooklyn Independent.

November 12, 1891.

Music.

BY E. IRENÆUS STEVENSON.

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert for the season, on Tuesday evening, drew as distinctive an audience in musical quality as has been the rule ever since the first series these welcome guests undertook in this city. The program offered instrumentally Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture, the energetic and complex brilliancy of which becomes singularly lucid and effective when interpreted under such conditions; a Bach Prelude Adagio and Gavotte, played by the string-orchestra with delightful smoothness and crispness; and Schumann's E flat ("Rhenish") Symphony, something that the Bostonians play so peculiarly well as to lead one to the enthusiastic opinion that Schumann's symphonies have no such interpreters anywhere else. This idea used to occur to the Schumannist when Mr. Gericke was the conductor. It has lost none of its insistency. Mrs. Lillian Nordica was the soloist—in Beethoven's "Ah Perfido" and "Thou Hall Beloved" in "Tannhäuser." Mrs. Nordica has a firm, fresh and rich soprano of excellent, if somewhat cold, quality. Her training has given her a superior ease in its use—her method is admirable. "Ah Perfido," however, exacts an absolute sincerity of musical and an artless, fervent, dramatic feeling, of a sort quite diverse from anything like the conventions of Italian opera art; and the Wagnerian air hardly less imperatively demands a spontaneous, a broad and noble style—one thoroughly German withal. To either selection anything like artistic self-consciousness is a capital fault that carries its own punishment. Mrs. Nordica would better have chosen other music than that in which her best traits as an artist could win for her relatively little success. She was cordially received and recalled several times after each appearance; but popular success is a mischievous friend sometimes. It is worth while to note that Chickering Hall's tricky atmosphere was kept at a most comfortable coolness and freshness during the evening.

On Thursday night and on Saturday afternoon the Messrs. Grünfeld, pianist and cellist, were heard in their third and fourth concerts of chamber-music, in the Madison Square Garden's Music Hall. Friday evening brought the first of another group of chamber-music entertainments, projected by the Kneisel Quartet, in whose work a special interest is justifiable. Sherry's new hall, in Fifth Avenue, is a convenient and pleasant place for the series; the audience was a most appreciative one. Mozart's Quartet in C Major (Köchel 465, Ed. Peters 17), the second movement from Tschaikowsky's D Major Quartet and the new Quartet Opus, 111, by Brahms, constructed a program given first and last, with that peculiar finish and fine balance of tone that one would expect from the Messrs. Kneisel and Roth, violins, Svecenski, viola, and Schroeder, violoncello. About the Brahms quartet, the program's novelty and chief interest, it would be easy to write a great deal, so characteristically beautiful is it in spirit and so exquisite in execution. It is a small masterpiece from the composer who continues to prove himself a loftier mind, among all the lofty ones at work in music, with every year of his life and with each new work. That Brahms's mantle will have to be put into camphor after his death is more and more a probability; and no other composer in Germany or the world can fare his way or can wear his sandals. It is good to be reminded of it again, now and then. The Kneisel Club's next concert is December 11th.

Coincidence turned the week into almost a clean sweep for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. No other Richmonds were in the field. In Brooklyn, on Saturday evening, they assumed the practical responsibility for the music to be expected in that city under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society there. So happy an arrangement seems to be regarded with as much popular favor in Brooklyn as critical satisfaction. The Academy of Music was crowded. The audience more than once became enthusiastic—not a matter of course in Brooklyn—over the band's performance, in an emphatic degree. Beethoven's Third "Leonore" Overture, Tschaikowsky's fascinating Suite Opus 55, and Wagner's "Mastersingers" prelude, with two vocal numbers sung by Mrs. Nordica, furnished the evening's bill. The favorite, Tschaikowsky Suite was played to perfection—the one work that, despite its length, is so overflowing in its store of melody, rhythm, and rich variety of orchestration that one would not object if a conductor, on concluding it, suddenly should imitate Dr. von Bülow and say to the orchestra: "Gentlemen, if you please—da capo!" Mrs. Nordica sang Gounod's stately air, "Plus Grand dans son Obscurité" extremely well—evidently entirely in her element in it. Her other selection was the Wagnerian air as on Tuesday's concert in this city. The next of these concerts, under the Brooklyn Philharmonic's auspices, comes December 11th, and Mr. Ignace Paderewski will be the soloist.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, NOV. 15, 1891.

At the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Mrs. Lillian Nordica was the soloist, singing for her first number an aria of Gounod's, and afterwards Schumann's "Erl King." Her work was strong and effective, and called forth enthusiastic applause. The orchestral numbers were Mendelssohn's overture, "Hebrides," suite opus 55, by Tschaikowski, and the overture to "Euryanthe."

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 15, 1891.

Symphony Concert, Soloist Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni.

Still another pianist was introduced to a Boston audience at last evening's symphony concert, this newcomer being Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni, who has recently become a resident teacher. His appearance was made in a performance of Beethoven's concerto for pianoforte No. 4, in G major, op. 50, to which the player added some original cadenzas. Mr. Busoni is a player who impresses an audience more by the eminent attainments he displays as a musician than by his brilliancy as a pianist. He is evidently well grounded in the science of his chosen profession, and he commanded the respect and admiration of his audience by the well-studied performance he gave of the familiar work. His own embellishments, in the cadenzas, were a further evidence of his skill and good taste, and his merits, both as a player and composer, found a ready recognition.

Mr. Nikisch introduced his programme with a highly interesting performance of the Haydn symphony No. 1 (B. & H.), in B flat, and ended the evening's concert with a very enjoyable interpretation of the overture, scherzo and finale, op. 50, by Schumann.

Next Saturday evening Mr. C. M. Loeffler, the violinist, is to appear, both as composer and soloist, his contribution to the programme consisting of a suite for orchestra, "Les Veillees de l'Ukraine." Miss Marguerite Hall is to sing some songs, and the "Leonore" symphony, by Raff, and Lalo's overture, "Le Roi d'Ys," are to be played.

Mme. Lillian Nordica has been engaged to sing at the second Cecilia concert, Jan. 28, and makes her last appearance then before returning to England. She will be heard in songs and in the Franchetti cantata.

Boston Journal.

TEN PAGES.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

An apparently hungry audience, after its two weeks' musical fast, welcomed Conductor Nikisch and his splendid corps of musicians, bearing fresh laurels from New York and Baltimore, where they met with a "pronounced and unequivocal artistic success."

The programme Saturday evening was of an order classical enough to suit the most fastidious, including Haydn's Symphony No. 1 (B. and H.) in E flat, Beethoven's concerto for pianoforte with original cadenzas by the evening's soloist, Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni, and Schumann's overture, scherzo and finale, op. 50. The Haydn symphony moved with the dignified solemnity of a funeral cortege, as though in honor of some such glorious hero as the devout and profound composer himself. The sacred harmony and religious sentiment expressed were superb, and the exquisite interpolation of the single voice from Franz Kneisel's artistic, plaintive violin came like the pleading of some pure spirit. Beethoven's beautiful sonata introduced another new claimant for excellent work, both as a composer and pianist. Mr. Busoni was warmly welcomed and merited the high standard for excellence so quickly awarded him. He was especially felicitious in his cadenza of the second movement when the trying ordeal of a first appearance had disappeared and he had become thoroughly warmed up to his subject. His execution is very even and fluent, and, although not an extraordinary performer, he impresses one with an idea of his thoroughness as a musician. Schumann's overture, symphonic in character, was admirably interpreted and played with the usual characteristic care and skill.

A very interesting programme is announced for Nov. 21, in which Miss Marguerite Hall appears as vocal soloist and Mr. C. M. Loeffler as composer of a suite for violin and orchestra, entitled "Les Veillees de l'Ukraine," as well as soloist. Other numbers are Lalo's overture "Le Roi d'Ys," and Raff's "Leonore."

Brooklyn Daily Eagle

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 7, 1891.

PHILHARMONIC.

Beginning of the Concert Season Under a New Regime.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Makes a Magnificent Artistic Success at the Academy of Music—Conductor Nikisch. Wonderful String Playing—The Programme—Lillian Nordica as Soloist.

Theodore Thomas, after serving the musical interests of Brooklyn for nearly twenty years, has gone to Chicago, which has seeming need of his missionary efforts, and his place is taken by Arthur Nikisch of Boston. Mr. Thomas is a great musician; he has done more than any one man in this country to advance the popular knowledge of, and taste for, good music; he has given a sound and high pleasure to more people than any other two conductors now in service, but we have his artistic equal in Mr. Nikisch, and, as now organized, the superior of his band in the one that Mr. Nikisch brings from Boston. This band, the famous Boston symphony orchestra, the rival of any force of the kind in the world, began its series of concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music yesterday, that are to be known as the Philharmonic concerts, albeit the Philharmonic society takes no active part in them, either in management or choice of programmes. Some of its members attend, and they lend their set of scenery for these entertainments. The audience yesterday was large, but less large than it should have been, for there has been no finer playing in this city than this audience heard. The orchestra is nicely balanced and ample in every division, but it is in the strings that its merits are most strikingly exhibited. This department, numbering fifty-six men, an orchestra in itself, is without equal, and it is in this department that merit is most quickly recognized and produces the most telling effects, for the strings are the main stay, the infantry of the band, the wood wind being comparable to the brilliant cavalry, and the brasses and percussing instruments to the loud sounding, but not always serviceable, artillery. It is, perhaps, to be regretted that the first programme does not contain a number for the special exploitation of the strings, like the Bach suite that was played in New York on Tuesday night, that their wonderful smoothness, voice quality, precision, expression and spirit could have been judged the better, but such opportunities will occur during the season. As it is, the violins and basses make new disclosures of the scope of strings. Their attack is so absolutely uniform, their volume so magnificent, their crescendos so inspiring and their full tone so rich and organ like that the hearer is thrilled and startled. These effects follow the readings of the conductor, who is, himself, as quietly notable as his musicians. A man of short stature, black mustached and bearded, with refined and clear cut face, as fresh in its complexion as a child's, with hair and beard worn in artistic carelessness, quiet and almost bashful in manner, he advances to the leader's platform and mounts it when the house is stilled. Even the back rows of the orchestra are lifted but a few inches above the stage; so, in order to have all the players under his eye, his platform is slightly taller than usual. Once before his men he fills with the spirit of command. Without extravagance of gesture and sometimes with the slightest beat of the baton, he sways them to his will. There is an electrical communication of thought between him and his band; every motion is charged with nervous force; the constrained position of his left arm bent against his side with hand clenched shows to what tension he is wrought; he is like the hypnotist, centering his life force on his subject, and his magnetism is felt like an animating fire. He plays upon that orchestra as a master plays upon an organ; he hushes it to whispers; he rouses it to thunder gusts; it sings for him; it dances for him; it runs the gamut of passion and meaning, so far as thought has spread or bounded it; it tells more than speech and it tells it in the art that is highest and purest and most absolute in beauty. When this voice spoke in the surging rhythms of Beethoven, it had the authority of genius that is so like the authority of nature as we hear it spoken in the wind, the waves, the rocking pines and no less efficiently in those hinting spiritual tones that steal from mountain silences into the wanderer's ear. Beethoven was properly chosen to begin the concert and to inaugurate what should prove an enduring attachment between the music loving public of this city and this corps of artists. The selection was the third "Leonora" overture, a work of tried and accepted popularity and containing much that is moving and delightful, particularly the solemn and boding utterance of the horns near the beginning, and one or two things that are not agreeable. The scales played in unison just before the finale are so bare and hard and are so impertinent to the subject, that it is a wonder that some conductor has not found heart to cut them out, though their leanness and insignificance do lend contrast to the triumphant and gorgeous measures of conclusion. Mr. Nikisch adhered to custom in sending a trumpeter behind the scenes to sound the call, first far away, then nearer, that indicates the arrival of the governor, in the opera, but that stands for whatever you like it to, as you hear it in the pause of the orchestra. A writer quoted in the valuable analytical programme that is furnished at these concerts finds in it "the effect of a summons to a vanquished nation to lay down its arms; there is a forlorn, desolate, dead of night effect about it that is overpowering." The blowing of the trumpet from recesses of the stage has often been criticised as a trick, and at a concert, where the curtain is not about to rise on the work that it helps to usher in, it may seem a little forced, yet it gains in dramatic significance by remoteness and makes a stronger draft on the imagination. The new number in the programme was the Tschaikowsky suite, opus 55, a work symphonic in arrangement, but perhaps not strict enough in form for the conservatives to regard as a symphony, though why a symphony should not comprise any forms that its writer likes to put into it no formalist has explained. The day for mere forms has gone [illegible] with modernity, that would the finest and quickest and most individual expression of a thought. The Tschaikowsky music is Russian, and under even its happiest moods can be heard the strain of lament that is in every phase of Russian art and writing, the pain and questioning of an oppressed people, longing for liberty, but blind to the ways that lead to it. The first number, an elegy, is beautiful in orchestration and the principal theme is charming. This melody, sounded by various instruments in the wood wind choir, successively, elicits a surprising wealth of solo talent in the orchestra. Such broad, sweet tone, such facile execution, are seldom heard on the concert stage as the flute, oboe, clarinet, English horn and even the bassoon players produced in the songs and phrases assigned to them. The "Melancholy Waltz" that forms the second number in the suite is sometimes oriental in manner, then it is a gambol of imps; anon it is the frenetic dance of a hungry, starving creature who must move to keep from freezing or from brooding on suicide; it is morbid and strange—the cry of a Chopin of the steppes. The scherzo offsets this by its frolic, gaiety and humor, as delicate as Mendelssohn's fairy music, as bizarre as Berlioz. The effects of the snare drum and cymbals toned down to their softest and chiming with the quick rush of the strings, and of the basses lumbering on as in a vain effort to overtake the violins are odd in the extreme and are full of originality. The last and longest section of the suite is a theme with twelve variations. The theme is a clear melody, like an old English air, and in the variants Tschaikowsky displays remarkable knowledge of the orchestra and practice in the use of its resources. The third variation, for wood wind, is quite suggestive of Berlioz; the announcement by the brasses in the fourth is strong and noble; the fifth is complex and the strings are kept in strict fugue routine; Luther might have written the seventh, so medieval is it in form; the ninth works up to a furious speed and is followed by a cadenza, played with excellent taste by Mr. Kneisel, that recurs in the next two sections and leads up to the twelfth variation, which has opulence and fantastic character enough to serve as an eastern processional. Toward the close occurs a protracted effect of crescendo that is merely a result of employing the dominant seventh for several bars before its resolution into the tonic. This resolution the ear becomes almost impatient for, but when made it is in a stately theme, with a fine outburst of tone and rich instrumental color. The prelude to "The Master Singers of Nuremberg" proved that Mr. Nikisch could play Wagner understandingly and with force and sweep, the admirable temper of the band serving to this end. The beautiful overture was beautifully played and brought the concert to an end. The soloist was Lillian Nordica, once Miss Norton of Maine, whose agreeable personality won her audience before she sang. The strain of operatic work has put a hint of acid quality into her upper and stronger notes, but it has also developed in her a large and commanding style and dramatic expression. Her notes are clean cut, true and produced with simplicity and directness, and the air from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and the apostrophe to the hall of song from "Tannhauser" were given with largeness of tone and fluency and force of execution. Unlike many solos they were happy additions to the concert. Mr. Nikisch is seemingly afraid of tiring his listeners, for he played but an hour and a half yesterday, but such fears are groundless. He has no long waits, however, and does not waste time; still, there is space on the programme for a Schumann overture or another Wagner excerpt. The success of the orchestra was decided and the audience was palpably delighted. To-night, at the concert, the programme will be repeated.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, NOV. 15.

The Symphony Concert.

The programme of last night's Symphony Concert was a well-balanced one, beginning with Haydn's Symphony No. 1 (B. & H.) in E-flat, which was, on the whole, sympathetically read and admirably played, barring a certain lack of essential delicacy now and then. It was followed by Beethoven's Concerto for piano, No. 4, in G, Mr. F. B. Busoni performing the solo part. This artist may be praised with the greatest heartiness and sincerity for his charming reading and beautiful performance of the work. He entered into its spirit with the finest sympathy, and the results were as delightful as they were refreshing. His technique is thorough, his touch true and musical, and his phrasing eminently artistic. Grace and elegance of style, musicianly intelligence and sincere devotion to his task characterized the effort throughout. He has not a large tone, but we have had over much of large tone of late, and the change was a relief. There were a Hummelesque repose, delicacy and fluency, and an absence of all attempt at display in the performance that made it full of pleasure in the hearing. The cadenzas were by Mr. Busoni, but these we did not fancy much, as they are too modern in quality to be in harmony with the work. For the rest, however, we have nothing but commendation. The artist was applauded with great enthusiasm, and received two tumultuous recalls. The work of the orchestra in the performance was lacking in precision and finish; in fact, was reprehensibly rough and ragged. The concert ended with Schumann's Overture, Scherzo, and Finale, op. 50, which was read and played in a manner that made it one of the most satisfying efforts that the orchestra has made this season. The programme of the next concert is: Overture, "Le Roi d'Ys," Lalo; Suite for violin and orchestra, C. M. Loeffler, the solo part in which will be played by the composer; and Raff's symphony, "Lenore." Miss Marguerite Hall will also appear as a soloist.

Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, if correctly reported, said in an interview published in the Globe, that she "confines my own newspaper reading, as does Mr. Nikisch, to New York and German journals, to avoid being disturbed by local criticism, which we think so contradictory as to be of no help, and in any case powerless to inspire more earnest endeavor than personal love for our work already dictates." And yet it is not easy to see how the perusal of New York and German journals can aid Mr. Nikisch in taking advantage of Boston critical opinion regarding his work. As for the "contradictory" aspect of "local criticism" we cannot recall when there has been a closer approach to unanimity in the criticisms on the Symphony concerts than there has been this season, and such unanimity is shewn in the censures cast on the performances thus far. Perhaps that accounts for it, and hinc illæ lachrymæ! Neighbor Verges was a good man, but he would be talking.

[illegible]

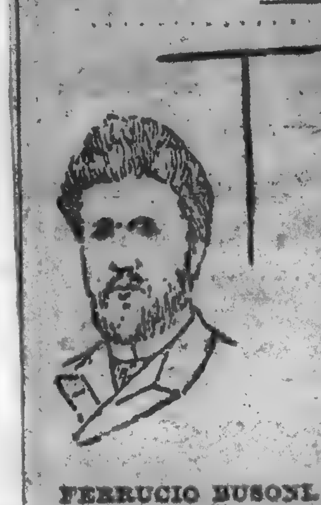
SUNDAY, NOV. 15, 1891.

WORLD OF MUSIC.

Echoes of Pleasing Symphony Offerings.

Famous Artists in Long Array—Recitals Past and Coming.

Popular Concerts Tonight—"War in Song"—Gossip and Announcements.



FERRUCIO BUSONI.

THE programme of the fifth symphony concert was not notable for variety, but the three offerings were evidently thoroughly enjoyed by the large audiences at both afternoon rehearsal and evening concert. Very cordial was the greeting given the conductor and his band on their return from a two weeks' absence, and there was more than the usual warmth in the applause accorded the performance of the programme.

Haydn's symphony No. 1, in E flat, Beethoven's concerto for pianoforte, No. 4, in G major, and Schumann's overture, scherzo and final, op. 50, were the selections.

The symphony was heard for the first time at these concerts, and Mr. Nikisch's reading was received with cordial favor. It is for the most part a sad, dreamy composition, but its sadness is lovely and its dreamy passages delightfully suggest the imaginative and artistic temperament of the master who gave it birth.

Haydn is noted for his fondness for the drum, and this much-abused instrument is given considerable prominence in his E-flat symphony, rather more, by the way, than Mr. Nikisch allowed to appear at yesterday's performance.

If the same restraining influence was often placed upon the brass instruments, symphony audiences would have much cause for expressing their gratitude.

There are four movements, adagio, andante, minuet and final. The opening melody is broad and solemn and suggests the character of the whole work. A sweetly mournful melody pervades the andante, brightened occasionally by quickening the rhythm. The minuet is richly harmonized, and the final is most impressive in its solemn grandeur. The latter movement was finely played, the shading of contrasted themes being particularly good.

A delicious passage for solo violin in the andante was charmingly played by Mr. Kneisel, and received merited recognition from the audience.

Schumann's overture, scherzo and final, which was played as the closing number of the concert, won many tokens of approval. Its cheerfulness was very welcome, and the spirited graceful interpretation given by the band was most commendable. The brilliant scherzo was admirably played, but the vigorous coda of the final might have been given with greater smoothness by the strings.

The Beethoven concerto served to introduce to symphony audiences a pianist of excellent talent who has recently come to Boston, and who is now a professor at the New England Conservatory of Music. He naturally received a very cordial greeting, for Conservatory pupils were numerous in the audience, but the hearty applause which rewarded his playing was by no means undeserved.

Mr. Ferruccio Busoni impresses one as a scholarly musician, thoughtful and conscientious to a degree. His playing is thoroughly enjoyable, and while he may not be entitled to take high rank among some of the pianists who have come here from abroad for concert tours, he is certainly among the best of resident players. There is refreshing wholesomeness in his uneffected manner, and refinement and artistic feeling is evident in his playing. He is also an exact player, something that cannot be truthfully said of many more famous pianists.

His execution is occasionally lacking in strength, but absence of sonorousness is largely compensated for by rare daintiness and sureness of touch, exquisite delicacy of shading and general smoothness of technique. The cadenzas of Mr. Busoni's own composition, which he introduced in the opening and final movements of the Beethoven concerto, gave pleasing evidence of his ability as a composer.

The programme for the next Symphony concert will be as follows: Lalo, overture, "Le Roi d'Ys," first time; C. M. Loeffler, "Les Veillees de l'Ukraine," suite in four movements for violin and orchestra, first time; songs with piano; Raff, symphony, "Lenore;" soloists, Miss Marguerite Hall and Mr. C. M. Loeffler.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1891.

First Kneisel Concert.

"CAN they keep this up?" was the pertinent question asked by a leading piano-dealer; for it was indeed a glowing concert.

First we had Mozart's String Quartet in C, the last of his six, full of dignified beauty.

Next came Schumann's only Piano Quartet, E-flat with Xaver Scharwenka doing admirably at the piano. In his notes, G. H. Wilson quotes what he calls a humorous English estimate of this quartet, an estimate so good as to need no apology for its repetition:

> The first part of the concert had produced no work for the violoncello, whose entry was now at once felt. The quartet opens with a slow procession of minims, with a halt and call of invitation, after which it dashes off into a free wild movement, with romantic leads for the several instruments. Again it quiets down, and finishes with a burst as of compressed fire fortissimo. The violoncello and pianoforte start the dancing Scherzo, in the course of which is introduced a chromatic meditation by the tenor, and a most difficult bit of trio, with discords and sparks of pizzicato notes. The slow movement which follows is thoroughly characteristic of Schumann, most beautiful and glowing, but full of syncopation and change of time—violin and tenor, at the close, ascending and descending together. The tenor, after leading to the great Finale, starts off with a spirited theme, in which the others join. This dies down, and again passes through movements, as of a troubled sea, from which it bursts forth with struggles and arpeggios, and ends in its complete triumphant reassertion.

Finally we had, for the first time in Boston, the new Quintet in G, only a year old, by Brahms, Op. III., Mr. O. Novacek playing the second viola, the regular members of the Quartet being Franz Kneisel, Otto Roth, Louis Svecenski, and Alwin Schroder, the latter the new cellist. The program quoted Edward Hanslick's analysis, and we cannot do better than quote it:

> The first movement, an Allegro con brio in G-major, 9-8 tempo, is thoroughly splendid. With what victorious joy the theme bursts forth in the violoncello amid the rustling tremolo of the violins; and hereupon the gentle melody of the counter subject, sung by the two violas; and the reply of the violins, in a charming yielding descent on the major seventh. How artistically, and yet without any torturing, are the principal and subordinate themes varied in the working out: almost always in surprising fashion, and yet again as though they could not come in any other way. The Adagio, a melancholy song in D-minor, with a somewhat Slavonic flavor, is a gentle and heartfelt complaint. It is followed by an exceedingly charming Allegretto in G-minor, with a lovely rocking Trio in G-major, after the fashion of most of Brahms' Scherzos, not strictly playful or joyous, but lounging in a comfortable fashion, as though singing on its way. The finale, which, from a slightly veiled key of B-minor, quickly finds its way to the tonic G-major, is a sharply rhythmical phrase in 2-4 time, of slightly Hungarian color. It makes its effect less by the importance of its themes than by its general character, which, with its cheerful and at last quite popular joyousness, carries everything away with it.

The audience was both large and distinguished, but the concert was marred by late arrivals and interruptive departures.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET, composed of Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; L. Svecenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder, violoncello, gave their opening concert of the season in New York, on Nov. 6, at Sherry's Concert Hall. They performed the following programme:

1. Quartet in C major............Mozart
2. Second movement from quartet in D major............Tschaikowski
3. Quintet in G major............Brahms

Second viola, by Mr. O. Novacek, first time.

The new Quintet is a charming composition, and was superbly played by the club, which is a distinct acquisition to our chamber music organizations.

Brooklyn Daily Eagle

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 7, 1891.

PHILHARMONIC.

Beginning of the Concert Season Under a New Regime.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Makes a Magnificent Artistic Success at the Academy of Music—Conductor Nikisch. Wonderful String Playing—The Programme—Lillian Nordica as Soloist.

Theodore Thomas, after serving the musical interests of Brooklyn for nearly twenty years, has gone to Chicago, which has seeming need of his missionary efforts, and his place is taken by Arthur Nikisch of Boston. Mr. Thomas is a great musician; he has done more than any one man in this country to advance the popular knowledge of, and taste for, good music; he has given a sound and high pleasure to more people than any other two conductors now in service, but we have his artistic equal in Mr. Nikisch, and, as now organized, the superior of his band in the one that Mr. Nikisch brings from Boston. This band, the famous Boston symphony orchestra, the rival of any force of the kind in the world, began its series of concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music yesterday, that are to be known as the Philharmonic concerts, albeit the Philharmonic society takes no active part in them, either in management or choice of programmes. Some of its members attend, and they lend their set of scenery for these entertainments. The audience yesterday was large, but less large than it should have been; for there has been no finer playing in this city than this audience heard. The orchestra is nicely balanced and ample in every division, but it is in the strings that its merits are most strikingly exhibited. This department, numbering fifty-six men, an orchestra in itself, is without equal, and it is in this department that merit is most quickly recognized and produces the most telling effects, for the strings are the main stay, the infantry of the band, the wood wind being comparable to the brilliant cavalry, and the brasses and percussing instruments to the loud sounding, but not always serviceable, artillery. It is, perhaps, to be regretted that the first programme does not contain a number for the special exploitation of the strings, like the Bach suite that was played in New York on Tuesday night, that their wonderful smoothness, voice quality, precision, expression and spirit could have been judged the better, but such opportunities will occur during the season. As it is, the violins and basses make new disclosures of the scope of strings. Their attack is so absolutely uniform, their volume so magnificent, their crescendos so inspiring and their full tone so rich and organ like that the hearer is thrilled and startled. These effects follow the readings of the conductor, who is, himself, as quietly notable as his musicians. A man of short stature, black mustached and bearded, with refined and clear cut face as fresh in its complexion as a child's, with hair and beard worn in artistic carelessness, quiet and almost bashful in manner, he advances to the leader's platform and mounts it when the house is stilled. Even the back rows of the orchestra are lifted but a few inches above the stage; so, in order to have all the players under his eye, his platform is slightly taller than usual. Once before his men he fills with the spirit of command. Without extravagance of gesture and sometimes with the slightest beat of the baton, he sways them to his will. There is an electrical communication of thought between him and his band; every motion is charged with nervous force; the constrained position of his left arm bent against his side with hand clenched shows to what tension he is wrought; he is like the hypnotist, centering his life force on his subject, and his magnetism is felt like an animating fire. He plays upon that orchestra as a master plays upon an organ; he hushes it to whispers; he rouses it to thunder gusts; it sings for him; it dances for him; it runs the gamut of passion and meaning, so far as thought has spread or bounded it; it tells more than speech and it tells it in the art that is highest and purest and most absolute in beauty. When this voice spoke in the surging rhythms of Beethoven, it had the authority of genius that is so like the authority of nature as we hear it spoken in the wind, the waves, the rocking pines and no less efficiently in those hinting spiritual tones that steal from mountain silences into the wanderer's ear. Beethoven was properly chosen to begin the concert and to inaugurate what should prove an enduring attachment between the music loving public of this city and this corps of artists. The selection was the third "Leonora" overture, a work of tried and accepted popularity and containing much that is moving and delightful, particularly the solemn and boding utterance of the horns near the beginning, and one or two things that are not agreeable. The scales played in unison just before the finale are so bare and hard and are so impertinent to the subject, that it is a wonder that some conductor has not found heart to cut them out, though their leanness and insignificance do lend contrast to the triumphant and gorgeous measures of conclusion. Mr. Nikisch adhered to custom in sending a trumpeter behind the scenes to sound the call, first far away, then nearer, that indicates the arrival of the governor, in the opera, but that stands for whatever you like it to, as you hear it in the pause of the orchestra. A writer quoted in the valuable analytical programme that is furnished at these concerts finds in it "the effect of a summons to a vanquished nation to lay down its arms; there is a forlorn, desolate, dead of night effect about it that is overpowering." The blowing of the trumpet from recesses of the stage has often been criticised as a trick, and at a concert, where the curtain is not about to rise on the work that it helps to usher in, it may seem a little forced, yet it gains in dramatic significance by remoteness and makes a stronger draft on the imagination. The new number in the programme was the Tschaikowsky suite, opus 55, a work symphonic in arrangement, but perhaps not strict enough in form for the conservatives to regard as a symphony, though why a symphony should not comprise any forms that its writer likes to put into it no formalist has explained. The day for mere forms has gone [illegible] music, three volume novels, eight headed sermons and cast iron melodramas are out of key with modernity, that wants the truest and quickest and most individual expression of a thought. The Tschaikowsky music is Russian, and under even its happiest moods can be heard the strain of lament that is in every phase of Russian art and writing, the pain and questioning of an oppressed people, longing for liberty, but blind to the ways that lead to it. The first number, an elegy, is beautiful in orchestration and the principal theme is charming. This melody, sounded by various instruments in the wood wind choir, successively, elicits a surprising wealth of solo talent in the orchestra. Such broad, sweet tone, such facile execution, are seldom heard on the concert stage as the flute, oboe, clarinet, English horn and even the bassoon players produced in the songs and phrases assigned to them. The "Melancholy Waltz" that forms the second number in the suite is sometimes oriental in manner, then it is a gambol of imps; anon it is the frenetic dance of a hungry, starving creature who must move to keep from freezing or from brooding on suicide; it is morbid and strange—the cry of a Chopin of the steppes. The scherzo offsets this by its frolic, gaiety and humor, as delicate as Mendelssohn's fairy music, as bizarre as Berlioz. The effects of the snare drum and cymbals toned down to their softest and chiming with the quick rush of the strings, and of the basses lumbering on as in a vain effort to overtake the violins are odd in the extreme and are full of originality. The last and longest section of the suite is a theme with twelve variations. The theme is a clear melody, like an old English air, and in the variants Tschaikowsky displays remarkable knowledge of the orchestra and practice in the use of its resources. The third variation, for wood wind, is quite suggestive of Berlioz; the announcement by the brasses in the fourth is strong and noble; the fifth is complex and the strings are kept in strict fugue routine; Luther might have written the seventh, so medieval is it in form; the ninth works up to a furious speed and is followed by a cadenza, played with excellent taste by Mr. Kneisel, that recurs in the next two sections and leads up to the twelfth variation, which has opulence and fantastic character enough to serve as an eastern processional. Toward the close occurs a protracted effect of crescendo that is merely a result of employing the dominant seventh for several bars before its resolution into the tonic. This resolution the ear becomes almost impatient for, but when made it is in a stately theme, with a fine outburst of tone and rich instrumental color. The prelude to "The Master Singers of Nuremberg" proved that Mr. Nikisch could play Wagner understandingly and with force and sweep, the admirable temper of the band serving to this end. The beautiful overture was beautifully played and brought the concert to an end. The soloist was Lillian Nordica, once Miss Norton of Maine, whose agreeable personality won her audience before she sang. The strain of operatic work has put a hint of acid quality into her upper and stronger notes, but it has also developed in her a large and commanding style and dramatic expression. Her notes are clean cut, true and produced with simplicity and directness, and the air from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and the apostrophe to the hall of song from "Tannhauser" were given with largeness of tone and fluency and force of execution. Unlike many solos they were happy additions to the concert. Mr. Nikisch is seemingly afraid of tiring his listeners, for he played but an hour and a half yesterday, but such fears are groundless. He has no long waits, however, and does not waste time; still, there is space on the programme for a Schumann overture or another Wagner excerpt. The success of the orchestra was decided and the audience was palpably delighted. To-night, at the concert, the programme will be repeated.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, NOV. 15.

The Symphony Concert.

The programme of last night's Symphony Concert was a well-balanced one, beginning with Haydn's Symphony No. 1 (B. & H.) in E-flat, which was, on the whole, sympathetically read and admirably played, barring a certain lack of essential delicacy now and then. It was followed by Beethoven's Concerto for piano, No. 4, in G, Mr. F. B. Busoni performing the solo part. This artist may be praised with the greatest heartiness and sincerity for his charming reading and beautiful performance of the work. He entered into its spirit with the finest sympathy, and the results were as delightful as they were refreshing. His technique is thorough, his touch true and musical, and his phrasing eminently artistic. Grace and elegance of style, musicianly intelligence and sincere devotion to his task characterized the effort throughout. He has not a large tone, but we have had over much of large tone of late, and the change was a relief. There were a Hummelesque repose, delicacy and fluency, and an absence of all attempt at display in the performance that made it full of pleasure in the hearing. The cadenzas were by Mr. Busoni, but these we did not fancy much, as they are too modern in quality to be in harmony with the work. For the rest, however, we have nothing but commendation. The artist was applauded with great enthusiasm, and received two tumultuous recalls. The work of the orchestra in the performance was lacking in precision and finish; in fact, was reprehensibly rough and ragged. The concert ended with Schumann's Overture, Scherzo, and Finale, op. 50, which was read and played in a manner that made it one of the most satisfying efforts that the orchestra has made this season. The programme of the next concert is: Overture, "Le Roi d'Ys." Lalo; Suite for violin and orchestra, C. M. Loeffler, the solo part in which will be played by the composer; and Raff's symphony, "Lenore." Miss Marguerite Hall will also appear as a soloist.

Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, if correctly reported, said in an interview published in the Globe, that she "confines my own newspaper reading, as does Mr. Nikisch, to New York and German journals, to avoid being disturbed by local criticism, which we think so contradictory as to be of no help, and in any case powerless to inspire more earnest endeavor than personal love for our work already dictates." And yet it is not easy to see how the perusal of New York and German journals can aid Mr. Nikisch in taking advantage of Boston critical opinion regarding his work. As for the "contradictory" aspect of "local criticism" we cannot recall when there has been a closer approach to unanimity in the criticisms on the Symphony concerts than there has been this season, and such unanimity is shown in the censures cast on the performances thus far. Perhaps that accounts for it, and hinc illæ lachrymæ! Neighbor Verges was a good man, but he would be talking.

Boston Sunday Globe.

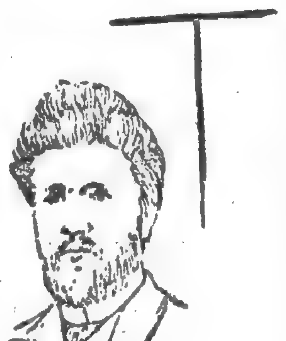
SUNDAY, NOV. 15, 1891.

WORLD OF MUSIC.

Echoes of Pleasing Symphony Offerings.

Famous Artists in Long Array—Recitals Past and Coming.

Popular Concerts Tonight—"War in Song"—Gossip and Announcements.



FERRUCIO BUSONI.

THE programme of the fifth symphony concert was not notable for variety, but the three offerings were evidently thoroughly enjoyed by the large audiences at both afternoon rehearsal and evening concert. Very cordial was the greeting given the conductor and his band on their return from a two weeks' absence, and there was more than the usual warmth in the applause accorded the performance of the programme.

Haydn's symphony No. 1, in E flat, Beethoven's concerto for pianoforte, No. 4, in G major, and Schumann's overture, scherzo and final, op. 50, were the selections.

The symphony was heard for the first time at these concerts, and Mr. Nikisch's reading was received with cordial favor. It is for the most part a sad, dreamy composition, but its sadness is lovely and its dreamy passages delightfully suggest the imaginative and artistic temperament of the master who gave it birth.

Haydn is noted for his fondness for the drum, and this much-abused instrument is given considerable prominence in his E-flat symphony, rather more, by the way, than Mr. Nikisch allowed to appear at yesterday's performance.

If the same restraining influence was often placed upon the brass instruments, symphony audiences would have much cause for expressing their gratitude.

There are four movements, adagio, andante, minuet and final. The opening melody is broad and solemn and suggests the character of the whole work. A sweetly mournful melody pervades the andante, brightened occasionally by quickening the rhythm. The minuet is richly harmonized, and the final is most impressive in its solemn grandeur. The latter movement was finely played, the shading of contrasted themes being particularly good.

A delicious passage for solo violin in the andante was charmingly played by Mr. Kneisel, and received merited recognition from the audience.

Schumann's overture, scherzo and final, which was played as the closing number of the concert, won many tokens of approval. Its cheerfulness was very welcome, and the spirited graceful interpretation given by the band was most commendable. The brilliant scherzo was admirably played, but the vigorous coda of the final might have been given with greater smoothness by the strings.

The Beethoven concerto served to introduce to symphony audiences a pianist of excellent talent who has recently come to Boston, and who is now a professor at the New England Conservatory of Music. He naturally received a very cordial greeting, for Conservatory pupils were numerous in the audience, but the hearty applause which rewarded his playing was by no means undeserved.

Mr. Ferruccio Busoni impresses one as a scholarly musician, thoughtful and conscientious to a degree. His playing is thoroughly enjoyable, and while he may not be entitled to take high rank among some of the pianists who have come here from abroad for concert tours, he is certainly among the best of resident players. There is refreshing wholesomeness in his uneffected manner, and refinement and artistic feeling is evident in his playing. He is also an exact player, something that cannot be truthfully said of many more famous pianists.

His execution is occasionally lacking in strength, but absence of sonorousness is largely compensated for by rare daintiness and sureness of touch, exquisite delicacy of shading and general smoothness of technique. The cadenzas of Mr. Busoni's own composition, which he introduced in the opening and final movements of the Beethoven concerto, gave pleasing evidence of his ability as a composer.

The programme for the next Symphony concert will be as follows: Lalo, overture, "Le Roi d'Ys," first time; C. M. Loeffler, "Les Veillees de l'Ukraine," suite in four movements for violin and orchestra, first time; songs with piano; Raff, symphony, "Lenore;" soloists, Miss Marguerite Hall and Mr. C. M. Loeffler.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1891.

First Kneisel Concert.

"CAN they keep this up?" was the pertinent question asked by a leading piano-dealer; for it was indeed a glowing concert.

First we had Mozart's String Quartet in C, the last of his six, full of dignified beauty.

Next came Schumann's only Piano Quartet, E-flat with Xaver Scharwenka doing admirably at the piano. In his notes, G. H. Wilson quotes what he calls a humorous English estimate of this quartet, an estimate so good as to need no apology for its repetition:

> The first part of the concert had produced no work for the violoncello, whose entry was now at once felt. The quartet opens with a slow procession of minims, with a halt and call of invitation, after which it dashes off into a free wild movement, with romantic leads for the several instruments. Again it quiets down, and finishes with a burst as of compressed fire fortissimo. The violoncello and pianoforte start the dancing Scherzo, in the course of which is introduced a chromatic meditation by the tenor, and a most difficult bit of trio, with discords and sparks of pizzicato notes. The slow movement which follows is thoroughly characteristic of Schumann, most beautiful and glowing, but full of syncopation and change of time—violin and tenor, at the close, ascending and descending together. The tenor, after leading to the great Finale, starts off with a spirited theme, in which the others join. This dies down, and again passes through movements, as of a troubled sea, from which it bursts forth with struggles and arpeggios, and ends in its complete triumphant reassertion.

Finally we had, for the first time in Boston, the new Quintet in G, only a year old, by Brahms, Op. III., Mr. O. Novacek playing the second viola, the regular members of the Quartet being Franz Kneisel, Otto Roth, Louis Svecenski, and Alwin Schroder, the latter the new cellist. The program quoted Edward Hanslick's analysis, and we cannot do better than quote it:

> The first movement, an Allegro con brio in G-major, 9-8 tempo, is thoroughly splendid. With what victorious joy the theme bursts forth in the violoncello amid the rustling tremolo of the violins; and hereupon the gentle melody of the counter subject, sung by the two violas; and the reply of the violins, in a charming yielding descent on the major seventh. How artistically, and yet without any torturing, are the principal and subordinate themes varied in the working out: almost always in surprising fashion, and yet again as though they could not come in any other way. The Adagio, a melancholy song in D-minor, with a somewhat Slavonic flavor, is a gentle and heartfelt complaint. It is followed by an exceedingly charming Allegretto in G-minor, with a lovely rocking Trio in G-major, after the fashion of most of Brahms' Scherzos, not strictly playful or joyous, but lounging in a comfortable fashion, as though singing on its way. The finale, which, from a slightly veiled key of B-minor, quickly finds its way to the tonic G-major, is a sharply rhythmical phrase in 2-4 time, of slightly Hungarian color. It makes its effect less by the importance of its themes than by its general character, which, with its cheerful and at last quite popular joyousness, carries everything away with it.

The audience was both large and distinguished, but the concert was marred by late arrivals and interruptive departures.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET, composed of Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; L. Svecenski, viola, and Alwin Schroeder, violoncello, gave their opening concert of the season in New York, on Nov. 6, at Sherry's Concert Hall. They performed the following programme:

1. Quartet in C major..............Mozart
2. Second movement from quartet in D major..............Tschaikowski
3. Quintet in G major..............Brahms

Second viola, by Mr. O. Novacek, first time.

The new Quintet is a charming composition, and was superbly played by the club, which is a distinct acquisition to our chamber music organizations.

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 16, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The programme of the fifth Symphony concert, given Saturday evening in Music Hall, was as follows:

Symphony No. 1 (B and H) in E flat	Haydn
Concerto for pianoforte No. 4	Beethoven
Overture, Scherzo and Finale op. 50	Schumann

It was a great pleasure to hear the Haydn symphony. Its melodies have not grown stale. The art displayed is still surprising. Its sorrows are not morbid. Its joys are wholesome. To be sure it is nothing but music, pure and simple. There is no attempt to portray the emotions of a "storm-tossed soul," or to make music do the task of a sister art. Tunes came into Haydn's head; the "Gradus" of Fux had taught him how best to treat them; and such was his genius that his skilful use of the instruments and his sense of contrasts brought out effects which many modern composers with their gigantic orchestras can not gain, even when they invoke the aid of the army of brass and the batteries of all manner of pulsatiles. It is also a pleasure to add that the symphony was discreetly read by the conductor and carefully played by the orchestra. The trio of the menuetto might have been given with more delicacy, and perhaps there was an occasional over accentuation in the andante, but the performance as a whole was satisfactory. Conductors are too apt to forget that the forte of Hayden, with his orchestra of a limited number of strings, becomes in our day a fortissimo, unless great care is exercised, and so too all nuances are often exaggerated without deliberate intent. The symphony was heartily relished by the large audience, and Mr. Kneisel was applauded for his tasteful delivery of the solo.

The pianist was Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni. When, at the age of 9, he appeared in 1876 in Vienna as a "wonder-child," the critics praised his playing on account of the evidences of his genuine musical feeling and uncommon memory. The prophecies then made concerning his future have been more than fulfilled, and his name as a composer and pianist is known throughout Europe. His appearance Saturday evening was naturally awaited with more than ordinary curiosity. Experience has shown that it is not fair to pronounce a definite judgement upon a pianist after hearing him in music hall and in a composition in which he is accompanied by an orchestra. The size of the hall forbids the intimate relationship that should exist between player and hearer, and the rivalry between the pianoforte and the orchestra often incites the pianist to force the tone and forget the limitations of his instrument. It is safer to record impressions. But it may be stated at once that Mr. Busoni gave a very thoughtful and a very sincere reading of the concerto. There was not the slighest trace of affectation. Indeed, the modesty of his bearing and the simplicity of his performance won immediately the respect of his hearers. He evidently thought of Beethoven's music when he played and not of the possible effect upon the audience. His phrasing was musician-like, his technique met the severe demands. He played with eminent clearness and precision; he never offended by extravagance in tone or reading; and there was a delightful sense of repose throughout his performance. At the same time his tone was small, and it seemed to lack warmth. He seemed to stand between the extremes of virility and effeminacy. Thus he avoided to be sure, the reproach of either, but his playing was also without marked individuality—unless the individuality of cold elegance be awarded him. He too seemed to shun the legato, as do many modern players: and his employment of the pedals in running passages was not always to be commended. Too often song passages were unsung. At times the keys beneath the striking fingers clicked metallically. And yet the performance as a whole seemed admirable—as an intellectual feat that commands respectful admiration but does not sway the heart.

Mr. Busoni played his own cadenzas, which were ingenious, but not in sympathy with the concerto itself. The orchestral accompaniment was badly played. It was wanting in precision and in the observance of the degrees of dynamic force; in a word, it was slovenly.

The closing number was played with fire and fury, and neither the performance nor the work itself calls for more extended notice.

The programme of the next concert is as follows: Overture, "Le Roi d' Ys," Lalo; suite for violin and orchestra by C. M. Loeffler, in which the solo part will be played by the composer, and Raff's "Leonore" symphony. Miss Marguerite Hall will sing.

PHILIP HALE.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, NOV. 17.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET.

An Enjoyable Musical Programme Given at Union Hall.

The second concert of the series by the Adamowski quartet was given at Union Hall last evening to an audience representative in musical as well as social circles.

The quartet had the assistance of Mrs. Julie M. Wyman and Mr. Clayton Johns, pianist.

The opening number of the concert was the quartet in A minor by Schubert, and each of the four numbers was given in a thoroughly satisfactory manner.

Probably the best work was in the andante movement, and for delicacy and finish could hardly be surpassed.

A romanza from the quartet in G minor was most heartily received by the audience, the gentlemen being recalled several times.

The closing number by the quartet, perhaps the most interesting, was a quartet for piano and strings in E flat, op. 38, by Rheinberger, and it held the close attention of the auditors throughout the four movements, and each one was accorded the recognition it deserved.

Mr. Johns is to be commended for his excellent work in this composition, though at times his enthusiasm would lead him into unnecessary force.

Mrs. Wyman contributed four songs, with [illegible] to the programme. One, "Purgatoire" by Paladilhe, was rendered in a [illegible] and forceful style that earned for [illegible] the heartiest applause.

The others were Berceuse from "Jocelyn" by Godard, and two of Mr. Johns' compositions, "The Rose and the Garden" and [illegible]

[illegible] particularly good. Mrs. [illegible]

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 16, 1891.

The Symphony Concert.

A new pianist was the chief feature of Saturday's concert. Most wonderful of all, this pianist neither pounds nor attempts to stun the auditor with his brilliancy, but seems to exert himself wholly to give the meaning of the work he is playing, and to sink his own personality into that of the composer. This is what Feruccio Busoni did at this concert, in the fourth Beethoven concerto, and his playing possessed a delicacy that has long been absent from our concert-rooms, and seemed to bring us back towards the times when legato work was held more musical than thundering fortissimi, when furious double octaves were not the entire end and aim of a pianist's existence. Yet brilliancy was not lacking here either, only it became a means, not an end, and the end of the first movement was as coruscating as the most exacting virtuoso could desire.

But the chief charm of it all lay in the fact that there was no exaggeration either to the loud or the soft side of dynamic effect, and there was sincerity as well as capability in every measure. The orchestral support was very rough, and at times hindered the pianist rather than supported him. There were mistakes in the woodwind and careless attacks in the strings, while the power was by no means graded to the soloist, who was often obliged to forego a delicate touch rather than run the risk of becoming inaudible. The two cadenzas were composed by the pianist, and showed a skilful working-up of the principal themes. They were full of technical difficulties, all of which were bravely overcome; but they were rather too modern to consort well with the classical playing of the rest of the work, and the last one rather slighted Beethoven's request—"La Cadenza sia Corta."

Mr. Nikisch deserved praise for the manner in which he repressed his fiery nature in the reading of the Haydn symphony, and he gave the tempi of this work with an appreciation of the fact that all the early symphonists used the expressions of speed in a more moderate sense than we do at present. Mr. Kneisel's violin obligato won a hearty round of applause, and the audience seemed to show by their general appreciation, that the name of Haydn is still one to conjure with.

The finest orchestral work of the concert, however, and, for the matter of that, of the entire season, was displayed in the "overture, scherzo and finale," that free symphony by Schumann. This was given in noble style and only proves again what has frequently been stated, that when our conductor is good he is "very, very good," and the resemblance to the little girl of the poem might be carried still further. Perhaps a Stuyvesant after a Wouter van Twiller might seem too fiery and restless, but it is never wrong to have a little of the suaviter in modo mingled with the enthusiasm (and sensation) of the modern vein.

The excellent reading and the steady performance of this Schumann work deserves chronicling, particularly as it stood in vivid contrast with the coarse performance of the Beethoven concerto in its orchestral portions. It might perhaps be well, and it is an idea sometimes carried out in Europe, to diminish the number of the performers in the passages where the piano is present, in a concerto using the full orchestra only in tutti passages. Too often, at present, the concertos become a struggle between piano and orchestra rather than a uniting of the two.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 17, 1891.

The Adamowski Quartette Concert.

The concert given at Union Hall, by the Adamowski String Quartette last night, was much better in execution, and more interesting in its matter, than the first of the series given a short time ago. It began with Schubert's quartette in minor, which seemed rather heavy at times, in spite of the fact, that Schubert wins his effects rather by contrasts of melody than by any complexities of treatment. There was just a little too much of the "heavenly length" about it which appears in much of the master's instrumental work, and which was not made for the patience of earthly reviewers. The intonation was generally secure this time, but the balance was not, and especially did the violoncello sin in the matter of irregular attack and explosive power. These explosions often came in the nature of surprises, for the performer would hold back a crescendo, and then suddenly deliver the end of the phrase with all the accrued interest.

Mrs. Wyman sang charmingly, giving a true declamatory style to the dramatic "Purgatoire" of Paladilhe, and singing Godard's "Cradle Song" with fine shading and excellent mezza-voce, although it must have been an infant well up in Richter's "Manual of Harmony" that would have been put to sleep by such an intricate slumber song. Mrs. Wyman also sang two songs by Mr. Clayton Johns, and the composer could not have had a more effective representative. The first of these, "The Rose and the Garden' seemed a little too restless, too constantly modulatory, to express a very definite meaning, but the second, an "Autumn Song," was direct and musicianly, and made no such straining after deceptive cadences.

The string quartette made an excellent impression in the "Romanza" from Grieg's quartette in G minor, in which the beautiful chief melody was given with much purity, but the episodes, which were in a more agitated vein, were scratchy.

Rheinberger's piano quartette, in E flat, brought the concert to a worthy close. Never has Mr. Adamowski played with greater breadth than in this work, and all the other players seemed to catch some of his fire and animation. The development was somewhat unclear, but the exposition of the themes and their recapitulation were inspiring. The work is interesting from beginning to end, and in the fioriture which the piano added to the violin theme of the minuet, Mr. Clayton Johns proved that he is advancing in chamber-music execution. In the first movement his tone was not well-blended with the strings, but this defect soon disappeared and his playing, as a whole, was more satisfactory than in his appearances of last season. One may hope good things for him with such improvement as he is displaying.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

THE CAMBRIDGE TRIBUNE

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1891.

Symphony Concert.

The second concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given in Sanders Theatre on Thursday evening, with the following programme:

Mendelssohn	Overture to the Hebrides.
Gounod	Aria, "La Reine de Saba."
Tschaikowsky	Suite, Op. 55 Elegie. Valse melancholique. Scherzo. Tema con Variazioni.
Schubert	Song with orchestra "The Erl King" (Orchestration by Liszt.)
Weber	Overture. Euryanthe.

In these modern days of stress and storm, we owe Mr. Nikisch a debt of gratitude for not allowing us to forget Mendelssohn's beautiful overtures, which are the embodiment of tunefulness and melody. The "Hebrides" was beautifully played and we liked the somewhat moderate tempo taken at the outset by Mr. Nikisch, as it assured an abundance of reserve power for the ever-increasing, onward rush of the winds and waves, which was brought to a truly superb climax. Perhaps it is not wise to cling too fondly to cherished traditions with regard to tempo, as men of diverse temperaments must have equally varying conceptions of the compositions which they interpret; and it must always be conceded that the poetic and imaginative side of the picture is uppermost in Mr. Nikisch's mind. He certainly has the root of the matter in him, by which we mean the feu sacré, and his dramatic intensity is always sure to hold an audience spell-bound.

Mme. Nordica made her first appearance in the Sanders theatre on this occasion and achieved an undoubted triumph. Her first selection was the Queen's Aria from Gounod's opera, "The Queen of Sheba," which was written some time before "Faust" had made the composer famous. Mme. Nordica was in fine voice, and her rendering of this most difficult aria was most impassioned and effective. The audience would not be satisfied with less than three recalls, which were acknowledged with much grace. It was in the famous "Erl King," however, that Mme. Nordica rose to her greatest height of dramatic power, and fairly thrilled her listeners by her superb delivery of Schubert's grandest of songs. Liszt's orchestral accompaniment was a delightful surprise, and we fancy that it was given here for the first time. Mme. Nordica's success was so great that five enthusiastic recalls were given her by the delighted audience at the conclusion of the "Erl King." It is sure to prove a most valuable addition to her repertoire. The most important work on the programme, in the way of novelty, was the Suite by Tschaikowsky, Op. 65, which was played for the first time in Boston by Mr. Nikisch at the Music Hall concert of October 17. It is a highly interesting work, combining many of the best characteristics of the German, French, Italian and Russian schools. The Élégie is full of sentiment and emotion, and develops all the resources of the modern orchestra. The valse melancholique is a trifle monotonous, but the Scherzo is bewitching, with very decided suggestions of "Queen Mab" in Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet. It was played with much delicacy and clearness, the triangle and tambourine producing a very piquant effect. The fourth movement, Tema con variazioni is the most elaborate and interesting, The theme is given out by the first violins, afterwards worked up and developed into a series of twelve variations, in which the theme is divided among the different instruments, the intricate accompaniment always showing the ingenuity of the Russian composer and his immense mastery of the orchestra. The perpetual motion of the violins in the second variation is captivating, also in the ninth, in which Mr. Kneisel has a brilliant cadenza which he executes faultlessly, leading to the recurrence of the theme in the tenth variation, likewise exquisitely played by Mr. Kneisel.

The whole work was magnificently given, and the programme ended with an ideal performance of Weber's lovely Euryanthe Overture, which is exactly suited to Mr. Nikisch's romantic school.

Altogether, the entire concert was a red letter night in the Sanders theatre, and we feel that the most delightful anticipations for the future will surely be realized. The next concert in the series will be given on Thursday evening, December 3.

C. R.

Providence Journal 11/15

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, Conductor, will give the second concert of its series in Infantry Hall next Wednesday evening. No more satisfactory entertainments are offered the musical public than the concerts by this fine organization, and it is gratifying to know that they appeal each year to an ever widening circle of patrons. The orchestra will have the assistance on this occasion of Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, soprano, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra, who will be heard in solo numbers. The programme includes the Rhenish Symphony by Schumann, a selection from Mascagni's famous opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana," and the overture, "Euryanthe," Weber. Mrs. Nikisch will sing with orchestra Liszt's "Mignon," and a group of songs with piano, and Mr. Schroeder will play solos for 'cello by Bach, Sitt and Popper. The sale of seats opens to-morrow morning, at 93 Westminster street.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1891.

Music Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The programme of the fifth symphony concert was as follows:

Haydn: Symphony in E-flat (B. & H. No. 1).
Beethoven: Pianoforte Concerto No. 4, in G major, op. 58.
Schumann: Overture, Scherzo and Finale, op. 50.

Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni was the pianist.

One of the most delightful concerts the Symphony Orchestra has yet given! How long is it since Haydn's E-flat symphony has been heard here? It seems an age. It used to be one of the regular standbys in the old Harvard Musical days, as it is one of the finest of the composer's works in this form. It is full of originality, of things that were very new in its time. Take the effect with which the introductory Adagio sets out, those unisons (not octaves) of the bassoons, 'celli and double-basses: it sounds wonderfully modern. Then that piling up of glory upon glory in parts of the Finale; that is a foretaste of Beethoven in one of his finest and most characteristic moods. One finds throughout the work, besides and added to the true Haydn geniality and sense for beauty, a strength, a largeness of forms such as the master did not always see fit to employ. The performance was admirable, in fine sympathy with the spirit of the work; Mr. Kneisel's playing of the little solo variation in the Andante was especially exquisite.

In Schumann's Overture, Scherzo and Finale, Mr. Nikisch and the orchestra fairly outdid themselves. For one, technical, point, such exact playing of dotted triplets as was to be heard in the Scherzo is very rare. There is a goodish story about this point in orchestral performance. One day when a noted musician—we think it was Liszt, but of this we are not sure—made the trip from Cologne to Leipzig, he was met at the Leipzig station by Julius Rietz, then conductor at the Gewandhaus. After the first greetings, Liszt said to Rietz: "You look all worn out! What is the matter? Are you ill?" "No," answered Rietz, "I am well enough, thank God, only I am very tired; I have been rehearsing at the Gewandhaus all the afternoon, trying to make the orchestra play an Iothd triplet, and I can't get them to do it!" "Curious!" rejoined Liszt, "the last thing Ferdinand Hiller said to me this morning in Cologne, as he was seeing me off at the station, was that he had just been having the very same trouble with his orchestra and with the same result!" But the good dotted triplet was only one point in last Saturday's performance of Schumann's work; all these movements were played with a fire, a precision and a well-timed variety of light and shade that left nothing to be desired. It was admirable from beginning to end.

Mr. Busoni's playing of the immortal G major concerto amply fulfilled the expectations aroused by his playing of the opus 111 sonata in Sleeper Hall some weeks ago. A more self-concentrated player, one more devoted to his task, and to nothing else, were hard to imagine. The beauty of his conception of the noble music, the excellent clearness and coherence with which he realized it, his sterling purity and simplicity of style, free as it was of all tricks and affectations, his genuine depth of emotion, and unfailing sense for musical beauty made his performance of the work one of the most enjoyable we have ever heard. Still, with all its excellences and beauties, one could not but feel that a certain something was lacking. There was no academic dryness in Mr. Busoni's playing; it was warm and emotional to a high degree; but it was not highly magnetic. He failed to reveal the full magic of some of Beethoven's wonderful passages, there was not quite the lion's paw there. One admired and enjoyed, but one was not elated and irresistibly carried away. The work done by the orchestra in the accompaniment was not of the best, and some places Mr. Nikisch seemed to refuse to adapt himself to the pianist's tempo. Mr. Busoni's cadenzas, albeit not quite in character with the work, are brilliant and interesting; they aim at something more than mere display.

The next programme is: Solo, overture to "Le Roi d'Ys"; Aria: C. M. Loeffler, suite for violin and orchestra, "Les veillis de l'Ukraine"; songs with pianoforte; Raff, symphony No. 5, in E major ("Lenore") op. 177. Miss Marguerite Hall will be the singer and Mr. C. M. Loeffler the violinist.

Boston Journal.

TEN PAGES.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1891.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTETTE.

The second subscription concert in the Adamowski course occurred at Union Hall last evening before a fair-sized audience.

Mrs. Julie M. Wyman's splendid voice rang out clear and full in her well chosen selections, "Purgatoire," by Paladilhe, and "The Berceuse," from "Jocelyn," by Goddard, forming the first cluster of songs; "The Rose and the Garden and Autumn," by the composer, as well as the second special soloist of the evening, Mr. Clayton Johns.

Mrs. Wyman has a fine voice of a superior dramatic quality, and she uses it with excellent skill and good taste. Her style is broad, and her method of tone production especially pleasing and effective. The quartette for piano and strings, by Rheinberger, with Mr. Clayton Jones as pianist, was a most enjoyable feature, and reflected much credit upon the talented composer and performer.

The quartette in A minor, by Schubert, and "The Romanza," from quartette in G major, by Grieg, were admirably played by the able artists that compose this successful corps of musicians.

The third and last of these concerts occurs on December 21.

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 16, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The programme of the fifth Symphony concert, given Saturday evening in Music Hall, was as follows:

Symphony No. 1 (B and H) in E flat..........Haydn
Concerto for pianoforte No. 4..............Beethoven
Overture. Scherzo and Finale op. 50.......Schumann

It was a great pleasure to hear the Haydn symphony. Its melodies have not grown stale. The art displayed is still surprising. Its sorrows are not morbid. Its joys are wholesome. To be sure it is nothing but music, pure and simple. There is no attempt to portray the emotions of a "storm-tossed soul," or to make music do the task of a sister art. Tunes came into Haydn's head; the "Gradus" of Fux had taught him how best to treat them; and such was his genius that his skilful use of the instruments and his sense of contrasts brought out effects which many modern composers with their gigantic orchestras can not gain, even when they invoke the aid of the army of brass and the batteries of all manner of pulsatiles. It is also a pleasure to add that the symphony was discreetly read by the conductor and carefully played by the orchestra. The trio of the menuetto might have been given with more delicacy, and perhaps there was an occasional over accentuation in the andante, but the performance as a whole was satisfactory. Conductors are too apt to forget that the forte of Hayden, with his orchestra of a limited number of strings, becomes in our day a fortissimo, unless great care is exercised. and so too all nuances are often exaggerated without deliberate intent. The symphony was heartily relished by the large audience, and Mr. Kneisel was applauded for his tasteful delivery of the solo.

The pianist was Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni. When, at the age of 9, he appeared in 1876 in Vienna as a "wonder-child," the critics praised his playing on account of the evidences of his genuine musical feeling and uncommon memory. The prophecies then made concerning his future have been more than fulfilled, and his name as a composer and pianist is known throughout Europe. His appearance Saturday evening was naturally awaited with more than ordinary curiosity. Experience has shown that it is not fair to pronounce a definite judgement upon a pianist after hearing him in music hall and in a composition in which he is accompanied by an orchestra. The size of the hall forbids the intimate relationship that should exist between player and hearer, and the rivalry between the pianoforte and the orchestra often incites the pianist to force the tone and forget the limitations of his instrument. It is safer to record impressions. But it may be stated at once that Mr. Busoni gave a very thoughtful and a very sincere reading of the concerto, There was not the slighest trace of affectation. Indeed, the modesty of his bearing and the simplicity of his performance won immediately the respect of his hearers. He evidently thought of Beethoven's music when he played and not of the possible effect upon the audience. His phrasing was musician-like, his technique met the severe demands. He played with eminent clearness and precision; he never offended by extravagance in tone or reading; and there was a delightful sense of repose throughout his performance. At the same time his tone was small, and it seemed to lack warmth. He seemed to stand between the extremes of virility and effeminacy. Thus he avoided to be sure, the reproach of either, but his playing was also without marked individuality—unless the individuality of cold elegance be awarded him. He too seemed to shun the legato, as do many modern players; and his employment of the pedals in running passages was not always to be commended. Too often song passages were unsung. At times the keys beneath the striking fingers clicked metallically. And yet the performance as a whole seemed admirable—as an intellectual feat that commands respectful admiration but does not sway the heart.

Mr. Busoni played his own cadenzas, which were ingenious, but not in sympathy with the concerto itself. The orchestral accompaniment was badly played. It was wanting in precision and in the observance of the degrees of dynamic force; in a word, it was slovenly.

The closing number was played with fire and fury, and neither the performance nor the work itself calls for more extended notice.

The programme of the next concert is as follows: Overture, "Le Roi d' Ys," Lalo; Suite for violin and orchestra by C. M. Loeffler, in which the solo part will be played by the composer, and Raff's "Leonore" symphony. Miss Marguerite Hall will sing.

PHILIP HALE.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, NOV. 17.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET.

An Enjoyable Musical Programme Given at Union Hall.

The second concert of the series by the Adamowski quartet was given at Union Hall last evening to an audience representative in musical as well as social circles.

The quartet had the assistance of Mrs. Julie M. Wyman and Mr. Clayton Johns, pianist.

The opening number of the concert was the quartet in A minor by Schubert, and each of the four numbers was given in a thoroughly satisfactory manner.

Probably the best work was in the andante movement, and for delicacy and finish could hardly be surpassed.

A romanza from the quartet in G minor was most heartily received by the audience, the gentlemen being recalled several times.

The closing number by the quartet, perhaps the most interesting, was a quartet for piano and strings in E flat, op. 38, by Rheinberger, and it held the close attention of the auditors throughout the four movements, and each one was accorded the recognition it deserved.

Mr. Johns is to be commended for his excellent work in this composition, though at times his enthusiasm would lead him into unnecessary force.

Mrs. Wyman contributed four songs, with piano, to the programme. One, "Purgatoire," by Paladilhe, was rendered in a dramatic and forceful style that earned for the singer the heartiest applause.

The others were Berceuse from "Jocelyn" by Godard, and two of Mr. Johns' compositions, "The Rose and the Garden" and "Autumn Song."

The latter was particularly good, Mrs. Wyman being twice recalled.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 16, 1891.

The Symphony Concert.

A new pianist was the chief feature of Saturday's concert. Most wonderful of all, this pianist neither pounds nor attempts to stun the auditor with his brilliancy, but seems to exert himself wholly to give the meaning of the work he is playing, and to sink his own personality into that of the composer. This is what Feruccio Busoni did at this concert, in the fourth Beethoven concerto, and his playing possessed a delicacy that has long been absent from our concert-rooms, and seemed to bring us back towards the times when legato work was held more musical than thundering fortissimi, when furious double octaves were not the entire end and aim of a pianist's existence. Yet brilliancy was not lacking here either, only it became a means, not an end, and the end of the first movement was as coruscating as the most exacting virtuoso could desire.

But the chief charm of it all lay in the fact that there was no exaggeration either to the loud or the soft side of dynamic effect, and there was sincerity as well as capability in every measure. The orchestral support was very rough, and at times hindered the pianist rather than supported him. There were mistakes in the woodwind and careless attacks in the strings, while the power was by no means graded to the soloist, who was often obliged to forego a delicate touch rather than run the risk of becoming inaudible. The two cadenzas were composed by the pianist, and showed a skilful working-up of the principal themes. They were full of technical difficulties, all of which were bravely overcome; but they were rather too modern to consort well with the classical playing of the rest of the work, and the last one rather slighted Beethoven's request—"La Cadenza sia Corta."

Mr. Nikisch deserved praise for the manner in which he repressed his fiery nature in the reading of the Haydn symphony, and he gave the tempi of this work with an appreciation of the fact that all the early symphonists used the expressions of speed in a more moderate sense than we do at present. Mr. Kneisel's violin obligato won a hearty round of applause, and the audience seemed to show by their general appreciation, that the name of Haydn is still one to conjure with.

The finest orchestral work of the concert, however, and, for the matter of that, of the entire season, was displayed in the "overture, scherzo and finale," that free symphony by Schumann. This was given in noble style and only proves again what has frequently been stated, that when our conductor is good he is "very, very good," and the resemblance to the little girl of the poem might be carried still further. Perhaps a Stuyvesant after a Wouter van Twiller might seem too fiery and restless, but it is never wrong to have a little of the suaviter in modo mingled with the enthusiasm (and sensation) of the modern vein.

The excellent reading and the steady performance of this Schumann work deserves chronicling, particularly as it stood in vivid contrast with the coarse performance of the Beethoven concerto in its orchestral portions. It might perhaps be well, and it is an idea sometimes carried out in Europe, to diminish the number of the performers in the passages where the piano is present, in a concerto using the full orchestra only in tutti passages. Too often, at present, the concertos become a struggle between piano and orchestra rather than a uniting of the two.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 17, 1891.

The Adamowski Quartette Concert.

The concert given at Union Hall, by the Adamowski String Quartette last night, was much better in execution, and more interesting in its matter, than the first of the series given a short time ago. It began with Schubert's quartette in minor, which seemed rather heavy at times, in spite of the fact, that Schubert wins his effects rather by contrasts of melody than by any complexities of treatment. There was just a little too much of the "heavenly length" about it which appears in much of the master's instrumental work, and which was not made for the patience of earthly reviewers. The intonation was generally secure this time, but the balance was not, and especially did the violoncello sin in the matter of irregular attack and explosive power. These explosions often came in the nature of surprises, for the performer would hold back a crescendo, and then suddenly deliver the end of the phrase with all the accrued interest.

Mrs. Wyman sang charmingly, giving a true declamatory style to the dramatic "Purgatoire" of Paladilhe, and singing Godard's "Cradle Song" with fine shading and excellent mezza-voce, although it must have been an infant well up in Richter's "Manual of Harmony" that would have been put to sleep by such an intricate slumber song. Mrs. Wyman also sang two songs by Mr. Clayton Johns, and the composer could not have had a more effective representative. The first of these, "The Rose and the Garden' seemed a little too restless, too constantly modulatory, to express a very definite meaning, but the second, an "Autumn Song," was direct and musicianly, and made no such straining after deceptive cadences.

The string quartette made an excellent impression in the "Romanza" from Grieg's quartette in G minor, in which the beautiful chief melody was given with much purity, but the episodes, which were in a more agitated vein, were scratchy.

Rheinberger's piano quartette, in E flat, brought the concert to a worthy close. Never has Mr. Adamowski played with greater breadth than in this work, and all the other players seemed to catch some of his fire and animation. The development was somewhat unclear, but the exposition of the themes and their recapitulation were inspiring. The work is interesting from beginning to end, and in the fioriture which the piano added to the violin theme of the minuet, Mr. Clayton Johns proved that he is advancing in chamber-music execution. In the first movement his tone was not well-blended with the strings, but this defect soon disappeared and his playing, as a whole, was more satisfactory than in his appearances of last season. One may hope good things for him with such improvement as he is displaying.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

THE CAMBRIDGE TRIBUNE

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1891.

Symphony Concert.

The second concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given in Sanders Theatre on Thursday evening, with the following programme:

Mendelssohn — Overture to the Hebrides.
Gounod — Aria, "La Reine de Saba."
Tschaikowsky — Suite, Op. 55
Elegie. Valse melancholique.
Scherzo. Tema con Variazioni.
Schubert — Song with orchestra "The Erl King"
(Orchestration by Liszt.)
Weber — Overture. Euryanthe.

In these modern days of stress and storm, we owe Mr. Nikisch a debt of gratitude for not allowing us to forget Mendelssohn's beautiful overtures, which are the embodiment of tunefulness and melody. The "Hebrides" was beautifully played and we liked the somewhat moderate tempo taken at the outset by Mr. Nikisch, as it assured an abundance of reserve power for the ever-increasing, onward rush of the winds and waves, which was brought to a truly superb climax. Perhaps it is not wise to cling too fondly to cherished traditions with regard to tempo, as men of diverse temperaments must have equally varying conceptions of the compositions which they interpret; and it must always be conceded that the poetic and imaginative side of the picture is uppermost in Mr. Nikisch's mind. He certainly has the root of the matter in him, by which we mean the feu sacré, and his dramatic intensity is always sure to hold an audience spell-bound.

Mme. Nordica made her first appearance in the Sanders theatre on this occasion and achieved an undoubted triumph. Her first selection was the Queen's Aria from Gounod's opera, "The Queen of Sheba," which was written some time before "Faust" had made the composer famous. Mme. Nordica was in fine voice, and her rendering of this most difficult aria was most impassioned and effective. The audience would not be satisfied with less than three recalls, which were acknowledged with much grace. It was in the famous "Erl King," however, that Mme. Nordica rose to her greatest height of dramatic power, and fairly thrilled her listeners by her superb delivery of Schubert's grandest of songs. Liszt's orchestral accompaniment was a delightful surprise, and we fancy that it was given here for the first time. Mme. Nordica's success was so great that five enthusiastic recalls were given her by the delighted audience at the conclusion of the "Erl King." It is sure to prove a most valuable addition to her repertoire. The most important work on the programme, in the way of novelty, was the Suite by Tschaikowsky, Op. 65, which was played for the first time in Boston by Mr. Nikisch at the Music Hall concert of October 17. It is a highly interesting work, combining many of the best characteristics of the German, French, Italian and Russian schools. The élégie is full of sentiment and emotion, and develops all the resources of the modern orchestra. The valse melancholique is a trifle monotonous, but the Scherzo is bewitching, with very decided suggestions of "Queen Mab" in Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet. It was played with much delicacy and clearness, the triangle and tambourine producing a very piquant effect. The fourth movement, Tema con variazioni is the most elaborate and interesting, The theme is given out by the first violins, afterwards worked up and developed into a series of twelve variations, in which the theme is divided among the different instruments, the intricate accompaniment always showing the ingenuity of the Russian composer and his immense mastery of the orchestra. The perpetual motion of the violins in the second variation is captivating, also in the ninth, in which Mr. Kneisel has a brilliant cadenza which he executes faultlessly, leading to the recurrence of the theme in the tenth variation, likewise exquisitely played by Mr. Kneisel.

The whole work was magnificently given, and the programme ended with an ideal performance of Weber's lovely Euryanthe Overture, which is exactly suited to Mr. Nikisch's romantic school.

Altogether, the entire concert was a red letter night in the Sanders theatre, and we feel that the most delightful anticipations for the future will surely be realized. The next concert in the series will be given on Thursday evening, December 3.

C. R.

Providence Journal 11/15

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, Conductor, will give the second concert of its series in Infantry Hall next Wednesday evening. No more satisfactory entertainments are offered the musical public than the concerts by this fine organization, and it is gratifying to know that they appeal each year to an ever widening circle of patrons. The orchestra will have the assistance on this occasion of Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, soprano, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra, who will be heard in solo numbers. The programme includes the Rhenish Symphony by Schumann, a selection from Mascagni's famous opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana," and the overture, "Euryanthe," Weber. Mrs. Nikisch will sing with orchestra Liszt's "Mignon," and a group of songs with piano, and Mr. Schroeder will play solos for 'cello by Bach, Sitt and Popper. The sale of seats opens to-morrow morning, at 93 Westminster street.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1891.

Music Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The programme of the fifth symphony concert was as follows:

Haydn: Symphony in E-flat (B. & H. No. 1).
Beethoven: Pianoforte Concerto No. 4, in G major, op. 58.
Schumann: Overture, Scherzo and Finale, op. 50.

Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni was the pianist.

One of the most delightful concerts the Symphony Orchestra has yet given! How long is it since Haydn's E-flat symphony has been heard here? It seems an age. It used to be one of the regular standbys in the old Harvard Musical days, as it is one of the finest of the composer's works in this form. It is full of originality, of things that were very new in its time. Take the effect with which the introductory Adagio sets out, those unisons (not octaves) of the bassoons,'celli and double-basses: it sounds wonderfully modern. Then that piling up of glory upon glory in parts of the Finale; that is a foretaste of Beethoven in one of his finest and most characteristic moods. One finds throughout the work, besides and added to the true Haydn geniality and sense for beauty, a strength, a largeness of forms such as the master did not always see fit to employ. The performance was admirable, in fine sympathy with the spirit of the work; Mr. Kneisel's playing of the little solo variation in the Andante was especially exquisite.

In Schumann's Overture, Scherzo and Finale, Mr. Nikisch and the orchestra fairly outdid themselves. For one, technical, point, such exact playing of dotted triplets as was to be heard in the Scherzo is very rare. There is a goodish story about this point in orchestral performance. One day when a noted musician—we think it was Liszt, but of this we are not sure—made the trip from Cologne to Leipzig, he was met at the Leipzig station by Julius Rietz, then conductor at the Gewandhaus. After the first greetings, Liszt said to Rietz: "You look all worn out! What is the matter? Are you ill?" "No," answered Rietz, "I am well enough, thank God, only I am very tired; I have been rehearsing at the Gewandhaus all the afternoon, trying to make the orchestra play an Iothd triplet, and I can't get them to do it!" "Curious!" rejoined Liszt, "the last thing Ferdinand Hiller said to me this morning in Cologne, as he was seeing me off at the station, was that he had just been having the very same trouble with his orchestra and with the same result!" But the good dotted triplet was only one point in last Saturday's performance of Schumann's work; all these movements were played with a fire, a precision and a well-timed variety of light and shade that left nothing to be desired. It was admirable from beginning to end.

Mr. Busoni's playing of the immortal G major concerto amply fulfilled the expectations aroused by his playing of the opus 111 sonata in Sleeper Hall some weeks ago. A more self-concentrated player, one more devoted to his task, and to nothing else, were hard to imagine. The beauty of his conception of the noble music, the excellent clearness and coherence with which he realized it, his sterling purity and simplicity of style, free as it was of all tricks and affectations, his genuine depth of emotion, and unfailing sense for musical beauty made his performance of the work one of the most enjoyable we have ever heard. Still, with all its excellences and beauties, one could not but feel that a certain something was lacking. There was no academic dryness in Mr. Busoni's playing; it was warm and emotional to a high degree; but it was not highly magnetic. He failed to reveal the full magic of some of Beethoven's wonderful passages, there was not quite the lion's paw there. One admired and enjoyed, but one was not elated and irresistibly carried away. The work done by the orchestra in the accompaniment was not of the best, and some places Mr. Nikisch seemed to refuse to adapt himself to the pianist's tempo. Mr. Busoni's cadenzas, albeit not quite in character with the work, are brilliant and interesting; they aim at something more than mere display.

The next programme is: Solo, overture to "Le Roi d'Ys"; Aria: C. M. Loeffler, suite for violin and orchestra, "Les veillis de l'Ukraine"; songs with pianoforte; Raff, symphony No. 5, in E major ("Lenore") op. 177. Miss Marguerite Hall will be the singer and Mr. C. M. Loeffler the violinist.

Boston Journal.

TEN PAGES.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1891.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTETTE.

The second subscription concert in the Adamowski course occurred at Union Hall last evening before a fair-sized audience.

Mrs. Julie M. Wyman's splendid voice rang out clear and full in her well chosen selections, "Purgatoire," by Paladilhe, and "The Berceuse," from "Jocelyn," by Goddard, forming the first cluster of songs; "The Rose and the Garden and Autumn," by the composer, as well as the second special soloist of the evening, Mr. Clayton Johns.

Mrs. Wyman has a fine voice of a superior dramatic quality, and she uses it with excellent skill and good taste. Her style is broad, and her method of tone production especially pleasing and effective. The quartette for piano and strings, by Rheinberger, with Mr. Clayton Jones as pianist, was a most enjoyable feature, and reflected much credit upon the talented composer and performer.

The quartette in A minor, by Schubert, and "The Romanza," from quartette in G major, by Grieg, were admirably played by the able artists that compose this successful corps of musicians.

The third and last of these concerts occurs on December 21.

Clipping from
~~BULLETIN~~, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/14

—Mr. Arthur Nikisch proposes to give a performance of Beethoven's masterwork, the Ninth or 'Choral' Symphony, towards the end of the present season in Boston. The work will be heard then for the first time under Mr. Nikisch's direction and for the first time in this country for several years. The chorus, which always has proved the most serious difficulty to a successful performance of this colossal work, will be picked from among the very best singers of the leading choral societies of Boston. The names of [illegible] soloists have not yet been announced.

Clipping from Tribune
Cambridge Mass

Date 11/14

Symphony Concert.

The second concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given in Sanders Theatre on Thursday evening, with the following programme:

Mendelssohn	Overture to the Hebrides.
Gounod	Aria, "La Reine de Saba."
Tschaikowsky	Suite, Op. 55 Elegie. Valse melancholique. Scherzo. Tema con Variazioni.
Schubert	Song with orchestra "The Erl King" (Orchestration by Liszt.)
Weber	Overture. Euryanthe.

In these modern days of stress and storm, we owe Mr. Nikisch a debt of gratitude for not allowing us to forget Mendelssohn's beautiful overtures, which are the embodiment of tunefulness and melody. The "Hebrides" was beautifully played and we liked the somewhat moderate tempo taken at the outset by Mr. Nikisch, as it assured an abundance of reserve power for the ever-increasing, onward rush of the winds and waves, which was brought to a truly superb climax. Perhaps it is not wise to cling too fondly to cherished traditions with regard to tempo, as men of diverse temperaments must have equally varying conceptions of the compositions which they interpret; and it must always be conceded that the poetic and imaginative side of the picture is uppermost in Mr. Nikisch's mind. He certainly has the root of the matter in him, by which we mean the feu sacré, and his dramatic intensity is always sure to hold an audience spell-bound.

Mme. Nordica made her first appearance in the Sanders theatre on this occasion and achieved an undoubted triumph. Her first selection was the Queen's Aria from Gounod's opera, "The Queen of Sheba," which was written some time before "Faust" had made the composer famous. Mme. Nordica was in fine voice, and her rendering of this most difficult aria was most impassioned and effective. The audience would not be satisfied with less than three recalls, which were acknowledged with much grace. It was in the famous "Erl King," however, that Mme. Nordica rose to her greatest height of dramatic power, and fairly thrilled her listeners by her superb delivery of Schubert's grandest of songs. Liszt's orchestral accompaniment was a delightful surprise, and we fancy that it was given here for the first time. Mme. Nordica's success was so great that five enthusiastic recalls were given her by the delighted audience at the conclusion of the "Erl King." It is sure to prove a most valuable addition to her repertoire. The most important work on the programme, in the way of novelty, was the Suite by Tschaikowsky, Op. 65, which was played for the first time in Boston by Mr. Nikisch at the Music Hall concert of October 17. It is a highly interesting work, combining many of the best characteristics of the German, French, Italian and Russian schools. The élégie is full of sentiment and emotion, and develops all the resources of the modern orchestra. The valse melancholique is a trifle monotonous, but the Scherzo is bewitching, with very decided suggestions of "Queen Mab" in Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet. It was played with much delicacy and clearness, the triangle and tambourine producing a very piquant effect. The fourth movement, Tema con variazioni is the most elaborate and interesting. The theme is given out by the first violins, afterwards worked up and developed into a series of twelve variations, in which the theme is divided among the different instruments, the intricate accompaniment always showing the ingenuity of the Russian composer and his immense mastery of the orchestra. The perpetual motion of the violins in the second variation is captivating, also in the ninth, in which Mr. Kneisel has a brilliant cadenza which he executes faultlessly, leading to the recurrence of the theme in the tenth variation likewise exquisitely played by Mr. Kneisel.

The whole work was magnificently given, and the programme ended with an ideal performance of Weber's lovely Euryanthe Overture, which is exactly suited to Mr. Nikisch's romantic school.

Altogether, the entire concert was a red letter night in the Sanders theatre, and we feel that the most delightful anticipations for the future will surely be realized. The next concert in the series will be given on Thursday evening, December 3.

C. R.

[56]

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTET,

T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
A. MOLDAUER, 2d Violin.
MAX ZACH, Viola.
J. ADAMOWSKI, Violoncello.

FOURTH SEASON--1891-92.

SECOND SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT

IN

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET,

THIRD CONCERT, DECEMBER 21st.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Clipping from Tribune
Cambridge Mass

Date 11/14

The second Cambridge concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra was given Thursday evening before a delighted audience. Madame Lillian Nordica seemed to charm her hearers by her singing.

Telegram [illegible]

Date 11/16

Concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra and Au[redacted]

The second concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra occurs Wednesday at Infantry hall. Tickets were placed on sale today at No. 13 Westminster street. The orchestra opened a course in New York the other evening, and from the papers of that city its performance received cordial approbation, nearly all the critics uniting in describing it as one of the most thorough treats of an instrumental character of the period. The program for Wednesday night will be as follows:

Symphony in E flat (Rhenish), with orchestra; "Mignon," Liszt, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch; intermezzo, from "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; solo for violincello, (a) "Sarabande," Bach; (b) "Serenate," Hans Sitt; (c) "Spinnlied," Popper, Mr. Alvin Schroeder; songs with piano, Mrs. Nikisch; overture, "Euryanthe," Weber.

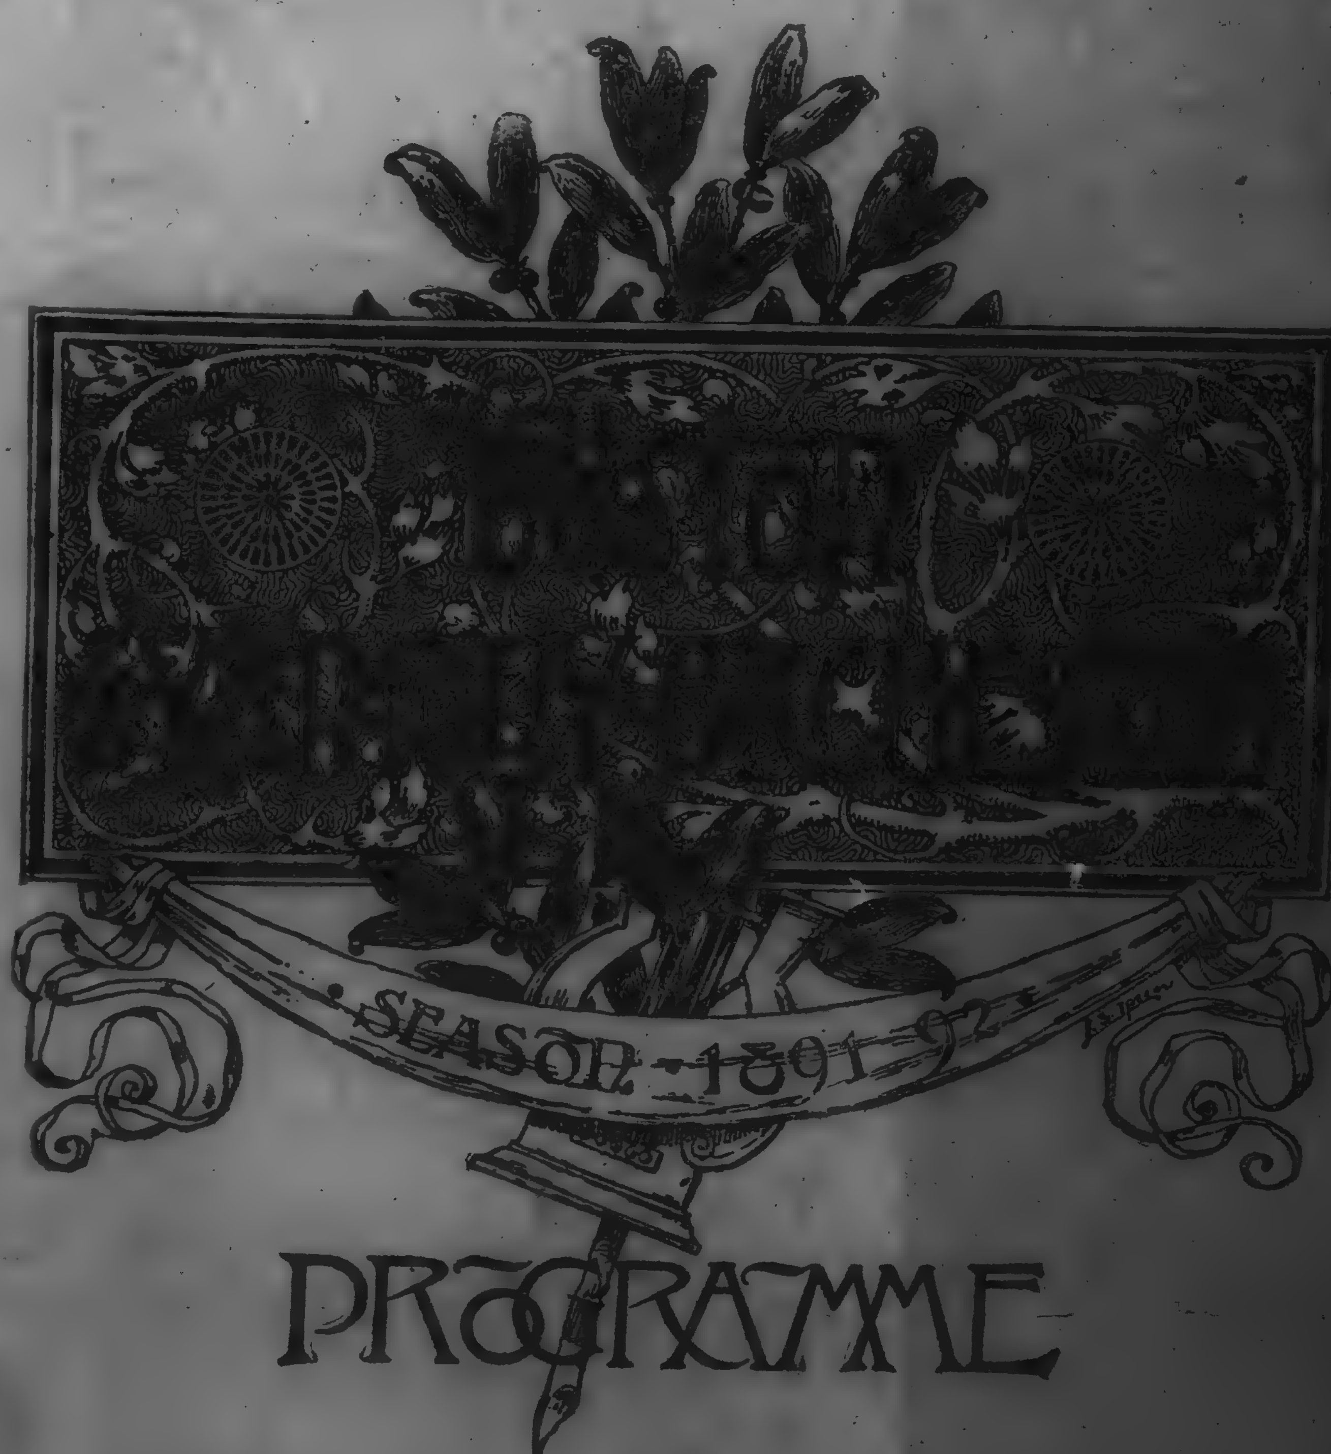
Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, NOV. 19.

Boston Symphony Concert.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 18.—The Boston symphony orchestra gave their second concert of the season in Infantry Hall tonight, before an audience which filled the house. The programme, which was an especially brilliant one, was well rendered and enthusiastically received. There were two soloists, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, wife of the conductor, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the 'cellist.

Infantry Hall, - - Providence.
Wednesday Evening, November 18, at 8.



PROGRAMME

2

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Season tickets at $5 each, and Single tickets for the second concert at $1.25 each, now on sale at 93 Westminster Street (store formerly occupied by Messrs. B. H. Gladding & Co).

Boston [illegible]

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 20.

At the concert by the Symphony Orchestra in the Music Hall tomorrow night the orchestral works will be Lalo's overture to "Le Roi d'Ys," first time here, and Raff's "Lenore" Symphony. Mr. Loeffler will play with the orchestra an original suite, "Les Veillées de l'Ukraine," a novelty here. Miss Marguerite Hall will sing.

Clipping from Telegraph,
~~BULLETIN~~, Philadelphia, Pa.

Date 11/14

—Mr. Arthur Nikisch proposes to give a performance of Beethoven's masterwork, the Ninth or 'Choral' Symphony, towards the end of the present season in Boston. The work will be heard then for the first time under Mr. Nikisch's direction and for the first time in this country for several years. The chorus, which always has proved the most serious difficulty to a successful performance of this colossal work, will be picked from among the very best singers of the leading choral societies of Boston. The names of the soloists have not yet been announced.

Clipping from Tribune
Cambridge Mass

Date 11/14

Symphony Concert.

The second concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given in Sanders Theatre on Thursday evening, with the following programme:

Mendelssohn	Overture to the Hebrides.
Gounod	Aria, "La Reine de Saba."
Tschaikowsky	Suite, Op. 55 Elegie. Valse melancholique. Scherzo. Tema con Variazioni.
Schubert	Song with orchestra "The Erl King" (Orchestration by Liszt.)
Weber	Overture. Euryanthe.

In these modern days of stress and storm, we owe Mr. Nikisch a debt of gratitude for not allowing us to forget Mendelssohn's beautiful overtures, which are the embodiment of tunefulness and melody. The "Hebrides" was beautifully played and we liked the somewhat moderate tempo taken at the outset by Mr. Nikisch, as it assured an abundance of reserve power for the ever-increasing, onward rush of the winds and waves, which was brought to a truly superb climax. Perhaps it is not wise to cling too fondly to cherished traditions with regard to tempo, as men of diverse temperaments must have equally varying conceptions of the compositions which they interpret; and it must always be conceded that the poetic and imaginative side of the picture is uppermost in Mr. Nikisch's mind. He certainly has the root of the matter in him, by which we mean the feu sacré, and his dramatic intensity is always sure to hold an audience spell-bound.

Mme. Nordica made her first appearance in the Sanders theatre on this occasion and achieved an undoubted triumph. Her first selection was the Queen's Aria from Gounod's opera, "The Queen of Sheba," which was written some time before "Faust" had made the composer famous. Mme. Nordica was in fine voice, and her rendering of this most difficult aria was most impassioned and effective. The audience would not be satisfied with less than three recalls, which were acknowledged with much grace. It was in the famous "Erl King," however, that Mme. Nordica rose to her greatest height of dramatic power, and fairly thrilled her listeners by her superb delivery of Schubert's grandest of songs. Liszt's orchestral accompaniment was a delightful surprise, and we fancy that it was given here for the first time. Mme. Nordica's success was so great that five enthusiastic recalls were given her by the delighted audience at the conclusion of the "Erl King." It is sure to prove a most valuable addition to her repertoire. The most important work on the programme, in the way of novelty, was the Suite by Tschaikowsky, Op. 65, which was played for the first time in Boston by Mr. Nikisch at the Music Hall concert of October 17. It is a highly interesting work, combining many of the best characteristics of the German, French, Italian and Russian schools. The élégie is full of sentiment and emotion, and develops all the resources of the modern orchestra. The valse melancholique is a trifle monotonous, but the Scherzo is bewitching, with very decided suggestions of "Queen Mab" in Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet. It was played with much delicacy and clearness, the triangle and tambourine producing a very piquant effect. The fourth movement, Tema con variazioni is the most elaborate and interesting. The theme is given out by the first violins, afterwards worked up and developed into a series of twelve variations, in which the theme is divided among the different instruments, the intricate accompaniment always showing the ingenuity of the Russian composer and his immense mastery of the orchestra. The perpetual motion of the violins in the second variation is captivating, also in the ninth, in which Mr. Kneisel has a brilliant cadenza which he executes faultlessly, leading to the recurrence of the theme in the tenth variation likewise exquisitely played by Mr. Kneisel.

The whole work was magnificently given and the programme ended with an ideal performance of Weber's lovely Euryanthe Overture, which is exactly suited to Mr. Nikisch's romantic school.

Altogether, the entire concert was a red letter night in the Sanders theatre, and we feel that the most delightful anticipations for the future will surely be realized. The next concert in the series will be given on Thursday evening, December 3.

C. R.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTET,

T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
A. MOLDAUER, 2d Violin.
MAX ZACH, Viola.
J. ADAMOWSKI, Violoncello.

FOURTH SEASON--1891-92.

SECOND SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET,

THIRD CONCERT, DECEMBER 21st

Clipping from Tribune
Cambridge Mass

Date 11/14.

The second Cambridge concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra was given Thursday evening before a delighted audience. Madame Lillian Nordica seemed to charm her hearers by her singing.

Date 11/16

Concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra and Au[redacted]

The second concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra occurs Wednesday at Infantry hall. Tickets were placed on sale today at No. 13 Westminster street. The orchestra opened a course in New York the other evening, and from the papers of that city its performance received cordial approbation, nearly all the critics uniting in describing it as one of the most thorough treats of an instrumental character of the period. The program for Wednesday night will be as follows:

Symphony in E flat (Rhenish), with orchestra; "Mignon," Liszt, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch; intermezzo, from "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; solo for violincello, (a) "Sarabande," Bach; (b) "Serenate," Hans Sitt; (c) "Spinnlied," Popper, Mr. Alvin Schroeder; songs with piano, Mrs. Nikisch; overture, "Euryanthe," Weber.

Boston Daily Globe.
THURSDAY, NOV. 19.

Boston Symphony Concert.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 18.—The Boston symphony orchestra gave their second concert of the season in Infantry Hall tonight, before an audience which filled the house. The programme, which was an especially brilliant one, was well rendered and enthusiastically received. There were two soloists, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, wife of the conductor, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the 'cellist.

Boston Transcript
FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1891.

At the concert by the Symphony Orchestra in the Music Hall tomorrow night the orchestral works will be Lalo's overture to "Le Roi d'Ys," first time here, and Raff's "Lenore" Symphony. Mr. Loeffler will play with the orchestra an original suite, "Les Veillées de l'Ukraine," a novelty here. Miss Marguerite Hall will sing.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Infantry Hall, - - Providence.

Wednesday Evening, November 18, at 8.

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
SEASON 1891-92
PROGRAMME
2

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Season tickets at $5 each, and Single tickets for the second concert at $1.25 each, now on sale at 93 Westminster Street (store formerly occupied by Messrs. B. H. Gladding & Co).

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET.

SECOND CONCERT.

MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 16, AT 8.

PROGRAMME.

QUARTET IN A MINOR, OP. 29. — SCHUBERT
ALLEGRO MA NON TROPPO.—ANDANTE.—MINUETTO.—ALLEGRETTO MODERATO.

SONGS WITH PIANO.
a) PURGATOIRE. — PALADILHE
b) BERCEUSE FROM "JOCELYN." — GODARD
MRS. JULIE M. WYMAN.

ROMANZA FROM QUARTET IN G MINOR. — GRIEG

SONGS WITH PIANO.
a) THE ROSE AND THE GARDEN. }
b) AUTUMN SONG. } — CLAYTON JOHNS
MRS. JULIE M. WYMAN.

QUARTET FOR PIANO AND STRINGS, IN E FLAT, OP. 38. — RHEINBERGER
ALLEGRO NON TROPPO.—ADAGIO.—
MINUETTO, G MINOR; WITH ALTERNATIVO, B FLAT MAJOR.—
ALLEGRO (FINALE).

SOLOISTS:
MRS. JULIE M. WYMAN,
MR. CLAYTON JOHNS.

THE STEINWAY PIANO IS FURNISHED BY MESSRS. STEINERT & SONS.

---

development goes on until we come to the codetta, in which the stringed instruments, as it were, echo the pianoforte with its imitative peroration, led off by the violoncello, and followed alternatively by viola and violin, the violoncello having the last word. This, with a few bars more, leads back again to the beginning, and the first part is repeated in the old orthodox manner. In the working of the second part, or "free fantasia," the greater part of the materials already cited are in more or less request. The leading theme comes back, after a long probation in the original key, and with a compression alike happy and well contrived. It is again delivered by the strings in unison, and with the same accompaniment. Here, by the omission of eleven bars, the two sections of the melody—the piano and the forte sections—are brought together and made one. The tributaries, or episodes, to which allusion has been made, re-appear in due order, though with occasional modifications. The coda which begins in a sturdy fashion terminates with a characteristic reference to the leading theme. Thus ends the first movement, and—as will be seen further on—in the same way, and almost identically, both in melody and accompaniment, as the last."

"The second movement, an adagio, is made up exclusively of a leading theme and a lengthily developed episode. The theme is first given out by the stringed instruments. The pianoforte then takes it up for a few bars, solus. The episode, to which reference has been made, sets out in the lower strings It would serve no purpose to explore this episode. Enough that, in the course of its final development, the 'cello comes in pianissimo, with the leading theme in an unexpected key; but speedily, through a beautiful transition, enters, fortissimo, into the primary key (G) with new accompaniments, etc., that must speak for themselves. The close is as tranquil as is the beginning."

"The minuet begins in G minor. The trio is in B flat major. The movement is constructed purely on the models bequeathed by Haydn and Mozart."

"The finale, in the rondo form, is built upon a lively and piquant melody. The second theme enters in C major. When the second theme comes to a full close there is a codetta, introducing an episode which plays a conspicuous part between this part of the movement and the return of the leading subject. In the course of the very ample development of this episode, it becomes, as it were, mixed up with the leading theme; a feature which will make itself sufficiently intelligible to observant hearers. But it is some time before the theme is allowed to appear in the primary key. First we come to a close in D major, (fortissimo). Further on, a transition from D to the dominant of E flat brings back the theme in question as before. The second theme, which at first was given in C, now re-appears in E flat, distributed among the strings in a wholly different manner. The pianoforte accompaniment need not be cited. It is on the same pattern as that used when the second theme first appears (in another key). One peculiarity in this new treatment of the second theme is the holding on, by the violin, of the dominant note, B flat (above the lines), for thirty-three bars in uninterrupted succession—a feature which cannot fail to attract attention. Passing by a new and somewhat brief reference to the episode, which now appears in the orthodox key and place, we come at once to the coda, beginning mysteriously, after a pause. Thence to the peroration is but a short step. Here we have the leading theme of the first movement almost precisely as it has already been given, with the bass imitating the treble as before. This can hardly fail to remind amateurs of a very similar device employed by Mendelssohn in his earlier E flat quartet for stringed instruments. And so on to the end."

[illegible]

FRIDAY, NOV

At the concert by the Symph
the Music Hall tomorrow nig works will be Lalo's overt d'Ys," first time here, and Symphony. Mr. Loeffler will chestra an original suite,
l'Ukraine," a novelty here.
Hall will sing.

---

ne voice, and her rendering of this most difficult aria was most impassioned and effective. The audience would not be satisfied with less than three recalls, which were acknowledged with much grace. It was in the famous "Erl King," however, that Mme. Nordica rose to her greatest height of dramatic power, and fairly thrilled her listeners by her superb delivery of Schubert's grandest of songs. Liszt's orchestral accompaniment was a delightful surprise, and we fancy that it was given here for the first time. Mme. Nordica's success was so great that five enthusiastic recalls were given her by the delighted audience at the conclusion of the "Erl King." It is sure to prove a most valuable addition to her repertoire. The most important work on the programme, in the way of novelty, was the Suite by Tschaikowsky, Op. 65, which was played for the first time in Boston by Mr. Nikisch at the Music Hall concert of October 17. It is a highly interesting work, combining many of the best characteristics of the German, French, Italian and Russian schools. The Elégie is full of sentiment and emotion, and develops all the resources of the modern orchestra. The Valse melancholique is a trifle monotonous, but the Scherzo is bewitching, with very decided suggestions of "Queen Mab" in Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet. It was played with much delicacy and clearness, the triangle and tambourine producing a very piquant effect. The fourth movement, Tema con variazioni is the most elaborate and interesting, The theme is given out by the first violins, afterwards worked up and developed into a series of twelve variations, in which the theme is divided among the different instruments, the intricate accompaniment always showing the ingenuity of the Russian composer and his immense mastery of the orchestra. The perpetual motion of the violins in the second variation is captivating, also in the ninth, in which Mr. Kneisel has a brilliant cadenza which he executes faultlessly, leading to the recurrence of the theme in the tenth variation likewise exquisitely played by Mr. Kneisel.

The whole work was magnificently given, and the programme ended with an ideal performance of Weber's lovely Euryanthe Overture, which is exactly suited to Mr. Nikisch's romantic school.

Altogether, the entire concert was a red letter night in the Sanders theatre, and we feel that the most delightful anticipations for the future will surely be realized. The next concert in the series will be given on Thursday evening, December 3.

C. R.

Clipping from Tribune
Cambridge Mass
Date 11/14

The second Cambridge concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra was given Thursday evening before a delighted audience. Madame Lillian Nordica seemed to charm her hearers by her singing.

Telegra[illegible] R. I.
Date 11/16

Concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra and Au[illegible]

The second concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra occurs Wednesday at Infantry hall. Tickets were placed on sale today at No. 13 Westminster street. The orchestra opened a course in New York the other evening, and from the papers of that city its performance received cordial approbation, nearly all the critics uniting in describing it as one of the most thorough treats of an instrumental character of the period. The program for Wednesday night will be as follows:

Symphony in E flat (Rhenish), with orchestra; "Mignon," Liszt, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch; intermezzo, from "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; solo for violincello, (a) "Sarabande," Bach; (b) "Serenate," Hans Sitt; (c) "Spinnlied," Popper, Mr. Alvin Schroeder; songs with piano, Mrs. Nikisch; overture, "Euryanthe," Weber.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, NOV. 19.

Boston Symphony Concert.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 18.—The Boston symphony orchestra gave their second concert of the season in Infantry Hall tonight, before an audience which filled the house. The programme, which was an especially brilliant one, was well rendered and enthusiastically received. There were two soloists, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, wife of the conductor, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the 'cellist.

Infantry Hall, - - Providence.

Wednesday Evening, November 18, at 8.

SEASON 1891-92
PROGRAMME

2

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Season tickets at $5 each, and Single tickets for the second concert at $[illegible] each, now on sale at 93 Westminster Street (store formerly occupied by Messrs. [illegible] Gladding & Co).

[56]

Including the earlier juvenile efforts, Schubert wrote twenty string-quartets. Twelve were never published. The important works of Schubert were composed in Vienna when Beethoven's genius over-shadowed everything; consequently the world saw him not until the greater master had passed from view. But Schubert's recognition, particularly as an instrumental composer, was tardy. To the present and preceding generation he is indebted for his great fame, more than to that in which he was a life-actor.

In Dr. Heinrich Kreissle von Hellborn's "Franz Schubert," three references to the string quartet in A minor are made, not one of which gives us any real information about it, whether as to the date of its composition, or other particulars. As it is first mentioned, however, in Chapter 12, the date of which is 1824, we may, perhaps, safely give it to that year, when Schubert was twenty-seven. The style of its melodies is throughout Hungarian. It is called "Op. 29," by Spina of Vienna, who printed and published it some years since "in Partitur," as Kreissle's Catalogue tells us.

JOSEPH RHEINBERGER was born March 17, 1839, at Vaduz, near Feldkirch, capital of the Voralberg. It is a matter for his biographers to settle whether he be Austrian or Swiss. He showed great musical talent at a very early age, and received his musical education principally in Munich, where since 1859 he has filled the post of professor of composition and organ at the Conservatory. His compositions, which include operas, a symphony, "Wallenstein," a stabat mater, a requiem, an overture to Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew," as well as a number of cantatas, chamber music, etc., are popular in two continents.

"The leading theme of the first movement of the E flat quartet is given to the violin and viola in unison, with the 'cello an octave below. The violin, after a few bars of interlude, pianissimo, takes up the melody an octave higher, forte; the other stringed instruments playing the same notes as before, and the pianoforte the same accompaniment. Further on, after a progression to G flat major, the 'cello, viola and violin give the theme in that key, succeeding each other in the order indicated. This half close, on the dominant of E flat, after further development, with imitative passages for the stringed instruments, leads to a new subject in the primary key. This tributary is at once repeated, in conjunction with another phrase, assigned to the violin. Out of this springs a fresh tributary, which, as will be observed by the careful listener, has subsequently to do with the conduct of the movement. After considerable development, we are brought to the key of D flat major, in which the actual second theme de jure first appears. In the course of development, however, after passing from D flat major and minor to A major, we are brought to B flat major, the orthodox dominant of the primary key, on the second inversion of the tonic of which—the harmony of the six-four—the theme is now presented, the stringed instruments playing the melody, fortissimo, in unison, according to the different registers, and the pianoforte sustaining the pedal point, on F. And so its

---

FRIDAY, NOV

At the concert by the Symp
the Music Hall tomorrow nig
works will be Lalo's overt
d'Ys," first time here, and Symphony. Mr. Loeffler will chestra an original suite, "
l'Ukraine," a novelty here.
Hall will sing.

---

ne voice, and her rendering of this most difficult aria was most impassioned and effective. The audience would not be satisfied with less than three recalls, which were acknowledged with much grace. It was in the famous "Erl King," however, that Mme. Nordica rose to her greatest height of dramatic power, and fairly thrilled her listeners by her superb delivery of Schubert's grandest of songs. Liszt's orchestral accompaniment was a delightful surprise, and we fancy that it was given here for the first time. Mme. Nordica's success was so great that five enthusiastic recalls were given her by the delighted audience at the conclusion of the "Erl King." It is sure to prove a most valuable addition to her repertoire. The most important work on the programme, in the way of novelty, was the Suite by Tschaikowsky, Op. 65, which was played for the first time in Boston by Mr. Nikisch at the Music Hall concert of October 17. It is a highly interesting work, combining many of the best characteristics of the German, French, Italian and Russian schools. The élégie is full of sentiment and emotion, and develops all the resources of the modern orchestra. The valse melancholique is a trifle monotonous, but the Scherzo is bewitching, with very decided suggestions of "Queen Mab" in Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet. It was played with much delicacy and clearness, the triangle and tambourine producing a very piquant effect. The fourth movement, Tema con variazioni is the most elaborate and interesting, The theme is given out by the first violins, afterwards worked up and developed into a series of twelve variations, in which the theme is divided among the different instruments, the intricate accompaniment always showing the ingenuity of the Russian composer and his immense mastery of the orchestra. The perpetual motion of the violins in the second variation is captivating, also in the ninth, in which Mr. Kneisel has a brilliant cadenza which he executes faultlessly, leading to the recurrence of the theme in the tenth variation likewise exquisitely played by Mr. Kneisel.

The whole work was magnificently given and the programme ended with an ideal performance of Weber's lovely Euryanthe Overture, which is exactly suited to Mr. Nikisch's romantic school.

Altogether, the entire concert was a red letter night in the Sanders theatre, and we feel that the most delightful anticipations for the future will surely be realized. The next concert in the series will be given on Thursday evening, December 3.

C. R.

Clipping from Tribune
Cambridge Mass

Date 11/14

The second Cambridge concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra was given Thursday evening before a delighted audience. Madame Lillian Nordica seemed to charm her hearers by her singing.

Telegra

Date 11/16

Concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra and Au [illegible]

The second concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra occurs Wednesday at Infantry hall. Tickets were placed on sale today at No. 13 Westminster street. The orchestra opened a course in New York the other evening, and from the papers of that city its performance received cordial approbation, nearly all the critics uniting in describing it as one of the most thorough treats of an instrumental character of the period. The program for Wednesday night will be as follows:

Symphony in E flat (Rhenish), with orchestra; "Mignon," Liszt, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch; intermezzo, from "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascaqui; solo for violincello, (a) "Sarabande," Bach; (b) "Serenate," Hans Sitt; (c) "Spinnlied," Popper, Mr. Alvin Schroeder; songs with piano, Mrs. Nikisch; overture, "Euryanthe," Weber.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, NOV. 19.

Boston Symphony Concert.

PROVIDENCE. R. I., Nov. 18.—The Boston symphony orchestra gave their second concert of the season in Infantry Hall tonight, before an audience which filled the house. The programme, which was an especially brilliant one, was well rendered and enthusiastically received. There were two soloists, Mrs. Arthur Nikisch, wife of the conductor, and Mr. Alwin Schroeder, the 'cellist.

Infantry Hall, - - Providence.

Wednesday Evening, November 18, at 8.

SEASON 1891-92

PROGRAMME

2

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Season tickets at $5 each, and Single tickets for the second concert at $1.25 each, now on sale at 93 Westminster Street (store formerly occupied by Messrs. B. H. Gladding & Co).

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1891

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The fifth Symphony concert was devoted to absolute music. Haydn, Beethoven, and Schumann were the composers represented, and their works were read for the most part discreetly, and romanticism was not recklessly injected into the classical body to give an unnatural flush and a feverish animation. The Haydn Symphony was the one in E flat No. 1 (B. and H.), and singular to relate, although it is one of the most familiar, and although it has been undoubtedly pounded out for years in this very city by four hands upon the pianoforte, it was given last week for the first time at these concerts. And it gave genuine pleasure to the hearers. Time has not staled its freshness, and indeed parts of the work are eminently modern in spirit and in treatment. Spontaneity and art go hand in hand from the beginning to the end, and the healthy tone of the symphony, even in its darker passages, is refreshing in these days of musical dyspeptic pessimism. It is also a pleasure to add that both in respect of tempo and observance of the nuances, Mr. Nikisch gave a very careful and intelligent reading. The different numbers were much enjoyed by the large audience, and Mr. Kneisel was applauded for his exquisite performance of the violin solo in the andante. That species of unfinished symphony of Schumann known as "Overture, Scherzo, and Finale" was given with great fire, and the rhythmic difficulties were mastered so that—unusual thing in this work—the rhythm did not halt or stagger blindly,

The pianist was Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni, and he played the solo part of Beethoven's concerto No. 4 in G major. As is perhaps well known in this city, Mr. Busoni was a wonder-child, and he appeared in Vienna as a player and a composer at a tender age. He was then loudly praised, and glowing prophecies were made concerning his future, and these prophecies have certainly been fulfilled; for his recent triumph in composition is fresh in the minds of all. He is now a fellow-townsman, and a most valuable addition to the role of musicians of this city. Naturally his appearance was eagerly awaited, and in many ways he did not disappoint the high hopes of his hearers. He played with rare thoughtfulness, and with remarkable self-control. He thoroughly subordinated self, and Beethoven's music was apparently the one thing thought of. His playing was distinguished by precision, singular clearness, unostentatious but more than sufficient mastery of mechanism, and modest elegance of bearing. At the same time it must be confessed that there was a lack of that indefinable quality called variously, temperament, or magnetism, or what-you-will, that sways the hearer even against his judgment. But it must be remembered that the size of the hall almost forbids the close approach of player and hearer, and it must be confessed that Mr. Busoni was seriously hampered by the poor accompaniment of the orchestra. Mr. Nikisch constantly differed with the pianist in matters of tempo and degrees of force, and the accompaniment throughout was coarse and unmusical. Mr. Busoni was most heartily applauded and twice recalled.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, NOV. 21, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The chief interest of the last Symphony concert attached to the début of Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, who played Beethoven's third piano concerto to that acceptance which expresses itself in a triple recall. It was a delightful performance, because the artist played for the sake of the music and not to display himself. A little lacking in warmth and sturdiness, Mr. Busoni yet plays with the insight of a musician, the touch of a gentle, considerate man and the taste of a sensitive artist. His technique is rather ample than astonishing, and he evidently inclines to delicate gradations in suggestion rather than to emphasis in assertion. He added in the proper places cadenzas of his own, which were nicely studied and composed, but smacked too much of current styles. The evening began with Haydn's first symphony—better played than any other symphonic number of the season—and ended with the Overture, Scherzo and Finale, of Schumann, which had less commendable treatment than the accompaniment to the concerto, Mr. Nikisch not keeping the men to his beat, nor keeping the beat to the rhythm of the soloist. Tonight Raff's "Lenore" will be the symphony; the overture will be Lalo's "Roi d'Ys," new here, and between these will be played a suite for violin and orchestra, written and to be played by Mr. C. M. Loeffler, who has entitled it "Les Veillés de l'Ukraine." Miss Margaret Hall is also to sing a concert aria and some songs.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, NOV. 22, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY.

Lalo's opera, "Le Roi d'Ys," since its successful production in Paris a few years ago, has been the subject of frequent discussion among musicians and critics, and more than once its performance has been promised in this country. But these promises were never fulfilled, and Boston has only just been permitted to get an inkling of what it is like through the performance of the overture at the sixth Symphony rehearsal and concert. This part of the opera commands attention throughout, and contains much of striking import. It is episodic in construction, although it has two principal subjects that are developed to a considerable extent. Its thematic material is generally sombre in character, and the orchestration is correspondingly broad and massive. As a concert piece the overture is hardly likely to become a favorite, notwithstanding its strength and sometimes brilliancy. Mr. Nikisch gave it a dramatic reading, and the orchestra was in excellent form. It was well received

Another novelty which aroused the sensibilities of the audience far more effectually, was a suite for violin and orchestra, "Les Veillees de l'Ukraine," composed by Mr, C. M. Loeffler of the first violins. Mr. Loeffler is not generally recognized as a composer for the reason that his compositions have not been heard in public. He studied this branch of the art in Berlin and Paris, and has in manuscript an overture, a violin sonata. a quartet and a sextet for strings, besides the work under consideration. Some tales by the Russian author, Gogul, are said to have inspired the composition of the suite, which has four independent movements; introduction and Pastorale; Rune; Dumka. It is safe to say that almost everybody was surprised at discovering that Mr. Loeffler is not only a player of unusual ability, but the possessor of creative talent of an equally exceptional nature. It is true that there is no reason for anybody's being surprised if one or all of the many talented players of the orchestra should blossom out as composers. But the fact remains that excessive modesty, or other reasons on their part have led to no expectations in this direction. Mr. Loeffler's music is exceedingly attractive. There is plentiful evidence of inventive and constructive skill, and the orchestration displays a sure hand. The movements do not consist of a series of solos with conventional accompaniment; on the contrary, the solo and orchestral parts are strongly united, In fact they may be regarded as four tone pictures, reflecting something of the inborn sadness and the quasi-gaiety of the Slavs. Each of the four movements possesses marked individuality. Some especially charming effects are produced in the "Rue," with its theme in the wood-wind accompanied by the solo instrument. The melancholy "Dumka" is strongly characteristic, and the presto finale which follows furnishes an artistic contrast to its gloomy strains and brings the work to a brilliant close. Mr. Loeffler was at his best throughout, and the orchestral work was thoroughly sympathetic and adequate. Applause of the heartiest description followed the conclusion of the performance and the genial violinist was recalled several times.

Miss Marguerite Hall also appeared as soloist. Her first number was a ballad, "There was an Ancient King," for contralto and orchestra, by George Henschel, which demands more in breadth of expression and fullness of tone than Miss Hall was able to supply. In three songs by Schubert however, she appeared to much better advantage, the beautiful finish and refined character of her style largely compensating for the want of vocal force and intensity of feeling which was apparent in her interpretations. Miss Hall's voice is in a much better condition than it was at her last appearance in this city, there being few traces of the vibrato that was then unpleasantly prominent. Her true calling, however, is that of the chamber concert singer, where her best effects are not lost as they are in the vastness of Music Hall.

Raff's "Leonore" symphony concluded the programme, and was dramatically read, and on the whole finely played. In the first movement the rhythmic accents were not always clearly defined, and its beautiful second theme was not perfectly phrased. In the andante the strings were at their best, the horn and oboe playing being unusually good. Mr. Nikisch took the march in a brisk tempo, though not so fast as tradition says Raff desired it to be taken.

One would guess that Raff had in his mind a tempo of 168 beats to the minute at least, from the almost endless repetition that he indulged in in this movement. The last movement was splendidly worked up, and the entire performance elicited much applause.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTET.

Last Monday evening in Union Hall, the second concert by the Adamowski Quartet was given. Schubert's string quartet in A minor, opus 29, was the first number, and was delightful to listen to, until its truly Schubertian length became wearisome. It was played in a manner that showed marked gains on the part of the performers in accent, phrasing and general clearness, although there is still room for considerable improvement in these essentials, and a more perfect ensemble is much to be desired. A romanza from Grieg's quartet in G minor was very tastefully rendered, its many characteristic beauties appealing as strongly to the audience as it apparently did to the players themselves. Rheimberger's quartet for piano and strings, in E. flat, was the remaining instrumental number. Like most of his chamber music of this class, this work possesses a florid and somewhat restless piano part, which, though it at first interests and charms, becomes after a while monotonous. As a whole, the quartet seems devoid of real inspiration; while there is no want of activity and a certain superficial attractiveness, of genuine character it contains comparatively little. It was fluently played, and Mr. Clayton Johns displayed at the piano his well trained technique, and also a lack of energy and of vitality in accent which was disappointing. Mrs. Julie L. Wyman sang two French songs, "Purgatoire," by Paladilhe, and the Berceuse from Godard's "Jocelyn" with all the warmth of feeling and beautiful finish for which she is noted. Afterwards she sang "The Rose and the Garden," and "Autumn Song," by Clayton Johns. All four evidently were appreciated, and this admirable singer was lavishly applauded.

The Kneisel Quartet will give its second concert at Union Hall tomorrow (Monday) evening. The club will have the assistance of Mr. F. Busoni at the pianoforte. The following programme will be given: Quartet in D major, Haydn; quartet in A major, Schumann; Quintet in E minor, Sinding (first time).

Madame Nordica had the honor of being chosen as the soloist for the first concert by the Philharmonic Society, of New York, which took place last evening at the Metropolitan Opera House. She sang with much success an aria from Gluck's "Armide" and Schubert's "Erl King," and was repeatedly recalled. The concert was the first given under the direction of Mr. Seidl, who succeeded Mr. Thomas.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, NOV. 22, 1891

THE SYMPHONIES.

FIFTH CONCERT.

The programme of the fifth Symphony concert in Music hall, Saturday evening, Nov. 14, was:

Haydn.	Symphony No. 1, (B. & H.) in E flat. Adagio; Allegro con spirito.—Andante.—Minuet.—Finale.
Beethoven.	Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 4, in G major, op. 50. Allegro moderato.—Andante con moto.—Rondo. (Cadenzas by Busoni)
Schumann.	Overture,Scherzo,and Finale. Op. 50.

Soloist: Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni.

It is always a pleasure, a delightful one, to listen to any of Haydn's symphonies, for they all contain melody and harmony which reach into the hidden recesses of the heart and soul. There are no harsh sevenths or other discordant harmonies to be sensationally resolved, to startle and shatter the nervous system, to drive one into hysterics, but beautiful melodies, quiet, soothing harmonies, that bring with them the comforting, satisfying pleasure one seeks at such concerts, but seldom afforded in modern works. Yes, we love old father Haydn's music, even with the modern, brilliant coloring it receives at the hands of our Boston orchestra.

The orchestra has improved considerably since its first concert, and though there is a wide difference in regard to its interpretations and excellent work, there was not much fault to be found with it at this concert. The difference is mostly in the matter of Conductor Nikisch's readings. That is a matter that cannot easily be satisfactorily settled.

Haydn wrote his symphonies when strings predominated, before the present brass quality was known or demanded. If he had lived in our time, or foreseen to what extent Wagner would carry his tremendous tonal, noisy quality into nearly all his orchestral writings, perhaps, he might have injected more breezy effects into some of his symphonies. But he did not live in our time, did not know of Wagner, Brahms or Strauss, therefore, his music ought not to be forced with modern coloring, because it is unfitted for it, was not constructed for such a purpose. Now the finale of the symphony, though played brilliantly well, was never intended to represent a tragedy, nor a brass band; but such was Mr. Nikisch's interpretation of it. The audience enjoyed the symphony greatly and we heard a number remark, "How beautiful!" and wondering why more such music was not given. Evidently they forgot it takes all kinds to make a world.

The concerto, played by Mr. Busoni, created a favorable impression of his abilities as a pianist. Mr. Busoni is quite a young man, pleasing in appearance, but looks more like a student than a full grown artist. He gave the impression that he was nervous and excited. However, his playing showed no symptoms of excitement or nervousness; on the other hand, there he was perfectly at home. His entire performance, as a carefully studied, well prepared public lesson, was a fine success. Mr. Busoni has well trained fingers; some of his scales were truly delicious, presenting a contrast to his octave playing and chords, which were stiff and hard. He made the concerto musical, and showed himself a musician of good parts in the cadenzas of his own he introduced. Further, the orchestra subordinated itself to him to a greater degree than we have ever heard it before to any soloist. He was heartily applauded and recalled. It was apparent the orchestra took a deep interest in the pianist, for they showed it demonstratively. Thus, Mr. Busoni's path is strewed with flowers, and his success here made secure.

The Schumann overture, scherzo and finale was remarkably well played, showing this composer in one of his happiest moods, the leading of which, by Mr. Nikisch, was admirable in nearly all respects. This concert proved the most satisfactory of any so far this season.

JAMES M. TRACY.

Mme. Lillian Nordica will make her last appearance before returning to England at the second Cecilia concert, Jan. 28.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

ESTABLISHED IN 1862.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER, 21, 1891.

Everything connected with the fifth Symphony programme was classic. The composers were Haydn, Beethoven and Schumann, and the pianist, representing the personal element, is a strict disciple of the severe, formal school, of which in Hummel older minds see the ideal exponent. Any symphony by Haydn is agreeable once in a while, say every five years, but the world is too full of other things to permit dwelling long over the piquant artlessness of the Kappelmeister of Esterhazy. The symphony played last Saturday was in E-flat, numbered one in the edition of Breitkopf and Härtel. Schumann was represented by the 'Overture, Scherzo and Finale,' for the first time here under Mr. Nikisch. The work was given a great performance. The winner of the prize at the Rubinstein contest at Moscow in 1890, Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, was the pianist, the concerto being Beethoven's fourth, in G, with the two cadenzas added which were a part of the competitory thesis which resulted successfully for Mr. Busoni. The cadenzas are admirable as music, but modern in manner. Mr. Busoni plays exquisitely.

The second Adamowski Quartette concert showed marked improvement in their playing. Schubert's A-minor quartette, Rheinberger's piano quartette in E-flat, with Clayton Johns as pianist, and the 'Romanza' from Grieg's G-minor quartette were the ensemble numbers. Miss Julie E. Wyman added her luscious voice to the concert, singing songs by Paladilhe, Godard and Clayton Johns. Mr. Adamowski has worked hard these last years, and both as solo violinist and quartette leader has gained in artistic stature.

The programme for the Symphony concert to-night includes Lalo's overture, 'Le Roi d'Ys,' Raff's symphony, 'Leonore,' songs with piano sung by Miss Marguerite Hall, and a new suite for orchestra and violin by Mr. Loeffler, in which the composer will play the violin part.

The second concert by the Kneisel Quartette will be given at Union Hall next Monday evening.

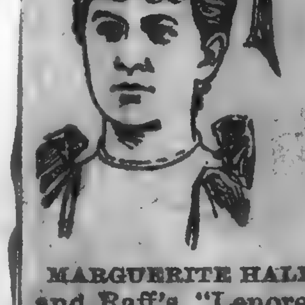
Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, NOV. 22, 1891.

Noveltles Played by the Symphony Orchestra.

Notable Assemblage of Famous Artists in Music Hall.

Hauk Opera Season—Instrumental and Vocal Recitals.



MARGUERITE HALL.

THERE was plenty of variety and novelty in the programme given in Music Hall last evening by the Symphony orchestra, with the assistance of Miss Marguerite Hall and Mr. C. M. Loeffler as soloists. Lalo's "Le Roi d' Ys" overture, played for the first time here, and Raff's "Lenore" symphony were the orchestral contributions, and in his reading of both of these selections Conductor Nikisch was most successful. The overture is an impressive and elaborately orchestrated composition. The story of the opera is founded on a grewsome Breton legend, and the music is almost as sombre as is the subject it represents.

The familiar "Lenore" symphony has seldom been given a more enjoyable interpretation. Its grand harmonic effects and splendid contrasts of tonal colors were delightfully set forth.

Mr. Loeffler played for the first time in public his recently completed suit for violin and orchestra entitled "Les Veillees de 'l Ukraine." Mr. Loeffler has been a member of the Symphony orchestra since its organization, and as a soloist he has long held the regard of patrons of these concerts.

He has written several other works of merit, but the suit heard yesterday must be considered as decidedly his best effort.

A collection of short tales by a Russian author is said to have furnished the composer with material for musical treatment. His melodies are bright and pleasing, at times suggestive of many familiar tunes, but always showing originality in manner of presentment. The four movements, each independent of the other, are notable throughout for brilliancy and variety of harmonic effects. Mr. Loeffler naturally gave a charming interpretation of the work, and he received satisfactory support from the orchestra. Enthusiastic plaudits recalled him twice after the performance.

Miss Marguerite Hall is a native of Boston, and has often sung here in public, but during the last few years she has been in Europe. She received a very cordial welcome, and generous applause rewarded her efforts. Her voice is a rather high and light, but very pleasing contralto, and her execution shows that she has had the benefit of excellent training. She sang a ballad by Henschal, "There was an Ancient King," with orchestra, and three Schubert songs with piano accompaniment.

The announcements for the next concert are: Overture, "Iphigenie en Aulis" (Wagner ending), Gluck; concerto for violin in D major, op. 77, Brahms; symphony in C major, Schubert; soloist, Mr. Adolph Brodsky.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1891

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The fifth Symphony concert was devoted to absolute music. Haydn, Beethoven, and Schumann were the composers represented, and their works were read for the most part discreetly, and romanticism was not recklessly injected into the classical body to give an unnatural flush and a feverish animation. The Haydn Symphony was the one in E flat No. 1 (B. and H.), and singular to relate, although it is one of the most familiar, and although it has been undoubtedly pounded out for years in this very city by four hands upon the pianoforte, it was given last week for the first time at these concerts. And it gave genuine pleasure to the hearers. Time has not staled its freshness, and indeed parts of the work are eminently modern in spirit and in treatment. Spontaneity and art go hand in hand from the beginning to the end, and the healthy tone of the symphony, even in its darker passages, is refreshing in these days of musical dyspeptic pessimism. It is also a pleasure to add that both in respect of tempo and observance of the nuances, Mr. Nikisch gave a very careful and intelligent reading. The different numbers were much enjoyed by the large audience, and Mr. Kneisel was applauded for his exquisite performance of the violin solo in the andante. That species of unfinished symphony of Schumann known as "Overture, Scherzo, and Finale" was given with great fire, and the rhythmic difficulties were mastered so that—unusual thing in this work—the rhythm did not halt or stagger blindly,

The pianist was Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni, and he played the solo part of Beethoven's concerto No. 4 in G major. As is perhaps well known in this city, Mr. Busoni was a wonder-child, and he appeared in Vienna as a player and a composer at a tender age. He was then loudly praised, and glowing prophecies were made concerning his future, and these prophecies have certainly been fulfilled; for his recent triumph in composition is fresh in the minds of all. He is now a fellow-townsman, and a most valuable addition to the role of musicians of this city. Naturally his appearance was eagerly awaited, and in many ways he did not disappoint the high hopes of his hearers. He played with rare thoughtfulness, and with remarkable self-control. He thoroughly subordinated self, and Beethoven's music was apparently the one thing thought of. His playing was distinguished by precision, singular clearness, unostentatious but more than sufficient mastery of mechanism, and modest elegance of bearing. At the same time it must be confessed that there was a lack of that indefinable quality called variously, temperament, or magnetism, or what-you-will, that sways the hearer even against his judgment. But it must be remembered that the size of the hall almost forbids the close approach of player and hearer, and it must be confessed that Mr. Busoni was seriously hampered by the poor accompaniment of the orchestra. Mr. Nikisch constantly differed with the pianist in matters of tempo and degrees of force, and the accompaniment throughout was coarse and unmusical. Mr. Busoni was most heartily applauded and twice recalled.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, NOV. 21, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The chief interest of the last Symphony concert attached to the début of Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, who played Beethoven's third piano concerto to that acceptance which expresses itself in a triple recall. It was a delightful performance, because the artist played for the sake of the music and not to display himself. A little lacking in warmth and sturdiness, Mr. Busoni yet plays with the insight of a musician, the touch of a gentle, considerate man and the taste of a sensitive artist. His technique is rather ample than astonishing, and he evidently inclines to delicate gradations in suggestion rather than to emphasis in assertion. He added in the proper places cadenzas of his own, which were nicely studied and composed, but smacked too much of current styles. The evening began with Haydn's first symphony—better played than any other symphonic number of the season—and ended with the Overture, Scherzo and Finale, of Schumann, which had less commendable treatment than the accompaniment to the concerto, Mr. Nikisch not keeping the men to his beat, nor keeping the beat to the rhythm of the soloist. Tonight Raff's "Lenore" will be the symphony; the overture will be Lalo's "Roi d'Ys," new here, and between these will be played a suite for violin and orchestra, written and to be played by Mr. C. M. Loeffler, who has entitled it "Les Veillés de l'Ukraine." Miss Margaret Hall is also to sing a concert aria and some songs.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, NOV. 22, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY.

Lalo's opera, "Le Roi d'Ys," since its successful production in Paris a few years ago, has been the subject of frequent discussion among musicians and critics, and more than once its performance has been promised in this country. But these promises were never fulfilled, and Boston has only just been permitted to get an inkling of what it is like through the performance of the overture at the sixth Symphony rehearsal and concert. This part of the opera commands attention throughout, and contains much of striking import. It is episodic in construction, although it has two principal subjects that are developed to a considerable extent. Its thematic material is generally sombre in character, and the orchestration is correspondingly broad and massive. As a concert piece the overture is hardly likely to become a favorite, notwithstanding its strength and sometimes brilliancy. Mr. Nikisch gave it a dramatic reading, and the orchestra was in excellent form. It was well received

Another novelty which aroused the sensibilities of the audience far more effectually, was a suite for violin and orchestra, "Les Veillees de l'Ukraine," composed by Mr, C. M. Loeffler of the first violins. Mr. Loeffier is not generally recognized as a composer for the reason that his compositions have not been heard in public. He studied this branch of the art in Berlin and Paris, and has in manuscript an overture, a violin sonata. a quartet and a sextet for strings, besides the work under consideration. Some tales by the Russian author, Gogul, are said to have inspired the composition of the suite, which has four independent movements; introduction and Pastorale; Rune; Dumka. It is safe to say that almost everybody was surprised at discovering that Mr. Loeffler is not only a player of unusual ability, but the possessor of creative talent of an equally exceptional nature. It is true that there is no reason for anybody's being surprised if one or all of the many talented players of the orchestra should blossom out as composers. But the fact remains that excessive modesty, or other reasons on their part have led to no expectations in this direction. Mr. Loeffler's music is exceedingly attractive. There is plentiful evidence of inventive and constructive skill, and the orchestration displays a sure hand. The movements do not consist of a series of solos with conventional accompaniment; on the contrary, the solo and orchestral parts are strongly united, In fact they may be regarded as four tone pictures, reflecting something of the inborn sadness and the quasi-gaiety of the Slavs. Each of the four movements possesses marked individuality. Some especially charming effects are produced in the "Rue," with its theme in the wood-wind accompanied by the solo instrument. The melancholy "Dumka" is strongly characteristic, and the presto finale which follows furnishes an artistic contrast to its gloomy strains and brings the work to a brilliant close. Mr. Loeffler was at his best throughout, and the orchestral work was thoroughly sympathetic and adequate. Applause of the heartiest description followed the conclusion of the performance and the genial violinist was recalled several times.

Miss Marguerite Hall also appeared as soloist. Her first number was a ballad, "There was an Ancient King," for contralto and orchestra, by George Henschel, which demands more in breadth of expression and fullness of tone than Miss Hall was able to supply. In three songs by Schubert however, she appeared to much better advantage, the beautiful finish and refined character of her style largely compensating for the want of vocal force and intensity of feeling which was apparent in her interpretations. Miss Hall's voice is in a much better condition than it was at her last appearance in this city, there being few traces of the vibrato that was then unpleasantly prominent. Her true calling, however, is that of the chamber concert singer, where her best effects are not lost as they are in the vastness of Music Hall.

Raff's "Leonore" symphony concluded the programme, and was dramatically read, and on the whole finely played. In the first movement the rhythmic accents were not always clearly defined, and its beautiful second theme was not perfectly phrased. In the andante the strings were at their best, the horn and oboe playing being unusually good. Mr. Nikisch took the march in a brisk tempo, though not so fast as tradition says Raff desired it to be taken.

One would guess that Raff had in his mind a tempo of 168 beats to the minute at least, from the almost endless repetition that he indulged in in this movement. The last movement was splendidly worked up, and the entire performance elicited much applause.

THE ADAMOWSKI QUARTET.

Last Monday evening in Union Hall, the second concert by the Adamowski Quartet was given. Schubert's string quartet in A minor, opus 29, was the first number, and was delightful to listen to, until its truly Schubertian length became wearisome. It was played in a manner that showed marked gains on the part of the performers in accent, phrasing and general clearness, although there is still room for considerable improvement in these essentials, and a more perfect ensemble is much to be desired. A romanza from Grieg's quartet in G minor was very tastefully rendered, its many characteristic beauties appealing as strongly to the audience as it apparently did to the players themselves. Rheimberger's quartet for piano and strings, in E. flat, was the remaining instrumental number. Like most of his chamber music of this class, this work possesses a florid and somewhat restless piano part, which, though it at first interests and charms, becomes after a while monotonous. As a whole, the quartet seems devoid of real inspiration; while there is no want of activity and a certain superficial attractiveness, of genuine character it contains comparatively little. It was fluently played, and Mr. Clayton Johns displayed at the piano his well trained technique, and also a lack of energy and of vitality in accent which was disappointing. Mrs. Julie L. Wyman sang two French songs, "Purgatoire," by Paladilhe, and the Berceuse from Godard's "Jocelyn" with all the warmth of feeling and beautiful finish for which she is noted. Afterwards she sang "The Rose and the Garden," and "Autumn Song," by Clayton Johns. All four evidently were appreciated, and this admirable singer was lavishly applauded.

The Kneisel Quartet will give its second concert at Union Hall tomorrow (Monday) evening. The club will have the assistance of Mr. F. Busoni at the pianoforte. The following programme will be given: Quartet in D major, Haydn; quartet in A major, Schumann; Quintet in E minor, Sinding (first time).

Madame Nordica had the honor of being chosen as the soloist for the first concert by the Philharmonic Society, of New York, which took place last evening at the Metropolitan Opera House. She sang with much success an aria from Gluck's "Armide" and Schubert's "Erl King," and was repeatedly recalled. The concert was the first given under the direction of Mr. Seidl, who succeeded Mr. Thomas.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, NOV. 22, 1891

THE SYMPHONIES.

FIFTH CONCERT.

The programme of the fifth Symphony concert in Music hall, Saturday evening, Nov. 14, was:

Haydn.	Symphony No. 1, (B. & H.) in E flat. Adagio; Allegro con spirito.—Andante.—Minuet.—Finale.
Beethoven.	Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 4, in G major, op. 50. Allegro moderato.—Andante con moto.—Rondo. (Cadenzas by Busoni)
Schumann.	Overture,Scherzo,and Finale. Op. 50.

Soloist: Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni.

It is always a pleasure, a delightful one, to listen to any of Haydn's symphonies, for they all contain melody and harmony which reach into the hidden recesses of the heart and soul. There are no harsh sevenths or other discordant harmonies to be sensationally resolved, to startle and shatter the nervous system, to drive one into hysterics, but beautiful melodies, quiet, soothing harmonies, that bring with them the comforting, satisfying pleasure one seeks at such concerts, but seldom afforded in modern works. Yes, we love old father Haydn's music, even with the modern, brilliant coloring it receives at the hands of our Boston orchestra.

The orchestra has improved considerably since its first concert, and though there is a wide difference in regard to its interpretations and excellent work, there was not much fault to be found with it at this concert. The difference is mostly in the matter of Conductor Nikisch's readings. That is a matter that cannot easily be satisfactorily settled.

Haydn wrote his symphonies when strings predominated, before the present brass quality was known or demanded. If he had lived in our time, or foreseen to what extent Wagner would carry his tremendous tonal, noisy quality into nearly all his orchestral writings, perhaps, he might have injected more breezy effects into some of his symphonies. But he did not live in our time, did not know of Wagner, Brahms or Strauss, therefore, his music ought not to be forced with modern coloring, because it is unfitted for it, was not constructed for such a purpose. Now the finale of the symphony, though played brilliantly well, was never intended to represent a tragedy, nor a brass band; but such was Mr. Nikisch's interpretation of it. The audience enjoyed the symphony greatly and we heard a number remark, "How beautiful!" and wondering why more such music was not given. Evidently they forgot it takes all kinds to make a world.

The concerto, played by Mr. Busoni, created a favorable impression of his abilities as a pianist. Mr. Busoni is quite a young man, pleasing in appearance, but looks more like a student than a full grown artist. He gave the impression that he was nervous and excited. However, his playing showed no symptoms of excitement or nervousness; on the other hand, there he was perfectly at home. His entire performance, as a carefully studied, well prepared public lesson, was a fine success. Mr. Busoni has well trained fingers; some of his scales were truly delicious, presenting a contrast to his octave playing and chords, which were stiff and hard. He made the concerto musical, and showed himself a musician of good parts in the cadenzas of his own he introduced. Further, the orchestra subordinated itself to him to a greater degree than we have ever heard it before to any soloist. He was heartily applauded and recalled. It was apparent the orchestra took a deep interest in the pianist, for they showed it demonstratively. Thus, Mr. Busoni's path is strewed with flowers, and his success here made secure.

The Schumann overture, scherzo and finale was remarkably well played, showing this composer in one of his happiest moods, the leading of which, by Mr. Nikisch, was admirable in nearly all respects. This concert proved the most satisfactory of any so far this season.

JAMES M. TRACY.

Mme. Lillian Nordica will make her last appearance before returning to England at the second Cecilia concert, Jan. 28.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

ESTABLISHED IN 1862.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER, 21, 1891.

Everything connected with the fifth Symphony programme was classic. The composers were Haydn, Beethoven and Schumann, and the pianist, representing the personal element, is a strict disciple of the severe, formal school, of which in Hummel older minds see the ideal exponent. Any symphony by Haydn is agreeable once in a while, say every five years, but the world is too full of other things to permit dwelling long over the piquant artlessness of the Kappelmeister of Esterhazy. The symphony played last Saturday was in E-flat, numbered one in the edition of Breitkopf and Härtel. Schumann was represented by the 'Overture, Scherzo and Finale,' for the first time here under Mr. Nikisch. The work was given a great performance. The winner of the prize at the Rubinstein contest at Moscow in 1890, Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, was the pianist, the concerto being Beethoven's fourth, in G, with the two cadenzas added which were a part of the competitory thesis which resulted successfully for Mr. Busoni. The cadenzas are admirable as music, but modern in manner. Mr. Busoni plays exquisitely.

The second Adamowski Quartette concert showed marked improvement in their playing. Schubert's A-minor quartette, Rheinberger's piano quartette in E-flat, with Clayton Johns as pianist, and the 'Romanza' from Grieg's G-minor quartette were the ensemble numbers. Miss Julie E. Wyman added her luscious voice to the concert, singing songs by Paladilhe, Godard and Clayton Johns. Mr. Adamowski has worked hard these last years, and both as solo violinist and quartette leader has gained in artistic stature.

The programme for the Symphony concert to-night includes Lalo's overture, 'Le Roi d'Ys,' Raff's symphony, 'Leonore,' songs with piano sung by Miss Marguerite Hall, and a new suite for orchestra and violin by Mr. Loeffler, in which the composer will play the violin part.

The second concert by the Kneisel Quartette will be given at Union Hall next Monday evening.

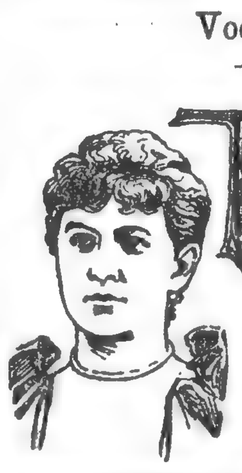
Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, NOV. 22, 1891.

Novelties Played by the Symphony Orchestra.

Notable Assemblage of Famous Artists in Music Hall.

Hauk Opera Season—Instrumental and Vocal Recitals.



MARGUERITE HALL.

THERE was plenty of variety and novelty in the programme given in Music Hall last evening by the Symphony orchestra, with the assistance of Miss Marguerite Hall and Mr. C. M. Loeffler as soloists. Lalo's "Le Roi d' Ys" overture, played for the first time here, and Raff's "Lenore" symphony were the orchestral contributions, and in his reading of both of these selections Conductor Nikisch was most successful. The overture is an impressive and elaborately orchestrated composition. The story of the opera is founded on a grewsome Breton legend, and the music is almost as sombre as is the subject it represents.

The familiar "Lenore" symphony has seldom been given a more enjoyable interpretation. Its grand harmonic effects and splendid contrasts of tonal colors were delightfully set forth.

Mr. Loeffler played for the first time in public his recently completed suit for violin and orchestra entitled "Les Veillees de 'l Ukraine." Mr. Loeffler has been a member of the Symphony orchestra since its organization, and as a soloist he has long held the regard of patrons of these concerts.

He has written several other works of merit, but the suit heard yesterday must be considered as decidedly his best effort.

A collection of short tales by a Russian author is said to have furnished the composer with material for musical treatment. His melodies are bright and pleasing, at times suggestive of many familiar tunes, but always showing originality in manner of presentment. The four movements, each independent of the other, are notable throughout for brilliancy and variety of harmonic effects. Mr. Loeffler naturally gave a charming interpretation of the work, and he received satisfactory support from the orchestra. Enthusiastic plaudits recalled him twice after the performance.

Miss Marguerite Hall is a native of Boston, and has often sung here in public, but during the last few years she has been in Europe. She received a very cordial welcome, and generous applause rewarded her efforts. Her voice is a rather high and light, but very pleasing contralto, and her execution shows that she has had the benefit of excellent training. She sang a ballad by Henschal, "There was an Ancient King," with orchestra, and three Schubert songs with piano accompaniment.

The announcements for the next concert are: Overture, "Iphigenie en Aulis" (Wagner ending), Gluck; concerto for violin in D major, op. 77, Brahms; symphony in C major, Schubert; soloist, Mr. Adolph Brodsky.

Boston Post.

MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 23, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The programme of the sixth Symphony concert, given in Music Hall, Saturday evening, was as follows:

Overture, "Le Roi d'Ys" (First time in Boston.)	Lalo
"There Was An Ancient King" (First time in Boston.)	Henschel
"Les Veillées de l'Ukraine" (First time.)	Loeffler
(a) Liebesbotschhaft (b) An die Leyer (c) Rastlose Liebe	Schubert
Symphony in E "Lenore"	Raff

It will be seen by a glance that the programme was rich in novelties. It is well to gratify legitimate musical curiosity, to give our audiences an opportunity of hearing works that excite attention in foreign cities, to encourage composers of our own town when it can be done with safety. As to the intrinsic value of the compositions that were heard last week for the first time,—that is another matter. And although it may seem ungracious, there is no denying the fact that the concert was too long.

Lalo, a composer of strong convictions, won success with exceeding difficulty. The history of the composition and production of "Le Roi d'Ys is a long story of the composer's labor, independence, trials and tribulations. He finally conquered, and since the opera was brought out at the Opéra-Comique in 1888 it has had at least 130 representations in Paris. Before it gained the stage extracts were heard in the concert halls of Paris and the overture became popular. The concert version of this overture, it is said, is more elaborate than the one that now serves as a prelude to the opera, but the clarinet solo, the 'cello phrase, and the finale are practically unchanged. It seems doubtful whether the overture of Saturday evening will be a favorite concert number. Detached from the opera that follows, it must be viewed as pure music without suggestion of textual programme. The great majority of the audience were unacquainted with the plot of the libretto, for the story told in the programme book is the old legend, and the story of the opera is a different one. Therefore the themes did not suggest characters or situations. An opera overture is apt to suffer dramatically when played as a concert number. To be sure, there are a few exceptions, but even the "Freischuetz" is made more glorious by its hints at Samiel and Agathe, and the Prelude to Carmen is an epitome of the opera—only the operas must be first known before the overtures can be fully appreciated. It would then be unfair to judge of the merits of the overture of "Le Roi d'Ys" from the dramatic standpoint. As music pure and simple it seems to be a very carefully constructed work, laboriously thought out and deliberately built up. The themes are sombre and the coloring of the thematic development is dark. Strength is more noticeable than brilliancy, although the 'cello episode and the finale are very effective. It was finely played and well received.

Mr. C. M. Loeffler, the well-known and deservedly esteemed violinist, studied composition in Berlin and Paris, and his works are as yet in manuscript. The suite played last week shows that his studies were neither perfunctory nor idle. It is called after a collection of stories by Gogol, in which tales of Little Russia are told, grave and gay, and even in the gaiety, sadness enters. The wanderings of the stories are reflected in the music of Mr. Loeffler, for the suite is undeniably diffuse. It perplexes also in this; it is full of contrasts which do not contrast; there is also much thematic treatment that singularly enough does not strike the hearer as thematic development. For instance, the first movement abounds in most musician-like devices to vary rhythm and harmony, but it is so elaborate in its detail that the whole barely escapes the reproach of monotony. The two numbers that follow are unlike and yet they are alike, and the contrasts are so subtly devised that they pass unnoticed, especially as there is nearly the same character in the themes and nearly the same orchestral color throughout the three movements. With the finale comes a welcome change. There are delightful episodes throughout the work and many traces of the skilled musician. With its rhythmic shiftings, its very diffuseness, its predominating gray, its jollity which is momentary and its melancholy which is tinged with irony, it is very close to the spirit of Gogol. Mr. Loeffler has also shown himself the conscientious musician in the writing of the solo violin part. He has dismissed from his mind the cheap glories of virtuosoship, and the solo is a necessary part of the whole. It is never obtrusive and the player must think of the composer and not merely of himself. It is needless to add that the solo part was admirably played and the accompaniment of the orchestra was sympathetic. Mr. Loeffler was most warmly welcomed when he stood upon the stage and very heartily applauded after the finale.

Such romantic symphonies as the "Lenore" appeal strongly to the musical nature of Mr. Nikisch, and in leading them he is generally successful. And so though exceptions might have been taken here and there to readings, and though the performance was not technically perfect, still the symphony was given with such passion and with such an appreciation of its beauties, that it would be perhaps captions to dwell upon the slight blemishes. I have spoken of the beauties of the work which are many; alas, there are also waste places, tedious digressions, cheap effects and open vulgarity. Still it will remain as a favorable example of the writings of a man of no ordinary degree of talent.

Miss Marguerite Hall sang Henschel's setting of Heine's simple and pathetic verses, which have already tempted Grieg and Rubinstein. Henschel's version for contralto and orchestra is ambitious and ineffective. Bombastic platitudes drive out dramatic directness and the intense simplicity of genuine passion. Nor has Miss Hall the voice and breadth of style to ennoble the intrinsically commonplace. Her other songs, though they are not among the more interesting of Schubert's muse, gave her a better opportunity. But Miss Hall is not at home in a room of the size of Music Hall.

The programme of the next concert is as follows: Gluck's overture to "Iphigenie en Aulis"; Brahms' concerto for violin in D major: and Schubert's C major symphony. Mr. Brodsky will be the violinist.

PHILIP HALE.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 23, 1891.

The Symphony Concert.

It was a long programme, that of Saturday night, but so varied that no sense of ennui could have been felt by any catholic-minded auditor. The overture to Lalo's "Roi d'Ys" was an interesting piece of scoring, and its sharp contrasts and fiery moods suited excellently to Mr. Nikisch's brilliancy of reading. It had a superabundance of brass and kettledrum, against which the very dainty touches of woodwind harmony came like flowers in a desert. It was pleasant to hear the horn played like a horn again, and not in the trombone-like manner of recent concerts. The boast has been made that our conductor never reads a Boston criticism, but to all appearances the musicians of the orchestra do—and sometimes profit by it, since no one seated in an orchestra can judge of the effects he produces, so well as an auditor seated at a reasonable distance from the centre of disturbance. The cello obligato in this overture was beautifully played by Mr. Schroeder.

Miss Marguerite Hall has not been heard in our concert halls since she became a London favorite. Her voice is sweet and sympathetic, but scarcely competent to cope with an entire orchestra, and therefore her group of Schubert lieder, with piano accompaniment, was much better than the rather pretentious setting of "Der Alte Koenig" by Henschel. One cannot help preferring the simpler legendary setting by Grieg. The charming personality of the singer, and her direct and unaffected style, won the heartiest applause, which was certainly deserved in the Schubert songs. But when Mr. Loeffler appeared to play the solo part in his own latest composition there was what is generally termed "an ovation." And the violinist immediately set himself to earning this advance payment of appreciation. To speak of his performance first;—it was perfect in almost every detail, sometimes lacking a little in force, but even this was not to be said of the broad G string passages of the second movement, while the end was scintillating and dashing in the highest degree.

As a composition the work seemed fluent and at times very characteristic, but a trifle too long for what it had to say. There was a lack of thematic material after the second movement, and the second and third movements were not in much contrast with each other. The first two movements are the best part of the work, although the folk-dance vein of the finale also calls for praise. The beginning of the composition (I had almost forgotten to state that its title is "Les Veillées de l'Ukraine) is excellent, and the folk-music element is strongly represented, as it ought to be, around a Ukrainian fireside. Kettledrums at the very first bar hold the attention, and the pastoral musette, which is of course apportioned to the oboe, is very dainty and in keeping with the spirit of the scene..

Altogether the composer shows considerable grace and ease in his treatment of the woodwind passages. The second movement is a Rune. "Runes are the Scandinavian alphabet," says Carlyle in his "Hero Worship," but they are also more; they are the dark and mysterious legends that have come down even from the ancient days of Odin; less majestic than the Saga, they are impressive in a different manner, as a ghost story differs from an epic. The oboe was again prominent here, and its phrases were imitated on the solo violin—a pleasant conversation, but one missed the sombre tints with which a Grieg would have invested the legend.

The third movement was a Dumka, the dignified northern dance. It would have been better to have had either the Russian Kamarinskaia or the Bohemian Furiante here to contrast with the contemplative character of what had preceded. The unison introduction was characteristic enough, and the passages in harmonics were brilliant, and brilliantly played, yet this movement could be shortened to advantage. The fire and brio of the last movement made some amends, and one can congratulate the composer on having added a new work to the repertoire, and the violinist on having performed his own composition so well.

Now came the end of the concert with Raff's "Lenore" symphony. If "Im Walde" is Raff's best symphony, "Lenore" is certainly his most popular one, and the public never wearies of hearing the march which bears such a curious resemblance to one of Franz Lachner's. The symphony was the best piece of work that the orchestra have done this season; there was fire and "Schwung" in every measure, and for once one can compliment the precision and shading. The flutist deserves a word of especial commendation for smooth work in the second movement. The great crescendo and diminuendo of the march could scarcely have been improved upon, and the spectral ride of the finale was all that heart could wish.

Yet it is not so great as that other ride of ghosts, in the finale of the "Im Walde" symphony, and, for the matter of that, no supernatural horse-flesh will ever seem wonderful in music after the whinneyings of Wagner's "Ride of the Walkyries," while in the domain of downright terror, Berlioz's "Ride to Hades" must always take the horrific palm. To be sure, the "Lenore" is not the most difficult or subtle work in the world to play, but the statement must be made that it was played magnificently.

LOUIS C. ELSON.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 22, 1891.

The Symphony Concert--Novelties on the Programme.

Miss Marguerite Hall and Mr. C. M. Loeffler the Soloists—Great Success of Col. Mapleson's Artists' Concert—The Minnie Hauk Italian Opera Season—Its Notable Artists—News Notes.

The symphony concert programme of last evening fairly shone with new compositions, and Conductor Nikisch gave his audience an abundance of subjects for thought and reflection.

After affording a first hearing of Lalo's bright, tuneful and fascinating overture to "Le Roi d'ys," a composition fully realizing all expectations, Miss Marguerite Hall was introduced in a ballad, "There Was an Ancient King," written by Georg Henschel for contralto and orchestra.

Miss Hall's singing in local concerts two seasons ago was so enjoyable that her reappearance promised to make a pleasant feature of the evening's programme, and, although this promise was not fully realized, the singer had good cause for satisfaction in the recognition her merits gained. Mr. Henschel's work demands larger and broader treatment than Miss Hall's present abilities make possible for her, but she sung the charming ballad with such taste and expression that her audience was justified in giving the applause which followed this number.

Mr. Loeffler, who shares the leading desk of the orchestra with Mr. Kneisel, was then heard in his own suite for violin and orchestra, "Les Veillees de l'Ukraine." The work is in four movements, the themes of which gave evidences of being founded upon the Russian folk songs so little known and so fascinating in their quaint beauty when they are known. Though the suite makes the fourth important work completed by Mr. Loeffler, its performance made his introduction to a Boston audience as a composer, and it is pleasant to say that he gained as favorable an indorsement for his suite as he had formerly received in these concerts as a player. The solo instrument is not given great prominence, save in the finale, but Mr. Loeffler's playing was at all times enjoyable, and in the final movement his brilliant performance of the difficult passages for the solo instrument gave new and conclusive evidence of his skill as a virtuoso.

Miss Hall was heard again at the piano, with Mr. Nikisch as accompanist, where she sang Schubert's "Liebesbotschaft," "An Die Leyer," and "Rastlose Liebe," in a very pleasing fashion, winning a great deal of applause and a recall.

Mr. Nikisch ended his programme with a highly interesting performance of Raff's "Leonore" symphony, in which the tone pictures were given in a way to delight the audience.

Next Saturday the soloist is to be Mr. Adolph Brodsky, the new leading violin of the Damrosch orchestra, and the programme will be Gluck's overture, "Iphigenie en Aulis" (Wagner's ending); Brahms' concerto for violin in D major, op. 77, and Schubert's symphony in C major.

Mme. Lillian Nordica made her appearance at the first public rehearsal of the New York Philharmonic Society on Friday afternoon, and also at last evening's concert at the Metropolitan Opera House, and on both occasions gained a grand ovation by her contribution to the programme. She sung a scene and aria from Gluck's "Armida" and "The Erlking," by Schubert, both selections winning the most spontaneous and enthusiastic applause for the fair singer.

The second of the concerts by the Adamowski quartet was given on Monday evening last before a large and musical company. Among the audience were Mr. and Mrs. Eliot Hubbard, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Codman, Dr. and Mrs. C. E. Inches, Mr. and Mrs. L. Montgomery Sears, Mrs. May Bachert and Mr. C. W. Sanderson.

Boston Journal.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1891.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

When Conductor Nikisch was called to preside over and direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra it was understood that "home talent" should be encouraged, and that American compositions worthy of attention should be given a hearing. This most desirable decision was brought into effect Saturday night, when Mr. C. M. Loeffler, one of the original members of the Symphony Orchestra, was honored with a composer's and soloist's place on the evening's programme. Although Boston cannot strictly claim him as her own, still he has become so thoroughly identified with the best musical efforts and interests of the Hub that his claim upon us voluntarily occasions a reciprocal feeling. The spontaneous outburst of appreciation that welcomed him when he mounted the platform was proof positive of the numberless admirers and friends he has in our musical community. His suite for violin and orchestra founded upon the Russian author, Gogul's series of short stories, shows the effect that such sketches can produce on the musician's mind. We speak of the originality of certain productions, but no one can tell the degree of influence that the author has upon the composer, the composer upon the poet or the poet upon the artist. So, too, the simple, enjoyable fireside tales that Mr. Loeffler portrayed in sweet sounds, in the four movements of his work, might inspire some bard to tell his story in a little better way, and so the influence of really good works has no limit.

Miss Marguerite Hall, the first contralto soloist heard in this season's symphonies, and a very prepossessing young singer. was heard most favorably in the cluster of German songs with Mr. Nickisch presiding at the piano.

She received much applause, a recall and a beautiful floral offering. She possesses a voice of good quality, and sings with excellent taste and expression.

The ballad, "There Was an Ancient King," for contralto and orchestra, by Henschel, although disappointingly short, demanded the powers of a great artist, which she was unable to meet with satisfaction, yet with study and maturity her voice gives promise of much ability. The orchestral numbers, Lalo's overture of "Le Roi d' Ys," opening the programme, and heard for the first time in Boston, together with the closing symphony of Raff's "Lenore" in E, were given an excellent interpretation, the tone pictures, harmony and exquisite feeling of the latter being worthy of special commendation. Somewhat in contrast to the evening's programme is the one announced for next week, which comprises Gluck's overture of "Iphigenie en Aulis." Brahm's concerto for violin in D major and Schubert's symphony in C major. Mr. Adolph Brodsky, the superb violinist and newly imported concert master of the New York Symphony Orchestra, will be the soloist.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1891.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The programme of the sixth concert was:

Lalo: Overture to "Le Roi d'Ys."
Henschel: Ballad, "There was an ancient king," for contralto and orchestra.
Loeffler: Suite, "Des Veillées de l'Ukraine," for violin and orchestra.
Schubert: Songs with pianoforte:
  Liebesbotschaft.
  An die Leyer.
  Rastlose Liebe.
Raff: Symphony No. 5, in E major, "Lenore," Op. 177.

Miss Marguerite Hall was the singer, and Mr. C. M. Loeffler the violinist.

Lalo's "Roi d'Ys" overture is a brilliant piece of writing, gorgeously scored; when one has said this one has said about all. It was finely played. Mr. Loeffler's suite shows us this excellent young artist in a new light. The work is in four movements: Introduction and Pastorale; Rune; Dumka; Finale. The thematic material is Russian, perhaps in origin, certainly in character, throughout; yet it is noticeable that the characteristic Slavonic accent of the music is somewhat toned down, and cured of its savagery. Mr. Loeffler's work shows what an advantage it is to a composer, no matter how poetic and imaginative his spirit may be, to have a care to express himself in a coherent musical form. The music gains thereby, just as the most fanciful poetry gains from perfection of rhyme and rhythm. This suite is remarkable, both for the inherent charm of its themes and the excellence of its musical workmanship. The handling of the orchestra, too, is admirable, although the young composer may seem at moments a little by the head with the orchestral riches at his command, and rather lavish in his coloring. The solo part might easily have been given more prominence by being shown against a more neutral background. Still one can hardly quarrel with a composer-virtuoso for voluntary self-effacement. Mr. Loeffler played admirably as ever, and was as admirably seconded by the orchestra. Composition and performance were equally, and highly, enjoyable. Bravissimo!

Raff's "Lenore" was splendidly played. The great length of this symphony, coupled with its not very conspicuous strength, makes it rather a large dose to take at the end of an already long programme. But what could be done for it, under the circumstances, was done by Mr. Nikisch and the orchestra.

Mr. Henschel's ballad made a rather indeterminate impression. One could feel it to be essentially musical, with now and then a dramatic touch; but, upon the whole, it seemed lacking in true effectiveness. Neither did Miss Hall's singing add much life to it. But she recouped herself wonderfully in the Schubert songs. We had almost given up all hope of hearing such singing of Schubert, and were completely carried away. That is true Lieder-singing! True and warm in sentiment, and always lyric in style.

The next programme is: Gluck, overture to "Iphigénie en Aulide"; Brahms, violin concerto in D, op. 77; Schubert, symphony in C. Mr. Adolph Brodsky will be the violinist.

Mme. Nordica appeared at the public rehearsal and concert last week of the New York Philharmonic Society, of which Mr. Seidl is now the director. She sang an aria from Gluck's "Armida" and Schubert's "The Erl King." She is credited with making a brilliant success.

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET.

SEVENTH SEASON—1891-92.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

Mr. FRANZ KNEISEL, 1st Violin. Mr. LOUIS SVECENSKI, Viola.
Mr. OTTO ROTH, 2d Violin. Mr. ALWIN SCHROEDER, Violoncello.

WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF

Mr. FERRUCCIO B. BUSONI.

II. CONCERT.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 23, AT 8 P.M.

PROGRAMME.

HAYDN. QUARTET in D.
Allegro moderato.—Adagio cantabile.—
Minuetto.—Finale, (Presto).

SCHUMANN. QUARTET in A, op. 41, No. 3.
Andante espressivo; leading to Allegro molto moderato—A major.
Second movement { Assai agitato. Un poco adagio. Tempo risoluto, } —F sharp minor.
Adagio molto.—D major.
Allegro molto vivace—A major.

SINDING. QUARTET for PIANO and STRINGS in E minor.
Allegro ma non troppo.—Andante.—
Scherzo (Prestissimo.)—Finale. (Allegro vivace).
(First time in Boston.)

The date of the Third Concert is December 28.

The Piano used is a Steinway.

>

Boston Post

TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTETTE.

The programme of the second of this course given in Union Hall, last evening was as follows:

Hadyn—Quartette in D.
Allegro moderato, Adagio cantabile, Minnetto. Finale, (Presto).
Shuman—Quartette in A op. 41, No. 3
Andante expression, leading to allegro molto moderato—A major.
Second movement { Assai agitato Un poco adagia Tempo risoluto } F sharp minor.
Adagio molto—D major.
Allegro molto vivace—A major.
Linding—Quintette for piano and strings in E minor.
Allegro ma non troppo, andante. Sherzo (Presteasimo.)
Finale (allegro vivace). (First time in Boston).

The programme was a fine one, and appealed to the taste of the large number of true musicians who were present. Even those who usually complain at the length of a programme which req uires two hours close attention from its hearers, were disposed to forget their prejudices for the evening at least.

The Hadyn composition was familiar to many, but the excellent rendition gave it a new value. The adagio cantabile and minuetto were particularly effective from the contrast of the treatment of the theme. In the adagio the sustained notes gave the effect of grand organ chords, but the minuetto brought a change which was pleasing, it was strongly marked, but of a lighter character.

Shumann is not a favorite composer with many. His compositions are harmonious, but the themes are difficult to follow. Opus 41 is perhaps as pleasing to a real lover of music as anything of his that could be played by such a small number of instruments. It is long and somewhat tedious at the close.

The last number is new. It is a composition of Christian Linding, a Norwegian composer, who was born in 1856, and is a brother of Otto Ludwig Linding, the painter, and of Stephen Abel Linding, the sculptor—a talented family. Christian studied music in Christiania, and afterwards in Dresden, Munich and Leipzig, and was a teacher of music and a composer at that place for some time. Since February, 1890, he has lived in Copenhagen. Linding has written many piano pieces, several songs with piano accompaniment, a romance and a suite for violin and piano, and this quintette.

This work was first played at a concert in [illegible] on the 4th of November, 1887, with Frau Erica Nissen at the piano, and later at the Norwegian Musical Festival, and then at Leipzig. It was performed in London last year and recently at Munich. It is a remarkable work. Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni, who recently appeared with the Symphony orchestra, undertook the piano part of the composition and did it in a finished manner. He is a pianist of great ability, and has a marvellous touch. His execution is fine and his technique pretty near perfection. VIVIAN.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 24, 1891.

The Kneisel Quartette.

The second of the Kneisel Quartette concerts was given in Union Hall last evening and attracted a large and enthusiastic audience. The following programme was presented: Haydn's Quartette in D; Schumann's Quartette in A, op 41, No. 3; and Sinding's Quintette for Piano and Strings, in E minor. The playing of the quartette was marked by that artistic finish and attention to details which always attends its work; the precision, phrasing and shading, and the general ensemble being as near absolute perfection as anything heard here lately.

The charming Haydn Quartette was beautifully rendered, the Adagio being played with rare sweetness and expression, and the finale with marvellous daintiness, and a crisp, clean cut style that was refreshing. The interpretation and rendering of the grand Schumann Quartette was superb, the passion and fire of the second movement and the brilliancy and vigor of the finale being especially noteworthy.

Mr. Ferruccio Busoni was the assisting artist, and his choice of the Sinding quintette was a happy one for the display of his abilities as a pianist. This work is certainly a remarkable one, notable for its great originality, vigor and wonderfully clever use of the subject matter. It is an intensely modern work, somewhat bizarre and theatrical perhaps in places, but none the less remarkable as a striking and original work. The first movement is very complex, and the contrapuntal ingenuity displayed impresses the hearer with a feeling of admiration for the powers of the composer. Of the other movements the intermezzo is the most striking; this is a brilliant, dashing sort of a Scandinavian dance, and both it and the finale fairly bristle with technical difficulties for the players; in fact the whole quintette calls for great skill and ability, especially on the part of the pianist. Mr. Busoni was more than equal to the task, and his playing of the piano part was excellent, carrying the audience fairly by storm.

It is hard to recall any more perfect piano playing than that which Mr. Busoni gave last evening. He possesses a sure, fluent, elastic, in fact a superb technique; his playing combines dash, vigor and brilliancy with rare poetic feeling and refinement. His touch is one of the chief charms of his playing; it is wonderful for its velvety delicacy and at the same time wonderful power and crispness. It is hard to select any special point for commendation in his playing, as he possesses to a high degree those attributes which combine to make a thoroughly well-balanced artist. Mr. Busoni is a welcome addition to the ranks of our resident pianists, and his superb playing of last evening proves his right to be classed among the foremost artists of America.

[illegible]

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTETTE.

The Kneisel Quartette proved last night the strong hold that they have upon the musical public, for, in spite of the downpour as well as the flood of musical attractions that have deluged the town for the past few weeks, a large and enthusiastic audience nearly filled Union Hall to refresh themselves with the choice treat that this thoroughly finished and polished corps of artists had to offer.

One can scarcely over praise the refined and classical interpretation that was given Haydn's beautiful quartette in D. Such a rendition of the adagio cantabile is most inspiring and uplifting. In this the depth of musical thought and feeling, the beauty and purity of melodious expression reveals the wonderful creative genius of the master composer. 'Tis sufficient to say that one rarely hears this quartette given with finer taste and expression than do Mr. Franz Kneisel and his able associates give it. Could anything be more delicately fanciful and playful than the finale of this same number!

The andante expressivo of Schumann's quartette in A proved a movement of most enjoyable coloring, shading and rhythm. All the movements of this number are worthy of careful study and consideration. In fact, the closer one analyzes them the greater the enjoyment becomes.

The quartette for piano and strings in E minor by Christian Sinding, a Norwegian composer, bore the peculiarly original characteristic of his nationality, in movement, ryhthm and harmony. Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, heard so favorably at the Symphony concert two weeks ago, again gave assurance of his claim as a thorough musician of rare ability in this number. His technique and accuracy, fine touch and forceful expression, were especially noticeable in the development of the effective themes, and he received the hearty approval of his interested hearers.

December 28 is the date of the next concert of this series.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, NOV. 24.

KNEISEL QUARTET.

Enjoyable Concert Given in Union Hall Before a Large Audience.

The second concert of the season by the Kneisel quartet was given in Union Hall last evening, to a very large audience, which enjoyed a musical treat in the fullest sense of the word.

Haydn's quartet in D major opened the concert. The performers seemed at their very best, by the finely artistic ensemble in which the four movements were rendered.

The quartet in A major, op. 41, No. 3, by Schumann, again brought the wonderful unity of the performers to the fore. In the first movement, an andante expressivo, was given with great expression and delicacy. The second movement, consisting of three short subdivisions, fairly bristling with comterpoint, was rendered so finely that the critical audience was positively enthusiastic in applause.

The closing number of the programme was a quartet for piano and strings by Sinding, a composer strange to Boston. The quartet is a work of modern character, full of weird themes, all of which are admirably treated; especially is this so in the second movement, the andante.

The harmony in this movement is rich in grand effects. The last movement, allegro vivace, is full of difficulties in octave and scale passages for the piano.

Signor F. Busoni, pianist, assisted the quartette in this work. His playing was most conscientious throughout, and the delicate passages with which the work abounds were most daintily rendered. The three assisting performers ably seconded the pianist's artistic efforts.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 147.

TUESDAY, NOV. 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

The second of the season's concerts by the Kneisel quartet at Union Hall, last evening, called out another fine audience of subscribing patrons and others, fully showing the strong following enjoyed by this most capable organization.

The programme was made with Mr. Kneisel's usual excellent good judgment, and included, as its several composition, the quartet in D major, No. 67, by Haydn; that in A major, op. 41, by Schumann, and the quintet in E minor by Sinding, an interesting novelty, in which Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, the pianist, gave his valuable assistance, his skill as a player in chamber music being delightfully prominent.

Mr. Kneisel and his associates of the quartet gave their best efforts, as usual, in their performances during the evening, and won well merited applause for all their good work.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1891.

Union Hall: The Kneisel Quartet.

The Kneisel Quartet, assisted by Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, gave its second chamber concert in Union Hall, last evening, the programme being—

Haydn: Quartet in D.
Schumann: Quartet in A, Op. 41, No. 3.
Sinding; Pianoforte Quintet in E minor.

The performance of the beautiful Haydn quartet was one of the most perfect pieces of playing the Kneisels have ever done. Especially remarkable was the virtuosity shown in the Finale; the delicate, nimble little movement passed by like a breath on the window pane. The composition itself is a perfect gem. The familiar Schumann quartet was also admirably played.

But the hit of the evening—and for matter of that, of the season, so far—was the quintet by Sinding. This work by a young Norwegian bears many marks both of originality and power; for one thing, it does not recall the Schumann quintet, op. 44, which fact is in itself something of a novelty, as modern pianoforte quintets go. Then the very frequent use of the stringed instruments as an independent string quartet, contrasted as such with the pianoforte, smacks of novelty. Something of the sort is done in the slow movement of Hans von Bronsart's G minor pianoforte trio, where there are some quite extended passages in four-part harmony played by the violin and 'cello in double-stopping; but Sinding carries out the idea much farther. How well this quintet will wear is a matter of conjecture mainly; but certainly one of the four movements, the Scherzo, shows pretty plain signs of real genius. The whole work, if not especially remarkable for melodic invention—the lover of coincidences may like to note a striking similarity between the theme of the first Allegro ma non troppo and a Leitmotiv in Otto Singer's cantata, "The Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers"—seems stoutly put together, and is immensely interesting and brilliant. Mr. Busoni's playing of the piano for the part cannot be spoken of in terms of too warm admiration; it was absolutely superb at every point. The third concert comes on Monday evening, Dec. 28.

UNION HALL, 48 BOYLSTON STREET.

SEVENTH SEASON—1891-92.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

Mr. FRANZ KNEISEL, 1st Violin. Mr. LOUIS SVECENSKI, Viola.
Mr. OTTO ROTH, 2d Violin. Mr. ALWIN SCHROEDER, Violoncello.

WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF

Mr. FERRUCCIO D. BUSONI.

II. CONCERT.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 23, AT 8 P. M.

PROGRAMME.

HAYDN.	QUARTET in D. Allegro moderato.—Adagio cantabile.— Minuetto.—Finale. (Presto).
SCHUMANN.	QUARTET in A, op. 41. No. 3. Andante espressivo: leading to Allegro molto moderato—A major. Second movement { Assai agitato. Un poco adagio. Tempo risoluto. } —F sharp minor. Adagio molto.—D major. Allegro molto vivace—A major
SINDING.	QUARTET for PIANO and STRINGS in E minor. Allegro ma non troppo.—Andante.— Scherzo (Prestissimo.).—Finale (Allegro vivace) (First time in Boston.)

The date of the Third Concert is December 28.

The Piano used is a Steinway.

Boston Post

TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTETTE.

The programme of the second of this course given in Union Hall, last evening was as follows:

Hadyn—Quartette in D.
Allegro moderato, Adagio cantabile, Minuetto. Finale, (Presto).
Shuman—Quartette in A op. 41, No. 3
Andante expression, leading to allegro molto moderato—A major.
Second movement { Assai agitato Un poco adagia Tempo risoluto } F sharp minor.
Adagio molto—D major.
Allegre molto vivace—A major.
Linding—Quintette for piano and strings in E minor.
Allegro ma non troppo, andante. Sherzo (Prestessimo.)
Finale (allegro vivace). (First time in Boston).

The programme was a fine one, and appealed to the taste of the large number of true musicians who were present. Even those who usually complain at the length of a programme which req uires two hours close attention from its hearers, were disposed to forget their prejudices for the evening at least.

The Hadyn composition was familiar to many, but the excellent rendition gave it a new value. The adagio cantabile and minuetto were particularly effective from the contrast of the treatment of the theme. In the adagio the sustained notes gave the effect of grand organ chords, but the minuetto brought a change which was pleasing, it was strongly marked, but of a lighter character.

Shumann is not a favorite composer with many. His compositions are harmonious, but the themes are difficult to follow. Opus 41 is perhaps as pleasing to a real lover of music as anything of his that could be played by such a small number of instruments. It is long and somewhat tedious at the close.

The last number is new. It is a composition of Christian Linding, a Norwegian composer, who was born in 1856, and is a brother of Otto Ludwig Linding, the painter. and of Stephen Abel Linding, the sculptor—a talented family. Christian studied music in Christiana, and afterwards in Dresden, Munich and Leipzig, and was a teacher of music and a composer at that place for some time. Since February, 1890, he has lived in Copenhagen. Linding has written many piano pieces, several songs with piano accompaniment, a romance and a suite for violin and piano, and this quintette.

This work was first played at a concert in Copenhegan on the 4th of November, 1887, with Fran Erica Nissen at the piano, and later on at the Norwegian Musical Festival, and then at Leipzig. It was performed in London last year: and recently at Munich. It is a remarkable work. Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni, who recently appeared with the Symphony Orchestra, undertook the piano part of the composition and did it in a finished manner. He is a pianist of great ability, and has a marvellous touch. His execution is fine and his technique pretty near perfection. VIVIAN.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 24, 1891.

The Kneisel Quartette.

The second of the Kneisel Quartette concerts was given in Union Hall last evening and attracted a large and enthusiastic audience. The following programme was presented: Haydn's Quartette in D; Schumann's Quartette in A, op 41, No. 3; and Sinding's Quintette for Piano and Strings, in E minor. The playing of the quartette was marked by that artistic finish and attention to details which always attends its work; the precision, phrasing and shading, and the general ensemble being as near absolute perfection as anything heard here lately.

The charming Haydn Quartette was beautifully rendered, the Adagio being played with rare sweetness and expression, and the finale with marvellous daintiness, and a crisp,clean cut style that was refreshing. The interpretation and rendering of the grand Schumann Quartette was superb, the passion and fire of the second movement and the brilliancy and vigor of the finale being especially noteworthy.

Mr. Ferruccio Busoni was the assisting artist, and his choice of the Sinding quintette was a happy one for the display of his abilities as a pianist. This work is certainly a remarkable one, notable for its great originality, vigor and wonderfully clever use of the subject matter. It is an intensely modern work, somewhat bizarre and theatrical perhaps in places, but none the less remarkable as a striking and original work. The first movement is very complex, and the contrapuntal ingenuity displayed impresses the hearer with a feeling of admiration for the powers of the composer. Of the other movements the intermezzo is the most striking; this is a brilliant, dashing sort of a Scandinavian dance, and both it and the finale fairly bristle with technical difficulties for the players; in fact the whole quintette calls for great skill and ability, especially on the part of the pianist. Mr. Busoni was more than equal to the task, and his playing of the piano part was excellent, carrying the audience fairly by storm.

It is hard to recall any more perfect piano playing than that which Mr. Busoni gave last evening. He possesses a sure, fluent, elastic, in fact a superb technique; his playing combines dash, vigor and brilliancy with rare poetic feeling and refinement. His touch is one of the chief charms of his playing; it is wonderful for its velvety delicacy and at the same time wonderful power and crispness. It is hard to select any special point for commendation in his playing, as he possesses to a high degree those attributes which combine to make a thoroughly well-balanced artist. Mr. Busoni is a welcome addition to the ranks of our resident pianists, and his superb playing of last evening proves his right to be classed among the foremost artists of America.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTETTE.

The Kneisel Quartette proved last night the strong hold that they have upon the musical public, for, in spite of the downpour as well as the flood of musical attractions that have deluged the town for the past few weeks, a large and enthusiastic audience nearly filled Union Hall to refresh themselves with the choice treat that this thoroughly finished and polished corps of artists had to offer.

One can scarcely over praise the refined and classical interpretation that was given Haydn's beautiful quartette in D. Such a rendition of the adagio cantabile is most inspiring and uplifting. In this the depth of musical thought and feeling, the beauty and purity of melodious expression reveals the wonderful creative genius of the master composer. 'Tis sufficient to say that one rarely hears this quartette given with finer taste and expression than do Mr. Franz Kneisel and his able associates give it. Could anything be more delicately fanciful and playful than the finale of this same number!

The andante expressivo of Schumann's quartette in A proved a movement of most enjoyable coloring, shading and rhythm. All the movements of this number are worthy of careful study and consideration. In fact, the closer one analyzes them the greater the enjoyment becomes.

The quartette for piano and strings in E minor by Christian Sinding, a Norwegian composer, bore the peculiarly original characteristic of his nationality, in movement, ryhthm and harmony. Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, heard so favorably at the Symphony concert two weeks ago, again gave assurance of his claim as a thorough musician of rare ability in this number. His technique and accuracy, fine touch and forceful expression, were especially noticeable in the development of the effective themes, and he received the hearty approval of his interested hearers.

December 28 is the date of the next concert of this series.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, NOV. 24.

KNEISEL QUARTET.

Enjoyable Concert Given in Union Hall Before a Large Audience.

The second concert of the season by the Kneisel quartet was given in Union Hall last evening, to a very large audience, which enjoyed a musical treat in the fullest sense of the word.

Haydn's quartet in D major opened the concert. The performers seemed at their very best, by the finely artistic ensemble in which the four movements were rendered.

The quartet in A major, op. 41, No. 3, by Schumann, again brought the wonderful unity of the performers to the fore. In the first movement, an andante expressivo, was given with great expression and delicacy. The second movement, consisting of three short subdivisions, fairly bristling with comterpoint, was rendered so finely that the critical audience was positively enthusiastic in applause.

The closing number of the programme was a quartet for piano and strings by Sinding, a composer strange to Boston. The quartet is a work of modern character, full of weird themes, all of which are admirably treated; especially is this so in the second movement, the andante.

The harmony in this movement is rich in grand effects. The last movement, allegro vivace, is full of difficulties in octave and scale passages for the piano.

Signor F. Busoni, pianist, assisted the quartette in this work. His playing was most conscientious throughout, and the delicate passages with which the work abounds were most daintily rendered. The three assisting performers ably seconded the pianist's artistic efforts.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 147.

TUESDAY, NOV. 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

The second of the season's concerts by the Kneisel quartet at Union Hall, last evening, called out another fine audience of subscribing patrons and others, fully showing the strong following enjoyed by this most capable organization.

The programme was made with Mr. Kneisel's usual excellent good judgment, and included, as its several composition, the quartet in D major, No. 67, by Haydn; that in A major, op. 41, by Schumann, and the quintet in E minor by Sinding, an interesting novelty, in which Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, the pianist, gave his valuable assistance, his skill as a player in chamber music being delightfully prominent.

Mr. Kneisel and his associates of the quartet gave their best efforts, as usual, in their performances during the evening, and won well merited applause for all their good work.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1891.

Union Hall: The Kneisel Quartet.

The Kneisel Quartet, assisted by Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, gave its second chamber concert in Union Hall, last evening, the programme being—

Haydn: Quartet in D.
Schumann: Quartet in A, Op. 41, No. 3.
Sinding; Pianoforte Quintet in E minor.

The performance of the beautiful Haydn quartet was one of the most perfect pieces of playing the Kneisels have ever done. Especially remarkable was the virtuosity shown in the Finale; the delicate, nimble little movement passed by like a breath on the window pane. The composition itself is a perfect gem. The familiar Schumann quartet was also admirably played.

But the hit of the evening—and for matter of that, of the season, so far—was the quintet by Sinding. This work by a young Norwegian bears many marks both of originality and power:—for one thing, it does not recall the Schumann quintet, op. 44, which fact is in itself something of a novelty, as modern pianoforte quintets go. Then the very frequent use of the stringed instruments as an independent string quartet, contrasted as such with the pianoforte, smacks of novelty. Something of the sort is done in the slow movement of Hans von Bronsart's G minor pianoforte trio, where there are some quite extended passages in four-part harmony played by the violin and 'cello in double-stopping; but Sinding carries out the idea much farther. How well this quintet will wear is a matter of conjecture mainly; but certainly one of the four movements, the Scherzo, shows pretty plain signs of real genius. The whole work, if not especially remarkable for melodic invention—the lover of coincidences may like to note a striking similarity between the theme of the first Allegro ma non troppo and a Leitmotiv in Otto Singer's cantata, "The Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers"—seems stoutly put together, and is immensely interesting and brilliant. Mr. Busoni's playing of the piano for the part cannot be spoken of in terms of too warm admiration; it was absolutely superb at every point. The third concert comes on Monday evening, Dec. 28.

Who is Christian Sinding? This is the first question which will arise in the mind of everyone who hears this Quintet for the first time, and one withall which ought to be answered. Christian Sinding is a Norwegian composer of great talent. He was born January 11, 1856. and is the younger brother of Otto Ludwig Sinding, the painter, and of Stephen Abel Sinding, the sculptor. Evidently he is one of a talented family. He studied music in Christiania, and afterward in Dresden, Munich and Leipzig, and lived afterwards as a teacher of music, as well as a composer, at Christiania. Since February, 1890, he has lived in Copenhagen. Sinding has written many piano pieces, several songs with piano accompaniment, a Romance and a Suite for violin and piano, and this Quintet. This work was first played at a concert in Copenhagen on the 4th of November, 1887, with Frau Erica Nissen at the piano, and later on at the Norwegian Musical Festival, and then at Leipzig. It was performed in London last year at a concert given by Mons. Sapellnikoff; and has recently been performed in Munich.

The work is so remarkable that it demands more than a mere notice; hence this paper, which will, we hope, make its structure and themes upon which it is built, clear:

Allegro ma non troppo. E minor. C time. The first movement is long and very fully scored, and commences in E minor, C time. The first subject, 1, is given out piano by the pianoforte, the strings playing 2 as a counterpoint above it. These two themes are remarkable in their relation to other motives in the work; in fact there is, more or less, a continuity of motives, or their modifications, in all the movements, with the exception of the Intermezzo. For instance, in the Finale, No. 2, is the basis of the principal subject, and No, 1 forms the second period of the second subject. This is curious, and very original in cyclical music of this kind. These two subjects are worked together at some length and with increasing brilliancy, until we come to the two counter subjects Nos. 3 and 4, which are introduced together, 3 by the viola, and 4 by the violoncello. No. 4 serves later on in the Finale, as the subject of a fugal passage, when the reminiscence is most effective. This brings us to the second subject (No. 5) which is introduced by the piano alone in the key of G major, and its pendant (No. 6) which leads through a chromatic scale to a sea of arpeggios, upon which float Nos. 5 and 6, given out by the strings in unison, and which is answered by No. 5, given out ff in the lowest bass of the piano. This leads to a full close in G major, ending with a shake in chords for the piano, followed by a long A flat, two octaves below played ffz This reminds one very vividly of the effect of the Nightwatchman's horn in Act. 2 of Die Meistersinger, in fact it is the same thing. Then there is a shake in chords on A flat, with the watchman's horn in A natural and again in B flat with a pause, after which the working-out section commences. This begins by Nos. 5a, 2 and 1 being worked together in various keys, and with sundry modifications. Following this, No. 5b is introduced alternately by the second violin and violoncello, and first violin and viola. Then fragments of Nos. 2 and 4 are heard, with scale passages in the strings, ending on a ff chord of the diminished seventh; then No. 3 in an altered form on the piano alone, leading to various modifications of 1 on each of the strings separately, and ending with an octave passage for strings and piano in an extension of the same modification of 1, this section concluding on a dominant pedal. The recapitulation now begins, in which new matter is introduced; but only in the form of further metamorphoses of the themes already given. This concludes with a long chord of the major ninth, when the coda, poco piu mosso, begins. This is formed from Nos. 5, 2 and 1 worked together with various contrapuntal devices, and concludes most brilliantly in a series of chromatic chords. The incessant movement and great vigor of this Allegro will probably strike the hearer more than its contrapuntal ingenuity, and subtlety of device; but it is a remarkable first movement from whatever point we look at it, and cannot fail, with due execution, to be very impressive.

Andante. C major, C time. This begins with an introductory passage of 17 bars for the strings alone, very richly harmonized, which leads on to 7, which is given out on the piano, and in which is a passage, 5a, which we have heard in the first movement. Then 8 is played as a violoncello solo with an accompaniment in chords on the piano, and then after a crescendo and ff passage on the piano, 7 is repeated by the quartet, with a seperate melody above it for the piano. This comes to a full close in C major, when 9 is introduced on the violoncello and is worked at some length with many rhythmical modifications. The movement now becomes more passionate, and 10 is introduced, first by strings, and then by the piano, with an accompaniment of six crotchets in the bar; 9 is then repeated in various parts of the scale, and then 7 in F major, ending in the relative minor. This is followed by 8 in the violoncello accompanied by the piano in triplet quavers in 6 4 time. This leads through a brilliant transitional passage for the piano to 7 given out ff, con tutta forza, with the strings playing in unison a series of scales in all sorts of rhythms. This comes to a full close in C major, and after a few connecting bars the introductory passage, much modified, is repeated con sordini, by the strings alone, and this poetic and beautiful movement comes to an end pp. It is, we think, the most striking and impressive section of the whole work.

Intermezzo Vivace—G major, $\frac{3}{4}$ time. This, which is to all intents and purposes a Scherzo, although not so entitled, begins with 11; and it is entirely built upon this and 12, 13 and 14. The structure is very clear and as the subjects are very marked, they are quite easy to follow. The Scandinavian characteristics are more marked in this than in any of the movements, both rhythmically and harmonically. The middle section, corresponding to the Trio in a Scherzo, is formed upon 14, which is worked with sundry contrapuntal devices, and which finishes with a dominant pedal of 20 bars, leading into the repetition of the first section, which though shortened, is carried out quite regularly. This is a beautifully constructed movement, and is very brilliant and striking, perhaps, on a first hearing, the most striking in the Quintet. It is noteworthy also that this is the only movement in which none of the other themes, which form the work, are used, and out of which no themes are taken to be used elsewhere.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTETTE.

The Kneisel Quartette proved last night the strong hold that they have upon the musical public, for, in spite of the downpour as well as the flood of musical attractions that have deluged the town for the past few weeks, a large and enthusiastic audience nearly filled Union Hall to refresh themselves with the choice treat that this thoroughly finished and polished corps of artists had to offer.

One can scarcely over praise the refined and classical interpretation that was given Haydn's beautiful quartette in D. Such a rendition of the adagio cantabile is most inspiring and uplifting. In this the depth of musical thought and feeling, the beauty and purity of melodious expression reveals the wonderful creative genius of the master composer. 'Tis sufficient to say that one rarely hears this quartette given with finer taste and expression than do Mr. Franz Kneisel and his able associates give it. Could anything be more delicately fanciful and playful than the finale of this same number!

The andante expressivo of Schumann's quartette in A proved a movement of most enjoyable coloring, shading and rhythm. All the movements of this number are worthy of careful study and consideration. In fact, the closer one analyzes them the greater the enjoyment becomes.

The quartette for piano and strings in E minor by Christian Sinding, a Norwegian composer, bore the peculiarly original characteristic of his nationality, in movement, ryhthm and harmony. Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, heard so favorably at the Symphony concert two weeks ago, again gave assurance of his claim as a thorough musician of rare ability in this number. His technique and accuracy, fine touch and forceful expression, were especially noticeable in the development of the effective themes, and he received the hearty approval of his interested hearers.

December 28 is the date of the next concert of this series.

TUES

Unio
The Kn cio Buson
Union H being—
Haydn:
Schumann
Sinding;
The per quartet w playing t cially rem
the Finale
ment pas pane. Th
The famili rably play
But the
that, of th
Sinding.
bears ma
Schumann itself som forte quint of the stri string qu pianoforte the sort is von Brons
there are in four-violin a but Sindin farther. H matter of c of the fou pretty plain work, if not invention—to note a str of the first motiv in Ot of the Pilg together, a brilliant. M the part ca warm admir every point.
day evening

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, NOV. 24.

KNEISEL QUARTET.

Enjoyable Concert Given in Union Hall Before a Large Audience.

The second concert of the season by the Kneisel quartet was given in Union Hall last evening, to a very large audience, which enjoyed a musical treat in the fullest sense of the word.

Haydn's quartet in D major opened the concert. The performers seemed at their very best, by the finely artistic ensemble in which the four movements were rendered.

The quartet in A major, op. 41, No. 3, by Schumann, again brought the wonderful unity of the performers to the fore. In the first movement, an andante expressivo, was given with great expression and delicacy. The second movement, consisting of three short subdivisions, fairly bristling with comterpoint, was rendered so finely that the critical audience was positively enthusiastic in applause.

The closing number of the programme was a quartet for piano and strings by Sinding, a composer strange to Boston. The quartet is a work of modern character, full of weird themes, all of which are admirably treated; especially is this so in the second movement, the andante.

The harmony in this movement is rich in grand effects. The last movement, allegro vivace, is full of difficulties in octave and scale passages for the piano.

Signor F. Busoni, pianist, assisted the quartette in this work. His playing was most conscientious throughout, and the delicate passages with which the work abounds were most daintily rendered. The three assisting performers ably seconded the pianist's artistic efforts.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. XC., NO. 147.

TUESDAY, NOV. 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

The second of the season's concerts by the Kneisel quartet at Union Hall, last evening, called out another fine audience of subscribing patrons and others, fully showing the strong following enjoyed by this most capable organization.

The programme was made with Mr. Kneisel's usual excellent good judgment, and included, as its several composition, the quartet in D major, No. 67, by Haydn; that in A major, op. 41, by Schumann, and the quintet in E minor by Sinding, an interesting novelty, in which Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, the pianist, gave his valuable assistance, his skill as a player in chamber music being delightfully prominent.

Mr. Kneisel and his associates of the quartet gave their best efforts, as usual, in their performances during the evening, and won well merited applause for all their good work.

Boston Post

TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTETTE.

The programme of the second of this course given in Union Hall, last evening was as follows:

Hadyn—Quartette in D.
Allegro moderato, Adagio cantabile, Minuetto, Finale, (Presto).
Shuman—Quartette in A op. 41, No. 3
Andante expression, leading to allegro molto moderato—A major.
Second movement { Assai agitato / Un poco adagia / Tempo risoluto } F sharp minor.
Adagio molto—D major.
Allegro molto vivace—A major.
Linding—Quintette for piano and strings in E minor.
Allegro ma non troppo, andante. Sherzo (Prestessimo.)
Finale (allegro vivace). (First time in Boston).

The programme was a fine one, and appealed to the taste of the large number of true musicians who were present. Even those who usually complain at the length of a programme which req uires two hours close attention from its hearers, were disposed to forget their prejudices for the evening at least.

The Hadyn composition was familiar to many, but the excellent rendition gave it a new value. The adagio cantabile and minuetto were particularly effective from the contrast of the treatment of the theme. In the adagio the sustained notes gave the effect of grand organ chords, but the minuetto brought a change which was pleasing, it was strongly marked, but of a lighter character.

Shumann is not a favorite composer with many. His compositions are harmonious, but the themes are difficult to follow. Opus 41 is perhaps as pleasing to a real lover of music as anything of his that could be played by such a small number of instruments. It is long and somewhat tedious at the close.

The last number is new. It is a composition of Christian Linding, a Norwegian composer, who was born in 1856, and is a brother of Otto Ludwig Linding, the painter, and of Stephen Abel Linding, the sculptor—a talented family. Christian studied music in Christiana, and afterwards in Dresden, Munich and Leipzig, and was a teacher of music and a composer at that place for some time. Since February, 1890, he has lived in Copenhagen. Linding has written many piano pieces, several songs with piano accompaniment, a romance and a suite for violin and piano, and this quintette.

This work was first played at a concert in Copenhagan on the 4th of November, 1887, with Frau Erica Nissen at the piano, and later on at the Norwegian Musical Festival, and then at Leipzig. It was performed in London last year: and recently at Munich. It is a remarkable work. Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni, who recently appeared with the Symphony orchestra, undertook the piano part of the composition and did it in a finished manner. He is a pianist of great ability, and has a marvellous touch. His execution is fine and his technique pretty near perfection. VIVIAN.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 24, 1891.

The Kneisel Quartette.

The second of the Kneisel Quartette concerts was given in Union Hall last evening and attracted a large and enthusiastic audience. The following programme was presented: Haydn's Quartette in D; Schumann's Quartette in A, op 41, No. 3; and Sinding's Quintette for Piano and Strings, in E minor. The playing of the quartette was marked by that artistic finish and attention to details which always attends its work; the precision, phrasing and shading, and the general ensemble being as near absolute perfection as anything heard here lately.

The charming Haydn Quartette was beautifully rendered, the Adagio being played with rare sweetness and expression, and the finale with marvellous daintiness, and a crisp, clean cut style that was refreshing. The interpretation and rendering of the grand Schumann Quartette was superb, the passion and fire of the second movement and the brilliancy and vigor of the finale being especially noteworthy.

Mr. Ferruccio Busoni was the assisting artist, and his choice of the Sinding quintette was a happy one for the display of his abilities as a pianist. This work is certainly a remarkable one, notable for its great originality, vigor and wonderfully clever use of the subject matter. It is an intensely modern work, somewhat bizarre and theatrical perhaps in places, but none the less remarkable as a striking and original work. The first movement is very complex, and the contrapuntal ingenuity displayed impresses the hearer with a feeling of admiration for the powers of the composer. Of the other movements the intermezzo is the most striking; this is a brilliant, dashing sort of a Scandinavian dance, and both it and the finale fairly bristle with technical difficulties for the players; in fact the whole quintette calls for great skill and ability, especially on the part of the pianist. Mr. Busoni was more than equal to the task, and his playing of the piano part was excellent, carrying the audience fairly by storm.

It is hard to recall any more perfect piano playing than that which Mr. Busoni gave last evening. He possesses a sure, fluent, elastic, in fact a superb technique; his playing combines dash, vigor and brilliancy with rare poetic feeling and refinement. His touch is one of the chief charms of his playing; it is wonderful for its velvety delicacy and at the same time wonderful power and crispness. It is hard to select any special point for commendation in his playing, as he possesses to a high degree those attributes which combine to make a thoroughly well-balanced artist. Mr. Busoni is a welcome addition to the ranks of our resident pianists, and his superb playing of last evening proves his right to be classed among the foremost artists of America.

Finale. Allegro vivace, E major. C time. This movement is introduced by a brilliant scale passage in octaves and contrary motion, of 5 bars length for the piano, built upon 15, which leads into the first subject 15 and its pendant 16, which are introduced together; 15 by the strings in unison and 16 by the piano. The principal subject, 15, it will be easily seen, is nearly related to 2 from the first movement. These two themes are worked together with increasing brilliancy till the introduction of the second subject, 17, piano solo, in the key of G sharp minor. The second section of this subject is closely related to the first subject of the first movement, No. 1. This is then repeated by the quartet, with a triplet accompaniment for the piano; and then, after a striking chromatic transitional passage, is repeated ff on the piano, with very full chords, with a triplet quaver figure in the violins, and a two quaver figure in the viola and violoncello. After this the first part is repeated with slight modifications, and a modulation is effected into B minor, when, over a quaver figure for the piano, No. 4 from the first movement is played, first by the first violin, then by the viola and then by the second violin. A new theme, No. 18, now makes its appearance, accompanied by the restless quaver figure on the piano, which then takes the new theme first pp then piu p, the incessant quaver figure being taken by the first violin. No. 4 is now introduced as the subject of a fugal passage in the bass, repeated by the viola and second violin, the quaver passage being continued by the first violin; this is then transferred to the piano on a pedal bass in B, the strings playing 4 in unison and ff; the quaver passage, increasing in intensity at last runs into 15, and the first part of this movement is again repeated, but with contraction; this is then followed by the second subject, No. 17, and its development, now in A minor. This is repeated in the same manner as on its first presentation, only contracted; then comes a modification of the chromatic transitional passage, and then the repetition of 17 ff in the piano with the strings in threes and twos as before mentioned. We now get 8 bars quasi andante, with themes Nos. 1 and 2 from the first movement; this leads into the coda, Allegro vivace, which is built upon 16 principally, but which also contains some extraordinary chromatic passages which are most original, even if a little bizarre. The work is thus brought to a fitting conclusion, and it leaves an impression of vigor, originality, and beauty on the hearer's mind, such as few works of this kind do.

H. G. PLIMMER in London Musical News.

Boston Post

TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTETTE.

The programme of the second of this course given in Union Hall, last evening was as follows:

Hadyn—Quartette in D.
Allegro moderato, Adagio cantabile, Minuetto. Finale, (Presto).
Shuman—Quartette in A op. 41, No. 3
Andante expression, leading to allegro molto moderato—A major.
Second movement { Assai agitato / Un poco adagia / Tempo risoluto } F sharp minor.
Adagio molto—D major.
Allegro molto vivace—A major.
Linding—Quintette for piano and strings in E minor.
Allegro ma non troppo, andante. Sherzo (Prestessimo.)
Finale (allegro vivace). (First time in Boston).

The programme was a fine one, and appealed to the taste of the large number of true musicians who were present. Even those who usually complain at the length of a programme which req uires two hours close attention from its hearers, were disposed to forget their prejudices for the evening at least.

The Hadyn composition was familiar to many, but the excellent rendition gave it a new value. The adagio cantabile and minuetto were particularly effective from the contrast of the treatment of the theme. In the adagio the sustained notes gave the effect of grand organ chords, but the minuetto brought a change which was pleasing, it was strongly marked, but of a lighter character.

Shumann is not a favorite composer with many. His compositions are harmonious, but the themes are difficult to follow. Opus 41 is perhaps as pleasing to a real lover of music as anything of his that could be played by such a small number of instruments. It is long and somewhat tedious at the close.

The last number is new. It is a composition of Christian Linding, a Norwegian composer, who was born in 1856, and is a brother of Otto Ludwig Linding, the painter, and of Stephen Abel Linding, the sculptor—a talented family. Christian studied music in Christiana, and afterwards in Dresden, Munich and Leipzig, and was a teacher of music and a composer at that place for some time. Since February, 1890, he has lived in Copenhagen. Linding has written many piano pieces, several songs with piano accompaniment, a romance and a suite for violin and piano, and this quintette.

This work was first played at a concert in Copenhegan on the 4th of November, 1887, with Frau Erica Nissen at the piano, and later on at the Norwegian Musical Festival, and then at Leipzig. It was performed in London last year; and recently at Munich. It is a remarkable work. Mr. Ferruccio B. Busoni, who recently appeared with the Symphony Orchestra, undertook the piano part of the composition and did it in a finished manner. He is a pianist of great ability, and has a marvellous touch. His execution is fine and his technique pretty near perfection.

VIVIAN.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 24, 1891.

The Kneisel Quartette.

The second of the Kneisel Quartette concerts was given in Union Hall last evening and attracted a large and enthusiastic audience. The following programme was presented: Haydn's Quartette in D; Schumann's Quartette in A, op 41, No. 3; and Sinding's Quintette for Piano and Strings, in E minor. The playing of the quartette was marked by that artistic finish and attention to details which always attends its work; the precision, phrasing and shading, and the general ensemble being as near absolute perfection as anything heard here lately.

The charming Haydn Quartette was beautifully rendered, the Adagio being played with rare sweetness and expression, and the finale with marvellous daintiness, and a crisp, clean cut style that was refreshing. The interpretation and rendering of the grand Schumann Quartette was superb, the passion and fire of the second movement and the brilliancy and vigor of the finale being especially noteworthy.

Mr. Ferruccio Busoni was the assisting artist, and his choice of the Sinding quintette was a happy one for the display of his abilities as a pianist. This work is certainly a remarkable one, notable for its great originality, vigor and wonderfully clever use of the subject matter. It is an intensely modern work, somewhat bizarre and theatrical perhaps in places, but none the less remarkable as a striking and original work. The first movement is very complex, and the contrapuntal ingenuity displayed impresses the hearer with a feeling of admiration for the powers of the composer. Of the other movements the Intermezzo is the most striking; this is a brilliant, dashing sort of a Scandinavian dance, and both it and the finale fairly bristle with technical difficulties for the players; in fact the whole quintette calls for great skill and ability, especially on the part of the pianist. Mr. Busoni was more than equal to the task, and his playing of the piano part was excellent, carrying the audience fairly by storm.

It is hard to recall any more perfect piano playing than that which Mr. Busoni gave last evening. He possesses a sure, fluent, elastic, in fact a superb technique; his playing combines dash, vigor and brilliancy with rare poetic feeling and refinement. His touch is one of the chief charms of his playing; it is wonderful for its velvety delicacy and at the same time wonderful power and crispness. It is hard to select any special point for commendation in his playing, as he possesses to a high degree those attributes which combine to make a thoroughly well-balanced artist. Mr. Busoni is a welcome addition to the ranks of our resident pianists, and his superb playing of last evening proves his right to be classed among the foremost artists of America.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1891.

THE KNEISEL QUARTETTE.

The Kneisel Quartette proved last night the strong hold that they have upon the musical public, for, in spite of the downpour as well as the flood of musical attractions that have deluged the town for the past few weeks, a large and enthusiastic audience nearly filled Union Hall to refresh themselves with the choice treat that this thoroughly finished and polished corps of artists had to offer.

One can scarcely over praise the refined and classical interpretation that was given Haydn's beautiful quartette in D. Such a rendition of the adagio cantabile is most inspiring and uplifting. In this the depth of musical thought and feeling, the beauty and purity of melodious expression reveals the wonderful creative genius of the master composer. 'Tis sufficient to say that one rarely hears this quartette given with finer taste and expression than do Mr. Franz Kneisel and his able associates give it. Could anything be more delicately fanciful and playful than the finale of this same number!

The andante expressivo of Schumann's quartette in A proved a movement of most enjoyable coloring, shading and rhythm. All the movements of this number are worthy of careful study and consideration. In fact, the closer one analyzes them the greater the enjoyment becomes.

The quartette for piano and strings in E minor by Christian Sinding, a Norwegian composer, bore the peculiarly original characteristic of his nationality, in movement, ryhthm and harmony. Mr. Ferruccio Busoni, heard so favorably at the Symphony concert two weeks ago, again gave assurance of his claim as a thorough musician of rare ability in this number. His technique and accuracy, fine touch and forceful expression, were especially noticeable in the development of the effective themes, and he received the hearty approval of his interested hearers.

December 28 is the date of the next concert of this series.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, NOV. 24.

KNEISEL QUARTET.

Enjoyable Concert Given in Union Hall Before a Large Audience.

The second concert of the season by the Kneisel quartet was given in Union Hall last evening, to a very large audience, which enjoyed a musical treat in the fullest sense of the word.

Haydn's quartet in D major opened the concert. The performers seemed at their very best, by the finely artistic ensemble in which the four movements were rendered.

The quartet in A major, op. 41, No. 3, by Schumann, again brought the wonderful unity of the performers to the fore. In the first movement, an andante expressivo, was given with great expression and delicacy. The second movement, consisting of three short subdivisions, fairly bristling with conterpoint, was rendered so finely that the critical audience was positively enthusiastic in applause.
